The Authors

Carl Friedrich Keil (26 February 1807 – 5 May 1888) was a conservative German Lutheran Old Testament commentator. He was born at Lauterbach near Oelsnitz, Kingdom of Saxony, and died at Rätz, Saxony.

Franz Delitzsch (Leipzig, February 23, 1813 – Leipzig, March 4, 1890) was a German Lutheran theologian and Hebraist. Born in Leipzig, he held the professorship of theology at the University of Rostock from 1846 to 1850, at the University of Erlangen until 1867, and after that at the University of Leipzig until his death. Delitzsch wrote many commentaries on books of the Bible, Jewish antiquities, biblical psychology, a history of Jewish poetry, and Christian apologetics.

Grace Notes

Grace Notes is a Bible study ministry which began in 1994 using the Internet to distribute lessons and articles to people who are interested in God's Word. Thousands of Christians, in more than 110 countries around the world, have received Grace Notes lessons on the Internet, by E-mail and the World Wide Web. All courses and materials are distributed free of charge, and the work is supported by believers who want to see the ministry continue and grow. Grace Notes studies are also distributed on diskette and CD-ROM in order to reach those who do not have Internet access. Verse-by-verse (expositional) courses are available in 50 books of the Bible. Some of the courses include word studies (categorical doctrine) or historical articles (isagogics) that are relevant to the passages being discussed. Other courses offered are Bible character studies, comprehensive studies of the Christian Life and Basics of the Christian Life, an extensive series on the Person and Word of Jesus Christ, and a thorough study of the Attributes of God. You are invited to write to the address below, or write by e-mail, to inquire about Grace Notes materials.

PROVERBS

Translator’s Preface

The volume which is here presented to English readers is the first of three which will contain the Solomonic writings. They form the last section of the “Keil and Delitzsch” series of Commentaries on the Books of the Old Testament Scriptures. The remaining volume on the Proverbs, as well as that on Ecclesiastes and the Canticles, which has also been prepared by Delitzsch, and is now in course of publication in Germany, will be issued with as little delay as possible.

In this translation I have endeavoured accurately to reproduce the original, so as to bring the student as much as possible into direct contact with the learned commentators himself. Any explanatory notes or words I have thought it right to add are enclosed in square brackets [], so as to be easily distinguishable. The Arabic and Syriac words occurring in the original have been, with very few exceptions, printed in English characters. In their vocalization I have followed the system of Forbes in his Arabic Grammar, so that the student will be readily able to restore the original. When nothing depends on the inflection of these words, the consonants only are printed.

It might appear superfluous in me to speak in commendation of the great work which is now drawing to a close; but a translator, since he has necessarily been in close fellowship with the author, may be expected to be in a position to offer an opinion on the character of the work on which he has been engaged; and I am sure that all my collaborateurs will concur with me in speaking of the volumes which form this commentary as monuments of deep and careful research into the meaning of the sacred Scriptures. Whether or not we can in all cases accept the conclusions reached by the respected authors, no one can fail to see how elaborate and minute the investigation has been. These volumes are the priest fruits of life-long study of the Old Testament. Their authors are exegetes who have won for themselves an honoured place in the foremost rank for their profound acquaintance with the Hebrew and its cognate languages. With a scholarship of rare compass and accuracy, they combine a reverent sympathy with the sacred Scriptures, and a believing appreciation of its saving truths.

The satisfaction I have had in the study of this work, and in spending so many of my leisure hours in rendering it into English, is greatly heightened by the reflection, that I have been enabled in this way to contribute to the number of exegetical works within reach of the English student. The exegetical study of God’s word, which appears to be increasingly drawing the attention of theologians, and which has been so greatly stimulated by the Translations issued by the publishers of this work, cannot fail to have the most beneficial results. The minister of the gospel will find such study his best and truest preparation for his weighty duties as an expounder of Scripture, if prosecuted in the spirit of a devout recognition of the truth, that “bene orasse est bene studuisse.” Thus is he led step by step into a thorough and full understanding of the words and varying forms of expression used by those “holy men of old, who spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost.”

Author’s Preface

The preparation of this Commentary on the Mishle, which was begun in 1869 (not without previous preparation), and twice interrupted by providential events, extended into the winter of 1872. There is now wanting to the completion of the Commentary on the Old Testament, undertaken by Dr. Keil and myself, only the Commentary on the Canticles and Ecclesiastes, which will form the concluding volume.

In the preparation of this Commentary on the Proverbs, I am indebted in varied ways to my friends Fleischer and Wetzstein. In the year 1836, Fleischer entered on his duties as Professor at Leipzig by delivering a course of lectures on the Book of the Proverbs of Solomon. I was one of his hearers, and am now so fortunate as to be able from his own MS (begun 13th May, completed 9th September 1836) to introduce this beloved teacher into the number of interpreters of the Book of Proverbs. The assistance contributed by Wetzstein begins at chapter 30, and consists in remarks on Mühlau’s work on the Proverbs of Agur and Lemuel (1869), which my Dorpat friend placed at my disposal.

The exegetical apparatus has in the course of this work extended far beyond the list given at pp. 35, 36. I obtained the Commentary of the Caraite Ahron b. Joseph (1294), which was printed at Koslow (Eupatoria) in 1835, and had lent to me from the library of Dr. Hermann Lotze the Commentary by the Roman poet Immanuel [born at Rome about 1265], who was intimately associated with Dante, printed at Naples in 1487, and equal in value to a MS. Among the interpreters comprehended in the Biblia Rabbínica, I made use also the Commentary of the Spanish Menachem b. Salomo Meîri (1447), which first appeared in the Amsterdam Bibelwerk, and came under my notice in a more handy edition (Fürth, 1844) from the library of my dear friend and companion in study, Baer. To him I owe, among many other things, the comparison of several MSS, particularly of one brought from Arabia by Jacob Sappir, which has come into his possession.

In making use of the Graecus Venetus, I was not confined to Villoison’s edition (1784). The only existing MS (found in Venice) of this translation one of my young friends, von Gebhardt, has compared with the greatest care with Villoison’s printed edition, in which he has found many false readings and many omissions. We have to expect from him a critical, complete edition of this singular translation, which, both as regards the knowledge its author displays of the Hebrew language and his skill in the Greek language, remains as yet an unsolved mystery. Bacon, in his work De Augmentis Scientiarum (viii. 2), rightly speaks of Solomon’s proverbs as an unparalleled collection. May it be granted me, by the help of God, to promote in some degree the understanding of this incomparable Book, as to its history, its language, and its practical lessons!

Introduction

The Book of Proverbs bears the external title ספר מלאכת, which it derives from the words with which it commences. It is one of the three books which are distinguished from the other twenty-one by a peculiar system of accentuation, the best exposition of which has yet been given is that by S. Baer, as set forth in my larger Psalmen-commentar. The memorial word for these three books, viz., Job, Mishle (Proverbs), and Tehillim (Psalms), is עתמה, formed from the first letter of the first word of each book, or, following the Talmudic and Masoretic arrangement of the books, עתמה.

Having in view the superscription ספר מלאכת, with which the book commences, the ancients regarded it as wholly the composition of Solomon. The circumstance that it contains only 800 verses, while according to 1 Kings 5:12 (1 Kings 4:32) Solomon spake 3000 proverbs, R. Samuel bar-Nachman explains by remarking that each separate verse may be divided into two or three allegories or apothegms (e.g., 25:12), not to mention other more arbitrary modes of reconciling the discrepancy. The opinion also of R. Jonathan, that Solomon first composed the Canticles, then the Proverbs, and last of all Ecclesiastes, inasmuch as the first corresponds with the spring-time of youth, the second with the wisdom of manhood, and the third with the disappointment of old age, is founded on the supposition of the unity of the book and of its Solomonic authorship.

At the present day also there are some, such as Stier, who regard the Book of Proverbs from first to last as the work of Solomon, just as Klaus (1832) and Randegger (1841) have ventured to affirm that all the Psalms without exception were composed by David. But since historical criticism has been applied to Biblical subjects, that blind submission to mistaken tradition appears as scarcely worthy of being mentioned. The Book of Proverbs presents itself as composed of various parts, different from each other in character and in the period to which they belong. Under the hands of the critical analysis it resolves itself into a mixed market of the most manifold intellectual productions of proverbial poetry, belonging to at least three different epochs.

1. The external plan of the Book of Proverbs, and its own testimony as to its origin.—The internal superscription of the book, which recommends it, after the manner of later Oriental books, on account of its importance and the general utility of its contents, extends from v. 1 to v. 6. Among the moderns this has been acknowledged by Löwenstein and Maurer; for v. 7, which Ewald, Bertheau, and Keil have added to it, forms a new commencement to the beginning of the book itself. The book is described as “The Proverbs of Solomon,” and then there is annexed the statement of its object. That object, as summarily set forth in v. 2, is practical, and that in a twofold way: partly moral, and partly intellectual. The former is described in vv. 3–5. It presents moral edification, moral sentiments for acceptance, not merely to help the unwise to attain to wisdom, but also to assist the wise. The latter object is set forth in v. 6. It seeks by its contents to strengthen and discipline the mind to the understanding of thoughtful discourses generally. In other words, it seeks to gain the moral ends which proverbial poetry aims at, and at the same time to make familiar with it, so that the reader, in these proverbs of Solomon, or by means of them as of a key, learns to understand such like apothegms in general. Thus interpreted, the title of the book does not say that the book contains proverbs of other wise men besides those of Solomon; if it did so, it would contradict itself, It is possible that the book contains proverbs other than those of Solomon, possible that the author of the title of the book added such to it himself, but the title presents to view only the Proverbs of Solomon. If 1:7 begins the book, then after reading the title we cannot think otherwise than that here begin the Solomonic proverbs. If we read farther, the contents and the form of the discourses which follow do not contradict this opinion; for both are worthy of Solomon. So much the more astonished are we, therefore, when at 10:1 we meet with a new superscription. מִשְׁלֵי שְׁלֹمֹה, from which point on to 22:16 there is a long succession of proverbs of quite a different tone and form—short maxims, Mashals proper—while in the preceding section of the book we find fewer proverbs than monitory discourses. What now must be our opinion when we look back from this second superscription to the part 1:7–9, which immediately follows the title of the book? Are 1:7–9, in the sense of the book, not the “Proverbs of Solomon”? From the title of the book, which declares them to be so, we must judge that they are. Or are they “Proverbs of Solomon”? In this case the new superscription (Prov. 10:1), “The Proverbs of Solomon,” appears altogether incomprehensible. And yet only one of these two things is possible: on the one side, therefore, there must be a false appearance of contradiction, which on a closer investigation disappears. But on which side is it? If it is supposed that the tenor of the title, 1:1–6, does not accord with that of the section 10:1–22:6, but that it accords well with that of 1:7–9 (with the breadth of expression in 1:7–9, it has also several favourite words not elsewhere occurring in the Book of Proverbs; among these, עָרְׁמָה, subtlety, and מְצִמָה, discretion, 1:4), then Ewald’s view is probable, that 1–9 is an original whole written at once, and that the author had no other intention than to give it as an introduction to the larger Solomonic Book of Proverbs beginning at 10:1. But it is also possible that the author of the title has adopted the style of the section 1:7–9. Bertheau, who has propounded this view, and at the same time has rejected, in opposition to Ewald, the idea of the unity of the section, adopts this conclusion, that in 1:8–9 there lies before us a collection of the admonitions of different authors of proverbial poetry, partly original introductions to larger collections of proverbs, which the author of the title gathers.
together in order that he may give a comprehensive introduction to the larger collection contained in 10:1–22:16. But such an origin of the section as Bertheau thus imagines is by no means natural; it is more probable that the author, whose object is, according to the title of the book, to give the proverbs of Solomon, introduces these by a long introduction of his own, than that, instead of beginning with Solomon’s proverbs, he first presents long extracts of a different kind from collections of proverbs. If the author, as Bertheau thinks, expresses indeed, in the words of the title, the intention of presenting, along with the “Proverbs of Solomon,” also the “words of the wise,” then he could not have set about his work more incorrectly and self-contradictorily than if he had begun the whole, which bears the superscription “Proverbs of Solomon” (which must be regarded as presenting the proverbs of Solomon as a key to the words of the wise generally), with the “words of the wise.” But besides the opinion of Ewald, which in itself, apart from internal grounds, is more natural and probable than that of Bertheau, there is yet the possibility of another. Keil, following H. A. Hahn, is of opinion, that in the sense of the author of the title, the section 1–9 is Solomonic as well as 10–22, but that he has repeated the superscription “Proverbs of Solomon” before the latter section, because from that point onward proverbs follow which bear in a special measure the characters of the Mashal (Hävernick’s Einl. iii. 428). The same phenomenon appears in the book of Isaiah, where, after the general title, there follows an introductory address, and then in 2:1 the general title is repeated in a shorter form. That this analogy, however, is here inapplicable, the further discussion of the subject will show.

The introductory section 1:7–9, and the larger section 10–22:16, which contains uniform brief Solomonic apothegms, are followed by a third section, 22:17–24:22. Hitzig, indeed, reckons 10–24:22 as the second section, but with 22:17 there commences an altogether different style, and a much freer manner in the form of the proverb; and the introduction to this new collection of proverbs, which reminds us of the general title, places it beyond a doubt that the collector does not at all intend to set forth these proverbs as Solomonic. It may indeed be possible that, as Keil (iii. 410) maintains, the collector, inasmuch as he begins with the words, “Incline thine ear and hear words of the wise,” names his own proverbs generally as “words of the wise,” especially since he adds, “and apply thine heart to my knowledge;” but this supposition is contradicted by the superscription of a fourth section, 24:23ff., which follows. This short section, an appendix to the third, bears the superscription, “These things also are לְחַכָּמִים.” If Keil thinks here also to set aside the idea that the following proverbs, in the sense of this superscription, have as their authors “the wise,” he does unnecessary violence to himself. The לְ is here that of authorship and if the following proverbs are composed by the חֲכָמִים, “the wise,” then they are not the production of the one חָכָם, “wise man,” Solomon, but they are “the words of the wise” in contradistinction to “the Proverbs of Solomon.”

The Proverbs of Solomon begin again at 25:1; and this second large section (corresponding to the first, 10:1–22:16) extends to 29. This fifth portion of the book has a superscription, which, like that of the preceding appendix, commences thus: “Also (洸) these are proverbs of Solomon which the men of Hezekiah king of Judah collected.” The meaning of the word קֹהֵן is not doubtful. It signifies, like the Arameo-Arabic גִּמָע, to remove from their place, and denote that the men of Hezekiah removed from the place where they found them the following proverbs, and placed them together in a separate collection. The words have thus been understood by the Greek translator. From the supplementary words αἱ ἀδιάκριτοι (such as exclude all διάκρισις) it is seen that the translator had a feeling of the important literary historical significance of that superscription, which reminds us of the labours of the poetical grammarians appointed by Pisistratus to edit older works, such as those of Hesiod. The Jewish interpreters, simply following the Talmud, suppose that the “also” (גָּם) belongs to the whole superscription, inclusive of the relative sentence, and that it thus bears witness to the editing of the foregoing proverbs also by Hezekiah and his companions; which is altogether improbable, for then, if such were the meaning of the words, “which the men of Hezekiah,” etc., they ought to have stood after 1:1. The superscription 25:1 thus much rather distinguishes the following collection from that going before, as having been made under Hezekiah. As two appendices followed the “Proverbs of Solomon,” 10:1–22:16, so also two appendices the Hezekiah-gleanings of Solomonic proverbs. The former two appendices, however, originate in general from the “wise,” the latter more definitely name the authors: the first, 30, is by “Agur the son of Jakeh;” the second, 31:1–9, by a “King Lemuel.” In so far the superscriptions are clear. The name of the authors, elsewhere unknown, point to a foreign country; and to this corresponds the peculiar complexion of these two series of proverbs. As a third appendix to the Hezekiah-collection, 31:10ff. follows, a complete alphabetical proverbial poem which describes the praiseworthy qualities of a virtuous woman. We are thus led to the conclusion that the Book of Proverbs divides itself into the following parts:—(1) The title of the book, 1:1–6, by which the question is raised, how far the book extends to which it originally belongs; (2) the hortatory discourses, 1:7–9, in which it is a question whether the Solomonic proverbs must be regarded as beginning with these, or whether they are only the introduction thereto, composed by a different author, perhaps the author of the title of the book; (3) the first great collection of Solomonic proverbs, 10–22:16; (4) the first appendix to this first collection, “The words of the wise,” 22:17–24:22; (5) the second appendix, supplement of the words of some wise men, 24:23ff.; (6) the second great collection of Solomonic proverbs, which the “men of Hezekiah” collected, 25–29; (7) the first appendix to this second collection, the words of Agur the son of Makeh, 30; (8) the second appendix, the words of King Lemuel, 31:1–9; (9) third appendix, the acrostic ode, 31:10ff. These nine parts are comprehended under three groups: the introductory hortatory discourses with the general title at their head, and the two great collections of Solomonic proverbs with their two appendices. In prosecuting our further investigations, we shall consider the several parts of the book first from the point of view of the manifold forms of their proverbs, then of their style, and thirdly of their type of doctrine. From each of these three subjects of investigation we may expect elucidations regarding the origin of these proverbs and of their collections.

2. The several parts of the Book of Proverbs with respect to the manifold forms of the proverbs.—If the Book of Proverbs were a collection of popular sayings, we should find in it a multitude of proverbs of one line each, as e.g., “Wickedness proceedeth from the wicked” (1 Sam. 24:13); but we seek for such in vain. At the first glance, 24:23b appears to be a proverb of one line; but the line “To have respect of persons in judgment is not good,” is only the introductory line of a proverb which consists of several lines, v. 24f. Ewald is right in regarding as inadmissible a comparison of the collections of Arabic proverbs by Abu-Obeida, Meidani, and others, who gathered together and expounded the current popular proverbs, with the Book of Proverbs. Ali’s Hundred Proverbs are, however, more worthy of being compared with it. Like these, Solomon’s proverbs are, as a whole, the production of his own spirit, and only mediately of the popular spirit. To make the largeness of the number of these proverbs a matter of doubt were inconsiderate. Eichhorn maintained that even a godlike genius scarcely attains to so great a number of pointed proverbs and ingenious thoughts. But if we distribute Solomon’s proverbs over his forty years’ reign, then we have scarcely twenty for each year; and one must agree with the conclusion, that the composition of so many proverbs even of the highest ingenuity is no impossible problem for a “godlike genius.”
When, accordingly, it is related that Solomon wrote 3000 proverbs, Ewald, in his History of Israel, does not find the number too great, and Bertheau does not regard it as impossible that the collection of the “Proverbs of Solomon” has the one man Solomon as their author. The number of the proverbs thus cannot determine us to regard them as having for the most part originated among the people, and the form in which they appear leads to an opposite conclusion. It is, indeed, probable that popular proverbs are partly wrought into these proverbs, and many of their forms of expression are moulded after the popular proverbs; but as they thus lie before us, they are, as a whole, the production of the technical Mashal poetry.
The simplest form is, according to the fundamental peculiarity of the Hebrew verse, the distich. The relation of the two lines to each other is very manifold. The second line may repeat the thought of the first, only in a somewhat altered form, in order to express this thought as clearly and exhaustively as possible. We call such proverbs synonymous distichs; as e.g., 11:25:
A soul of blessing is made fat,
And he that watereth others is himself watered.
Or the second line contains the other side of the contrast to the statement of the first; the truth spoken in the first is explained in the second by means of the presentation of its contrary. We call such proverbs antithetic distichs; as e.g., 10:1:
A wise son maketh his father glad,
And a foolish son is his mother’s grief.
Similar forms, 10:16; 12:5. Elsewhere, as 18:14; 20:24, the antithesis clothes itself in the form of a question. sometimes it is two different truths that are expressed in the two lines; and the authorization of their union lies only in a certain relationship, and the ground of this union in the circumstance that two lines are the minimum of the technical proverb—synthetic distichs; e.g., 10:18:
A cloak of hatred are lying lips,
And he that spreadeth slander is a fool.
Not at all infrequently one line does not suffice to bring out the thought intended, the begun expression of which is only completed in the second. These we call integral (eingedankige) distichs; as e.g., 11:31 (cf. 1 Pet. 4:18):
The righteous shall be recompensed on the earth—
How much more the ungodly and the sinner!
To these distichs also belong all those in which the thought stated in the first receives in the second, by a sentence presenting a reason, or proof, or purpose, or consequence, a definition completing or perfecting it; e.g., 13:14; 16:10; 19:20; 22:28. But there is also a fifth form, which corresponds most to the original character of the Mashal: the proverb explaining its ethical object by a resemblance from the region of the natural and everyday life, the παραβολή proper. The form of this parabolic proverb is very manifold, according as the poet himself expressly compares the two subjects, or only places them near each other in order that the hearer or reader may complete the comparison. The proverb is least poetic when the likeness between the two subjects is expressed by a verb; as 27:15 (to which, however, v. 16 belongs):
A continual dropping in a rainy day
And a contentious woman are alike.
The usual form of expression, neither unpoetic nor properly poetic, is the introduction of the comparison by צ [as], and of the similitude in the second clause by כ [so]; as 10:26:
As vinegar to the teeth, and as smoke to the eyes,
So is the sluggard to them who give him a commission.
The complete verbal statement of the relation of likeness may also be abbreviated by the omission of the צ; as 25:13; 26:11:
As a dog returning to his vomit—
A fool returning to his folly.
We call the parabolic proverbs of these three forms comparisons. The last, the abbreviated form of the comparative proverb, which we will call, in contradistinction to the comparative, the emblematic, in which the contrast and its emblem are loosely placed together without any nearer expression of the similitude; as e.g., 26:20; 27:17, 18, 20. This takes place either by means of the coupative Vav, as 25:25—

Cold water to a thirsty soul,
And good news from a far country.
Or without the Vav; in which case the second line is as the subscription under the figure or double figure painted in the first; e.g., 25:11f., 11:22:

A gold ring in a swine’s snout—
A fair woman without understanding.
These ground-forms of two lines, can, however, expand into forms of several lines. Since the distich is the peculiar and most appropriate form of the technical proverb, so, when two lines are not sufficient for expressing the thought intended, the multiplication to four, six, or eight lines is most natural. In the tetrastich the relation of the last two to the first two is as manifold as is the relation of the second line to the first in the distich. There is, however, no suitable example of four-lined stanzas in antithetic relation. But we meet with synonymous tetrastichs, e.g., 23:15f., 24:3f., 28f.; synthetic, 30:5f.; integral, 30:17f., especially of the form in which the last two lines constitute a proof passage beginning with י, 22:22f., or נ, 22:24f., or without exponents, 22:26f.; comparative without expressing the comparison, 25:16f. (cf. on the other hand, 26:18f., where the number of lines is questionable), and also the emblematical, 25:4f.:

And there shall come forth a vessel for the goldsmith;
Take away the wicked from before the king,
And this throne shall be established in righteousness.

Proportionally the most frequently occurring are tetrastichs, the second half of which forms a proof clause commencing with ו or י. Among the less frequent are the six-lined, presenting (Prov. 23:1–3; 24:11f.) one and the same thought in manifold aspects, with proofs interspersed. Among all the rest which are found in the collection, 23:12–14, 19–21, 26–28; 30:15f., 30:29–31, the first two lines form a prologue introductory to the substance of the proverb; as e.g., 23:12–14:

O let instruction enter into thine heart,
And apply thine ears to the words of knowledge.
Withhold not correction from the child;
For if thou beatest him with the rod—he dies not.
Thou shalt beat him with the rod,
And deliver his soul from hell.
Similarly formed, yet more expanded, is the eight-lined stanza, 23:22–28:

Hearken unto thy father that begat thee,
And despise not thy mother when she is old.
But the truth and sell it not:
Wisdom, and virtue, and understanding.
The father of a righteous man greatly rejoices,
And he that begetteth a wise child hath joy of him.
Thy father and thy mother shall be glad,
And she that bare thee shall rejoice.
The Mashal proverb here inclines to the Mashal ode; for this octastich may be regarded as a short Mashal song,—like the alphabetical Mashal psalm 37, which consists of almost pure tetrastichs.

We have now seen how the distich form multiplies itself into forms consisting of four, six, and eight lines; but it also unfolds itself, as if in one-sided multiplication, into forms of three, five, and seven lines. Tristichs arise when the thought of the first line is repeated (Prov. 27:22) in the second according to the synonymous scheme, or when the thought of the second line is expressed by contrast in the third (Prov. 22:29; 28:10) according to the antithetic scheme, or when to the thought expressed in one or two lines (Prov. 25:8; 27:10) there is added its proof. The parabolic scheme is here represented when the object described is unfolded in two lines, as in the comparison 25:13, or when its nature is portrayed by two figures in two lines, as in the emblematic proverb 25:20:

To take off clothing in cold weather,
Vinegar upon nitre,
And he that singeth songs to a heavy heart.

In the few instances of pentastichs which are found, the last three lines usually unfold the reason of the thought of the first two: 23:4f., 25:6f., 30:32f.; to this 24:13 forms an exception, where the כֵּן before the last three lines introduces the expansion of the figure in the first two. As an instance we quote 25:6f.:

Seek not to display thyself in the presence of the king,
And stand not in the place of the great.
For better that it be said unto thee, "Come up hither,"
Than that they humble thee in the presence of the prince,
While thine eyes have raised themselves.

Of heptastichs I know of only one example in the collection, viz., 23:6–8:

Eat not the bread of the jealous,
And lust not after his dainties;
For he is like one who calculates with himself:—

"Eat and drink," saith he to thee,
And his heart is not with thee.
Thy morsel which thou hast eaten must thou vomit up,
And thou hast wasted thy pleasant words.

From this heptastich, which one will scarcely take for a brief Mashal ode according to the compound strophe-scheme, we see that the proverb of two lines can expand itself to the dimensions of seven and eight lines. Beyond these limits the whole proverb ceases to be מָשָל in the proper sense; and after the manner of Ps. 25, 34, and especially 37, it becomes a Mashal ode. Of this class of Mashal odes are, besides the prologue, 22:17–21, that of the drunkard, 23:29–35; that of the slothful man, 24:30–34; the exhortation to industry, 27:23–27; the prayer for a moderate portion between poverty and riches, 30:7–9; the mirror for princes, 31:2–9;’ and the praise of the excellent wife, 31:10ff. It is singular that this ode furnishes the only example of the alphabetical acrostic in the whole collection. Even a single trace of original alphabetical sequence afterwards broken up cannot be found. There cannot also be discovered, in the Mashal songs referred to, anything like a completed strophe-scheme; even in 31:10ff. the distichs are broken by tristichs intermingled with them.

In the whole of the first part, 1:7–9, the prevailing form is that of the extended flow of the Mashal song; but one in vain seeks for strophes. There is not here so firm a grouping of the lines; on the supposition of its belonging to the Solomonic era, this is indeed to be expected. The rhetorical form here outweighs the purely poetical. This first part of the Proverbs consists of the following fifteen Mashal strains: (1) 1:7–19, (2) 20ff., (3) 2, (4) 3:1–18, (5) 19–26, (6) 27ff., (7) 4:1–56, (8) 7ff., (9) 6:1–5, (10) 6–11, (11) 12–19, (12) 20ff., (13) 7, (14) 8, (15) 9. In 3 and 9 there are found a few Mashal odes of two lines and of four lines which may be regarded as independent Masals, and may adapt themselves to the schemes employed; other brief complete parts are only waves in the flow of the larger discourses, or are altogether formless, or more than octastichs. The octastich 6:16–19 makes the proportionally greatest impression of an independent inwoven Mashal. It is the only proverb in which symbolical numbers are used which occurs in the collection from 1 to 29:

There are six things which Jahve hateth,
And seven are an abhorrence to His soul:
Haughty eyes, a lying tongue,
Feet that hastily run to wickedness,
One that uttereth lies as a false witness,
And he who soweth strife between brethren.
Such numerical proverbs to which the name מִדָּה has been given by later Jewish writers (see my Gesch. der jüd. Poesie, pp. 199, 202) are found in 30. With the exception of 30:7–9, 24–28 (cf. Sir. 25:1, 2), the numerical proverb has this peculiarity, found also in most of the numerical proverbs of Sirach (Sir. 23:16; 25:7; 26:5, 28), that the number named in the first parallel line is in the second (cf. Job 5:9) increased by one. On the other hand, the form of the Priamel is used neither in the Book of Proverbs nor in that of Sirach. Proverbs such as 20:10 (“Diverse weights, diverse measures—an abomination to Jahve are they both”) and 20:12 (“The hearing ear, the seeing eye—Jahve hath created them both”), to be distinguished from 17:3; 27:21, and the like, where the necessary unity, and from 27:3, where the necessary resemblance, of the predicate is wanting, are only a weak approach to the Priamel,—a stronger, 25:3, where the three subjects form the preamble (“The heaven for height, and the earth for depth, and the heart of kings—are unsearchable”). Perhaps 30:11–14 is a greater mutilated Priamel. Here four subjects form the preamble, but there is wanting the conclusion containing the common predicate. This, we believe, exhausts the forms of the Mashal in the collection. It now only remains to make mention of the Mashal chain, i.e., the ranging together in a series of proverbs of a similar character, such as the chain of proverbs regarding the fool, 26:1–12, the sluggard, 26:13–16, the tale-bearer, 26:20–22, the malicious, 26:23–28—but this form belongs more to the technics of the Mashal collection than to that of the Mashal poetry.
We now turn to the separate parts of the book, to examine more closely the forms of their proverbs, and gather materials for a critical judgment regarding the origin of the proverbs which they contain. Not to anticipate, we take up in order the separate parts of the arrangement of the collection. Since, then, it cannot be denied that in the introductory paedagogic part, 1:7–9, notwithstanding its rich and deep contents, there is exceedingly little of the technical form of the Mashal, as well as generally of technical form at all. This part, as already shown, consist not of proper Mashals, but of fifteen Mashal odes, or rather, perhaps, Mashal discourses, didactic poems of the Mashal kind. In the flow of these discourses separate Mashals intermingle, which may either be regarded as independent, or, as 1:32; 4:18f., can easily be so understood. In the Mashal chains of Prov. 4 and 9 we meet with proverbs that are synonymous (Prov. 9:7, 10), antithetic (Prov. 3:35; 9:8), integral, or of one thought (Prov. 3:29, 30), and synthetic (Prov. 1:7; 3:5, 7), of two lines and of four lines variously disposed (Prov. 3:9f., 11f., 31f., 33f.); but the parabolic scheme is not at all met with, separate proverbs such as 3:27f. are altogether without form, and keeping out of view the octastich numerical proverb, 6:16–19, the thoughts which form the unity of separate groups are so widely expanded that the measure of the Mashal proper is far exceeded. The character of this whole part is not concentrating, but unfolding. Even the intermingling proverbs of two lines possess the same character. They are for the most part more like dissolved drops than gold coins with sharp outline and firm impress; as e.g., 9:7:
He that correcteth the mocker getteth to himself shame;
And he that rebuketh the sinner his dishonour.
The few that consist of four lines are closer, more compact, more finished, because they allow greater space for the expression; e.g., 3:9f.:
Honour Jahve with thy wealth,
And with the first-fruits of all thine income:
And thy barns shall be filled with plenty,
And thy vats shall overflow with must.
But beyond the four lines the author knows no limits of artistic harmony; the discourse flows on till it has wholly or provisionally exhausted the subject; it pauses not till it reaches the end of its course, and then, taking breath, it starts anew. We cannot, moreover, deny that there is beauty in this new springing forth of the stream of the discourse with its fresh transparent waves; but it is a peculiar beauty of the rhetorically decomposed, dissolved Mashal, going forth, as it were, from its confinement, and breathing its fragrance far and wide.

The fifteen discourses, in which the Teacher appears twelve times and Wisdom three times, are neither of a symmetrically chiselled form nor of internally fashioned coherence, but yet are a garland of songs having internal unity, with a well-arranged manifoldness of contents.

It is true that Bertheau recognises here neither unity of the contents nor unity of the formal character; but there is no Old Testament portion of like extent, and at the same time of more systematic internal unity, and which bears throughout a like formal impress, than this. Bertheau thinks that he has discovered in certain passages a greater art in the form; and certainly there are several sections which consist of just ten verses. But this is a mere accident; for the first Mashal ode consists of groups of 1, 2, and 10 verses, the second of 8 and 6 verses, the third of 10 and 12, the fourth of 10 and 8, the fifth of 2 and 6, etc.—each group forming a complete sense. The 10 verses are met with six times, and if 4:1–9 from the Peshito, and 4:20–27 from the LXX, are included, eight times, without our regarding these decades as strophes, and without our being able to draw any conclusion regarding a particular author of these decade portions. In 1:20–33, Bertheau finds indeed, along with the regular structure of verses, an exact artistic formation of strophes (3 times 4 verses with an echo of 2). But he counts instead of the stichs the Masoretic verses, and these are not the true formal parts of the strophe.

We now come to the second part of the collection, whose superscription Mishle can in no respect be strange to us, since the collection of proverbs here commencing, compared with 1:7–9, may with special right bear the name Mishle. The 375 proverbs which are classed together in this part, 10–22:16, without any comprehensive plan, but only according to their more or fewer conspicuous common characteristics (Bertheau, p. xii), consist all and every one of distichs; for each Masoretic verse falls naturally into two stichs, and nowhere (not even 19:19) does such a distich proverb stand in necessary connection with one that precedes or that follows; each is in itself a small perfected and finished whole. The tristich 19:7 is only an apparent exception.

In reality it is a distich with the disfigured remains of a distich that has been lost. The LXX has here two distichs which are wanting in our text. The second is that which is found in our text, but only in a mutilated form:

\[ \text{ὅς δὲ ἐρεθίζει λόγους οὐ σωθήσεται.} \]

[He that does much harm perfects mischief,]

[And he that uses provoking words shall not escape.]

The friend of every one is rewarded with evil,

He who pursues after rumours does not escape.

But not only are all these proverbs distichs, they have also, not indeed without exception, but in by far the greatest number, a common character in that they are antithetic. Distichs of predominating antithetic character stand here together. Along with these all other schemes are, it is true, represented: the synonymous, 11:7, 25, 30; 12:14, 28; 14:19, etc.; the integral, or of one thought, 14:7; 15:3, etc., particularly in proverbs with the comparative מ, 12:9; 15:16, 17; 16:8, 19; 17:10; 21:19; 22:1, and with the ascending אָף־כִּי [much more], 11:31; 15:11; 17:7; 19:7, 10; 21:27; the synthetic, 10:18; 11:29; 14:17; 19:13; the parabolic, the most feebly represented, for the only specimens of it are 10:26; 11:22; besides which I know not what other Bertheau could quote. We shall further see that in another portion of the book the parabolic proverbs are just as closely placed together as are the antithetic. Here almost universally the two members of... the proverbs stand together in technical parallelism as thesis and antithesis; also in the synonymous proverbs the two members are the parallel rays of one thought; in the synthetic two monostichs occur in loose external connection to suffice for the parallelism as a fundamental law of the technical proverb. But also in these proverbs in which a proper parallelism is not found, both members being needed to form a complete sentence, verse and members are so built up, according to Bertheau's self-confirmatory opinion, that in regard to extent and the number of words they are like verses with parallel members.

To this long course of distichs which profess to be the Mishle of Solomon, there follows a course, 22:17–24:22, of "words of the wise," prefaced by the introduction 22:17–21, which undeniably is of the same nature as the greater introduction, 1:7–9, and of which we are reminded by the form of address preserved throughout in these "words of the wise." These "words of the wise" comprehend all the forms of the Mashal, from those of two lines in 22:28; 23:9; 24:7, 8, 9, 10, to the Mashal song 23:29–35.

Between these limits are the tetrastichs, which are the most popular form, 22:22f., 24f., 26f., 23:10f., 15f., 17f., 24:1f., 3f., 5f., 15, f., 17f., 19f., 21f., —pentastichs, 23:4f., 24:13f., and hexastichs, 23:1–3, 12–14, 19–21, 26–28; 24:11f.; —of tristichs, heptastichs, and octastichs are at least found one specimen of each, 22:29; 23:6–8; 23:22–25. Bertheau maintains that there is a difference between the structure of these proverbs and that of the preceding, for he counts the number of the words which constitute a verse in the case of the latter and of the former; but such a proceeding is unwarrantable, for the remarkably long Masoretic verse 24:12 contains eighteen words; and the poet is not to be made accountable for such an arrangement, for in his mind 24:11f. forms a hexastich, and indeed a very elegant one. Not the words of the Masoretic verse, but the stichs are to be counted. Reckoning according to the stichs, I can discover no difference between these proverbs and the preceding. In the preceding ones also the number of the words in the stichs extends from two to five, the number two being here, however, proportionally more frequently found (e.g., 24:4b, 24:8a, 10b); a circumstance which has its reason in this, that the symmetry of the members is often very much disturbed, there being frequently no trace whatever of parallelism. To the first appendix to the "Proverbs of Solomon" there follows a second, 24:23ff., with the superscription, "These things also to the wise," which contains a hexastich, 24:23b–25, a distich, v. 26, a tristich, v. 27, a tetrastich, v. 28f., and a Mashal ode, v. 30ff., on the sluggard—the last in the form of an experience, of the poet like Ps. 37:35f. The moral which he has drawn from this recorded observation is expressed in two verses such as we have already found at 6:10f. These two appendices are, as is evident from their commencement as well as from their conclusion, in closest relation to the introduction, 1:7–9.

There now follows in 25–29 the second great collection of "Proverbs of Solomon," "copied out," as the superscription mentions, by the direction of King Hezekiah. It falls, apparently, into two parts; for as 24:30ff., a Mashal hymn stands at the end of the two appendices, so that the Mashal hymn 27:23ff. must be regarded as forming the division between the two halves of this collection. It is very sharply distinguished from the collection beginning with Prov. 10. The extent of the stichs and the greater or less observance of the parallelism furnish no distinguishing mark, but there are others worthy of notice. In the first collection the proverbs are exclusively in the form of distichs; here we have also some tristichs, 25:8, 13, 20; 27:10, 22; 28:10, tetrastichs, 25:4f., 9f., 21f., 26:18f, 24f., 27:15f., and pentastichs, 25:6f., besides the Mashal hymn already referred to. The kind of arrangement is not essentially different from that in the first collection; it is equally devoid of plan, yet there are here some chains or strings of related proverbs, 26:1–12, 13–16, 20–22. A second essential distinction between the two collections is this, that while in the first the antithetic proverb forms the prevailing element, here is it the parabolic, and especially the emblematic; in 25–27 are sentences almost wholly of this character. We say almost, for to place together proverbs of this kind exclusively is not the plan of the collector. There are also proverbs of the other schemes, fewer synonymous, etc., than antithetic, and the collection begins in very varied quodlibet: 25:2, an antithetic proverb; 25:3, a priamel with three subjects; 25:4f., an emblematic tetrastich; 25:6f., a pentastich; 25:8, a tristich; 25:9f., a tetrastich, with the negative פן; 25:11, an emblematic distich ("Golden apples in silver caskets—a word spoken in a fitting way"). The antithetic proverbs are found especially in 28 and 29: the first and the last proverb of the whole collection, 25:2; 29:27, are antithetic; but between these two the comparative and the figurative proverbs are so prevalent, that this collection appears like a variegated picture-book with explanatory notes written underneath. In extent it is much smaller than the foregoing. I reckon 126 proverbs in 137 Masoretic verses.

The second collection of Solomon's proverbs has also several appendices, the first of which, 30, according to the inscription, is by an otherwise unknown author, Agur the son of Jakeh. The first poem of this appendix present in a thoughtful way the unsearchableness of God. This is followed by certain peculiar pieces, such as a tetrastich regarding the purity of God’s word, 30:5f.; a prayer for a moderate position between riches and poverty, vv. 7–9; a distich against slander, v. 10; a priamel without the conclusion, vv. 11–14; the insatiable four (a Midda), v. 15f.; a tetrastich regarding the disobedient son, v. 17, the incomprehensible four, vv. 18–20; the intolerable four, vv. 21–23; the diminutive but prudent four, vv. 24–28; the excellent four, vv. 29–31; a pentastich recommending prudent silence, v. 32f. Two other supplements form the conclusion of the whole book: the counsel of Lemuel’s mother to her royal son, 31:2–9, and the praise of the virtuous woman in the form of an alphabetical acrostic, 31:10ff.

After we have acquainted ourselves with the manifold forms of the technical proverbs and their distribution in the several parts of the collection, the question arises, What conclusions regarding the origin of these several parts may be drawn from these forms found in them? We connect with this the conception of Ewald, who sees represented in the several parts of the collection the chief points of the history of proverbial poetry. The “Proverbs of Solomon,” 10:1–22:16, appear to him to be the oldest collection, which represents the simplest and the most ancient kind of proverbial poetry. Their distinguishing characteristics are the symmetrical two-membered verse, complete in itself, containing in itself a fully intelligible meaning, and the quick contrast of thesis and antithesis. The oldest form of the technical proverb, according to Ewald, is, according to our terminology, the antithetic distich, such as predominates in 10:1–22:16. Along with these antithetic distichs we find here also others of a different kind. Ewald so considers the contrast of the two members to be the original fundamental law of the technical proverb, that to him these other kinds of distichs represent the diminution of the inner force of the two-membered verse, the already begun decay of the art in its oldest limits and laws, and the transition to a new method. In the “Proverbs of Solomon,” 25–29, of the later collection, that rigorous formation of the verse appears already in full relaxation and dissolution: the contrast of the sense of the members appears here only exceptionally; the art turns from the crowded fulness and strength of the representation more to the adorning of the thought by means of strong and striking figures and forms of expression, to elegant painting of certain moral conditions and forms of life; and the more the technical proverb is deprived of the breath of a vigorous poetic spirit, so much the nearer does it approach to the vulgar proverb; the full and complete symmetry of the two members disappears, less by the abridgment of one of them, than by the too great extension and amplification of the two-membered proverb into longer admonitions to a moral life, and descriptions relating thereto. So the proverbial poetry passes essentially into a different form and manner. "While it loses in regard to internal vigorous brevity and strength, it seeks to gain again by means of connected instructive exposition, by copious description and detailed representation; breaking up its boldly delineated, strong, and yet simply beautiful form, it rises to oratorical display, to attractive eloquence, in which, indeed, though the properly poetical and the artistic gradually disappears, yet the warmth and easy comprehension are increased." In Prov. 1–9, the introduction of the older collection, and 22:17– 24, of the first half of the supplement to the older collection (25–29 is the second half), supplied by a later writer, the great change is completed, the growth of which the later collection of the "Proverbs of Solomon," particularly in 25–29, reveals. The symmetry of the two members of the verse is here completely destroyed; the separate proverb appears almost only as an exception; the proverbial poetry has passed into admonition and discourse, and has become in many respects lighter, and more flexible, and flowing, and comprehensible. "It is true that on the side of this later form of proverbial poetry there is not mere loss. While it always loses the excellent pointed brevity, the inner fulness and strength of the old proverbs, it gains in warmth, impressiveness, intelligibility; the wisdom which at first strives only to make its existence and its contents in endless manifoldness known, reaches this point at last, that having become clear and certain, it now also turns itsself earnestly and urgently to men." In the later additions, Prov. 30–31, appended altogether externally, the proverbial poetry has already disappeared, and given place to elegant descriptions of separate moral truths. While the creative passes into the background, the whole aim is now toward surprising expansion and new artistic representation.

This view of the progressive development of the course of proverbial poetry is one of the chief grounds for the determination of Ewald's judgment regarding the parts that are Solomonic and those that are not Solomonic in the collection. In 10:1–22:16 he does not regard the whole as Solomon's, as immediately and in their present form composed by Solomon; but the breath of the Solomonic spirit enlivens and pervades all that has been added by other and later poets. But most of the proverbs of the later collection (25–29) are not much older than the time of Hezekiah; yet there are in it some that are Solomonic, and of the period next to Solomon. The collection stretches backward with its arms, in part indeed, as the superscription, the "Proverbs of Solomon," shows, to the time of Solomon. On the other hand, in the introduction, 1–9, and in the first half of the appendix (Prov. 22:17–24), there is not found a single proverb of the time of Solomon; both portions belong to two poets of the seventh century B.C., a new era, in which the didactic poets added to the older Solomonic collection longer pieces of their own composition. The four small pieces, 30:1–14, 15–33; 31:1–9, 10ff., are of a still later date;
they cannot belong to an earlier period than the end of the seventh or the beginning of the sixth century B.C.

We recognise the penetration, the sensibility, the depth of thought indicate by this opinion of Ewald's regarding the origin of the book; yet for the most part it is not supported by satisfactory proof. If we grant that he has on the whole rightly construed the history of proverbial poetry, nevertheless the conclusion that proverbs which bear in themselves the marks of the oldest proverbial poetry belong to the Solomonic era, and that the others belong to a period more nearly or more remotely subsequent to it, is very fallacious. In this case much that is found in Sirach's Book of Proverbs must be Solomonic; and the משלי אסף of Isaac
Satanow, the contemporary of Moses Mendelssohn, as well as many other proverbs in the collection
works of other Jewish poets belonging to the middle ages or to later times, might be dated back perhaps a thousand years. Along with the general course of development the individuality of the poet is also to be taken into account; an ancient poet can, along with the formally completed, produce the imperfect, which appears to belong to a period of art that has degenerated, and a modern poet can emulate antiquity with the greatest accuracy. But Ewald’s construction of the progress of the development of proverbial poetry is also in part arbitrary. That the two-membered verse is the oldest form of the technical proverb we shall not dispute, but that it is the two-membered antithetic verse is a supposition that cannot be proved; and that Solomon wrote only antithetic distichs is an absurd assertion, to which Keil justly replies, that the adhering to only one form and structure is a sign of poverty, of mental narrowness and one-sidedness. There are also other kinds of parallelism, which are not less beautiful and vigorous than the antithetic, and also other forms of proverbs besides the distich in which the thought, which can in no way be restrained within two lines, must necessarily divide itself into the branches of a greater number of lines. Thus I must agree with Keil in the opinion, that Ewald’s assertion that in the Hezekiah-collection the strong form of the technical proverb is in full dissolution, contains an exaggeration. If the first collection, 10:1–22:16, contains only two (Prov. 10:26; 11:22) figurative proverbs, while it would be altogether foolish to deny that these two, because they were figurative proverbs, were Solomonic, or to affirm that he was the author of only these two, so it is self-evident that the Hezekiah-collection, which is principally a collection of figurative proverbs, must contain many proverbs in which a different kind of parallelism prevails, which has the appearance of a looser connection. Is it not probable that Solomon, who had an open penetrating eye for the greatest and the smallest objects of nature, composed many such proverbs? And is e.g., the proverb 26:23, Dross of silver spread over a potsherd—

Burning lips and a wicked heart, less beautiful, and vigorous, and worthy of Solomon than any antithetic distich? If Ewald imagines that the 3000 proverbs which Solomon wrote were all constructed according to this one model, we are much rather convinced that Solomon’s proverbial poetry, which found the distich and the tetrastich as forms of proverbs already in use, would not only unfold within the limits of the distich the most varied manifoldness of thought and form, but would also within the limits of the Mashal generally, run through the whole scale from the distich up to octastichs and more extensive forms. But while we cannot accept Ewald’s criteria which he applies to the two collections, 10:1–22:16 and 25–29, yet his delineation of the form and kind of proverbial poetry occurring in 1–9, 22:17ff., is excellent, as is also his conclusion, that these portions belong to a new and more recent period of proverbial poetry. Since in 22:17–21 manifestly a new course of “Words of the Wise” by a poet later than Solomon is introduced, it is possible, yea, not improbable, that he, or, as Ewald thinks, another somewhat older poet, introduces in 1:7–9 the “Proverbs of Solomon” following from 10:1 onward.

But if Solomon composed not only distichs, but also tristichs, etc., it is strange that in the first collection, 10–22:16, there are exclusively distichs; and if he constructed not only contrasted proverbs, but equally figurative proverbs, it is as strange that in the first collection the figurative proverbs are almost entirely wanting, while in the second collection, 25–29, on the contrary, they prevail. This remarkable phenomenon may be partly explained if we could suppose that not merely the second collection but both of them, were arranged by the “men of Hezekiah,” and that the whole collection of the Solomonic proverbs was divided by them into two collections according to their form. But leaving out of view other objections, one would in that case have expected in the first collection the proportionally great number of the antithetic distichs which stand in the second. If we regard both collections as originally one whole, then there can be no rational ground for its being divided in this particular way either by the original collector or by a later enlarger of the collection. We have therefore to regard the two portions as the work of two different authors. The second is by the "men of Hezekiah;" the first cannot be by Solomon himself, since the number of proverbs composed, and probably also written out by Solomon, amounted to 3000; besides, if Solomon was the author of the collection, there would be visible on it the stamp of his wisdom in its plan and order: it is thus the work of another author, who is certainly different from the author of the introductory Mashal poems, 1:7–9. For if the author of the title of the book were not at the same time the author of the introduction, he must have taken it from some other place; thus it is inconceivable how he could give the title “Proverbs of Solomon,” etc., 1:1–6, to poems which were not composed by Solomon. If 1:7–9 is not by Solomon, then these Mashal poems are explicable only as the work of the author of the title of the book, and as an introduction to the “Proverbs of Solomon,” beginning 10:1. It must be one and the same author who edited the “Proverbs of Solomon” 10:1–22:16, prefixed 1:7–9 as an introduction to them, and appended to them the “Words of the Wise,” 22:17–24:22; the second collector then appended to this book a supplement of the “Words of the Wise,” 24:23ff., and then the Hezekiah-collection of Solomonic proverbs, 25–29; perhaps also, in order that the book might be brought to a close in the same form in which it was commenced, he added the non-Solomonic proverbial poem 30:f. We do not, however, maintain that the book has this origin, but only this, that on the supposition of the non-Solomonic origin of 1:7–9 it cannot well have any other origin. But the question arises again, and more emphatically, How was it possible that the first collector left as gleanings to the second so great a number of distichs, almost all parabolical, and besides, all more than two-lined proverbs of Solomon? One can scarcely find the reason of this singular phenomenon in anything else than in the judgment of the author of the first collection as the determining motive of his selection. For when we think also on the sources and origin of the two collections, the second always presupposes the first, and that which is singular in the author’s thus restricting himself can only have its ground in the freedom which he allowed to his subjectivity.

Before we more closely examine the style and the teaching of the book, and the conclusions thence arising, another phenomenon claims our attention, which perhaps throws light on the way in which the several collections originated; but, at all events, it may not now any longer remain out of view, when we are in the act of forming a judgment on this point.

3. The repetitions in the Book of Proverbs.—We find not only in the different parts of the collection, but also within the limits of one and the same part, proverbs which wholly or in part are repeated in the same or in similar words. Before we can come to a judgment, we must take cognizance as closely as possible of this fact. We begin with “The Proverbs of Solomon,” 10–22:16; for this collection is in relation to 25–29 certainly the earlier, and it is especially with respect to the Solomonic proverbs that this fact demands an explanation. In this earlier collection we find, (1) whole proverbs repeated in exactly the same words: 14:12 = 16:25; — (2) proverbs slightly changed in their form of expression: 10:1 = 15:20; 14:20 = 19:4; 16:2 = 21:2; 19:5 = 19:9; 20:10 = 20:23; 21:9 = 21:19; — (3) proverbs almost identical in form, but somewhat different in sense: 10:2 = 11:4; 13:14 = 14:27; — (4) proverbs the first lines of which are the same: 10:15 = 18:11; — (5) proverbs with their second lines the same: 10:6 = 10:11; 10:8 = 10:10; 15:33 = 18:12; — (6) proverbs with one line almost the same: 11:13 = 20:19; 11:21 = 16:5; 12:14–13:2; 14:31 = 17:5; 16:18 = 18:12; 19:12 = 20:2; comp. also 16:28 with 17:9; 19:25 with 21:11. In comparing these proverbs, one will perceive that for the most part the external or internal resemblance of the surrounding has prompted the collector of place the one proverb in this place and the other in that place (not always indeed; for what reason e.g., could determine the position of 16:25 and 19:5, 9, I cannot say); then that the proverb standing earlier is generally, to all appearance, also the earlier formed, for the second of the pair is mostly a synonymous distich, which generally further extends antithetically one line of the first: cf. 18:11 with 10:15; 20:10, 23 with 11:1; 20:19 with 11:13; 16:5 with 11:21; 20:2 with 19:12, also 17:5 with 14:31, where from an antithetic proverb a synthetic one is formed; but here also there are exceptions, as 13:2 compared with 12:14, and 15:33 with 18:12, where the same line is in the first case connected with a synonymous, and in the second with an antithetic proverb; but here also the contrast is so loose, that the earlier-occurring proverb has the appearance of priority.

We now direct our attention to the second collection, 25–29. When we compare the proverbs found here with one another, we see among them a disproportionately smaller number of repetitions than in the other collection; only a single entire proverb is repeated in almost similar terms, but in an altered sense, 29:20 = 26:12; but proverbs such as 28:12, 28; 29:2, notwithstanding the partial resemblance, are equally original. On the other hand, in this second collection we find numerous repetitions of proverbs and portions of proverbs from the first:

—(1) Whole proverbs perfectly identical (leaving out of view insignificant variations): 25:24 = 21:9; 26:22 = 18:8; 27:12 = 22:3; 27:13 = 20:16; — (2) proverbs identical in meaning with somewhat changed expression: 26:13 = 22:13; 26:15 = 19:24; 28:6 = 19:1; 28:19 = 12:11; 29:13 = 22:2; — (3) proverbs with one line the same and one line different: 27:21 = 17:3; 29:22 = 15:18; cf. also 27:15 with 19:13. When we compare these proverbs with one another, we are uncertain as to many of them which has the priority, as e.g., 27:21 = 17:3; 29:22 = 15:18; but in the case of others there is no doubt that the Hezekiah-collection contains the original form of the proverb which is found in the other collection, as 26:13; 28:6, 19; 29:13; 27:15, in relation to their parallels. In the other portions of this book also we find such repetitions as are met with in these two collections of Solomonic proverbs. In 1:7–9:18 we have 2:16, a little changed, repeated in 7:5, and 3:15 in 8:11; 9:10a = 1:7a is a case not worthy of being mentioned, and it was inappropriate here to refer to 9:4, 16. In the first appendix of “the Words of the Wise,” 22:17–24:22, single lines often repeat themselves in another connection; cf. 23:3 and 6, 23:10 and 22:28; 23:17f. and 24:13f., 22:23 and 23:11; 23:17 and 24:1. That in such cases the one proverb is often the pattern of the other, is placed beyond a doubt by the relation of 24:19 to Ps. 37:1; cf. also 24:20 with Ps. 37:38. If here there are proverbs like those of Solomon in their expression, the presumption is that the priority belongs to the latter, as 23:27 cf. 22:14; 24:5f. cf. 11:14; 24:19f. cf. 13:9, in which latter case the justice of the presumption is palpable. Within the second appendix of “the Words of the Wise,” 24:23ff., no repetitions are to be expected on account of its shortness; yet is 24:23 repeated from the Solomonic Mashal 28:21, and as 24:33f. are literally the same as 6:10f., the priority is presumably on the side of the author of 1:7–9:18, at least of the Mashal in the form in which he communicates it. The supplements 30 and 31 afford nothing that is worth mention as bearing on our present inquiry, and we may therefore now turn to the question, What insight into the origin of these proverbs and their collection do the observations made afford?

From the numerous repetitions of proverbs and portions of proverbs of the first collection of the “Proverbs of Solomon” in the Hezekiah-collection, as well as from another reason stated at the end of the foregoing section of our inquiry, we conclude that the two collections were by different authors; in other words, that they had not both “the men of Hezekiah” for their authors. It is true that the repetitions in themselves do not prove anything against the oneness of their authorship for there are within the several collections, and even within 9–1 (cf. 6:20 with 1:8; 8:10f. with 3:14f.), repetitions, notwithstanding the oneness of their...
authorship. But if two collections of proverbs are in so many various ways different in their character, as 10:1–22:16 and 25–29, then the previous probability rises almost to a certainty by such repetitions. From the form, for the most part anomalous, in which the Hezekiah-collection presents the proverbs and portions of proverbs which are found also in the first collection, and from their being otherwise independent, we further conclude that “the men of Hezekiah” did not borrow from the first collection, but formed it from other sources. But since one does not understand why “the men of Hezekiah” should have omitted so great a number of genuine Solomonic proverbs which remain, after deducting the proportionally few that have been repeated (for this omission is not to be explained by saying that they selected those that were appropriate and wholesome for their time), we are further justified in the conclusion that the other collection was known to them as one current in their time. Their object was, indeed, not to supplement this older collection; they rather regarded their undertaking as a similar people’s book, which they wished to place side by side with that collection without making it superfluous. The difference of the selection in the two collections has its whole directing occasion in the difference of the intention. The first collection begins (Prov. 10:1) with the proverb—
And a foolish son is the grief of his mother; the second (Prov. 25:2) with the proverb—
It is the glory of God to conceal a thing,
And the glory of kings to search out a matter.

The one collection is a book for youth, to whom it is dedicated in the extended introduction, 1:7–9:18; the second is a people’s book suited to the time of Hezekiah (“Solomon’s Wisdom in Hezekiah’s days,” as Stier has named it), and therefore it takes its start not, like the first, from the duties of the child, but from those of the king. If in the two collections everything does not stand in conscious relation to these different objects, yet the collectors at least have, from the commencement to the close (cf. 22:15 with 29:26), these objects before their eyes. As to the time at which the first collection was made, the above considerations also afford us some materials for forming a judgment. Several pairs of proverbs which it contains present to us essentially the same sayings in older and more recent forms. Keil regards the proverbs also that appear less original as old-Solomonic, and remarks that one and the same poet does not always give expression to the same thoughts with the same pregnant brevity and excellence, and affirms that changes and reproductions of separate proverbs may proceed even from Solomon himself. This is possible; but if we consider that even Davidic psalms have been imitated, and that in the “Words of the Wise” Solomonic proverbs are imitated,—moreover, that proverbs especially are subject to changes, and invite to imitation and transformation,—we shall find it to be improbable. Rather we would suppose, that between the publication of the 3000 proverbs of Solomon and the preparation of the collection 10–22:16 a considerable time elapsed, during which the old-Solomonic Mashal had in the mouths of the people and of poets acquired a multitude of accretions, and that the collector had without hesitation gathered together such indirect Solomonic proverbs with those that were directly Solomonic. But did not then the 3000 Solomonic proverbs afford to him scope enough? We must answer this question in the negative; for if that vast number of Solomonic proverbs was equal in moral-religious worth to those that have been preserved to us, then neither the many repetitions within the first collection nor the proportional poverty of the second can be explained. The “men of Hezekiah” made their collection of Solomonic proverbs nearly 300 years after Solomon’s time; but there is no reason to suppose that the old book of the Proverbs of Solomon had disappeared at that time. Much rather we may with probability conclude, from the subjects to which several proverbs of these collections extend (husbandry, war, court life, etc.), and from Solomon’s love for the manifold forms of natural and of social life, that his 3000 proverbs would not have afforded much greater treasures than these before us. But if the first collection was made at a time in which the old-Solomonic proverbs had been already considerably multiplied by new combinations, accretions, and imitations, then probably a more suitable time for their origination could not be than that of Jehoshaphat, which was more related to the time of Solomon than to that of David. The personality of Jehoshaphat, inclined toward the promotion of the public worship of God, the edification of the people, the administration of justice; the dominion of the house of David recognised and venerated far and wide among neighbouring peoples; the tendencies of that time towards intercourse with distant regions; the deep peace which followed the subjugation of the confederated nations,—all these are features which stamped the time of Jehoshaphat as a copy of that of Solomon. Hence we are to expect in it the fostering care of the Chokma. If the author of the introduction and editor of the older book of Proverbs lived after Solomon and before Hezekiah, then the circumstances of the case most suitably determine his time as at the beginning of the reign of Jehoshaphat, some seventy years after Solomon’s death. If in 1–9 it is frequently said that wisdom was seen openly in the streets and ways, this agrees with 2 Chron. 17:7–9, where it is said that princes, priests, and Levites, sent out by Jehoshaphat (compare the Carolingian missi), went forth into the towns of Judah with the book of the law in their hands as teachers of the people, and with 2 Chron. 19:4, where it is stated that Jehoshaphat himself “went out through the people from Beer-sheba to Mount Ephraim, and brought them back unto the Lord God of their fathers.” We have an evidence of the fondness for allegorical forms of address at that time in 2 Kings 14:8–11 (2 Chron. 25:17–21), which is so far favourable to the idea that the allegorizing author of 1–9 belonged to that epoch of history. This also agrees with the time of Jehoshaphat, that in the first collection the kingdom appears in its bright side, adorned with righteousness (Prov. 14:35; 16:10, 12, 13; 20:8), wisdom (Prov. 20:26), grace and truth (Prov. 20:28), love to the good (Prov. 22:11), divine guidance (Prov. 21:1), and in the height of power (Prov. 16:14, 15; 19:12); while in the second collection, which immediately begins with a series of the king’s sayings, the kingdom is seen almost only (with exception of 29:14) on its dark side, and is represented under the destructive dominion of tyranny (Prov. 28:15, 16; 29:2), of oppressive taxation (Prov. 29:4), of the Camarilla (Prov. 25:5; 29:12), and of multiplied authorities (Prov. 28:2). Elster is right when he remarks, that in 10–22:16 the kingdom in its actual state corresponds to its ideal, and the warning against the abuse of royal power lies remote. If these proverbs more distinguishably than those in 25–29 bear the physiognomy of the time of David and Solomon, so, on the other hand, the time of Jehoshaphat, the son and successor of Asa, is favourable to their collection; while in the time of Hezekiah, the son and successor of Ahaz, and father and predecessor of Manasseh, in which, through the sin of Ahaz, negotiations with the world-kingdom began, that cloudy aspect of the kingdom which is borne by the second supplement, 24:23–25, was brought near. Thus between Solomon and Hezekiah, and probably under Jehoshaphat, the older Book of Proverbs contained in 1–24:22 first appeared. The “Proverbs of Solomon,” 10:1–22:16, which formed the principal part, the very kernel of it, were enclosed on the one side, at their commencement, by the lengthened introduction 1:7–9:18, in which the collector announces himself as a highly gifted teacher and as the instrument of the Spirit of revelation, and on the other side are shut in at their close by “the Words of the Wise,” 22:17–24:34. The author, indeed, does not announce 1:6 such a supplement of “the Words of the Wise,” but after these words in the title of the book, he leads us to expect it. The introduction to the supplement 22:17–21 sounds like an echo of the larger introduction, and corresponds to the smaller compass of the supplement. The work bears on the whole the stamp of a unity; for even in the last proverb with which it closes (Prov. 24:21f., “My son, fear thou Jahve and the king,” etc.), there still sounds the same key-note which the author had struck at the commencement. A later collector, belonging to the time subsequent to Hezekiah, enlarged the work by the addition of the Hezekiah-portion, and by a short supplement of “the Words of the Wise,” which he introduces, according to the law of analogy, after 22:17–24:22. The harmony of the superscriptions 24:23; 25:1, favours at least the supposition that these supplements are the work of one hand. The circumstance that “the Words of the Wise,” 22:17–24:22, in two of their maxims refer to the older collection of Solomonic proverbs, but, on the contrary, that “the Words of the Wise,” 24:23ff., refer in 24:23 to the Hezekiah-collection, and in 24:33f. to the introduction 1:7–9:18, strengthens the supposition that with 24:23 a second half of the book, added by another hand, begins. There is no reason for not attributing the appendix 30–31 to this second collector; perhaps he seeks, as already remarked above, to render by means of it the conclusion of the extended Book of Proverbs uniform with that of the older book. Like the older collection of “Proverbs of Solomon,” so also now the Hezekiah-collection has “Proverbs of Solomon,” so also now the Hezekiah-collection has “Proverbs of the Wise” on the right and on the left, and the king of proverbial poetry stands in the midst of a worthy retinue. The second collector distinguishes himself from the first by this, that he never professes himself to be a proverbial poet. It is possible that the proverbial poem of the “virtuous woman,” 31:10ff., may be his work, but there is nothing to substantiate this opinion.

After this digression, not which we have been led by the repetitions found in the book, we now return, conformably to our plan, to examine it from the point of view of the forms of its language and of its doctrinal contents, and to inquire whether the results hitherto attained are confirmed, and perhaps more fully determined, by this further investigation.
שכל (perverteth), 13:6; 19:3; 21:12; 22:12, and שכל (perverseness), 11:3; 15:4, are only to be found in the first collection, and not in that by the “men of Hezekiah,” it is not a decisive evidence against the oneness of the origin of the proverbs in both collections. The fact also, properly brought forward by Ewald, that proverbs which begin with שיש (there is),—e.g., 11:24, “There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth still,”—are exclusively found in the first collection, need not perplex us; it is one peculiar kind of proverbs which the author of this collection has by preference gathered together, as he has also omitted all parabolic proverbs except these two, 10:26; 11:22. If proverbs beginning with שיש are found only in the first, so on the other hand the parabolic Vav and the proverbial perfect, reporting as it were an experience (cf. in the second collection, besides 26:13; 27:12; 29:13, also 28:1; 29:9), for which Döderlein has invented the expression aoristus gnomicus, are common to both sentences. Another remark of Ewald’s (Jahrb. xi. 28), that extended proverbs with שיש are exclusively found in the Hezekiah-collection (Prov. 29:9, 3; 25:18, 28), is not fully established; in 16:27–29 three proverbs with שיש are found together, and in 20:6 as well as in 29:9 יש occurs twice in one proverb. Rather it strikes us that the article, not merely the punctuatorially syncopated, but that expressed by יש, occurs only twice in the first collection, in 20:1; 21:31; oftener in the second, 26:14, 18; 27:19, 20, 22. Since, however, the first does not wholly omit the article, this also cannot determine us to reject the linguistic unity of the second collection with the first, at least according to their primary stock.
But also what of the linguistic unity of 1:1–9:18 with both of these, maintained by Keil? It is true, and merits all consideration, that a unity may be proved. The introduction is bound with the first collection in the closest manner by the same use of such expressions as אנה (gathereth), 6:8; 10:5; איש (the middle, i.e., of the night, deep darkness), 7:9; 20:20; איש (the end), 5:4; 23:18; 24:14; ינוק (fierce), 5:9;
17:11; היינו (understanding), 1:2; 16:16; יתוהו (understanding), 2:6; 3:19; 21:30; יתעו (an adulteress), 5:3; 22:14; 23:33; יכין (lacking understanding), 6:32; 7:7; 12:11; ימקף קלח (will increase learning), 1:5; 9:9; 16:21, 23;
ינש (utter), 6:19; 14:5; 19:5, 9; ילת (perverted), 3:32; 14:2; ידננס (contention), 6:14, 19; 10:12;
רפא (health), 4:22; 12:18; 13:17; 16:24
(deliverance, 29:1); רפס (are plucked up), 2:22; 15:25; ימעל (shall not be unpunished), 6:29; 11:21; 16:5; יש (strengthened, i.e., the face),
7:13; 21:29; יש יתיה (tree of life), 3:18; 11:30; 13:12; 15:4; יבר (becometh surety) and יש (striketh hands) occurring together, 6:1; 17:18;
22:26; יש and נפש (simplicity, folly), 1:22; 32; 8:5; 9:6; 23:3; ניפhim (to wink with the eyes), 6:13; 10:10; ירא (a city), 8:3; 9:3, 14; 11:11;
ישאר (instruction), 1:8; 3:1; 4:2; 7:2; 13:14; ישאר (counsel), 3:21; 8:14; 18:1; ישנא (prudent measures), 1:5; 20:18; 24:6;—and these are not the only points of contact between the two portions which an attentive reader will meet with. This relation of 1:1–9:18 to 10–22:16 is a strong proof of the internal unity of that portion, which Bertheau has called in question.
But are we therefore to conclude, with Keil, that the introduction is not less of the old time of Solomon than 10–22:16? Such a conclusion lies near, but we do not yet reach it. For with these points of contact there are not a few expressions exclusively peculiar to the introduction;—the expressions מְזִמָה (counsel), 1:4; 3:21; מְשַׁמַּם (prudence), 1:4; 8:5, 12; מְלִיצָה (an enigma, obscure maxim), 1:6; מַעֲרָם (a path of life), 2:9; 4:11, 26; מַעֲנָה (the apple of the eye), 7:2, 9; מֲעָרָם (the throat), 1:9; 3:3, 22; the verbs אָתָה (cometh), 1:27, פִּלֵס (make level or plain), 4:26; 5:6, 21, and וַעֲבָר (deviate), 4:15; 7:25. Peculiar to this section is the heaping together of synonyms in close connection, as "congregation" and "assembly," 5:14; "lovely hind" and "pleasant roe," 5:19; cf. 5:11; 6:7; 7:9; 8:13, 31. This usage is, however, only a feature in the characteristic style of this section altogether different from that of 10:1–22:16, as well as from that of 25–29, of its disjointed diffuse form, delighting in repetitions, abounding in synonymous parallelism, even to a repetition of the same words (cf. e.g., 6:2), which, since the linguistic and the poetic forms are here inseparable, we have already spoken of in the second part of our introductory dissertation. This fundamental diversity in the whole condition of the section, notwithstanding those numerous points of resemblance, demands for 1:1–9:18 an altogether different author from Solomon, and one who is more recent. If we hold by this view, then these points of resemblance between the sections find the most satisfactory explanation. The gifted author of the introduction (Prov. 1:1–9:18) has formed his style, without being an altogether slavish imitator, on the Solomonic proverbs. And why, then, are his parallels confined almost exclusively to the section 10:1–22:16, and do not extend to 25–29? Because he edited the former and not the latter, and took pleasure particularly in the proverbs which he placed together, 10:1–22:16. Not only are expressions of this section, formed by himself, echoed in his poetry, but the latter are for the most part formed out of germs supplied by the former. One may regard 19:27, cf. 27:11, as the germ of the admonitory addresses to the son, and 14:1 as the occasion of the allegory of the wise and the foolish woman, 9. Generally, the poetry of this writer has its hidden roots in the older writings. Who does not hear, to mention only one thing, in 1:7–9:18 an echo of the old שמע (hear), Deut. 6:4–9, cf. 11:18–21? The whole poetry of this writer savours of the Book of Deuteronomy. The admonitory addresses 1:7–9:18 are to the Book of Proverbs what Deuteronomy is to the Pentateuch. As Deuteronomy seeks to bring home and seal upon the heart of the people the תורה of the Mosaic law, so do they the תורה of the Solomonic proverbs.

We now further inquire whether, in the style of the two supplements, 22:27–24:22 and 24:23ff., it is proved that the former concludes the Book of Proverbs edited by the author of the general introduction, and that the latter was added by a different author at the same time with the Hezekiah-collection. Bertheau placed both supplements together, and attributes the introduction to them, 22:17–21, to the author of the general introduction, 1:7–9. From the fact that in v. 19 of this lesser introduction ("I have taught thee, אָתָה, even thee") the pronoun is as emphatically repeated as in 23:15 (לָיִי יְהֵס), cf. 23:14, 19), and that נָעִים (sweet), 22:18, also occurs in the following proverbs, 23:8; 24:4, I see no ground for denying it to the author of the larger general introduction, since, according to Bertheau's own just observation, the linguistic form of the whole collection of proverbs has an influence on the introduction of the collector; with more justice from שָלַיס (only in Keri), as the title of honour given to the collection of proverbs, compared with נֵדֶים 8:6, may we argue for the identity of the authorship of both introductions. As little can the contemporaneousness of the two supplements be shown from the use of the pronoun, 24:32, the שִית לֵב (animum advertere, 24:32), and יִנְׁעָם (shall be delight) 24:25, for these verbal points of contact, if they proved anything, would prove too much: not only the contemporaneousness of the two supplements, but also the identity of their authorship; but in this case one does not see what the superscription ג ם־אֵלֶה ל חֲכָמִים (these also of the wise men), separating them, means. Moreover, 24:33f. are from 6:10f., and nearer than the comparison of the first supplement lies the comparison of יִנעם with 2:10; 9:17, וּיִזְׁעָמוּה with 22:14, — points of contact which, if an explanatory reason is needed, may be accounted for from the circumstance that to the author or authors of the proverbs 24:23ff. the Book of Proverbs 1:1–24:22 may have been perfectly familiar. From imitation also the points of contact of 22:17–24:22 may easily be explained; for not merely the lesser introduction, the proverbs themselves also in part strikingly agree with the prevailing language of 1:1–9:18: cf. אָדָם חֲס ר לֵב (a man lacking understanding) with 17:18, חָכְׁמות with 22:14, — points of contact which, if an explanatory reason is needed, may be accounted for from the circumstance that to the author or authors of the proverbs 24:23ff. the Book of Proverbs 1:1–24:22 may have been perfectly familiar. From imitation also the points of contact of 22:17–24:22 may easily be explained; for not merely the lesser introduction, the proverbs themselves also in part strikingly agree with the prevailing language of 1:1–9:18: cf. (go straight forward in the way), 23:19, with 4:14; חָכְמות (wisdom), 24:7, with 1:20; 9:1; and several others. But if, according to 1:7, we conceive of the older Book of Proverbs as accompanied with, rather than as without יִנעם (words of wise men), then from the similarity of the two superscriptions 24:23; 25:1, it is probable that the more recent half of the canonical book begins with 24:23, and we cannot therefore determine to regard 24:23ff. also as a component part of the older Book of Proverbs; particularly since 24:23b is like 28:21a, and the author of the introduction can scarcely have twice taken into his book the two verses 24:33f., which moreover seem to stand in their original connection at 6:10f.

The supplements to the Hezekiah-collection, 30f., are of so peculiar a form, that it will occur to no one (leaving out of view such expressions as דִבְׁרֵי חֲכָמִים, knowledge of the Holy, 30:3, cf. 9:10) to ascribe them to one of the authors of the preceding proverbs. We content ourselves here with a reference to Mühlau’s work, De Proverbiorum quae dicuntur Aguri et Lemuelis origine atque indole, 1869, where the Aramaic-Arabic colouring of this in all probability foreign section is closely investigated.

Having thus abundantly proved that the two groups of proverbs bearing the inscription מִשְׁלֵי are, as to their primary stock, truly old-Solomonic, though not without an admixture of imitations; that, on the contrary, the introduction, 1:7–9:18, as well as the דברי חכמים, 22:17–24 and 30f., are not at all old-Solomonic, but belong to the editor of the older Book of Proverbs, which reaches down to 24:22, so that thus the present book of the poetry of Solomon contains united with it the poems of the older editor, and besides of other poets, partly unknown Israelites, and partly two foreigners particularly named, Agur and Lemuel; we now turn our attention to the DOCTRINAL CONTENTS of the work, and ask whether a manifoldness in the type of instruction is noticeable in it, and whether there is perceptible in this manifoldness a progressive development. It may be possible that the Proverbs of Solomon, the Words of the Wise, and the Proverbial poetry of the editor, as they represent three eras, so also represent three different stages in the development of proverbial poetry. However, the Words of the Wise 22:17–24 are so internally related to the Proverbs of Solomon, that even the sharpest eye will discover in them not more than the evening twilight of the vanishing Solomonic Mashal. There thus remain on the one side only the Proverbs of Solomon with their echo in the Words of the Wise, on the other the Proverbial Poems of the editor; and these present themselves as monuments of two sharply defined epochs in the progressive development of the Mashal.

The common fundamental character of the book in all its parts is rightly defined when we call it a Book of Wisdom. Indeed, with the Church Fathers not only the Book of Sirach and the Solomonic Apocrypha, but also this Book of Proverbs bears this title, which seems also to have been in use among the Jews, since Melito of Sardes adds to the title “Proverbs of Solomon,” ἡ καὶ Σοφίας, since, moreover, Eusebius (H. E. iv. 22) affirms, that not only Hegesippus and Irenaeus, but the whole of the ancients, called the Proverbs of Solomon Πανάρετος Σοφίας. It is also worthy of observation that it is called by Dionysius of Alexandria ἡ σοφή βίβλος, and by Gregory of Nazianzum ἡ παιδαγωγικὴ σοφία. These names not only express praise of the book, but they also denote at the same time the circle of human intellectual activity from which it emanated. As the books of prophecy are a product of the נְּבוּאָה, so the Book of the Proverbs is a product of the חָכְּמָה, σοφία, the human effort to apprehend the objective σοφία, and thus of φιλοσοφία, or the studium sapientiae. It has emanated from the love of wisdom, to incite to the love of wisdom, and to put into the possession of that which is the object of love—for this end it was written. We need not hesitate, in view of Col. 2:8, to call the Book of Proverbs a “philosophical” treatise, since the origin of the name φιλοσοφία is altogether noble: it expresses the relativity of human knowledge as over against the absoluteness of the divine knowledge, and the possibility of an endlessly progressive advancement of the human toward the divine. The characteristic ideas of a dialectic development of thought and of the formation of a scientific system did not primarily appertain to it—the occasion for this was not present to the Israelitish people: it required fructification through the Japhetic spirit to produce philosophers such as Philo, Maimonides, and Spinoza. But philosophy is everywhere present when the natural, moral, positive, is made the object of a meditation which seeks to apprehend its last ground, its legitimate coherence, its true essence and aim. In the view C. B. Michaelis, in his Adnotationes ubiores in Hagiographa, passes from the exposition of the Psalms to that of the Proverbs with the words, “From David’s closet, consecrated to prayer, we now pass into Solomon’s school of wisdom, to admire the greatest of philosophers in the son of the greatest of theologians.”

When we give the name φιλοσοφία to the tendency of mind to which the Book of Proverbs belongs, we do not merely use a current scientific word, but there is an actual internal relation of the Book of Proverbs to that which is the essence of philosophy, which Scripture recognises (Acts 17:27, cf. Rom. 1:19ff.) as existing within the domain of heathendom, and which stamps it as a natural produce of the human spirit, which never can be wanting where a human being or a people rises to higher self-consciousness and its operations in their changing relation to the phenomena of the external world. The mysteries of the world without him and of the world within him give man no rest, he must seek to solve them; and whenever he does that, he philosophizes, i.e., he strives after a knowledge of the nature of things, and of the laws which govern them in the world of phenomena and of events; on which account also Josephus, referring to Solomon’s knowledge of nature, says (Ant. viii. 2. 5), οὐδεμίαν τούτων φύσιν ἠγνόησεν οὐδὲ παρῆλθεν ἀνεξέταστον ἀλλ᾽ ἐν πάσαις ἐφιλοσόφησεν. Cf. Irenaeus, Cont. Her. iv. 27. 1: eam quae est in conditione (κτίσει) sapientiam Dei exponebat physiologice.

The historical books show us how much the age of Solomon favoured philosophical inquiries by its prosperity and peace, its active and manifold commercial intercourse with foreign nations, its circle of vision extending to Tarshish and Ophir, and also how Solomon himself attained to an unequalled elevation in the extent of his human and secular knowledge. We also read of some of the wise men in 1 Kings 5:11, cf. Ps. 88–89, who adorned the court of the wisest of kings; and the מָשָל, which became, through his influence, a special branch of Jewish literature, is the peculiar poetic form of the חָכְמָה.

Therefore in the Book of Proverbs we find the name דִבְׁרֵי חֲכָמִים (words of the wise) used for מְשָלִים (proverbs); and by a careful consideration of all the proverbs in which mention is made of the חכמים, one will convince himself that this name has not merely a common ethical sense, but begins to be the name of those who made wisdom, i.e., the knowledge of things in the depths of their essence, their special lifework, and who connected themselves together in oneness of sentiment and fellowship into a particular circle within the community. To this conclusion we are conducted by such proverbs as 13:20—He that walketh with wise men becomes wise, and whoever has intercourse with fools is destroyed; 15:12—The scorner loveth not that one reprove him: To wise men he goeth not;—and by the contrast, which prevails in the Book of Proverbs, between לֵץ (mocker) and חָכָם (wise), in which we see that, at the same time with the striving after wisdom, scepticism also, which we call free thought, obtained a great ascendency in Israel. Mockery of religion, rejection of God in principle and practice, a casting away of all fear of Jahve, and in general all דאָטָדָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָאָa, which had already marked the times of David. One may see from the Psalms that the community of the Davidic era is to be by no means regarded as furnishing a pattern of religious life: that there were in it גוים (Gentile nations) which were in no way externally inferior to them, and that it did not want for rejecters of God. But it is natural to expect that in the Solomonic era, which was more than any other exposed to the dangers of sensuality and worldliness, and of religious indifference and free-thinking latitudinarianism, the number of the לֵץ increased, and that scepticism and mockery became more intensified. The Solomonic era appears to have first coined the name of לֵץ for those men who despised that which was holy, and in doing so laid claim to wisdom (Prov. 14:6), who caused contention and bitterness when they spake, and carefully avoided the society of the חכמים, because they thought themselves above their admonitions (Prov. 15:12). For in the psalms of the Davidic time the word לֶק ח was commonly used for them (it occurs in the Proverbs only in 17:21, with the general meaning of low fellow, Germ. Bube), and the name לֵץ is never met with except once, in Ps. 1:1, which belongs to the post-Davidic era. One of the Solomonic proverbs (Prov. 21:24) furnishes a definite idea of this newly formed word: An inflated arrogant man they call a scorner לֵץ, One who acts in the superfluity of haughtiness. By the self-sufficiency of his ungodly thoughts and actions he is distinguished from the פֶתִי (simple), who is only misled, and may therefore be reclaimed, 19:25; 21:11; by his non-recognition of the Holy in opposition to a better knowledge and better means and opportunities, he is distinguished from the כְׁסִיל (foolish, stupid), 17:16, the אֱוִיל (foolish, wicked), 1:7; 7:22, and the void לֵץ לֵץ (the void of understanding), 6:32, who despise truth and instruction from want of understanding, narrowness, and forgetfulness of God, but not from perverse principle. This name specially coined, the definition of it given (cf. also the similarly defining proverb 24:8), and in general the rich and fine technical proverbs in relation to the manifold kinds of wisdom (בִּנָה, 16:16; מוּס ר, 1:5; תְׁבוּנות, 21:30; מְזִמות, 5:2; תחְנוֹת, 1:5; מַעֲשֶׂים, 1:8; חֲטָאָוָא, 21:30; מְמוֹת, 5:2; תְּהִיָא, 1:5; 12:5; the first coined by the Chokma, etc.), of instruction in wisdom (לֶק ח, 1:5; יֵשׁ עָלָה, 4:2; 6:23; רַעְיָה, to tend to a flock, to instruct, 10:21; חֲצֵרָא, 22:6; חָצֵרָא, 15:12; לָק ח נְׁפָשות, to win souls, 6:25; 11:30), of the wise men themselves (חָכָם, 12:15; בָאָב, 10:13; מוכָּה, a reprover, preacher of repentance, 25:12, etc.), and of the different classes of men (among whom also אָדָם...
one who steps backwards [retrograder], 28:23)—all this shows that חכמה was not merely the designation of an ethical quality, but also the designation of a science rooted in the fear of God to which many noble men in Israel then addicted themselves. Jeremiah places (Jer. 18:18) the חכם along with the כohen (priest) and נביא (prophet); and if Ezekiel (Ezek. 7:26) uses זקנים (old man) instead of חכם, yet by reference to Job 12:12 this may be understood. In his “Dissertation on the popular and intellectual freedom of Israel from the time of the great prophets to the first destruction of Jerusalem” (Jahrbücher, i. 96f.), Ewald says, “One can scarcely sufficiently conceive how high the attainment was which was reached in the pursuit after wisdom (philosophy) in the first centuries after David, and one too much overlooks the mighty influence it exerted on the entire development of the national life of Israel. The more closely those centuries are inquired into, the more are we astonished at the vast power which wisdom so early exerted on all sides as the common object of pursuit of many men among the people. It first openly manifested itself in special circles of the people, while in the age after Solomon, which was peculiarly favourable to it, eagerly inquisitive scholars gathered around individual masters, until ever increasing schools were formed. But its influence gradually penetrated all the other pursuits of the people, and operated on the most diverse departments of authorship.” We are in entire sympathy with this historical view first advanced by Ewald, although we must frequently oppose the carrying of it out in details. The literature and the national history of Israel are certainly not understood if one does not take into consideration, along with the נביא (prophecy), the influential development of the חכמה as a special aim and subject of intellectual activity in Israel.

And how was this Chokma conditioned—to what was it directed? To denote its condition and aim in one word, it was universalistic, or humanistic. Emanating from the fear or the religion of Jahve (hetics the way of the Lord, 10:29), but seeking to comprehend the spirit in the letter, the essence in the forms of the national life, its effort was directed towards the general truth affecting mankind as such. While prophecy, which is recognised by the Chokma as a spiritual power indispensable to a healthful development of a people, is of service to the historical process into which divine truth enters to work out its results in Israel, and from thence outward among mankind, the Chokma seeks to look into the very essence of this truth through the robe of its historical and national manifestation, and then to comprehend those general ideas in which could already be discovered the fitness of the religion of Jahve for becoming the world-religion. From this aim towards the ideal in the historical, towards the everlasting same amid changes, the human (I intentionally use this word) in the Israelitish, the universal religion in the Jahve-religion (Jahvetum), and the universal morality in the Law, all the peculiarities of the Book of Proverbs are explained, as well as of the long, broad stream of the literature of the Chokma, beginning with Solomon, which, when the Palestinian Judaism assumed the rugged, exclusive, proud national character of Pharisaism, developed itself in Alexandrinism. Bertheau is amazed that in the Proverbs there are no warnings given against the worship of idols, which from the time of the kings gained more and more prevalence among the Israelitish people. “How is it to be explained,” he asks (Spr. p. xlii.), “if the proverbs, in part at least, originated during the centuries of conflict between idolatry and the religion of Jahve, and if they were collected at a time in which this conflict reached its climax and stirred all ranks of the people—this conflict against the immorality of the Phoenician-Babylonian religion of nature, which must often have led into the same region of the moral contemplation of the world over which this book moves?” The explanation lies in this, that...
the Chokma took its stand-point in a height and depth in which it had the mingling waves of international life and culture under it and above it, without being internally moved thereby. It naturally did not approve of heathenism, it rather looked upon the fear of Jahve as the beginning of wisdom, and the seeking after Jahve as implying the possession of all knowledge (Prov. 28:5, cf. 1 John 2:20); but it passed over the struggle of prophecy against heathendom, it confined itself to its own function, viz., to raise the treasures of general religious-moral truth in the Jahve-religion, and to use them for the ennobling of the Israelites as men. In vain do we look for the name יִשְׁרָאֵל in the Proverbs, even the name תורָה has a much more flexible idea attached to it than that of the law written at Sinai (cf. 28:4; 29:18 with 28:7; 13:14, and similar passages); prayer and good works are placed above sacrifice, 15:8; 21:3, 27,—practical obedience to the teaching if wisdom above all, 28:9. The Proverbs refer with special interest to Gen. 1 and 2, the beginnings of the world and of the human race before nations took their origin. On this primitive record in the book of Genesis, to speak only of the מִשְׁלֵי שְׁלֹمֹה, the figure of the tree of life (perhaps also of the fountain of life), found nowhere else in the Old Testament, leans; on it leans also the contrast, deeply pervading the Proverbs, between life (immortality, 12:28) and death, or between that which is above and that which is beneath (Prov. 15:24); on it also many other expressions, such, e.g., as what is said in 20:27 of the “spirit of man.” This also, as Stier (Der Weise ein König, 1849, p. 240) has observed, accounts for the fact that אָדָם occurs by far most frequently in the Book of Job and in the Solomonic writings. All these phenomena are explained from the general human universal aim of the Chokma.

When James (James 3:17) says that the “wisdom that is from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality and without hypocrisy,” his words most excellently designate the nature and the contents of the discourse of wisdom in the Solomonic proverbs, and one is almost inclined to think that the apostolic brother of the Lord, when he delineates wisdom, has before his eyes the Book of the Proverbs, which raises to purity by the most impressive admonitions. Next to its admonitions to purity are those especially to peacefulness, to gentle resignation (Prov. 14:30), quietness of mind (Prov. 14:33) and humility (Prov. 11:2; 15:33; 16:5, 18), to mercy (even toward beasts, 12:10), to firmness and sincerity of conviction, to the furtherance of one’s neighbour by means of wise discourse and kind help. What is done in the Book of Deuteronomy with reference to the law is continued here. As in Deuteronomy, so here, love is at the bottom of its admonitions, the love of God to men, and the love of men to one another in their diverse relations (Prov. 12:2; 15:9); the conception of צְדָקָה gives way to that of charity, of almsgiving (דיקאוסונὴ = ἐλεημοσύνη). Forgiving, suffering love (Prov. 10:12), love which does good even to enemies (Prov. 25:21f.), rejoices not over the misfortune that befalls an enemy (Prov. 24:17f.), retaliates not (Prov. 24:28f.), but commits all to God (Prov. 20:22)—love in its manifold forms, as that of husband and wife, of children, of friends,—is here recommended with New Testament distinctness and with deepest feeling. Living in the fear of God (Prov. 28:14), the Omniscent (Prov. 15:3, 11; 16:2; 21:2; 24:11f.), to whom as the final Cause all is referred (Prov. 20:12, 24; 14:31; 22:2), and whose universal plan all must subserve (Prov. 16:4; 19:21; 21:30), and on the other side active pure love to man—these are the hinges on which all the teachings of wisdom in the Proverbs turn. Frederick Schlegel, in the fourteenth of his Lectures on the History of Literature, distinguishes, not without deep truth, between the historico-prophetic books of the Old Testament, or books of the history of redemption, and the Book of Job, the Psalms, and the Solomonic writings, as books of aspiration, corresponding to the triple chord of faith, hope, charity as the three stages of the inner spiritual life. The Book of Job is designed to support faith amid trials; the Psalms breathe forth and exhibit hope amid the conflicts of earth’s longings; the Solomonic writings reveal to us the mystery of the divine love, and the Proverbs that wisdom which grows out of and is itself eternal love. When Schlegel in the same lecture says that the books of the Old Covenant, for the most part, stand under the signature of the lion as the element of the power of will and spirited conflict glowing in divine fire, but that in the inmost hidden kernel and heart of the sacred book the Christian figure of the lamb rises up out of the veil of this lion strength, this may specially be said of the Book of Proverbs, for here that same heavenly wisdom preaches, which, when manifested in person, spake in the Sermon on the Mount, New Testament love in the midst of the Old Testament.

It is said that in the times before Christ there was a tendency to apocryphize not only the Song of Solomon and Ecclesiastes, but also the Book of Proverbs, and that for the first time the men of the Great Synagogue established their canonicity on the ground of their spiritual import; they became perplexed about the Proverbs, according to b. Sabbath, 30b, on account of such self-contradictory proverbs as 26:4, 5, and according to Aboth de-Rabbi Nathan, c. 1, on account of such secular portions as that of the wanton woman, 7. But there is no need to allegorize this woman, and that self-contradiction is easily explained. The theopneustic character of the book and its claim to canonicity show themselves from its integral relation to the Old Testament preparation for redemption; but keeping out of view the book as a whole, it is self-evident that the conception of a practical proverb such as 14:4 and of a prophecy such as Isa. 7:14 are very different phenomena of the spiritual life, and that in general the operation of the Divine Spirit in a proverb is different from that in a prophecy.

We have hitherto noted the character of the instruction set forth in the Proverbs according to the marks common to them in all their parts, but in such a way that we have taken our proofs only from the “Proverbs of Solomon” and the “Words of the Wise,” with the exclusion of the introductory proverbial poems of the older editor. If we compare the two together, it cannot be denied that in the type of the instruction contained in the latter, the Chokma, of which the book is an emanation and which it has as its aim (Proverbs 1:2), stands before us in proportionally much more distinctly defined comprehension and form; we have the same relation before us whose adumbration is the relation of the instruction of wisdom in the Avesta and in the later Minochired (Spiegel, Parsi-Grammatik, p. 182ff.). The Chokma appears also in the “Proverbs of Solomon” as a being existing in and for itself, which is opposed to ambiguous subjective thought (Prov. 28:26); but here there is attributed to it an objectivity even to an apparent personality: it goes forth preaching, and places before all men life and death for an eternally decisive choice, it distributes the spirit of those who do not resist (Prov. 1:23), it receives and answers prayer (Prov. 1:28). The speculation regarding the Chokma is here with reference to Job 28 (cf. Prov. 2:4; 3:14f., 8:11, 19), and particularly to 28:27, where a demiurgic function is assigned to wisdom, carried back to its source in eternity: it is the medium by which the world was created, 3:19; it was before the creation of the world with God as from everlasting, His son of royal dignity, 8:22–26; it was with Him in His work of creation, 8:27–30; after the creation it remained as His delight, rejoicing always before Him, and particularly on the earth among the sons of men, 8:30f. Staudenmaier (Lehre von der Idee, p. 37) is certainly not on the wrong course, when under this rejoicing of wisdom before God he understands the development of the ideas or life-thoughts intimately bound up in it—the world-idea. This development is the delight of God, because it represents to the divine contemplation of the contents of wisdom, or of the world-idea founded in the divine understanding, in all its activities and inner harmonies; it is a calm delight, because the divine idea unites with the fresh and every young impulse of life, the purity, goodness, innocence, and holiness of life, because its spirit is light, clear, simple, childlike, in itself peaceful, harmonious, and happy; and this delight is experienced especially on the earth among the sons of men, among whom wisdom has its delight; for, as the divine idea, it is in all in so far as it is the inmost life-thought, the soul of each being, but it is on the earth of men in whom it comes to its self-conception, and self-conscious comes forth into the light of the clear day. Staudenmaier has done the great service of having worthily estimated the rich and deep fulness of this biblical theologumenon of wisdom, and of having pointed out in it the foundation-stone of a sacred metaphysics and a means of protection against pantheism in all its forms. We see that in the time of the editor of the older Book of Proverbs the wisdom of the schools in its devotion to the chosen object of its pursuit, the divine wisdom living and moving in all nature, and forming the background of all things, rises to a height of speculation on which it has planted a banner showing the right way to latest times. Ewald rightly points to the statements in the introduction to the Proverbs regarding wisdom as a distinct mark of the once great power of wisdom in Israel; for they show us how this power learned to apprehend itself in its own purest height, after it had become as perfect, and at the same time also as self-conscious, as it could at all become in ancient Israel.

Many other appearances also mark the advanced type of instruction contained in the introduction. Hitzig’s view (Sprüche, p. xvii.f.), that 1:6–9:18 are the part of the whole collection which was earliest written, confutes itself on all sides; on the contrary, the views of Bleek in his Introduction to the Old Testament, thrown out in a sketchy manner and as if by a diviner, surprisingly agree with our own results, which have been laboriously reached and are here amply established. The advanced type of instruction in the introduction, 1–9, appears among other things in this, that we there find the allegory, which up to this place occurs in Old Testament literature only in scattered little pictures built up into independent poetic forms, particularly in 9, where without any contradiction [a simple woman, 5:13] is an allegorical person. The technical language of the Chokma has extended itself on many sides and been refined (we mention these synonyms: ניגע, רחב, חכמה, תחיית, מושן, חכמה, אורות; and the seven pillars in the house of wisdom, even though it be inadmissible to think of them as the seven liberal arts, yet point to a division into seven parts of which the poet was conscious to himself. The common address,بن [my son], which is not the address of the father to the son, but of the teacher to the scholar, countenances the supposition that there were at that time בנ חכמים, i.e., scholars of the wise men, just as there were “sons of the prophets” (נביאים), and probably also schools of wisdom. “And when it is described how wisdom spake aloud to the people in all the streets of Jerusalem, in the high places of the city and in every favourable place, does not one feel that such sublime descriptions could not be possible unless at that time wisdom were regarded by the people as one of the first powers, and the wise men truly displayed a great public activity?” We must answer this question of Ewald’s in the affirmative.

Bruch, in his Weisheitslehre der Hebräer, 1851, was the first to call special attention to the Chokma or humanism as a peculiar intellectual tendency in Israel; but he is mistaken in placing it in an indifferent and even hostile relation to the national law and the national cultus, which he compares to the relation of Christian philosophy to orthodox theology. Oehler, in his Grundzüge der alttestamentl. Weisheit, which treats more especially of the doctrinal teachings of the Book of Job, judges more correctly; cf. also his comprehensive article, Pädagogik des A. T. in Schmid’s Pädagogischer Encyclopädie, pp. 653–695 (partic. 677–683).

5. The Alexandrian Translation of the Book of Proverbs.—Of highest interest for the history of the Book of Proverbs is the relation of the LXX to the Hebrew text. One half of the proverbs of Agur (30 of the Hebrew text) are placed in it after 24:22, and the other half after 24:34; and the proverbs of King Lemuel (Prov. 31:1–9 of the Hebrew text) are placed after the proverbs of Agur, while the acrostic proverbial poem of the virtuous woman is in its place at the end of the book. That transposition reminds us of the transpositions in Jeremiah, and rests in the one place as well as in the other on a misunderstanding of the true contents. The translator has set aside the new superscription. 10:1, as unsuitable, and has not marked the new beginning, 22:17; he has expunged the new superscription, 24:23, and has done the same to the superscription, “The words of Agur” (Prov. 30:1), in two awkward explanations (λόγον φυλασσόμενος and τοὺς ἐμοὺς λόγους φοβήθητι), and the superscription, “The words of Lemuel” (Prov. 31:1), in one similar (οἱ ἐμοὶ λόγι εἴρηνται ὑπὸ Θεοῦ), so that the proverbs of Agur and of Lemuel are without hesitation joined with those of Solomon, whereby it yet remains a mystery why the proverbs beginning with “The words of Agur” have been divided into two parts. Hitzig explains it from a confounding of the columns in which, two being on each page, the Hebrew MS which lay before the translator was written, and in which the proverbs of Agur and of Lemuel (names which tradition understood symbolically of Solomon) were already ranked in order before Prov. 25. But besides these, there are also many other singular things connected with this Greek translation interesting in themselves and of great critical worth. That it omits 1:16 may arise from this, that this verse was not found in the original MS, and was introduced from Isa. 59:7; but there are wanting also proverbs such as 21:5, for which no reason can be assigned. But the additions are disproportionately more numerous. Frequently we find a line added to the distich, such as in 1:18, or an entire distich added, as 3:15; or of two lines of the Hebrew verse, each is formed into a separate distich, as 1:7; 11:16; or we meet with longer interpolations, extending far beyond this measure, as that added to 4:27. Many of these proverbs are easily re-translated into the Hebrew, as that added to 4:27, consisting of four lines: יכ דרכי מימינים ידע יהוה וકקשיש דרכי משפיאלם הווה פלט מענוגותך אוחותך בשלום יצליח: But many of them also sound as if they had been originally Greek; e.g., the lines appended to 9:10; 13:15; the distich, 6:11; the imperfect tristich, 22:14; and the formless train, 25:10. The value of these enlargements is very diverse; not a few of these proverbs are truly thoughtful, such as the addition to 12:13—He who is of mild countenance findeth mercy; He who is litigious crushes souls—and singularly bold in imagery, as the addition to 9:12—He who supports himself by lies hunts after (רעה) the wind, He catches at fluttering birds; For he forsakes the ways of his own vineyard, And wanders away from the paths of his own field, And roams through arid steppes and a thirsty land, And gathers with his hand withered heath. The Hebrew text lying before the Alexandrian translators had certainly not all these additions, yet in many passages, such as 11:16, it is indeed a question whether it is not to be improved from the LXX; and in other passages, where, if one reads the Greek, the Hebrew words naturally take their place, whether these are not at least old Hebrew marginal notes and interpolations which the translation preserves. But this version itself has had its gradual historical development. The text, the κοινή (communis), proceeds from the Hexaplar text edited by Origen, which received from him many and diverse revisions; and in the times before Christ, perhaps (as Hitz. supposes), down to the second century after Christ, the translation itself, not being regarded as complete, as in the progress of growth, for not unfrequently two different translations of one and the same proverb stand together, as 14:22; 29:25 (where also the Peshito follows the LXX after which it translates), or also interpenetrate one another, as 22:8, 9. These doubled translations are of historical importance both in relation to the text and to the interpretation of it. Along with the Books of Samuel and Jeremiah, there is no book in regard to which the LXX can be of higher significance than the Book of Proverbs; we shall seek in the course of our exposition duly to estimate the text as adopted by Bertheau (1847) and Hitzig (1858) in their commentaries, and by Ewald in his Jahrb. xi. (1861) and his commentary (2nd ed. 1867). The historical importance of the Egyptian text-recension is heightened by this circumstance, that the old Syrian translator of the Solomonic writings had before him not only the original text, but also the LXX; for the current opinion, that the Peshito, as distinguished from the Syro-Hexaplar version, sprang solely from the original text with the assistance of the Targum, is more and more shown to be erroneous. In the Book of Proverbs the relation of the Peshito and Targum is even the reverse; the Targum of the Proverbs, making use of the Peshito, restores the Masoretic text,—the points of contact with the LXX showing themselves here and there, are brought about by the Peshito. But that Jerome, in his translation of the Vulgate according to the Hebraea veritas, sometimes follows the LXX in opposition to the original text, is to be explained with Hitzig from the fact that he based his work on an existing Latin translation made from the LXX. Hence it comes that the two distichs added in the LXX to 4:27 remain in his work, and that instead of the one distich, 15:6, we have two:—In abundanti (after the phrase בְׁרוּ of the Masoretic text) justitia virtus maxima est, cognitiones autem impiroum eradicabuntur. Domus (בֵּית) justi plurima fortitudo, et in fructibus impii conturbatio; for Jerome has adopted the two translations of the LXX, correcting the second according to the original text.

The fragments of the translations of Aquila, Symmachus, Theodotion, etc., contained in Greek and Syrian sources, have been recently collected, more perfectly than could have been done by Montfaucon, by Fried. Field, in his work Origenis Hexaplorum quae supersunt, etc. (Oxonii, 1867, 4). Of special interest is the more recent translation of the original text, existing only in a MS laid up in the Library of St. Mark [at Venice], executed in bold language, rich in rare and newly invented words, by an unknown author, and belonging to an age which has not yet been determined (Graecus Venetus): cf. d’Ansse de Villoison’s nova versio Graeca Proverbiorum, Ecclesiastis, Cantici Canticorum, etc., Argentorati, 1784; and also the Animadversiones thereto of Jo. Ge. Dahler, 1786.

the Books of Job, Proverbs, etc., by D. Durell (Oxford, 1772, 4), also merit attention. Of more recent commentaries, since Keil gave his list of the literature of the subject, have been published those of Elster (1858) and of Zöckerl (1867), forming a part of the theologico-homiletical Bibelwerk edited by J. P. Lange. Chs. 25–29 Rud. Stier has specially interpreted in two works entitled Der Weise ein König ["The Wise Man a king"], and Salomonis Weisheit in Hiskiastagen ["Solomon’s Wisdom in the Days of Hezekiah"], 1849; and chapters 30–31 in a work entitled Die Politik der Weisheit ["The Politics of Wisdom"], 1850. Part III (1865) of the new exegetico-critical Aehrenlese ["Gleanings"] of Fried. Böttcher, edited by Mühlau, furnishes 39 pages of remarks on the Proverbs. Leop. Dukes, author of the Rabbinical Blumenlese ["Anthology"], 1844, and the Schrift zur rabbinischen Spruchkunde, 1851, has published (1841) a commentary to the Proverbs in Cahen’s French Bibelwerk. There also is furnished a list of Jewish interpreters down to the appearance of L. H. Loewenstein’s Commentary (1838), which contains valuable contributions to the critical confirmation of the Masoretic text, in which Heidenheim’s MS remains, and also the Codex of 1294 mentioned in my preface to Baer’s edition of the Psalter, and in the Specimen Lectionum of Baer’s edition of Genesis, are made use of. Among Malbim’s best works are, after his Commentary on Isaiah, that on the Mishle (Warsaw, 1867). [Vide Preface.]

Superscription and Motto, 1:1–7

Proverbs 1:1–7. The external title, i.e., the Synagogue name, of the whole collection of Proverbs is mishle (Mishle), the word with which it commences. Origen (Euseb. h. e. vi. 25) uses the name molōth, i.e., molōth, which occurs in the Talmud and Midrash as the designation of the book, from its contents. In a similar way, the names given to the Psalter, Ṣamwala, and Psalter, are interchanged.

This external title is followed by one which the Book of Proverbs, viewed as to its gradual formation, and first the older portion, gives to itself. It reaches from 1:1 to v. 6, and names not only the contents and the author of the book, but also commends it in regard to the service which it is capable of rendering. It contains “Proverbs of Solomon, the son of David, king of Israel.” The books of the prophecy and the prophets, including the Canticles, thus give their own titles; among the historical books, that of the memoirs of Nehemiah is the only one that does so. mishliter has the accent Dechî, to separate it from the following complex genitive which it governs, and mishliter is made the second hemistich, because it belongs to Shelome, not to Shirah. As to the fundamental idea of the word mishli, we refer to the derivation given in the Gesch. der jud. Poesie, p. 196, from mishlie, Aram. mishlet, root mishśar, Sanskr. tul (whence tulâ, balance, similarity), Lat. tollere; the comparison of the Arab. mathal leads to the same conclusion. mishlite signifies, not, as Schultens and others after him affirm, effigies ad similitudinem alius rei expressa, from mishlē in the primary signification premere, premente manu tractare; for the corresponding Arab. verb mathal does not at all bear that meaning, but signifies to stand, to present oneself, hence to be like, properly to put oneself forth as something, to represent it; and in the Hebr. also to rule, properly with לוע to stand on or over something, with א to hold it erect, like Arab. kam with b, rem administravit [vid. Jesaia, p. 691]. Thus e.g., Gen. 24:2, it is said of Eliezer: וַיַּכְּבָּל אֶלֶּי צֶרֶם, who ruled over all that he (Abraham) had (Luther: was a prince over all his goods). Thus mishlah, figurative discourse which represents that which is real, similitude; hence then parable or shorter apothegm, proverb, in so far as they express primarily something special, but which as a general symbol is then applied to everything else of a like kind, and in so far stands figuratively. An example is found in 1 Sam. 10:11f. It is incorrect to conclude from this meaning of the word that such memorial sayings or proverbs usually contained comparisons, or were clothed in figurative language; for that is the case in by far the fewest number of instances: the oldest have by far the simplest and most special interpretations” (Fleischer). Hence Mashal, according to its fundamental idea, is that which stands with something = makes something stand forth = representing. This something that represents may be a thing or a person; as e.g., one may say Job is a Mashal, i.e., a representant, similitude, type of Israel (vide the work entitled בֵּין, by Ahron b. Elia, c. 90, p. 143); and, like Arab. mathal (more commonly mithl = מֵשֶל, cf. מֵשֶל, Job 41:25), is used quite as generally as is its etymological cogn. instar (instare). But in Hebr. Mashal always denotes representing discourse with the additional marks of the figurative and concise, e.g., the section which presents (Hab. 2:6) him to whom it refers as a warning example, but particularly, as there defined, the gnome, the apothegm or maxim, in so far as this represents general truths in sharply outlined little pictures.

Proverbs 1:2. Now follows the statement of the object which these proverbs subserve; and first, in general,

To become acquainted with wisdom and instruction,

To understand intelligent discourses.

They seek on the one side to initiate the reader in wisdom and instruction, and on the other to guide him to the understanding of intelligent discourses, for they themselves contain such discourses in which there is a deep penetrating judgment, and they sharpen the understanding of him who engages his attention with them. As Schultens has already rightly determined the fundamental meaning of וְיָדָה, frequently compared with the Sanskr. vid, to know (whence by gunating, vêda, knowledge), after the Arab. wad’a, as deponere, penes se condere, so he also rightly explains (רָכַב, Arab. hakm, R. ḥk, vide under Ps. 10:8, to be firm, closed) compactness, and then, like ποιεόμενος ability, worldly wisdom, prudence, and in the higher general sense, the knowledge of things in the essence of their being and in the reality of their existence. Along with wisdom stands the moral מֹוסֵר, properly discipline, i.e., moral instruction, and in conformity with this, self-government, self-guidance, from מִשֶׁל, cogn. מִשֶׁל, properly adstrictio or constrictio; for the מ of the noun signifies both id quod or aliquid quod (ὅ τι) and quod in the conjunctional sense (ὅτι), and thus forms both a concrete (like מָסָר = מֹוסֵר, fetter, chain) and an abstract idea. The first general object of the Proverbs isздание, the reception into oneself of wisdom and moral edification by means of education and training; and second is to comprehend utterances of intelligence, i.e., such as proceed from intelligence and give expression to it (cf. אֱמֶת, Kal, to be distinguished (whence בֵּין, between, constr. of בֵּין, space between, interval), signifies in Hiph. to distinguish, to understand; רָכַב is, according to the sense, the n. actionis of this Hiph., and signifies the understanding as the capability effective in the possession of the right criteria of distinguishing between the true and the false, the good and the bad (1 Kings 3:9), the wholesome and the pernicious.

Proverbs 1:3–5. In the following, 2a is expanded in vv. 3–5, then 2b in v. 6. First the immediate object:

3 to attain intelligent instruction,
Righteousness, and justice, and integrity;

4 To impart to the inexperienced prudence,
To the young man knowledge and discretion;

5 Let the wise man hear and gain learning,
And the man of understanding take to himself rules of conduct.
With תֶּהֶס, denoting the reception into oneself, acquiring, is interchanged (cf. 2:1) הַחֲזָא, its synonym, used of intellectual reception and appropriation, which, contemplated form the point of view of the relation between the teacher and the learner, is the correlative of דֶּתֶק, παραδείσα (Prov. 9:9). But מֹסֶר הֶשֶׁלֶל when they are blended together: discipline of wisdom, discipline training to wisdom; i.e., such morality and good conduct as rest not on external inheritance, training, imitation, and custom, but is bound up with the intelligent knowledge of the Why and the Wherefore. חֲשַׁל, as 21:16, is inf. absol. used substantively (cf. מְשֻּׁקָל, keeping quiet, Isa. 32:17) of כְּנֵל (whence כְּנֵל, intellectus), to entwine, involve; for the thinking through a subject is represented as an interweaving, complicating, configuring of the thoughts (the syllogism is in like manner represented as קַשֶּל). The series of synonyms (cf. 23:23) following in 3b, which are not well fitted to be the immediate object to תֵּשֶׁכֶל, present themselves as the unfolding of the contents of the מֹסֶר הֶשֶׁלֶל, as meaning that namely which is dutiful and right and honest. With the frequently occurring two conceptions נְצֵךְ and עַשֵׁל (Prov. 2:9), or with the order reversed as in Ps. 119:121) is interchanged פָתָה וּמֵשָרִים (or with the order also reversed, 21:3). The remark of Heidenheim, that in נְצֵךְ the conception of the justum, and in פָתָה that of the aequum prevails, is suggested by the circumstance that not פָתָה but נְצֵךְ signifies δικαίωσιν (cf. 10:2) in the sense of liberality, and then of almsgiving (ἐλεημοσύνη); but נְצֵךְ also frequently signifies a way of thought and action which is regulated not by the letter of the law and by talio, but by love (cf. Isa. 41:2; 42:6). Tsedek and ts’daakah have almost the relation to one another of integrity and justice which practically brings the former into exercise. (from שָכֶל, to make straight, to adjust, cf. שָכֶל, Arab. sabita, to be smooth) is the right and the righteousness in which it realizes itself, here subjectively considered, the right mind. מְשָרִים (defect. for מְשָרֶה, from יָשָׁר, to be straight, even) is plur. tantum; for its sing. מְשָרֶה (after the form מַשָּׁרִים) the form מַשָּׁר (in the same ethical sense, e.g., Mal. 2:6) is used: it means thus a way of thought and of conduct that is straight, i.e., according to what is right, true, i.e., without concealment, honest, i.e., true to duty and faithful to one’s word.

Proverbs 1:4. This verse presents another aspect of the object to be served by this book: it seeks to impart prudence to the simple. The form מֵשָרִים (in which, as in נִגְנָז, the pr. remains unwritten) is, in this mongrel form in which it is written (cf. 7:7; 8:5; 9:6; 14:18; 27:12), made up of מַשָּׁר (Prov. 1:22, 32, once written plene, מַשָּׁר, 22:3) and פָתָה (Prov. 7:7). These two forms with נְצֵךְ and the transition of נְצֵךְ into פָתָה are interchanged in the plur. of such nouns as נְצֵךְ, segolate form, “from נְצֵךְ (cogn. נְצֵךְ), to be open, properly the open-hearted, i.e., one whose heart stands open to every influence from another, the harmless, good-natured,—a vox media among the Hebrews commonly (though not always, cf. e.g., Ps. 116:6) in malam partem: the foolish, silly, one who allows himself to be easily persuaded or led astray, like similar words in other languages—Lat. simplex, Gr. ἁπλός Fr. naïv; Arab. fatyn, always, however, in a good sense: a high and noble-minded man, not made as yet mistrustful and depressed by sad experiences, therefore juvenis ingenuus, vir animi generosi” (Fl.). The מַשָּׁר, not of firm and constant mind, have need of; therefore the saying 14:15, cf. 8:5; 19:25. The noun רֹצָה (a fem. segolate form like רֶצֶחַ; רֶצָחַ) means here calliditas in a good sense, while the corresponding Arab. 'aram (to be distinguished from the verb 'aram, עַרְשָׁ, to peel, to make bare, nudare) is used only in a bad sense, of malevolent, deceptive conduct. In the parallel member the word לְשׁוֹנַ (himself with his ear and mind; therefore learning, מֶלֶךְ, to hear these proverb or, in order that he. Whoever is wise is invited back, as also 2 Sam. 24:3) with the consecutive Vav (ו) = Arab. ַו: let him hear, thus will he ... or, in order that he. Whoever is wise is invited to hear these proverbs in order to add learning (doctrinam) to that which he already possesses, according to the principle derived from experience, 9:9; Matt. 13:12. The segolate רֹצָה, which in pausa retains its נ- as also רֲצָה, רְצָה, רֶצֶח, רַצְח, רֶצֶח, and others), means reception, and concretely what one takes into himself with his ear and mind; therefore learning (דָבְרָו with the object of the עֲבָדָה), as Deut. 32:2 (parallel הרָבָא, as 4:2 הֶרֶבָא), and then learning that has passed into the possession of the receiver, knowledge, science (Isa. 29:24, parall. דָבְרָו). Schultens compares the Arab. lakah, used of the fructification of the female palm by the flower-dust of the male. The part. הָבָא (the inf. of which is found only once, Isa. 10:13) is the passive or the reflexive of the Hiph. לֶקֶח, to explain, to make to understand: one who is caused to understand or who lets himself be informed, and thus an intelligent person—that is one who may gain רֹצָה by means of these proverbs. This word, found only in the plur. (probably connected with הֶבְלִיל, הֶבְלִיל, shipmaster, properly one who has to do with the הֶבְלִיל, הֶבְלִיל, ship's ropes, particularly handles the sails, LXX κυβέρνησιν), signifies guidance, management, skill to direct anything (Job 32:7, of God's skill which directs the clouds), and in the plur. conception, the taking measures, designs in a good sense, or also (as in 12:5) in a bad sense; here it means guiding thoughts, regulating principles, judicious rules and maxims, as 11:14, prudent rules of government, 20:18; 24:6 of stratagems. Fl. compares the Arab. tedbîr (guidance, from הָבִין, to lead cattle), with its plur. tedâbîr, and the Syr. dubôro, direction, management, etc.

Proverbs 1:5. In this verse the infinitives of the object pass into independent sentences for the sake of variety. That אִמְרָה cannot mean audiet, but audiat, is shown by 9:9; but אִמְרָה is jussive (with the tone thrown back before אִמְרָה, cf. 10:8, and 16:21, 23, where the tone is not thrown back, as also 2 Sam. 24:3) with the consecutive Vav (ו) = Arab. ַו: let him hear, thus will he ... or, in order that he. Whoever is wise is invited to hear these proverbs in order to add learning (doctrinam) to that which he already possesses, according to the principle derived from experience, 9:9, Matt. 13:12. The segolate רֹצָה, which in pausa retains its נ- as also רֲצָה, רְצָה, רֶצֶח, רַצְח, רֶצֶח, and others), means reception, and concretely what one takes into himself with his ear and mind; therefore learning (דָבְרָו with the object of the עֲבָדָה), as Deut. 32:2 (parallel הרָבָא, as 4:2 הֶרֶבָא), and then learning that has passed into the possession of the receiver, knowledge, science (Isa. 29:24, parall. דָבְרָו). Schultens compares the Wisdom also always says פִתָה (my torah), and only once, 8:10, אָבָה (my musar).

Proverbs 1:9. מַה, which is also used in the neut. illa, e.g., Job 22:24, refers here to the paternal discipline and the maternal teaching. These, obediently received and followed, are the fairest ornament of the child. פִתָה, from לה, to wind, to roll, Arab. lawy (from ר, whence also מַה, as to boil up, = מַה), means winding, twisted ornament, and especially wreath; a crown of gracefulness is equivalent to a graceful crown, a corolla gratiosa, as Schultens translates it; cf. 4:9, according to which, Wisdom bestows such a crown. פָתָה, Gen. 41:42, and Arab. unek (or mec), Judg. 8:26) are necklaces, jewels for the neck; denom. of the Arab. unek, and Aram. עֲנָקִים, the neck (perhaps from עִקָּה, to oppress, of heavy burdens; cf. עָנָקָה, the neck). פָתָה is, like fauces, the throat by which one swallows (Arab. גָּרְגֶּרָה, taґarggéara), a plur. extensive (Böttcher, § 695), and is better fitted than מַה to indicate the external throat; Ezekiel, however, uses (Ezek. 16:11) garon, as our poet (Prov. 3:3, 22; 6:21) uses gargéroth, to represent the front neck.

Proverbs 1:10. The general counsel of v. 9 is here followed by a more special warning: My son, if sinners entice thee Consent thou not. The הבכ (my son) is emphatically repeated. The intensive fromstackpath (signifies men to whom sin has become a habit, thus vicious, wicked. פָתָה (Pl. of פָּתָה, to open) is not denom., to make or wish to make a φατή, the meaning, to entice (harmonizing with παοήνων), obtains from the root-meaning of the Kal, for it is related to it as pandere (januam) to patere: to open, to make accessible, susceptible, namely to persuasion. The warning 10b is as brief as possible a call of alarm back from the abyss. In the form הבכ (from הבכ, to agree to, to be willing, see Wetstein in Job, p. 349) the preformative א is wanting, as in 2 Sam. 19:14, cf. Ps. 139:20, Ges. § 68, 2, and instead of מַה (= מַה, 1 Kings 20:8) is vocalized not מַה (cf. 11:25), but after the Aram. מַה (cf. מַה); see Gen. 26:29, and Comment. on Isaiah, p. 648; Gesen. § 75, 17.

Proverbs 1:11–14. Of the number of wicked men who gain associates to their palliation and strengthening, they are adduced as an example whom covetousness leads to murder.

11 If they say, “Go with us, we will lurk for blood, Lie in wait for the innocent without cause;
12 Luke the pit we will swallow them alive And in perfect soundness like them that go down to the grave.
13 We find all manner of precious treasure, Fill our houses with spoil.
14 Thou shalt cast thy lot amongst us, We all have only one purse.”

Proverbs 1:11. The verb בָּשָר signifies nectere, to bind fast (from בָּשָר, close, compact), (see under Isa. 25:11), and particularly (but so that it bears in itself its object without ellipses) insidias nectere = insidiari. Regarding פָּתָה Fleischer remarks: “Either elliptically for פָּתָה with inverted, close, compact), (see System der bibl. Psychologie, p. 242). Here impunity, swallow them up like the pit (the insatiable, 27:20; 30:16), namely, while these their sacrifices are in the state of life’s freshness, “the living,”—without doubt, like Ps. 55:16; 63:10; 124:3, in fact and in expression an allusion to the fate of the company of Korah, Num. 16:30 33. If this is the meaning of מְּתֹם, then מְּתֹם as the parallel word means integros not in an ethical sense, in which it would be a synonym of כְּמִי of v. 11b (cf. 29:10 with Ps. 19:14), but in a physical sense (Graec. Venet. καὶ τελείους Parchon as Rashi, vid., Böttcher, De Inferis, § 293). This physical sense is claimed for מְּתֹם, Job 21:23, for מְּתֹם probably, Ps. 73:4, and why should not מְּתֹם, used in the law regarding sacrifices (e.g., Ex. 12:5, “without blemish”) of the faultlessness of the victim, also signify such an one מְּתֹם פָּתָח (Isa. 1:6)? In the midst of complete external health they will devour them like those that go down to the grave (cf. Ps. 28:1; 88:5, with Isa. 14:19), i.e., like those under whose feet the earth is suddenly opened, so that, without leaving any trace behind, they sink into the grave and into Hades. The connection of the finite with the accus. of place, Ps. 55:16, lies at the foundation of the genitive connection יָרְדֵי בור (with the tone thrown back): those that go down to the grave.

Proverbs 1:13, 14. To their invitation, bearing in itself its own condemnation, they add as a lure the splendid self-enriching treasures which in equal and just fellowship with them they may have the prospect of sharing. יָרְדֵי בור (from מָכַל, then facilem esse, être aisé, à son aise) means aïsance, convenience, opulence, and concretely that by which life is made agreeable, thus money and possessions (Fleischer in Levy’s Chald. Wörterbuch, i. 423f.). With this with remarkable frequency in the Mishle יָרְדֵי בור (from מָכַל, Arab. wakar, grave esse) is connected in direct contrast, according to its primary signification; cf. 12:27; 24:4: heavy treasures which make life light. Yet it must not be maintained that, as Schultens has remarked, this oxymoron is intended, nor also that it is only consciously present in the language. נָצָא has here its primitive appropriate signification of attaining, as Isa. 10:14 of reaching. שָלָל (from שָל ל, to draw from, draw out, cf. שָלָה, שָל ף, Arab. salab, Comm. on Isa. p. 447) is that which is drawn away from the enemy, exuviae, and then the booty and spoil taken in war generally. נְׁמ לֵא, to fill with anything, make full, governs a double accusative, as the Kal (to become full of anything) governs only one. In v. 14, the invitation shows how the prospect is to be realized. Interpreters have difficulty in conceiving what is here meant. Do not a share by lot and a common purse exclude one another? Will they truly, in the distribution of the booty by lot, have equal portions at length, equally much in their money-bags? Or is it meant that, apart from the portion of the booty which falls to every one by lot, they have a common purse which, when their business is ebbing, must supply the wants of the company, and on which the new companion can maintain himself beforehand? Or does it mean only that they will be as mutually helpful to one another, according to the principle τὰ τῶν φίλων κοινά (amicorum omnia communia), as if they had only one purse? The meaning is perfectly simple. The oneness of the purse consists in this, that the booty which each of them gets, belongs not wholly or chiefly to him, but to the whole together, and is disposed of by lot; so that, as far as possible, he who participated not at all in the affair in obtaining it, may yet draw the greatest prize. This view harmonizes the relation between 14b and 14a. The common Semitic כיס is even used at the present day in Syria and elsewhere as the name of the Exchange ("Börse") (plur akjâs); here it is the purse ("Kasse") (χρημάτων δοχεῖον, Procop.), which is made up of the profits of the business. This profit consists not merely in gold, but is here thought of in regard to its worth in gold. The apparent contradiction between distributing by lot and having a common purse disappears when the distribution by lot of the common property is so made, that the retaining of a stock-capital, or reserve fund, is not excluded.

Proverbs 1:15. After the men are described against whose enticements a warning is given forth, the warning is emphatically repeated, and is confirmed by a threefold reason: My son! go not in the way with them. Keep back thy foot from their path.

If בד (in the way), taken alone, cannot be equivalent to בד צדexus (in one way), so is אים (with them) to be regarded as its determination. Foot (not feet), as eye, hand, etc., is used where the members come less under consideration than what they unitedly bring about (Prov. 4:26 f.). מהב, from נְׁתִיבָה, signifies properly that which is raised, especially the (raised) footstep.

Proverbs 1:16. The first argument to enforce the warning: For their feet run to the evil, And hasten to shed blood. That this is their object they make no secret (v. 11ff.); but why is it that such an object as this should furnish no ground of warning against them, especially as on this beginning the stamp of that which is morally blamable is here impressed with לְר ע? Besides, this circular movement of the thoughts is quite after the manner of this poet; and that v. 16 is his style, 6:18 shows. The want of this distich (16b = Rom. 3:15) in LXX B. כותכær weighs heavier certainly than the presence of it in LXX A. (Procop., Syro-Hezap.), since the translation is not independent, but is transferred from Isa. 59:7; but if for the first time, at a later period, it is supplied in the LXX, yet it has the appearance of an addition made to the Hebr. text from Isa. 59:7 (Hitzig, Lagarde); cf. Comm. on Isaiah, 40–66. כיס is always pointed thus; for, as a regular rule, after כ as well as כ the aspiration disappears; but in Ezek. 17:17 כיס is also found, and in this case (cf. at Ps. 40:15) the punctuation is thus inconsequent.
Proverbs 1:17. The second argument in support of the warning. For in vain is the net spread out in the eyes of all (the winged) birds. The interpretation conspersum est rete, namely, with corn as a bait, which was put into circulation by Rashi, is inadmissible; for as little as виж (Hiph. of вид) can mean to strew, can mean to spread. The object is always that which is scattered (gestreut), not that which is spread (bestreut). Thus, expansum est rete, but not from extendere, from which in this form cannot be derived (it would in that case be перу). But from сеять, pass. of сеять, to scatter, spread out. The alluring net, when it is shaken out and spread, is, as it were, scattered, ventilatur. But if this is done incautiously before the eyes of the birds to be caught, they forthwith fly away. The alluring net, when it is shaken out, according to the saying of Ovid, Quae nimis apparent retia, vitat avis. The applicatio similitudinis lying near, according to J. H. Michaelis, is missed even by himself and by most others. If the poet wished to say that they carried on their work of blood with such open boldness, that he must be more than a simpleton who would allow himself to be caught by them, that would be an unsuitable ground of warning: for would there not be equally great need for warning against fellowship with them, if they had begun their enticement with more cunning, and reckoned on greater success? Hitzig, Ewald, Zöckler, and others, therefore interpret вид, not in the sense of in vain, inasmuch as they do not let themselves be caught; but, in vain, for they see not the net, but only the scattered corn. But according to the preceding, вид (the net) leads us to think only either of the net of the malicious designs, or the net of the alluring deceptions. Thus, as Ziegler has noticed, the warned ought to make application of the similitude to himself: God not with them, for their intention is bad; go not with them, for if the bird flees away from the net which is spread out before it, thou wilt not surely be so blind as suffer thyself to be ensnared by their gross enticements. הביאו קנים: the furnished with the wing (wings in Eccles. 10:20); בצולע הביאו forms the idea of property (lord).

Proverbs 1:18. The causal conj. ו (for) in vv. 16 and 17 are coordinated; and there now follows, introduced by the conj. ו (“and”), a third reason for the warning: And they lie in wait for their own blood, They lay snares for their own lives.

The warning of v. 16 is founded on the immorality of the conduct of the enticer; that of 17 on the audaciousness of the seduction as such, and now on the self-destruction which the robber and murderer bring upon themselves: they wish to murder others, but, as the result shows, they only murder themselves. The expression is shaped after v. 11, as if it were: They lay snares, as they themselves say, for the blood of others; but it is in reality for their own blood: they certainly lie in wait, as they say; but not, as they add, for the innocent, but for their own lives (Ft.). Instead of לְׁדָמָם, there might be used לְׁנָפְשָם, after Mic. 7:2; but לְׁנָפְשָם would signify ipsis (post-biblical, לְׁנָפְשָם), while לְׁנָפְשָם leaves unobliterated the idea of the life: animis ipsorum; for if the O.T. language seeks to express ipse in any other way than by the personal pronoun spoken emphatically, this is done by the addition of לְׁדָמָם (Isa. 53:11). הָרָשֶת was on this account necessary, because v. 17 has another subject (cf. Ps. 63:10).

Proverbs 1:19. An epiphonema: Such is the lot of all who indulge in covetousness; It takes away the life of its owner.

This language is formed after Job 8:13. Here, as there, in the word רֶשֶׁת, the ideas of action and issue, manner of life and its result, are all combined. הביאו הביאו signifies properly that which is cut off, a piece, fragment broken off, then that which one breaks off and takes to himself—booty, gain, particularly unjust gain (Prov. 28:16). רֶשֶׁת הביאו is he who is greedy or covetous.
The subject to יִקָח is בֶצ ע, covetousness, πλεονεξία (see Isa. 57:17). As Hosea, 4:11, says of three other things that they taken away בֶצ ע, the understanding ( νοῦς), so here we are taught regarding unjust gain or covetousness, that it takes away נֶפֶש, the life ( ψυχή) (לָק ח נֶפֶש, to take away the life, 1 Kings 19:10, Ps. 31:14). בְׁעָלָיו denotes not the possessor of unjust gain, but as an inward conception, like בעל א ף, 22:24, cf. 23:2; 24:8, Eccles. 10:11, him of whom covetousness is the property. The sing. נֶפֶש does not show that בְׁעָלָיו is thought of as sing.; cf. 22:23, Ps. 34:23; but according to 3:27; 16:22, Eccles. 8:8, this is nevertheless probable, although the usage without the suffix is always בְׁעָלִים (of plur. intens. בְׁעָל בֶצ ע), and not בְׁעֲלֵי (of plur. intens. בְׁעָלִים).

Second Introductory Mashal Discourse, 1:20–33

Discourse of Wisdom to Her Despisers

Proverbs 1:20–33. After the teacher of wisdom has warned his disciples against the allurements of self-destroying sin, whose beastly demoniacal nature culminates in murder and robbery, he introduces Wisdom herself saying how by enticing promises and deterring threatenings she calls the simple and the perverse to repentance. Wisdom is here personified, i.e., represented as a person. But this personification presupposes, that to the poet wisdom is more than a property and quality of human subjectivity: she is to him as a divine power, existing independently, to submit to which is the happiness of men, and to reject which is their destruction. And also to the public appearance of wisdom, as it is here represented, there must be present objective reality, without which the power of conviction departs from the figure. The author must think on historical and biographical facts, on human organs (as 2 Chron. 17:7–9, cf. Wisd. 7:27), through which, without words and in words, Wisdom delivers such addresses. But the figure cannot be so historical that it sustains only the relation to a definite time, and not to all time; it is a call to repentance, going forth to all time and to all places, which, divested of all the accidents of its externality, he here refers to its invisible divine background, when he begins in these words:

20 Wisdom cries, sounding loudly in the streets, She causes her voice to be heard in the chief streets.

21 Over the places of greatest tumult she calleth; In the porches of the gates, in the city, she speaketh forth her words.

Proverbs 1:20. Looking to its form and vocalization, חָכְׁמות may be an Aramaizing abstract formation (Gesen.; Ew. 165, c; Olsh. 219, b); for although the forms אָחות and גְׁלות are of a different origin, yet in רִבות and הולֵלות such abstract formation s lie before us. The termination ûth is here, by the passing over of the u into the less obscure but more intensive o (cf. יהו in the beginning and middle of the word, and יהוה at the end of the word), raised to òth, and thereby is brought near to the fem. plur. (cf. חֲכָמָה, sapientia, as our plur. of the neut. sapiens, חכמים), approaching to the abstract. On the other hand, that חָכְׁמות is sing. of abstract signification, is not decisively denoted by its being joined to the plur. of the predicate (for תָרֹנָה here, as at 8:3, is scarcely plur.; and if רָאמות, 24:7, is plur., חָכְׁמות as the numerical plur. may refer to the different sciences or departments of knowledge); but perhaps by this, that it interchanges with תְׁבוּנות, Ps. 49:4, cf. Prov. 11:12; 28:16, and that an abstract formation from חכמת (fem. of חכם, חכם), which besides is not concrete, was unnecessary. Still less is חָכְׁמות = חכמת a singular, which has it in view to change חכמת into a proper name, for proof of which Hitzig refers to חכמות, Ps. 78:15; the singular ending òth without an abstract signification does not exist. After that Dietrich, in his Abhandl. 1846, has shown that the origin of the plur. proceeds not from separate calculation, but from comprehension, and that particularly also names denoting intellectual strength are frequently plur., which multiply the conception not externally but internally, there is no longer any justifiable doubt that הנרה signifies the all-comprehending, absolute, or, as Böttcher, § 689, expresses it, the full personal wisdom. Since such intensive plurals are sometimes united with the plur. of the predicate, as e.g., the monotheistically interpreted Elohim, Gen. 35:7 (see l.c.), so תָרֹן may be plur. On the other hand, the idea that it is a forma mixta of קרש (from קרש and קרש (Job 39:23) or קרש, the final sound in ah opposes. It may, however, be the emphatic form of the 3rd fem. sing. of נָה for, that the Hebr. has such an emphatic form, corresponding to the Arab. taktubanna, is shown by these three examples (keeping out of view the suspicion of a corruption of the text, Olsh. p. 452), Judg. 5:26, Job 17:16, Isa. 28:3; cf. Caspari, l.c., an example of the 2nd masc. sing. of this formation. נָה (with רָנָה) is a word imitative of sound (Schallwort), used to denote “a clear-sounding, shrill voice (hence the Arab. רָנָה, of a speaker who has a clear, piercing voice); then the clear shrill sound of a string or chord of a bow, or the clear tinkle of the arrow in the quiver, and of the metal that has been struck” (Fl). The meaning of רָנָה is covered by plateae (Luke 14:21), wide places; and גְּרָיו, which elsewhere may mean that which is without, before the gates of the city and courts, here means the “open air,” in contradistinction to the inside of the houses.

Proverbs 1:21. הנרה (plur. of הנרה, the ground-form of הנרה, from הנרה = יָרָה = רָנָה), “they who are making noise;” for the epithet is poetically sued (Isa. 22:2) as a substantive, crowded noisy streets or places. Гор is the place from which on several sides streets go forth: cf. ras el-ain, the place where the well breaks forth; ras en-nahr, the place from which the stream divides itself; the sing. is meant distributively as little as at 8:2. הָנָה, if distinguished from השָר (which also signifies cleft, breach), is the opening of the gate, the entrance by the gate. Four times the poet says that Wisdom goes froth preaching, and four times that she preaches publicly; the form תָרֹן used in five places implies that Wisdom preaches not in the field, before the few who there are met with, but in the city, which is full of people.

Proverbs 1:22. The poet has now reached that part of his introduction where he makes use of the very words uttered by Wisdom: How long, ye simple, will ye love simplicity, And scorners delight in scorning. And fools hate knowledge? Three classes of men are here addressed: the כשָר, the simple, who, being accessible to seduction, are only too susceptible of evil; the ע高强度, mockers, i.e., free-thinkers (from ע高强度, Arab. lus, flectere, torquere, properly qui verbis obliquis utitur); and the כָּפֹל, fools, i.e., the mentally imbecile and stupid (from כָּפֹל, Arab. kasal, to be thick, coarse, indolent). The address to these passes immediately over into a declaration regarding them; cf. the same enallage, 1:27f. This has the accent Mahpach, on account of the Pasek following; vid., Torath Emeth, p. 26. Intentionally, Wisdom addresses only the כשָר, to whom she expects to find soonest access. Between the futt., which express the continuing love and hatred, stands the perf. עשָר, which expresses that in which the mockers found pleasure, that which was the object of their love. לֵצִים is the so-called dat. ethicus, which reflexively refers to that which is said to be the will and pleasure of the subject; as we say, “I am fond of this and that.” The form אבָל פָּרְצִים, Abulwalîd, Parchon, and Kimchi regard as Piel; but rather than אבָל פָּרְצִים would be a recompensatio of the virtual doubling, defacing the character of the Piel. Schultens regards it as a defectively written Paiël (in Syr.), but it is not proved that this conjugation exists in Hebr.; much rather אבָל פָּרְצִים is the only possible Kal form.
with τῆς ἀνθέως (vid., Ewald, § 193, a). The division by the accent Mercha-Mahpach of the two words is equal in value to the connecting of them by Makkeph; vid., Baer’s Psalterium, p. x. In codd., and also in correct texts, מַהֵּפוּ is written with the accent Galgal on the first syllable, as the servant of the Mercha-Mahpach. The Gaja is incorrectly here and there placed under the ר.

Proverbs 1:23. To the call to thoughtfulness which lies in the complaint “How long?” there follows the entreaty: Turn ye at my reproof! Behold! I would pour out my Spirit upon you, I would make you to know my words. vv. 23a is not a clause expressive of a wish, which with the particle expressivum does not therefore mean at my reproof, i.e., in consequence of it (Hitzig, after Num. 16:34), but it is a constructio praegnans: turning and placing yourselves under my reproof. With מַהֵּפוּ there is supposed an אָבָה (LXX, Symm.): bringing proof, conviction, punishment. If they, leaving their hitherto accustomed way, permit themselves to be warned against their wickedness, then would Wisdom cause her words to flow forth to them, i.e., would without reserve disclose and communicate to them her spirit, cause them to know (namely by experience) her words. תָּאַהֲבְּוּ (from אָבָה; R. נב; vid., Genesis, p. 635) is a common figurative word, expressive of the free pouring forth of thoughts and words, for the mouth is conceived of as a fountain (cf. 18:4 with Matt. 12:34), and the רֶפֲעָה (vid., LXX) as רּעַעָה; only here it has the Spirit as object, but parallel with רֶפֲעָה, thus the Spirit as the active power of the words, which, if the Spirit expresses Himself in them, are πνεῦμα καὶ ζωή, John 6:63. The addresses of Wisdom in the Book of Proverbs touch closely upon the discourses of the Lord in the Logos-Gospel. Wisdom appears here as the fountain of the words of salvation for men; and these words of salvation are related to her, just as the λόγος expressing Himself therein.

Proverbs 1:24–27. The address of Wisdom now takes another course. Between vv. 23 and 24 there is a pause, as between Isa. 1:20 and 21. In vain Wisdom expects that her complaints and enticements will be heard. Therefore she turns her call to repentance into a discourse announcing judgment.

24 Because I have called, and ye refused; Stretched out my hand, and no man regarded;
25 And ye have rejected all my counsel, And to my reproof have not yielded:
26 Therefore will I also laugh at your calamity, Will mock when your terror cometh;
27 When like a storm your terror cometh, And your destruction swept on like a whirlwind; When distress and anguish cometh upon you.

Commencing with מַשְׂנֵה (which, like מַשְׂנֵה, from מָשָׂה, to oppose, denotes the intention, but more the fundamental reason or the cause than, as מַשְׂנָה, the motive or object), the clause, connected with אָבָה, ego vicissim, turns to the conclusion. As here מְשָׂנֵה (as the word of Jahve) are connected by מְשָׂמֵה to the expression of the talio in Isa. 66:4, so also מְשָׂמֵה, with its contrast מְשָׂמֵוי, Isa. 1:19f. The construction quoniam vocavi et renuistis for quoniam quum vocarem renuistis (cf. Isa. 12:1) is the common diffuse (zerstreute) Semitic, the paratactic instead of the periodizing style. The stretching out of the hand is, like the “spreading out” in Isa. 65:2, significant of striving to beckon to the wandering, and to bring them near. Regarding מַשְׂמֵה, viz., to make the ear still (R. רָכֵב, arrigere, incorrectly explained by Schultens, after the Arab kashab, polire, by aurem purgare,

Proverbs 1:25. is synonymous with 1:8; cf. 4:15, frig (H. = frig). Gesenius has inaccurately interpreted the phrase frigus rapiis of the shaving off of the hair, instead of the letting it fly loose. frig means to loosen (= to lift up, syn. קָשׁ), to release, to set free; it combines the meanings of loosening and making empty, or at liberty, which is conveyed in Arab. by frig and frig. The latter means, intrans., to be set free, therefore to be or to become free from occupation or business; with (Arabic w’d), i.e., what I always would advise to set you right.

It combines in itself the meanings of consent, 1:10, and compliance, 1:30 (with יַעֲבָה). Gesenius has related to each other as narrowness and distress (Hitzig); the Mashal is fond of the stave-rhyme.

Proverbs 1:28–31. Then—this sublime preacher in the streets continues—distress shall teach them to pray:

28 Then shall they call on me, and I will not answer; They shall early seek after me, and not find me;

29 Because that they hated knowledge, And did not choose the fear of Jahve.

30 They have not yielded to my counsel, Despised all my reproof:

31 Therefore shall they eat of the fruit of their way, And satiate themselves with their own counsels.

In the full emphatic forms, יִמְצָאֻנְּנִי, יִקְרָעֻנְּנִי, יְׁכַבְּרְנִי, יִיְבָרֲכֶנְּה, יִשָּׁחֲרְנִי, יָעֲבָה, יֶאֱתֶה, they shall call on me, they shall seek me, and יֵסֶף, יִשִּׁמְךְ, יִזֶּהַר, יִזָּהְרְנִי, יָבָא, יִשָּׁהֲרְנִי, יָעֲבָה, יֶאֱתֶה, they shall find me, the suffix י is related to the old plur. סָפָה = סָפָה from סָפָה), sweeping forth as a (see 10:25) whirlwind. The infinitive construction of 27a is continued in 27b in the finite. “This syntactical and logical attraction, by virtue of which a modus or tempus passes by or by the mere parallel arrangement (as 2:2) from one to another, attracted into the signification and nature of the latter, is peculiar to the Hebr. If there follows a new clause or section of a clause where the discourse takes, as it were, a new departure, that attraction ceases, and the original form of expression is resumed; cf. 1:22, where after the accent Athnach the future is returned to, as here in 27c the infinitive construction is restored” (Fl.). The alliterating words יָעֲבָה, יָבָא, יֵסֶף, יִשָּׁהֲרְנִי, cf. Is. 30:6, Zeph. 1:15, are related to each other as narrowness and distress (Hitzig); the Mashal is fond of the stave-rhyme.
address of the Judge regarding the incorrigible. שָׁאֵל is denom. of שָׂאֵל, to go out and to seek with the morning twilight, as also בָּקָר, Ps. 27:5, perhaps to appear morning, and usually (Arab.) bakar (I, II, IV), to rise early, to be zealous (Lane: “He hastened to do or accomplish, or attain the thing needed”). Zöckler, with Hitzig, erroneously regards vv. 29, 30 as the antecedent to v. 31. With רָאִיתוּ, “and they shall eat,” the futt. announcing judgment are continued from v. 28; cf. Deut. 28:46–48. The conclusion after עַד הַשָּׁמָּה, “therefore because,” or as usually expressed (except here and Deut. 4:37, cf. Gen. 4:25), is otherwise characterized, Deut. 22:29, 2 Chron. 21:12; and besides, עֶתִּית הַשָּׁמָּה stands after (e.g., 1 Sam. 26:21; 2 Kings 22:17; Jer. 29:19) oftener than before the principal clause. בְּקָר combines in itself the meanings of eligere and diligere (Fl.). The construction of לֹא בְּכָרִים (to be inclining towards) follows that of the analogous לֹא בְּכָּר (to hear). Each one eats of the fruit of his way—good fruit of good ways (Isa. 3:10), and evil fruit of evil ways. “The דָּמָּה, 31b, introduces the object from which, as a whole, that which one eats, and with which he is satisfied, is taken as a part, or the object from which, as from a fountain, satisfaction flows forth” (Fl.). In correct texts, מַעַךְ, אִיבָּל, has the accent Dechî, and at the same time Munach as its servant. Regarding the laws of punctuation, according to which מִן the antepenult, and Metheg before the Chateph-Pothach) is to be written, see Baer’s Torath Emeth, p. 11, Accentssystem, iv. § 4. Norzi accents the word incorrectly with Rebia Mugrash. With the exception of Prov. 22:22, the pluralet מעֶשָׁה has always the meaning of ungodly counsels.

Proverbs 1:32, 33. The discourse is now summarily brought to a close:

32 For the perverseness of the simple slays them, And the security of fools destroys them.

Of the two interpretations of שֵׁבְתָּה, a turning towards (with לָא and the like, conversion) or a turning away (with עַל, or מַעֲמַךְ, desertion), in the latter (as in the post-Bib. חֲשַׁבְתָּה, repentance, the former) is expressed; apostasy from wisdom and from God are conjoined. שָׁאֵל is here carnalis securitas; but the word may also denote the external and the internal peace of the righteous, as וְשָׁאֵל, whence Job 21:23, as a superlative is formed by the insertion of the ל of והָל, is taken in bonam et malam partem.

is, according to the Masora (also in Jer. 30:10; 46:27; 48:11), 3rd perf. Pilel (Ewald, § 120, a), from the unused שָׁאֵל, to be quiet: he has attained to full quietness, and enjoys such. The construction with מְּשֻׁבָּה follows the analogy of מֵא חֲרֵי מַמְדָּה (to give rest from), שָׁקֵט מַמ (to rest from), and the like. The negative interpretation of מְּשֻׁבָּה, sine ullo pavore mali (Schultens, Ewald), is unnecessary; also Job 21:9 may be explained by "peace from terror," especially since שָׁאֵל is derived from the root שָׁאֵל, extrahere. פָּדֵה רַע, "fear of evil," one may perhaps distinguish from פָּדַה מַד as the genitive of combination.

Third Introductory Mashal Discourse, 2

Earnest Striving After Wisdom as the Way to the Fear of God and to Virtue

Proverbs 2. The admonition so far has almost wholly consisted of warning and threatening. The teacher, directing back to the discipline of the paternal home, warns against fellowship in the bloody deeds of the covetous, which issue in self-murder; and Wisdom holds up before her despisers the mirror of the punishment which awaits them. Now the admonition becomes positive. The teacher describes separately the blessings of the endeavour after wisdom; the endeavour after wisdom, which God rewards with the gift of wisdom, leads to religious and moral knowledge, and this guards men on the way of life from all evil. The teacher accordingly interweaves conditions and promises:

1. My son, if thou receivest my words, And keepest my commandments by thee;

2. So that thou inclinest thine ear unto wisdom, Turnest thine heart to understanding:

3. Yea, if thou callest after knowledge, To understanding directest thy voice;

4. If thou seekest her as silver, And searchest for her as for treasures:

5. Then shalt thou understand the fear of Jahve, And find the knowledge of God.

6. For Jahve giveth wisdom: From His mouth cometh knowledge and understanding.

7. He preserves for the upright promotion; A shield for such as walk in innocence.

8. For He protects the paths of justice, And guards the way of His saints.

The first שָׂפָה, with that which it introduces, vv. 1, 2, is to be interpreted as an exclamation, “O that!” (O si), and then as an optative, as Ps. 81:9; 139:19. יִהְיֶה, vv. 3–5, with the inserted connecting clauses, would then be confirmatory, “for then.” But since this poet loves to unfold one and the same thought in ever new forms, one has perhaps to begin the conditional premisses with v. 1, and to regard יִהְיֶה as a new commencement. Hitzig takes this יִהְיֶה in the sense of imo: “much more if thou goest to meet her, e.g., by curious inquiry, not merely permittest her quietly to come to thee.” שָׂפָה would then preserve its conditional meaning; and יִהְיֶה as in Job 31:18, Ps. 130:4, since it implies an intentional negative, would receive the meaning of imo. But the sentences ranged together with שָׂפָה are too closely related in meaning to admit such a negative between them. יִהְיֶה will thus be confirmatory, not mediately, but immediately; it is the “for = yes” of confirmation of the preceding conditions, and takes them up again (Ewald, § 356, b, cf. 330 b) after the form of the conditional clause was given up. The שָׂפָה, which in 1:11, 18, is the synonym of שָׁפָה, speculari, presents itself here, 1b, 7a, as the synonym of שָׁפָה, whence שָׁפָה, synon. of שֶׁפֶם, recondita; the group of sounds, שָׁפֶם, שָׁפְה, שָפְר, expresses shades of the root representation of pressing together. The inf. of the conclusion יִהְיֶה, to incline (Fr. Venet. ως ἀκροῷτο, is followed by the accus. of the object שָׁפָה, thine ear, for קְשִיב properly means to stiffen (not to purge, as Schultens, nor to sharpen, as Gesenius thinks); cf. under Ps. 10:17. With יִהְיֶה יִהְיֶה are interchanged יִהְיֶה which properly means that which is distinguished or separated, יִהְיֶה, which means the distinguishing, separating, appellations of the capacity of distinguishing in definite cases and in general; but it does not represent this as a faculty of the soul, but as a divine power which communicates itself as the gift of God (charisma).

Proverbs 2:3–8. Instead of כי יִהְיֶה is, with the exception of the imper. (e.g., יִהְיֶה, always without the Dagesh. V. 4b belongs to the ideas in the Book of Job found in these introductory discourses, cf. Job 3:21, as at v. 14, Job 3:22 (Ewald, Sprüche, p. 49). יִהְיֶה, שָׂפָה, scrutari, proceeds, as所说的, shows, from the primary meaning of a ditch, and is thus in its root-idea related to תְנָה (to dig, search out). In the principal clause of v. 5 the יִרְשָׁה יֶשֶׁת, as Ps. 19:10, is the fear of Jahve as it ought to be, thus the reverence which is due to Him, the worshipping of Him as revealed. יֶשֶׁת and יֶשֶׁת are interchanged as פָּרֹשָׁה and פָּרֹשָׁה is knowledge proceeding from practice and experience, and thus not merely cognition (Kenntnis), but knowledge (Erkenntnis). The thoughts revolve in a circle only apparently. He who strives after wisdom earnestly and really, reaches in this way fellowship with God; for just as He gives wisdom, it is nowhere else than with Him, and it never comes from any other source than from Him. It comes (v. 6) מְסַפְּר (LXX ἀπόφημα; n. instr. of ממעס) or מַסְפִר (Kerî), i.e., it is communicated through the medium of His word, Job 22:22, or also (for λόγος and πνεῦμα lie here undistinguished from one another) it is His breath (Book of Wisdom 7:25: στόμα τῆς Θεοῦ δύναμεως καὶ ἀπόρροια τῆς τοῦ παντοκράτορος δόξῃς εἰλικρινῆς); the inspiration (הנש) of the Almighty (according to Job 32:8) gives men understanding. In v. 7a, whether מְסַפְּר (Chethib) or מַסְפִר (Kerî) is read, the meaning is the same. The former is the expression of the completed fact, as ητοιμασεν, 1 Cor. 2:9, and is rightly preferred by LXX and Syr., for one reluctantly misses the copula (since the thought is new in comparison with v. 6).

There should be written with the accent Dechî.
The Chokma-word (besides in Proverbs and Job, found only in Mic. 6:9 and Isa. 28:29) מֵישָרִים is a Hiphil formation (with the passing over of 5 into 5, as in מֵישָרִים) from מֵישׁוֹר (whence the pr. names מַישׁוֹר and מַישׁוֹר = (Arab.) wasy and āsy, to re-establish, to advance, Hiph. of יִשָׁו = יִשָׁו, to stand, and thus means furtherance, i.e., the power or the gift to further, and concretely that which furthers and profits, particularly true wisdom and true fortune. The derivation from מִישָׁו (Prov. 8:21) is to be rejected, because "the formation would be wholly without analogy, so much the more because the of this word does not represent the place of the ג as is seen from the Arab. l-ys and the Syr. lyt (Fl.); and the derivation of מֵישָרִים = מְשָרָה, to be smooth (Hitzig), passes over without any difficulty into another system of roots. In the passage under consideration (v. 7), מֵישָרִים signifies advancement in the sense of true prosperity. The parallel passage 7a clothes itself in the form of an apposition: (He) a shield (Prov. 1:9, n. instr. "of my cover") for My shield, pilgrims of innocence (Fl.), i.e., such as walk in the way (the object-accus., as 6:12, for which in 10:9 הַגָּנֹן) of innocence. הַגָּנֹן is whole, full submission, moral faultlessness, which chooses God with the whole heart, seeks good without exception: a similar thought is found in Ps. 84:12. מִישָׁו, 8a, is such an inf. of consequence as לְשׁוֹשֵׁב (v. 2), and here, as there, is continued in the finite. The "paths of justice" are understood with reference to those who enter them and keep in them; parallel, "the way of His saints" (דָּשׁוֹר, he who cherishes, earnest inward love to God), for that is just מֵישׁוֹר (Prov. 12:28): they are אֲרוֹרָה נְזֵקָה (Isa. 33:15). Instead of the Mugrash, the conjunctive Tarcha is to be given to מֵישׁוֹר.

Proverbs 2:9–11. With the מ repeated, the promises encouraging to the endeavour after wisdom take a new departure:
9 Then shalt thou understand righteousness, and justice, And uprightness; every way of good.
10 For wisdom will enter into thine heart, And knowledge will do good to thy soul;
11 Discretion will keep watch over thee, Understanding will keep thee.

Regarding the ethical triad מְשָרָה [righteousness, rightness], מִישָׁו [judgment], and מִישָׁו [rectitude], vid., 1:3. Seb. Schmid is wrong in his rendering, et omnis via qua bonum aditur erit tibi plana, which in comparison with Isa. 26:7 would be feebly expressed. J. H.
Michaelis rightly interprets all these four conceptions as object- accusatives; the fourth is the summarizing asyndeton (cf. Ps. 8:7) breaking off the enumeration: omnia denique orbitam boni; Jerome, bonam: in this case, however, † would be genitive (vid., 17:2). יִּשְׂרְאֵל is the way in which the chariot rolls along; in עלי there are united the root-conceptions of that which is found (לו and rolling (לו).

Whether כִּי, v. 10, is the argumentative "because" (according to the versions and most interpreters) or "for" ("denn," J. H. Michaelis, Ewald, and others), is a question. That with כִּי = "for" the subject would precede the verb, as at vv. 6, 21, and 1:32 (Hitzig), determines nothing, as v. 18 shows. On the one hand, the opinion that כִּי = "because" is opposed by the analogy of the כִּי, v. 6, following כָּל, v. 5; the inequality between vv. 5–8 and v. 9ff. if the new commencement, v. 9, at once gives place to another, v. 10; the relationship of the subject ideas in vv. 10, 11, which makes v. 11 unsuitable to be a conclusion from v. 10. On the contrary, the promise not only of intellectual, but at the same time also of practical, insight into the right and the good, according to their whole compass and in their manifoldness, can be established or explained quite well as we thus read vv. 10, 11: For wisdom will enter (namely, to make it a dwelling-place, 14:33; cf. John 14:23) into thine heart, and knowledge will do good to thy soul (namely, by the enjoyment which arises from the possession of knowledge, and the rest which its certainty yields). בָּרוּךְ, וּרְעִים, is elsewhere fem. (Ps. 139:6), but here, as at 8:10; 14:6, in the sense of תָּוְּנָוָה, is masc. In v. 11 the contents of the נָבִיב (v. 9) are further explained. לְמִשְׁמֶרֶת, of watching (for Job 16:16 is to be interpreted differently), is used only by our poet (here and at 6:22). Discretion, i.e., the capacity of well-considered action, will hold watch over thee, take thee under protection; understanding, i.e., the capacity in the case of opposing rules to make the right choice, and in the matter of extremes to choose the right medium, will be bestowed upon thee. In פְּתִיעְתָּה, as in Ps. 61:8; 140:2, 5, Deut. 33:9, etc., the first stem letter is not assimilated, in order that the word may have a fuller sound; the writing פְּתִיעְתָּה for פְּתִיעֵת is meant to affect the eye.

Proverbs 2:12–15. As in vv. 10, 11, the כִּי of v. 12 (“then shalt thou understand,” v. 5) is expanded, so now the watching, preserving, is separately placed in view:

12 To deliver thee from an evil way, From the man who speaks falsehood;
13 (From those) who forsake the ways of honesty To walk in ways of darkness, 14 Who rejoice to accomplish evil, Delight in malignant falsehood—15 They are crooked in their paths, And perverse in their ways.

That כִּי is not genitival, via mali, but adjectival, via mala, is evident from דֶּרֶךְ רָע "ways of darkness," 16:29. From the evil way, i.e., conduct, stands opposed to the false words represented in the person of the deceiver; from both kinds of contagium wisdom delivers. מִכְּרָתַם (like the similarly formed לְﬠַמָית, occurring only as plur.) means misrepresentations, viz., of the good and the true, and that for the purpose of deceiving (Prov. 17:20), fallaciae, i.e., intrigues in conduct, and lies and deceit in words. Fl. compares Arab. ifk, a lie, and affak, a liar. מְנוּחָת has Munach, the constant servant of Dechi, instead of Metheg, according to rule (Accentssystem, vii. § 2). מְנוּחָת (v. 13) is connected with the collective אֵאָשׁ (vid., Judg. 9:55); we have in the translation separated it into a relative clause with the abstract present. The vocalization of the article fluctuates, yet the expression פֶּתִיעְתָּה, רְעִים, is evident from the e honesty” (Geradheit) (cf. the adj. expression, Jer. 31:9), which does not shun to come to the light, stand opposed the “ways of darkness,” the ἔργα τοῦ σκότους, Rom. 13:12, which designedly conceal themselves from God (Isa. 29:15) and men (Job 24:15; 38:13, 15).

Proverbs 2:14. In this verse the regimen of the מִן, 12b, is to be regarded as lost; the description now goes on independently. Whoever does not shrink back from evil, but gives himself up to deceit, who finally is at home in it—a life-element, and rejoices, yea, delights in that which he ought to shun as something destructive and to be rejected. The neut. רָע is frequently an attributive genit., 6:24; 15:26; 28:5; cf. טוב, 24:25, which here, since מְסֻכִּים are those who in themselves are bad, does not separate, but heightens: perversitates non simplices aut vulgares, sed pessimae et ex omni parte vitiosae (J. H. Michaelis). With אַשֶּר (ὅιτινες), v. 15, this part is brought to a conclusion. Fleischer, Bertheau, and others interpret אָרְךֹתֵיהֶם, as the accus. of the nearer definition, as σκολιὸς τὸν νοῦν τὰς πράξεις; but should it be an accus., then would we expect, in this position of the words, וּעִקְׁשׁ (Isa. 59:8; Prov. 10:8, cf. 9:15). עִקְׁשׁ is the pred.; for אָרְךֹת is the subject, as ḥé, ḥé, like the Arab. I’d, I’dh, is a weaker form of לָךְ, flectere, inclinare, intran. recedere: they are turned aside, inclined out of the way to the right and left in their walk (ר as 17:20).

Proverbs 2:16–19. With the resumption of אִשָּׁה זָרָה, the watchful protection which wisdom affords to its possessors is further specified in these verses:

16 To save thee from the strange woman, From the stranger who useth smooth words;
17 Who forsakes the companion of her youth, And forgets the covenant of her God;
18 For she sinks down to death together with her house, And to the shadow of Hades her paths—
19 All they who go to her return not again, And reach not the paths of life

The subject here continued is the fourfold wisdom named in vv. 10, 11. ר signifies alienus, which may also be equivalent to alius populi, but of a much wider compass—him who does not belong to a certain class (e.g., the non-priestly or the laity), the person or thing not belonging to me, or also some other than I designate; on the other hand, 넉커, peregrinus, scarcely anywhere divests itself of the essential mark of a strange foreign origin. While thus אִשָּׁה זָרָה is the non-married wife, 넉커 designates her as non-Israelitish. Prostitution was partly sanctioned in the cultus of the Midianites, Syrians, and other nations neighbouring to Israel, and thus was regarded as nothing less than customary. In Israel, on the contrary, the law (Deut. 23:18f.) forbade it under a penalty, and therefore it was chiefly practised by foreign women (Prov. 23:27, and cf. the exception, Ruth 2:10),—an inveterate vice, which spread itself particularly from the latter days of Solomon, along with general ungodliness, and excusing itself under the polygamy sanctioned by the law, brought ruin on the state. The Chokma contends against this, and throughout presents monogamy as alone corresponding to the institution and the idea of the relation. Designating marriage as the “covenant of God,” it condemns not only adulterous but generally promiscuous intercourse of the sexes, because unhallowed and thus unjustifiable, and likewise arbitrary divorce. Regarding the ancient ceremonies connected with the celebration of marriage we are not specially informed; but from v. 17, Mal. 2:14 (Ewald, Bertheau, Hitzig, but not Köhler), it appears that the celebration of marriage was a religious act, and that they who were joined together in marriage called God to witness and ratify the vows they took upon themselves. The perf. in the attributive clause אֲמָרִי.

Proverbs 2:17–19. ἀλλὰ, as here used, has nothing to do with the phylarch-name, similar in sound, which is a denom. of שָחָה; but it comes immediately from שָחָה to accustom oneself to a person or cause, to be familiar therewith (while the Aram. שָחָה, to learn, Pa. to teach), and thus means, as the synon. of אֶלֶף, the companion or familiar associate (vid., Schultens). Parallels such as Jer. 3:4 suggested to the old interpreters the allegorical explanation of the adulteress as the personification of the apostasy or of heresy. V. 18a the LXX translate: ἐθέτο τὰρ παρὰ τῷ θανάτῳ τὸν οἶκον αὐτῆς: she (the dissolute wife) has placed her house beside death (the abyss of death). This שֶׁחָה [ἐθέτο] is perhaps the original, for the text as it lies before us is doubtful, though, rightly understood, admissible. The accentuation marks שֶׁחָה as the subject, but בֵיתָה is elsewhere always masc., and does not, like the rarer אֲלֵף, v. 15, admit in usage a double gender; also, if the fem. usage were here introduced (Bertheau, Hitzig), then the predicate, even though בֵיתָה were regarded as fem., might be, in conformity with rule, הוּא, as e.g., Isa. 2:17. שֶׁחָה is, as in Ps. 44:26, 3rd pr. of הוּא, Arab. sâkh, to go down, to sink; the emendation שֶׁחָה (Joseph Kimchi) does not recommend itself on this account, that שֶׁחָה and שֶׁחָה mean, according to usage, to stoop or to bend down; and to interpret (Ralbag, ḡavhalâ) שֶׁחָה transitorily is inadmissible. For that reason Aben Ezra interprets שֶׁחָה as in apposition: to death, to its house; but then the poet in that case should say שֶׁח ח, for death is not a house. On the other hand, we cannot perceive in שֶׁח ח an accus. of the nearer definition (J. H. Michaelis, Fl); the expression would here, as 15a, be refined without purpose.

Böttcher has recognised שֶׁחָה as permutative, the personal subject: for she sinks down to death, her house, i.e., she herself, together with all that belongs to her; cf. the permutative of the subject, Job 29:3, Isa. 29:23 (vid., comm. l.c.), and the more particularly statement of the object, Ex. 2:6, etc. Regarding שֶׁח ח, shadows of the under-world (from רָפָה, synon. שֶׁח ח, weakened, or to become powerless), a word common to the Solomonic writings, vid., Comment. on Isaiah, p. 206. What v. 18b says of the person of the adulteress, v. 19 says of those who live with her, יִבְיָהוּ, her house-companions.

"those entering in to her," is equivalent to יֵבְיַהוּ שֶׁח ח; the participle of verbs eundi et veniendi takes the accusative object of the finite as gen. in st. constr., as e.g., 1:12; 2:7, Gen. 23:18; 9:10 (cf. Jer. 10:20). The tone on the ult., is a protestation: there is no return for those who practise fornication, and they do not reach the paths of life from which they have so widely strayed.

Proverbs 2:20–22. With לְׁחות there commences a new section, coordinating itself with the לְׁחות הָלַל ("to deliver thee") of vv. 12, 16, unfolding that which wisdom accomplishes as a preserver and guide:

20 So that thou walkest in the good way, And keepest the right paths.
21 For the upright shall inhabit the land, And the innocent shall remain in it.
22 But the godless are cut off out the land, And the faithless are rooted out of it.

Wisdom—thus the connection—will keep thee, so that thou shalt not fall under the seductions of man or of woman; keep, in order that thou ... שֶׁח ח (from רָפָה, tendency, purpose) refers to the intention and object of the protecting wisdom. To the two negative designations of design there follows, as the third and last, a positive one. (contrast to לְׁדות, 14:19) is here used in a general ethical sense: the good (Guten, not Gütigen, the kind).
object of the way, may in another connection also mean to keep oneself from, cavere ab (Ps. 17:4); here it means: carefully to keep in it. The promise of v. 21 is the same as in the Mashal Ps. 37:9, 11, 22; cf. Prov. 10:30. אָרֶץ is Canaan, or the land which God promised to the patriarchs, and in which He planted Israel, whom He had brought out of Egypt; not the earth, as Matt. 5:5, according to the extended, unlimited N.T. circle of vision. וּיִוָּתְׁר (Milel) is erroneously explained by Schultens: funiculis bene firmis irroborabunt in terra. The verb יָתְר, Arab. watar, signifies to yoke (whence יֶתֶר, a cord, rope), then intrans. to be stretched out in length, to be hanging over (vid., Fleischer on Job 30:11); whence יֶתֶר, residue, Zeph. 2:9, and after which the LXX here renders ὑπολειφθήσονται, and Jerome permanebunt. In 22b the old translators render יִזְֹׁכַר as the fut. of the pass. יָתְר, Deut. 28:63; but in this case it would be יִנְׁזְֹׁכַר. The form יָתְר, pointed יָתְר, might be the Niph. of יָתְר, but this can neither be taken as one with יָתְר, of the same meaning, nor with Hitzig is it to be vocalized יָתְר (Hoph. of יָתְר); nor, with Böttcher (§ 1100, p. 453), is יָתְר to be regarded as a veritable fut. Niph. יָתְר is, as at 15:25, Ps. 52:7, active: evellant, and this, with the subj. remaining indefinite (for which J. H. Michaelis refers to Hos. 12:9), is equivalent to evellentur. This indefinite “they” or “one” (“man”), Fleischer remarks, can even be used of God, as here and Job 7:3,—a thing which is common in Persian, where e.g., the expression rendered hominem ex pulvere fecerunt is used instead of the fuller form, which would be rendered homo a Deo ex pulvere factus est. These bears (as דָּרְכָּשׁ proves) the primary meaning of concealed, i.e., malicious (treacherous and rapacious, Isa. 33:1), and then faithless men.

Fourth Introductory Mashal Discourse, 3:1–18

Exhortation to Love and Faithfulness, and Self-Sacrificing Devotion to God, as the True Wisdom

Proverbs 3:1–4. The foregoing Mashal discourse seeks to guard youth against ruinous companionship; this points out to them more particularly the relation toward God and man, which alone can make them truly happy, vv. 1–4.

1. My son, forget not my doctrine, And let thine heart keep my commandments;
2. For length of days, and years of life, And peace, will they add to thee.
3. Let not kindness and truth forsake thee: Bind them about thy neck,
4. And obtain favour and true prudence In the eyes of God and of men.

The admonition takes a new departure. תורָתִי and מִצְֹׁות י refer to the following new discourse and laws of conduct. Here, in the midst of the discourse, we have יִצֹר and not יִנְׁצֹר; the non-assimilated form is found only in the conclusion, e.g., 2:11; 5:2. The plur. יוסִיפ (v. 2) for יוסֵפְׁנָה (they will bring, add) refers to the doctrine and the precepts; the synallage has its ground in this, that the fem. construction in Hebrew is not applicable in such a case; the vulgar Arab. also has set aside the forms jaktubna, taktubna. "Extension of days" is continuance of duration, stretching itself out according to the promise, Ex. 20:12, and “years of life” (Prov. 9:11) are years—namely, many of them—of a life which is life in the full sense of the word. The plur. יָסִור (v. 2) for יָסִיר (R. מִסְרֵי) shows the 3a does not signify vita vitalis, ἵππος βιωτός (Fl.). שָלום is pure well-being, free from all that disturbs peace or satisfaction, internal and external contentment.

Proverbs 3:3. With this verse the doctrine begins; יִלְֹׁשָׁנָה (not אַלְֹׁשָׁנָה) shows the 3a does not continue the promise of v. 2. חֶסֶד (R. כח, stringere, afficere) is, according to the prevailing usage of the language, well-affectedness, it may be of God toward men, or of men toward God, or of men toward one another—a loving disposition, of the same meaning as the N.T. ἀγάπη (vid., e.g., Hos 6:6).

אֱמֶת (from אֲמֶנֶת,) continuance, a standing to one’s promises, and not falsifying just expectations; thus fidelity, πίστις, in the interrelated sense of fides and fidelitas. These two states of mind and of conduct are here contemplated as moral powers (Ps. 61:8; 43:3), which are of excellent service, and bring precious gain; and 4b shows that their ramification on the side of God and of men, the religious and the moral, remains radically inseparable. The suffix תַּכְנָה does not refer to the doctrine and the precepts, but to these two cardinal virtues. If the disciple is admonished to bind them about his neck (vid., 1:9, cf. 3:22), so here reference is made, not to ornament, nor yet to protection against evil influences by means of them, as by an amulet (for which proofs are wanting), but to the signet which was wont to be constantly carried (Gen. 38:18, cf. Cant. 8:6) on a string around the neck. The parallel member 3c confirms this; 3b and 3c together put us in mind of the Tephillim (phylacteries), Ex. 13:16, Deut. 6:8; 11:18, in which what is here a figure is presented in external form, but as the real figure of that which is required in the inward parts. לוּח (from לֵוָח, Arab. l’ah, to begin to shine, e.g., of a shooting star, gleaming sword; vid., Wetzstein, Deutsch. morgenl. Zeitschr. xxii. 151f.) signifies the tablet prepared for writing by means of polish; to write love and fidelity on the tablet of the heart, is to impress deeply on the heart the duty of both virtues, so that one will be impelled to them from within outward (Jer. 31:33).

Proverbs 3:4. To the admonitory imper. there follows here a second, as 4:4; 20:13, Amos 5:4, 2 Chron. 20:20, instead of which also the perf. consec. might stand; the counsellor wishes, with the good to which he advises, at the same time to present its good results. שֵכֶל is (1 Sam. 25:3) the appearance, for the Arab. shakl means forma, as uniting or binding the lineaments or contours into one figure, σχῆμα, according to which שֵכֶל טוב may be interpreted of the pleasing and advantageous impression which the well-built external appearance of a man makes, as an image of that which his internal excellence produces; thus, favourable view, friendly judgment, good reputation (Ewald, Hitzig, Zöckler). But everywhere else (Prov. 13:15; Ps. 111:10; 2 Chron. 30:22) this phrase means good, i.e., fine, well-becoming insight, or prudence; and שֵכֶל has in the language of the Mishle no other meaning than intellectus, which proceeds from the inwardly forming activity of the mind. He obtains favour in the eyes of God and man, to whom favour on both sides is shown; he obtains refined prudence, to whom it is on both sides adjudicated. It is unnecessary, with Ewald and Hitzig, to assign the two objects to God and men. In the eyes of both at the same time, he who carries love and faithfulness in his heart appears as one to whom חֵן and שֵכֶל טוב must be adjudicated.

Proverbs 3:5–8. Were “kindness and truth” (v. 3) understood only in relation to men, then the following admonition would not be interposed, since it proceeds from that going before, if there the quality of kindness and truth, not only towards man, but also towards God, is commended:

5  Trust in Jahve with thy whole heart, And lean not on thine own understanding.
6  In all thy ways acknowledge Him, And He will make plain thy paths.
7  Be not wise in thine own eyes; Fear Jahve, and depart from evil.
8  Health will then come to thy navel, And refreshing to thy bones.

From God alone comes true prosperity, true help. He knows the right way to the right ends. He knows what benefits us. He is able to free us from that which does us harm: therefore it is our duty and our safety to place our confidence...
wholly in Him, and to trust not to our own judgment. The verb שָׁרָר, Arab. bath, has the root-meaning expandere, whence perhaps, by a more direct way than that noted under Ps. 4:6, it acquires the meaning confidere, to lean with the whole body on something, in order to rest upon it, strengthened by על, if one lean wholly—Fr. se reposer sur quelqu’un; Ital. riposarsi sopra alcuno,—like השער with ל, to lean on anything, so as to be supported by it; with על, to support oneself on anything (Fl.). יritte (the same in form as ירית, Num. 11:12) is not fully represented by “acknowledge Him;” as in 1 Chron. 28:9 it is not a mere theoretic acknowledgment that is meant, but earnest penetrating cognizance, engaging the whole man. The practico-mystical שַׁלֵּשׁ, in and of itself full of significance, according to O. and N.T. usage, is yet strengthened by toto corde. The heart is the central seat of all spiritual soul-strength; to love God with the whole heart is to concentrate the whole inner life on the active contemplation of God, and the ready observance of His will. God requires such as show regard to Him, by making plain their path before them, i.e., by leading them directly to the right end, removing all hindrances out of their way. יירת has Cholem in the first syllable (vid., Kimchi’s Lex.). “Be not wise in thine own eyes” is equivalent to ne tibi sapiens videare; for, as J. H. Michaelis remarks, confidere Deo est sapere, sibi vero ac suae sapientiae, desipere.

“Fear God and depart from evil” is the twofold representation of the εὐσέβεια, or practical piety, in the Chokma writings: Prov. 16:6, the Mashal psalm 34:10, 15, and Job 28:28 cf. 1:2. For הָרָר מַעְרָע, the post-biblical expression is יירת.

Proverbs 3:8. The subject to יירת (it shall be) is just this religious-moral conduct. The conjectural reading לִשְׁאֵרְךָ (Clericus), לִשְׁאֵרְךָ (Ewald, Hitzig), to thy flesh or body, is unnecessary; the LXX and Syr. so translating, generalize the expression, which is not according to their taste. יירת, Arab. sarr, to be fast, to bind fast, properly, the umbilical cord (which the Arabs call sarr, whence the denom. sarra, to cut off the umbilical cord of the newborn); thus the navel, the origin of which coincides with the independent individual existence of the newborn, and is as the firm centre (cf. Arab. saryr, foundation, basis, Job, p. 487) of the existence of the body. The system of punctuation does not, as a rule, permit the doubling of יירת, probably on account of the prevailing half guttural, i.e., the uvular utterance of this sound by the men of Tiberias. יירת here, and יירת at Ezek. 16:4, belong to the exceptions; cf. the expanded duplication in יירת, Cant. 7:3, to which a chief form יירת is as little to be assumed as is a יירת The מ. יירת, healing, has here, as 14:22; 16:24, and יירת, Ezek. 47:12, not the meaning of restoration from sickness, but the raising up of enfeebled strength, or the confirming of that which exists; the navel comes into view as the middle point of the vis vitalis. יירת is a Piel formation, corresponding to the abstract Kal formation יירת, the Arab. יירת, used transit. (to give to drink), also יירת (cf. Pu. Job 21:24) and יירת, like the Hebr. יירת (Hiph. of יירת, to drink): the infin. (Arab.) יירת means, to the obliterating of the proper signification, distribution, benefaction, showing friendship, but in the passage before us is to be explained after Job 21:24 (the marrow of his bones is well watered; Arnheim—full of sap) and 15:30. Bertheau and Hitzig erroneously regard v. 8 as the conclusion to v. 7, for they interpret יירת as the subject; but had the poet wished to be so understood, he should have written יירת. Much rather the subject is devotion withdrawn from the evil one and turned to God, which externally proves itself by the dedication to Him of earthly possessions.

Proverbs 3:9. Honour Jahve with thy wealth, And with the first-fruits of all thine increase:
10 Then shall thy barns be filled with plenty, and thy vats overflow with must.

_Proverbs 3:9, 10._ It may surprise us that the Chokma, being separated from the ceremonial law, here commends the giving of tithes. But in the first place, the consciousness of the duty of giving tithes is older than the Mosaic law, Gen. 28:22; in this case, the giving of tithes is here a general ethical expression. יַרְדִּים (םִיָּשָּׁר הָאָסָם, יִשְׁרָאֵל עָשָּׂר, יִשְׁרוּאֵל עָשָּׂר, יִשְׁרוּאֵל עָשָּׂר) do not occur in the Book of Proverbs; in the post-biblical period, the tithes are called שְׁלֹשִׁים (הָאָסָם, יִשְׁרוּאֵל עָשָּׂר, יִשְׁרוּאֵל עָשָּׂר) the portion of the Most High. אָסָם, as the Arab. _wakabra_, to make heavy, then to regard and deal with as weighty and solemn (opp. מֵהונֶכֶר, to regard and treat as light, from מִן הָמָּרֶכֶר = Arab. _hān_, to be light). יִשְׁרוּאֵל, properly lightness in the sense of aisance, opulence, forms with יְבָרֶךְ an oxymoron (fac jovam gravem de levitate tua), but one aimed at by the author neither at 1:1 nor here. מִן הָמָּרֶכֶר (in Heb. 7:4, ἀκροθίνια) occurs in a similar sense, cf. Num. 18:12 (in the law of the _Theruma_ or wave-offering of the priests), as also מִן הָמָּרֶכֶר in the law of the second tenths, Deut. 14:22, cf. Num. 18:30 (in the law of the tenths of the priests). V. 10. With ἀποδοσία ἰμπερατιβί (in reality to take one into school. _Ahdung_ [punishment] or _Rüge_ [reproof] is the German word which most corresponds to the Hebr. קָשָׁה, קְשָׁה) we have translated “school,” for ἀποδοσία, ἰμπερατιβί, means in reality to take one into school. _Ahdung_ [punishment] or _Rüge_ [reproof] is the German word which most corresponds to the Hebr. קָשָׁה, קְשָׁה (whence here the prohibitive ἀποδοσία with ἰμπερατία) means to experience loathing (disgust) at anything, or aversion (vexation) toward anything. The LXX (cited Heb. 12:5f.), μηδὲ ἐκλύουσθαι ὑπολήνιον, nor be faint-hearted, which joins in to the general thought, that we should not be frightened away from God, or let ourselves be estranged from Him by the attitude of anger in which He appears in His determination to inflict suffering. In 12α the accentuation leaves it undefined whether ἀποδοτικός, as subject belongs to the relative or to the principal clause; the traditional succession of accents, certified also by Ben Bileam, is ἀποδοτικός, ἰμπερατιβί: for this passage belongs to the few in which more than three servants (viz., _Mahpach_, _Mercha_, and three _Munachs_) go before the _Athnach_. The further peculiarity is here to be observed, that ἀποδοτικός, although without the _Makkeph_, retains its _Segol_, besides here only in Ps. 47:5; 60:2. 12b is to be interpreted thus (cf. 9:5b): “and (that) as a father the son, whom he loves.” The is explanatory, as 1 Sam. 28:3 (Gesenius, § 155, 1a), and (which one may supplement by or Ṣabb) is a defining clause having the force of a clause with ἀσχολίασθαι. The translation et ut pater qui filio bene cupit, is syntactically (cf. Isa. 40:11) and accentually (vid., 13b) not less admissible, but translating “and as a father he holds his son dear,” or with Hitzig (after Jer. 31:10, a passage not quite syntactically the same), “and holds him dear, as a father his son” (which Zöckler without syntactical authority prefers on account of the 2nd modus, cf. e.g., Ps. 51:18), does not seem a right parallel clause, since the giving of correction is the chief point, and the love only the accompanying consideration (Prov. 13:24). According to our interpretation, ἰκρίζεται, is to be carried forward in the mind from 12a. The LXX find the parallel word in ἀνέστησεν, for they translate μοστιγνοὶ δὲ πάντα γενὸς ἐν παραδέχεσθαι, and thus have read רֶכֶס ויהי.

Proverbs 3:13–15. Such submission to God, the All-wise, the All-directing, who loves us with fatherly affection, is wisdom, and such wisdom is above all treasures.

13 Blessed is the man who has found wisdom, And the man who has gained understanding;
14 For better is her acquisition than the acquisition of silver, And her gain than fine gold.
15 More precious is she than corals; And all thy jewels do not equal her value.

The imperfect ἐκθέτω, which as the Hiph. of ἐκπέμψας, exire, has the general meaning educere, interchanges with the perfect ἐκάθισεν. This bringing forth is either a delivering up, i.e., giving out or presenting, Isa. 58:10, Ps. 140:9; 144:13 (cf. ἐκπέμπω, Arab. naftak, to give out, to pay out), or a fetching out, getting out, receiving, 8:35; 12:2; 18:22. Thus 13a reminds one of the parable of the treasure in the field, and 13b of that of the godly pearl for which the ἐμπορεύομαι, who sought the pearl parted with all that he had. Here also is declared the promise of him who trades with a merchant for the possession of wisdom; for ἐμπορεύεσθαι (both, as Isa. 23:3, 18; 45:15, from ἐμπορή, the latter after the forms ἐκάθισεν, ἐμπνεύσας), without our needing to assume a second primary form, ἐκάθισεν, ἐκάθισαν, go back to the root-word ἐκάθισιν, to trade, go about as a trader, with the fundamental meaning ἐμπορεύομαι (LXX); and also the mention of the pearls is not wanting here, for at all events the meaning “pearls” has blended itself with ἐκάθισεν, which is a favourite word in the Mashal poetry, though it be not the original meaning of the word. In 14b ἐκάθισεν is surpassed by ἐκάθισαν (besides in the Proverbs, found only in this meaning in Ps. 68:14), which properly means ore found in a mine, from ἐκάθισα, to cut in, to dig up, and hence the poetic name of gold, perhaps of gold dug out as distinguished from molten gold. Hitzig regards ἐκάθισαν as identical with it; but this word (Sanskr. without the ending hir, Zench. zar) is derived from ἡρ, to glitter (vid., Curtius). We have translated “gain,” for it does not mean the profit which wisdom brings, the tribute which it yields, but the gain, the possession of wisdom herself.

Proverbs 3:15. As regards פְּנִינִים, for which the Kethib has פָּנִים, the following things are in favour of the fundamental meaning “corals,” viz.: (1.) The name itself, which corresponds with the Arab. fann; this word, proceeding from the root-idea of shooting forth, particularly after the manner of plants, means the branch and all that raises or multiplies itself branch-like or twig-like (Fleischer). (2.) The redness attributed to the פְּנִינִים, Lam. 4:7, in contradistinction to the pure whiteness attributed to snow and milk (vid., at Job 28:18). The meaning of the word may, however, have become generalized in practice (LXX in loc. λίθων πολυτελῶν, Braec. Venet. λυθίδων); the meaning “pearls,” given to it in the Job-Targum by Rashi, and particularly by Bochart, lay so much the nearer as one may have wrought also corals and precious stones, such as the carbuncle, sardius, and sapphire, into the form of pearls. יְׁקָרָה, in consequence of the retrogression of the tone, has Munach on the penult., and that as an exception, as has been remarked by the Masora, since in substantives and proper names terminating in הֶחֱזִיק, i.e., the receding of the tone, does not elsewhere appear, e.g., יָפָה הִיא, Gen. 12:14, יָפָה הִיא, Cant. 6:9, צָרָה הִיא, Jer. 30:7. יְׁקָרָה is first abstr., a being inclined to something, lust, will, pleasure in anything, then also concr., anything in which one has pleasure, what is beautiful, precious; cf. Arab. nfîs, hence ḥjârt nfîst, precious stones” (Fleischer).

שָוָה with ב means to be an equivalent (purchase-price, exchange) for anything; the most natural construction in Arab. as well as in Hebr. is that with ב, to be the equivalent of a thing (vid., at Job 33:27); the ב is the Beth pretii, as if one said in Arab.: biabi anta thou art in the estimate of my father, I give it for thee. One distinctly perceives in vv. 14, 15, the echo of Job 28. This tetrastich occurs again with a slight variation at 8:10, 11. The Talmud and the Midrash accent it so, that in the former the expression is בֵּלַח תְּסִיבָה, and in the latter בֵּלַח תְּסִיבָה מִכֶּלֶת הָמוֹנָת, and they explain the latter of precious stones and pearls (אמונת סתרי המדברים).

17 Her ways are pleasant ways, And all her paths are peace.
18 A tree of life is she to those that lay hold upon her, And he who always holdeth her fast is blessed.

As in the right hand of Jahve, according to Ps. 16:11, are pleasures for evermore, so Wisdom holds in her right hand “length of days,” viz., of the days of life, thus life, the blessing of blessings; in her left, riches and honour (Prov. 8:18), the two good things which, it is true, do not condition life, but, received from Wisdom, and thus wisely, elevate the happiness of life—in the right hand is the chief good, in the left the προσθήκη, Matt. 6:33. Didymus: Per sapientiae dextram divinarum rerum cognitio, ex qua immortalitatis vita oritur, significatur; per sinistram autem rerum humanarum notitia, ex qua gloria opumque abundantia nascitur. The LXX, as between 15a and 15b, so also here after v. 16, interpolate two lines: “From her mouth proceedeth righteousness; justice and mercy she bears upon her tongue,”—perhaps translated from the Hebr., but certainly added by a reader.

Proverbs 3:17. דְָרָכֵי נֹעַם are ways on which one obtains what is agreeable to the inner and the outer man, and which it does good to enjoy. The parallel דְָרָכֵי נֹעַם is not a genitive to נְׁתִיבות, for she brings well-being on all sides and deep inwards satisfaction (peace). In regard to נְׁתִיבות, via eminens, elata, Schultens is right (vid., under 1:15); נְׁתִיבות מְחַה, has Munach, and instead of the Metheg, Tarcha, vid., under 1:31b. The figure of the tree of life the fruit of which brings immortality, is, as 11:30; 15:4 (cf. 13:12), Rev. 2:7, taken from the history of paradise in the Book of Genesis. The old ecclesiastical saying, Lignum vitae crux Christi, accommodates itself in a certain measure, through Matt. 11:19, Luke 11:49, with this passage of the Book of Proverbs. בֵּלַח תְּסִיבָה ב means to fasten upon anything, more fully expressed in Gen. 21:18, to bind the hand firm with anything, to seize it firmly. They who give themselves to Wisdom, come to experience that she is a tree of life whose fruit contains and communicates strength of life, and whoever always keeps fast hold of Wisdom is blessed, i.e., to be pronounced happy (Ps. 41:3, vid., under Ps. 137:8). The predicate מקּוֹשָׁר, blessed, refers to each one of the תומַכֵי, those who hold her, cf. 27:16, Num. 24:9. It is the so-called distributive singular of the predicate, which is freely used.
particularly in those cases where the plur. of the subject is a participle (vid., under v. 35).

Divine Protection

Proverbs 3:19–26. O son, guard against seducers (Prov. 1:8ff.); listen to the warning voice of Wisdom (Prov. 1:20ff.); seek after Wisdom: she is the way to God, comes from God, and teaches thee to shun the wicked way and to walk in the way that is good (2); thou shalt obtain her if, renouncing self-

104:24, determines regarding the attributive interpretation; the Jerusalem Targum, I, when it translates, Gen. 1:1, כַּבְדַּכֶם יִשָּׁרָאֵית (בַּרְשֵׁית), combines 8:22 with such passages as this before us. יָסְד (here with the tone thrown back) properly signifies, like the Arab. wasad, to lay fast, to found, for one gives to a fact the firm basis of its existence. The parallel Pil. of כָּל (Arab. kän, cogn. see on Isaiah, p. 691) signifies to set up, to restore; here equivalent to, to give existence.

Proverbs 3:20. It is incorrect to understand 20a, with the Targ., of division, i.e., separating the water under the firmament from the water above the firmament; נִבְּקָע is spoken of water, especially of its breaking forth, Gen. 7:11, Ex.
14:21, cf. Ps. 74:15, properly dividing itself out, *is welling forth from the bowels of the earth;
it means, without distinguishing the primordial waters and the later water-floods confined within their banks (cf. Job 38:8f., Ps. 104:6–8), the overflowing of the earth for the purpose of its processes of cultivation and the irrigation of the land. תַּהוֹם (from הָוָם, to gur, to roar) are chiefly the internal water stores of the earth, Gen. 49:25, Ps. 33:7. But while 20a is to be understood of the waters under the firmament, 20b is to be interpreted of those
comminuerare, attenuare) properly designates the uppermost stratum of air thinly and finely stretching itself far and wide, and then poetically the clouds of heaven (vid., under Ps.
77:18). Another name, עַרְפֵי, comes from עָרֵפָה, to drop, to run. The טָל added on the object accusative represents synechdochically all the waters coming down from heaven and fructifying the earth. This watering proceeds from above (הָרִישָׁת; on the contrary, the endowing of the surface of the earth with great and small rivers is a fundamental fact in creation (נְפָסָפָה).
Proverbs 3:21–22. From this eminence, in which the work of creation presents wisdom, exhortations are now deduced, since the writer always expresses himself only with an ethical intention regarding the nature of wisdom:

21 My son, may they not depart from thine eyes—Preserve thoughtfulness and consideration,

22 And they will be life to thy soul And grace to thy neck.

If we make the synonyms of wisdom which are in 21b the subject per prolepsin to אֶל יִהְיֶינָ (Hitzig and Zöckler), then 19–20 and 21–22 clash. The subjects are wisdom, understanding, knowledge, which belong to God, and shall from His become the possession of those who make them their aim. Regarding אֶל יָלֻּז to push) a Hithpa. the Masora is continued: regarding אֶל יָלֻּז (here defective after the Masora, as rightly in Vened. 1515, 1521, and Nissel, 1662), see at 2:7; אֶל יָלֻּז for יָלְז, see at 3:2b. The LXX (cf. Heb. 2:1) translate without distinctness of reference: κυρία μη παραρυσίζει, let it now flow past, i.e., let it not be unobserved, hold it always before thee; the Targ. with the Syr. renderfcn אֶל יָלֻּז, ne vilescat, as if the words were אֶל יָלֻּז to lax. In 22a the synallage generis is continued: יָלָּז. Regarding יָלָּז, see at 1:9. By wisdom the soul gains life, divinely true and blessed, and the external appearance of the man grace, which makes him pleasing and gains for him affection.

Proverbs 3:23–26. But more than this, wisdom makes its possessor in all situations of life confident in God:

23 Then shalt thou go thy way with confidence, And thy foot shall not stumble.

24 When thou liest down, thou are not afraid, But thou layest thyself down and hast sweet sleep.

25 Thou needest not be afraid of sudden alarm, Nor for the storm of the wicked when it breaketh forth.

26 For Jahve will be thy confidence And keep thy foot from the snare.

The יֵשָׁה (cf. our “bei guter Laune” = in good cheer), with מ of the condition, is of the same meaning as the conditional adverbial accusative הבש, 10:9; 1:33. V. 23b the LXX translate ὁ δὲ ποὺς σου οὐ μὴ προσκόψῃ, while, on the contrary, at Ps. 91:12 they make the person the subject (μὴ προσκόψῃς τὸν κ.τ.λ.); here also we retain more surely the subject from 23a, especially since for the intrans. of ποὺς (to smile, to push) a Hithpa. the Masora is used Jer. 13:16. In v. 24 there is the echo of Job 11:18, and in v. 25 of Job 5:21. 24b is altogether the same as Job 5:24b: et decumbes et suavis erit somnus tuus = is deculueris, suavis erit. The hypothetic perf., according to the sense, is both there and at Job 11:18 (cf. Jer. 20:9) oxtonted as perf. consec. Similar examples are 6:22, Gen. 33:13, 1 Sam. 25:31, cf. Ewald, § 357a. בַּרְבָּה (of sleep as Jer. 31:26) is from רבַּר, which in Hebr. is used of pleasing impressions, as the Arab. 'riba of a lively, free disposition. בַּר (nom. actionis from רבַּר, with the ground-form sina preserved in the Arab. lidat, vid., Job, p. 284, note), agrees in inflexion with רבַּר, annus. אָרְבָּה, v. 25a, denies, like Ps. 121:3, with emphasis: be afraid only not = thou hast altogether nothing to fear. Schultens rightly says: Subest species prohibitionis et tanquam abominationis, ne tale quicquam vel in suspicionem veniat in mentemve cogitando admittatur. פֻּדָה here means terror, as 1:26f., the terrific object; וְלַעֲמָם (with the accus. om) is the virtual genitive, as 26:2 וְלַעֲמָם (with accus. am). Regarding וְלַעֲמָם, see under 1:27. The genitive וְלַעֲמָם may be, after Ps. 37:18, the genit. subjecti, but still it lies nearer to say that he who chooses the wisdom of God as his guiding star has no ground to fear punishment as transgressors have reason to fear it; the sense is meant which wisdom threatens against transgressors, 1:27. He needs have no fear of it, for wisdom is a gift of God, and binds him who receives it to the giver: Jahve becomes and is henceforth his confidence. Regarding בֵּעָלָיו, which expresses the closest connection of the subject with the predicate which it introduces, see under Ps. 35:2. As here, so also at Ex. 18:4, Ps. 118:7; 146:6, the predicate is a noun with a pronominal suffix. כֶּסֶל is, as at Ps. 78:7, Job 31:24, cognate to מִבְׁטָח and מִקְׁוֶה, the object and ground of confidence. That the word in other connections may mean also fool-hardiness, Ps. 49:14, and folly, Eccles. 7:25 (cf. regarding כְׁסִיל, which in Arab. as belîd denotes the dull, in Hebr. fools, see under 1:22), it follows that it proceeds from the fundamental conception of fulness of flesh and of fat, whence arise the conceptions of dulness and slothfulness, as well as of confidence, whether confidence in self or in God (see Schultens l.c., and Wünsche’s Hosea, p. 207f.). לֶכֶד is taking, catching, as in a net or trap or pit, from לָכֶד, to catch (cf. Arab. lakida, to fasten, III, IV to hold fast); another root-meaning, in which Arab. lak connects itself with nak, to strike, to assail (whence al-lakdat, the assault against the enemy, Deutsch. Morgenl. Zeitsch. xxii. 140), is foreign to the Hebr. Regarding the suffix of מִלכֶד, Fleischer remarks: “The מִי after the verbs of guarding, preserving, like נָק, and נָר, and מָכָס מִי, properly expresses that one by those means holds or seeks to hold a person or thing back from something, like the Lat. defendere, tueri aliquem ab hostibus, a perculo.”

Sixth Introductory Mashal Discourse, 3:27–35

Exhortation to Benevolence and Rectitude

Proverbs 3:27, 28. The first illustration of neighbourly love which is recommended, is readiness to serve:

27 Refuse no manner of good to him to whom it is due When it is in thy power to do it.
28 Say not to thy neighbour, “Go, and come again, To-morrow I will give it,” whilst yet thou hast it.

Regarding the intensive plur. בֵּעָלָיו with a sing. meaning, see under 1:19. The form of expression without the suffix is not בֵּעָלָיו but בֵּעָל; and this denotes here, not him who does good (יבא as Arab. dhw or şaḥb), but him to whom the good deed is done (cf. 17:8), i.e., as here, him who is worthy of it (יבא as Arab. āhl), him who is the man for it (Jewish interp.: מִי יֵשׁ אֶל יָדִי). We must refuse nothing good (nothing either legally or morally good) to him who has a right to it (מָנ עֲלֵי as Job 22:7; 31:16), if we are in a condition to do him this good. The phrase יֶשׁ לְאֵל יָדִי, Gen. 31:29, and frequently, signifies: it is belonging to (practicable) the power of my hand, i.e., I have the power and the means of doing it. As זא signifies the haughty, insolent, but may be also used in the neuter of insolent conduct (vid., Ps. 19:14), so יָד signifies the strong, but also (although only in this phrase) strength. The Keri rejects the plur. because elsewhere the hand always follows יָד in the singular. But it rejects the plur. יָדִים! (v. 28) because the address following is directed to one person. Neither of these emendations was necessary. The usage of the language permits exceptions, notwithstanding the usus tyrannus, and the plur. יָדִים may be interpreted distributively: to thy fellows, it may be this one or that one. Hitzig also regards יָדִים as a singular; but the masc. of יָדִים, from which the ground-form of which is certainly raʾj, is יָדִין, or shorter, יָד, יָדָה. לָשׁוֹב does not mean: forth! go home again! but: go, and come again. שָׁב, to come again, to return to something, to seek it once more. The \( \text{τί τέξεται ἡ ἐπιοῦσα} \) is, as 29b, the conditional: quum sit penes te, sc. quod ei des. "To-morrow shall I give" is less a promise than a delay and putting off, because it is difficult for him to alienate himself from him who makes the request. This holding fast by one’s own is unamiable selfishness; this putting off in the fulfilment of one’s duty is a sin of omission—οὐ γὰρ οἶδός, as the LXX adds, τί τέξεται ἡ ἐπιοῦσα.

Proverbs 3:29. A second illustration of neighbouring love is harmlessness: Devise not evil against thy neighbour, While he dwelleth securely by thee.

The verb שָׂרֹב, χαράσσειν, signifies to cut into, and is used of the faber ferrarius as well as of the tignarius (Isaiah, p. 463), who with a cutting instrument (חרש, Gen. 4:22) works with metal or wood, and from his profession is called שָׂרֹב. But the word means as commonly to plough, i.e., to cut with the plough, and שָׂרֹב is used also of a ploughman, and, without any addition to it, it always has this meaning. It is then a question whether the metaphorical phrase שָׂרֹב וְרָעָה signifies to fabricate evil, cf. dolorum faber, mendacia procedere, ψεῦδον καὶ ἀπατῶν τέκτων, and the Homeric κακὰ φρεσὶ βυσσοδομεῖν (Fleischer and most others), or to plough evil (Rashi, Ewald, etc.). The Targ., Syriac, and Jerome translate שָׂרֹב, without deciding the point, by moliri; but the LXX and Graecus Venet. by tectaōn. The correctness of these renderings is not supported by Ezek. 21:36, where שָׂרֹב וְרָעָה are not such as fabricate destruction, but smiths who cause destruction; also 1 Sam. 23:9, proves nothing, and probably does not at all appertain to שָׂרֹב but to שָׂרֹב silere, in the sense of dolose moliri. On the one hand, it is to be observed from Job 4:8, Hos. 10:13, cf. Ps. 129:3, that the meaning arare malum might connect itself with שָׂרֹב וְרָעָה; and the proverb of Sirach 7:12, מָה יְרוּםִית ψεῦδος ἐπ’ ἀδελφῷ σοο, places this beyond a doubt. Therefore in this phrase, if one keeps before him a clear perception of the figure, at one time the idea of fabricating, at another that of ploughing is presented before us. The usage of the language in the case before us is more in favour of the latter than of the former. Whether שָׂרֹב וְרָעָה means to dwell together with, or as Böttcher, to sit together with, after Ps. 1:1; 26:4f., need not be a matter of dispute. It means in general a continued being together, whether as sitting, Job 2:13, or as dwelling, Judg. 17:11. To take advantage of the regardlessness of him who imparts to us his confidence is unamiable. Love is doubly owing to him who resigns himself to it because he believes in it.

Proverbs 3:30. A third illustration of the same principle is peaceableness: Contend not with a man without a cause, When he has inflicted no evil upon thee.

Instead of שָׂרֹב וְרָעָה, or as the Kerî has amended it שָׂרֹב וְרָעָה, the abbreviated form שָׂרֹב וְרָעָה or שָׂרֹב וְרָעָה (from בָּר, to be compact) means to fall upon one another, to come to hand-blow, to contend. Contending and quarrelling with a man, whoever he may be, without sufficient reason, ought to be abandoned; but there exists no such reason if he has done me no harm which I have to reproach him with. שָׂרֹב וְרָעָה with the accus. or dat. of the person signifies to bring evil upon any one, malum inferre, or also referre (Schultens), for פָּלִיל (cogn. פָּלָל) signifies to execute, to complete, accomplish,—both of the initiative and of the requital, both of the anticipative and of the recompensing action; here in the former of these senses.

Proverbs 3:31, 32. These exhortations to neighbourly love in the form of warning against whatever is opposed to it, are followed by the warning against fellowship with the loveless:

31 Be not envious toward the man of violence, And have no pleasure in all his ways.

32 For an abhorrence to Jahve is the perverse, But with the upright is His secret.
The conceptions of jealousy and envy lie in the Hebrew language (derived by Schultens from גָּנַם, Arab. ḫaṣā, intensius rubere) inseparable from each other. The LXX, which for καταθλιψία reads κατασκόμμων, brings the envy into 31b, as if the words here were συνεδριάζει, as in Ps. 37:1, 7 (there the LXX has μή παραζηλουσίων, here μήδες γίνωσκοντος). There is no reason for correcting our text in accordance with this (substituting τοκέτων for ἀκρόν as Hitzig does), because ἀκρόν would be too vague an expression for the object of the envy, while altogether agrees with it; and the contrary remark, that ἀκρόν is fundamentally no power, and resources are increased, but one who is feared, whose authority, in soul and body, is formed from a nomad life, since it denotes specially the pasture-ground; cf. 24:15 (Fleischer). While the curse of God rests in the house of the wicked (viṣṇu, tetendit aliquo) signifies the place of settlement, and may be a word borrowed from a nomad life, since it denotes the central-place of the righteous. The LXX and Jerome read תֶּבְרָק תִּבְרָק, מָרָה (a curse), like מָסָל (a highway, from מָסָל), is formed from מָסָל (a word-imitation of an interjection used in disagreeable experiences). The curse is not merely a deprivation of external goods which render life happy, and the blessing is not merely the fulness of external possessions; the central-point of the curse lies in continuous disquiet of conscience, and that of the blessing in the happy consciousness that God is with us, in soul-rest and peace which is certain of the grace and goodness of God. The poetic בְּכָל־דְּרָכָיו (from בְּכָל־דְּרָכָיו, to be firm, compressed) means properly the being pressed together, or sitting together (cf. the Arab. ṭisād, ṭisādt, a cushion, divan, corresponding in form to the Hebr. סְדָר; תְּס דָר for the purpose of private communication and conversation and conversation, and then partly the confidential intercourse, as here (cf. Job 29:4), partly the private communication, the secret (Amos 3:7). LXX, ἐν δὲ δικαίως [οὐ] συνεδριάζει. Those who are out of the way, who prefer to the simplicity of right-doing all manner of crooked ways, are contrary to God, and He may have nothing to do with them; but the right-minded He makes partakers of His most intimate intercourse, He deals with them as His friends.

Proverbs 3:33. The prosperity of the godless, far from being worthy of envy, has as its reverse side the curse: The curse of Jahve is in the house of the godless, And the dwelling of the just He blesseth.

Proverbs 3:34. His relation to men is determined by their relation to Him. As for the scorner, He scorneth them, But to the lowly He giveth grace.

Most interpreters render the verse thus: “If the scorner He (even He, in return) scorneth, so He (on the other hand) giveth grace to the lowly.” For the sequence of the words in the consequence, in which the precedence of the verb is usual, e.g., Lev. 12:5, we are referred to 23:18, cf. 24:14; but why had the poet placed the two facts in the relation of condition and consequence? The one fact is not the consequence but the reverse of the other, and accordingly they are opposed to each other in... coordinated antitheses, Ps. 18:26f. The Vav in such antitheses has generally the meaning of “and on the other hand,” e.g., Job 8:20, while the LXX, Targ., Syriac, and Jerome altogether pass over the יִנְסָא as if it did not exist. Ziegler translates: “Truly! the scorner He scorneth;” but an affirmative יִנְסָא does not exist, the asseveration after the manner of an oath is negative. Bertheau’s expedient would be more acceptable, by which he makes the whole of v. 34 the protasis to v. 35; but if this were intended, another subject would not enter into v. 35. Thus 34a and 34b are two independent parallel passages; יִנְסָא is the protasis: if as regards the scorners, i.e., if His conduct is directed to the scorners, then we can scarcely interpret the clause: shame sweeps fools away (Umbreit, Zöckler, Bertheau), for [Hiph. of וּכְסִילִים signifies (Isa. 57:14, Ezek. 21:31) “to raise up anything high and far,” not “to sweep away.” Preferable is the rendering: τοὺς δ’ ἄφρονας ὑψοῖ ἀτιμία (Graec. Venet., and similar Jerome), i.e., only to do they owe their celebrity as warning examples (Ewald), to which Oetinger compares “whose glory is in their shame,” Phil. 3:19; but קִלְלֶה is the contrary of כְּסִיל (glory, Hab. 2:16), and therefore is as much an object conception as is the latter, 35a. If it is the object, then if we take after the form of יִנְסָא, Neh. 13:21 = מְמִירִים (Hos. 4:7), it might be rendered: Yet fools exchange their shame, rather than fools away (Umbreit, Zöckler, Bertheau), for יִנְסָא is the contrary of מְמִירִים (to sweep away). Preferable is the rendering: מְמִירִים כְּסִילִים = מְמִירִים חוֹרָם (Vav. Morgenl. Zeitscr. xvi. 400), on which account it is rendered like מְמִירִים by יִנְסָא. "The plural is the singular of the predicate. This change in the number is here, however, more difficult than at 3:18, and in other places, where the plur. of the part. permits the resolution into a relative clause with quicumque, and more difficult than at 28:1, where the sing. of the predicate is introduced by attraction; wherefore מְמִירִים may be an error in transcribing for מְמִירִים (Böttcher). J. H. Michaelis (after the Targ. and Syr.) has properly rendered the clause: ‘stulti tollunt ignominiam tanquam portionem suam,” adding “quia derivato nomine dicitur.”

Proverbs 3:35. This group of the proverbs of wisdom now suitably closes with the fundamental contrast between the wise and fools: The wise shall inherit honour, But fools carry away shame.

If we take יִנְסָא as the object, then we can scarcely interpret the clause: shame sweeps fools away (Umbreit, Zöckler, Bertheau), for יִנְסָא signifies (Isa. 57:14, Ezek. 21:31) “to raise up anything high and far,” not “to sweep away.” Preferable is the rendering: τοὺς δ’ ἄφρονας ὑψοῖ ἀτιμία (Graec. Venet., and similar Jerome), i.e., only to do they owe their celebrity as warning examples (Ewald), to which Oetinger compares “whose glory is in their shame,” Phil. 3:19; but קִלְלֶה is the contrary of כְּסִיל (glory, Hab. 2:16), and therefore is as much an object conception as is the latter, 35a. If it is the object, then if we take after the form of יִנְסָא, Neh. 13:21 = מְמִירִים (Hos. 4:7), it might be rendered: Yet fools exchange their shame, rather than fools away (Umbreit, Zöckler, Bertheau), for יִנְסָא is the contrary of מְמִירִים (to sweep away). Preferable is the rendering: מְמִירִים כְּסִילִים = מְמִירִים חוֹרָם (Vav. Morgenl. Zeitscr. xvi. 400), on which account it is rendered like מְמִירִים by יִנְסָא. "The plural is the singular of the predicate. This change in the number is here, however, more difficult than at 3:18, and in other places, where the plur. of the part. permits the resolution into a relative clause with quicumque, and more difficult than at 28:1, where the sing. of the predicate is introduced by attraction; wherefore מְמִירִים may be an error in transcribing for מְמִירִים (Böttcher). J. H. Michaelis (after the Targ. and Syr.) has properly rendered the clause: ‘stulti tollunt ignominiam tanquam portionem suam,” adding “quia derivato nomine dicitur.”

The problem of translating יִנְסָא is thus resolved: It signifies a process, while מְמִירִים signifies an object. If we now compare יִנְסָא with יִנְסָא (for יִנְסָא is used as a name of God (Deutsch. Morgenl. Zeitschr. xvi. 400), on which account it is rendered like מְמִירִים by יִנְסָא. A ἀντιστάσαι (appearing above others, i.e., overbearing) is the מְמִירִים, according to the definition 21:24. the expression of the talio is generalized in ἀντιστάσαι (resists them). For כְּסִיל (from מְמִירִים, the ground-form of מְמִירִים, Arab. ‘anaw) is the lowly (ταπείνος), or he who bends himself, i.e., the gentle and humble, the patient, and the passive, he who is bowed down, the suffering; but the limits of the conception are moveable, since in מְמִירִים is presupposed the possession of fruit-virtues gained in the school of affliction.
3:9); for which reason Rashi glosses מרים by מפריש לו, and Ralbag by מגביה ל. see 14:29.

Honour is that which the wise inherit, it falls to them unsought as a possession, but fools receive shame as the offal (viz., of their foolish conduct). The fut. and part. are significantly interchanged. The life of the wise ends in glory, but fools inherit shame; the fruit of their conduct is shame and evermore shame.

Seventh Introductory Mashal Discourse, 4:1–5:6

Recollections of His Father’s House

Proverbs 4:1–5:6. The means are not yet exhausted by which the teacher of wisdom seeks to procure acceptance for his admonitions and warnings, and to give them emphasis. He has introduced the importance of his person in order that he might gain the heart of the disciple, and has presented as speaker, instead of himself, the revered person of Wisdom herself, who seeks to win, by means of warnings and promises, the souls of men.

Proverbs 4:1–4. He now confirms and explains the command to duty which he has placed at the beginning of the whole (Prov. 1:8). This he does by his own example, for he relates from the history of his own youth, to the circle of disciples by whom he sees himself surrounded, what good doctrine his parents had taught him regarding the way of life:

1. Hear, ye sons, the instruction of a father, And attend that ye may gain understanding;
2. For I give to you good doctrine, Forsake not my direction!
3. For I was a son to my father, A tender and only (son) in the sight of my mother.
4. And he instructed me, and said to me: “Let thine heart hold fast my words: Observe my commandments and live!”

That בני in the address comes here into the place of בני, hitherto used, externally denotes that in the progress of these discourses finds another application: the poet himself is so addressed by his father. Intentionally he does not say הבכם (cf. 1:8): he does not mean the father of each individual among those addressed, but himself, who is a father in his relation to them as his disciples; and as he manifests towards them fatherly love, so also he can lay claim to paternal authority over them. לדוע is rightly vocalized, not לְדע. The words do not give the object of attention, but the design, the aim. The combination of ideas in הֶעְרֶיה (cf. 1:2), which appears to us singular, loses its strangeness when we remember that מִצְוָה means, according to its etymon, deposition or reception into the conscience and life. Regarding לְדִעֲת, apprehension, reception, lesson = doctrine, vid., 1:5. לְדִיעָת is the perf., which denotes as fixed and finished what is just now being done, Gesenius, § 126, 4. וּבְּלֵדֶעַ is here synonym of משר, 1:8, and the contrary of שָמַר, 28:4. The relative factum in the perfect, designating the circumstances under which the event happened, regularly precedes the chief factum; see under Gen. 1:2f. Superficially understood, the expression 3α would be a platitude; the author means that the natural legal relation was also confirming itself as a moral one. It was a relation of many-sided love, according to 3α: he was esteemed of his mother—לָדַע, used of the reflex in the judgment, Gen. 10:9, and of loving care, Gen. 17:18, means this—as a tender child, and therefore tenderly to be protected (דר as Gen. 33:13), and as an only child, whether he were so in reality, or was only loved as if he were so. יִתְּמָך is pointed by the jussive, which with reference to number also mean unice dilectus (LXX ἁγαπάμενον); cf. Gen. 22:2, וּלְּדַע (where the LXX translate τὸν ἁγαπητὸν, without therefore having לְּדַע before them). לִבְּנֵי is maintained by all the versions; לָדַע is not a variant. The instruction of the father begins with the jussive, which is pointed יֵתְּמָך.
The LXX has incorrectly ἐπιστήμων, as if the word were ἐπιστήμη; Symmachus has correctly κατακρίτων. The imper. ἐρείδέτω, as 7:2, Gen. 20:7, more than εἰπὼν, the teacher seeks, along with the means, at the same time their object: Observe my commandments, and so become a partaker of life! The Syriac, however, adds ἄλλας σιναγγύρεις [and my instruction as the apple of thine eye], a clause borrowed from 7:2.

Proverbs 4:5, 6. The exhortation of the father now specializes itself:

5 Get wisdom, get understanding; Forget not and turn not from the words of my mouth.

6 Forsake her not, so shall she preserve thee; Love her, so shall she keep thee.

Wisdom and understanding are (5a) thought of as objects of merchandise (cf. 23:23, 3:14), like the one pearl of great price, Matt. 13:46, and the words of fatherly instruction (5b), accordingly, as offering this precious possession, or helping to the acquisition of it. One cannot indeed say correctly κατακρίτω (Ps. 102:5); and in this sense אלייתתן 마משר, but אליתתן מארפיר (Ps. 102:5); and in this sense goes before, or also the accus. object, which in the author has in his mind, may, since he continues with אליתתן, now not any longer find expression as such. That the means are the means of acquiring wisdom is shown in v. 6, where this continues to be the primary idea. The verse, consisting of only four words, ought to be divided by Mugrash; the Vav (י) in both halves of the verse introduces the apodosis imperativi (cf. e.g., 3:9f., and the apodosis prohibitivi, 3:21f.). The actual representation of wisdom, v. 5, becomes in v. 6 personal.

Proverbs 4:7–9. Referring to v. 5, the father further explains that wisdom begins with the striving after it, and that this striving is itself its fundamental beginning:

7 The beginning of wisdom is “Get wisdom,” And with [um, at the price of] all thou hast gotten get understanding.

8 Esteem her, so shall she lift thee up; She will bring thee honour if thou dost embrace her.

9 She will put on thine head a graceful garland, She will bestow upon thee a glorious diadem.

In the motto of the book, 1:7, the author would say that the fear of Jahve is that from which all wisdom takes its origin. ראשת חכמה (Prov. 1:7) is the subject, and as such it stands foremost. Here he means to say what the beginning of wisdom consists in. אלייתתן מארפיר is the subject, and stands forth as such. The predicate may also be read קנה חכמה, ἀρχὴ αὐτῆς, after 16:16. The beginning of wisdom is (consists in) the getting of wisdom; but the imperative ἐρείδέτω, which also Aq., Sym., Theod. (κατακρίνετω), Jerome, Syr., Targ. express (the LXX leaves v. 7 untranslated), is supported by 7b. Hitzig, after Mercier, De Dieu, and Döderlein, translates the verse thus: “the highest thing is wisdom: get wisdom,” which Zöckler approves of; but the reasons which determine him to this rendering are subleties: if the author had wished himself to be so understood, he ought at least to have written the words ראשת חכמה But ראשת חכמה is a genitive of relation, as is to be expected from the relativity of the idea ראשת חכמה, and his intention is to say that the beginning of wisdom consists in the proposition קנה חכמה (cf. the similar formula, Eccles. 12:13); this proposition is truly the lapis philosophorum, it contains all that is necessary in order to becoming wise. Therefore the Greek σοφία called itself modestly φιλοσοφία; for ἀρχὴ αὐτῆς the Book of Wisdom has, 6:18, ἡ ἀληθεστάτη παιδείας ἐπιθυμία. In 7b the proposition is expressed which contains the specificum helping to wisdom. The χρη denotes price: give all for wisdom (Matt. 13:46, 44); no price is too high, no sacrifice too great for it.

value or estimate highly. Böttcher interprets well: hold it high in price, raise it (as a purchaser) always higher, make offer for it upon offer. The LXX (approved by Bertheau), περιχαράκωσον αὐτήν, circumvallate it, i.e., surround it with a wall (סֹלְׁלָה)—a strange and here unsuitable figure. Hold it high, says the author, and so it will reward thee with a high pleasure, and (with chiastic transposition of the performance and the consequence) she will honour thee if (ἐάν) thou lovingly embraces her. חִבֵק is used of embracing in the pressure of tender love, as in the Canticles 2:6, 8:3; the Piel is related to the Kal as amplexari to amplecti. Wisdom exalts her admirers, honours her lovers, and makes a man’s appearance pleasant, causing him to be reverenced when he approaches. Regarding לִוְׁי ת־חֵן, vid., 1:9. מִגֵן, to deliver up (Gen. 14:20), to give up (Hos. 11:8), is connected in the free poetic manner with two accusatives, instead of with an accus. and dat. LXX has ὑπερασπίσῃ, but one does not defend himself (as with a shield) by a wreath or crown. Proverbs 4:10–12. There is no reason for the supposition that the warning which his father gave to the poet now passes over into warnings given by the poet himself (Hitzig); the admonition of the father thus far refers only in general to the endeavour after wisdom, and we are led to expect that the good doctrines which the father communicates to the son as a viaticum will be further expanded, and become more and more specific when they take a new departure.

10 Hearken, my son, and receive my sayings, So shall the years of life be increased to thee. 11 In the way of wisdom have I taught thee, Guided thee in the paths of rectitude. 12 When thou goest, thy step shall not be straitened; And if thou runnest, thou shalt not stumble.

Regarding דֶּנֶס (of דֵּנֶס) of appropriating reception and taking up in succum et sanguinem, vid., 1:3; regarding שְׁנות חֵי, years not merely of the duration of life, but of the enjoyment of life, 3:2; regarding מִמְשַׁלֶּה (מִמְשַׁלֶּה), path (track), 2:9; regarding the ב of בָּרֹחֲךָ, of the department and subject of instruction, Ps. 25:8. The perfects, v. 11, are different from מָגֵן, 2a: they refer to rules of life given at an earlier period, which are summarily repeated in this address. The way of wisdom is that which leads to wisdom (Job 28:23); the paths of rectitude, such as trace out the way which is in accordance with the rule of the good and the right. If the youth holds to this direction, he will not go on in darkness or uncertainty with anxious footsteps; and if in youthful fervour he flies along his course, he will not stumble on any unforeseen obstacle and fall. יֵצֶר is as a metaplastic fut. to רָעָשׁ or רָע, to be narrow, to straiten, formed as if from רָע. The Targ. after Aruch, לָא תְסֶנֶךְ אַראָךְ, thou shalt not need to bind together (constringere) or to hedge up thy way.

Proverbs 4:13–17. The exhortations attracting by means of promises, now become warnings fitted to alarm:

13 Hold fast to instruction, let her not go; Keep her, for she is thy life. 14 Into the path of the wicked enter not, And walk not in the way of the evil 15 Avoid it, enter not into it; Turn from it and pass away. 16 For they cannot sleep unless they do evil, And they are deprived of sleep unless they bring others to ruin. 17 For they eat the bread of wickedness, And they drink the wine of violence.

Elsewhere מְשַׁר means also self-discipline, or moral religious education, 1:3; here discipline, i.e., parental educative counsel. נָצְרֶה is the segolated fut. apoc. Hiph. (indic. נָצְרֶה from tarp, cf. the imper. Hiph. נָצְרֶה נַצְרֶה) from מְשַׁר, 1:3; regarding נָצְרֶה, נָצְרֶה is the imper. Kal (not Piel, as Aben Ezra thinks) with Dagesh dirimens; cf. the verbal substantive נָצְרֶה Ps. 141:3, with similar Dagesh, after the form (elsewhere always masc.) is here used in the fem. as the synonym of the name of wisdom: keep her (instruction), for she is thy life, i.e., the life of thy life. In v. 14 the godless (vid., on the root-idea of לָאשֶׁנֶס, under Ps. 1:1) and the habitually wicked, i.e., the vicious, stand in parallelism; and are related as entering and going on, ingressus and progressus. The verb לָאשֶׁנֶס signifies, like לָאשׁ, to be straight, even, fortunate, whence the godless (vid., on the root לָאשׁ) is partly the intensive, לָאשֶׁנֶס, a step, shows that it is derived immediately from the root-idea of a movement in a straight line. Still less justifiable is the rendering by Schultens, ne vestigia imprimas in via malorum; for the Arab. athhr is denom. of ḣarth, the primitive verb roots of which, athr, are lost.

Proverbs 4:15. On מַלָּא, avoid it (the way), (opp. מָלָא, Job 17:9; מַלָּך, Ps. 17:5), see under 1:25. מַלָּא, elsewhere (as the Arab. shatt, to be without measure, insolent) used in malam partem, has here its fundamental meaning, to go aside. מַלָּא (expressed in French by de dessus, in Ital. by di sopra) denotes: so that thou comest not to stand on it. מַלָּא means in both cases transire, but the second instance, “to go beyond (farther)” (cf. 2 Sam. 15:22, and under Hab. 1:11), coincides with “to escape, evadere.”

Proverbs 4:16. In the reason here given the perf. may stand in the conditional clauses as well as in Virgil’s Et si non aliqua nocuisses, mortuus esse: but the fut., as in Eccles. 5:11, denotes that they (the אִשְׁתָּר and the לאשׁ) cannot sleep, and are deprived of their sleep, unless they are continually doing evil and bringing others into misery; the interruption of this course of conduct, which has become to them like a second nature, would be as the interruption of their diet, which makes them ill. For the Kal לָאשׁ, which here must have the meaning of the person sinning (cf. v. 19), and would be feeble if used of the confirmed transgressors, the Keri rightly substitutes the Hiphil לָאשׁ, which occurs also 2 Chron. 25:8, there without an object, in the meaning to cause to fall, as the contrast of מַלָּא (to help).

Proverbs 4:17. The second כְּי introduces the reason of their bodily welfare being conditioned by evil-doing. If the poet meant: they live on bread which consists in wickedness, i.e., on wickedness as their bread, then in the parallel sentence he should have used the word חָמָס, the genitives are meant of the means of acquisition: they live on unrighteous gain, on bread and wine which they procure by wickedness and by all manner of violence or injustice. On the etymon חָמָס (Arab. ḥamas, durum, asperum, vehementem esse), vid., Schultens; the plur. חָמָס belongs to a more recent epoch (vid., under 2 Sam. 22:49 and Ps. 18:49). The change in the tense represents the idea that they having eaten such bread, set forth such wine, and therewith wash it down.

Proverbs 4:18, 19. The two ways that lie for his choice before the youth, are distinguished from one another as light is from darkness: 18 And the path of the just is like the brightness of the morning light, Which shines more and more till the perfect day. 19 The way of the wicked is deep darkness, They know not at what they stumble.

The Hebr. style is wont to conceal in its Vav (ו) diverse kinds of logical relations, but the Vav of 18ה may suitably stand before 19ה, where the discontinuance of this contrast of the two ways is unsuitable. The displacing of a Vav from its right position is not indeed without example (see under Ps. 16:3); but since v. 19 joins itself more easily than v. 18 to v. 17 without missing a particle, thus it is more probable that the two verses are to be transposed, than that the ה י (v. 17) is to be prefixed to ה י (v. 18).

Sinning, says v. 16, has become to the godless as a second nature, so that they cannot sleep without it; they must continually be sinning, adds v. 17, for thus and not otherwise do they gain for themselves their daily bread. With reference to this fearful self-perversion to which wickedness has become a necessity and a condition of life, the poet further says that the way of the godless is as deep darkness, as the entire absence of light: it cannot be otherwise than that they fall, but they do not at all know whereat they fall, for they do not at all know wickedness as such, and have no apprehension of the punishment which from an inward necessity it brings along with it; on the contrary, the path of the just is in constantly increasing light—the light of knowledge, and the light of true happiness which is given in and with knowledge.

On vid., under Isa. 2:22; it is מַעֲשֵׂה, σκάνδαλον, that is meant, stumbling against which (cf. Lev. 26:37) they stumble to their fall. נב, used elsewhere than in the Bible, means the morning star (Venus), (Sirach 50:4, Syr.); when used in the Bible it means the early dawn, the light of the rising sun, the morning light, 2 Sam. 23:4, Isa. 62:1, which announces itself in the morning twilight, Dan. 6:20. The light of this morning sunshine is הָלְךֵי וָאֵו, going and shining, i.e., becoming ever brighter. In the connection of the ḥīlē ו קאש it might be a question whether קאש is regarded as gerundive (Gen. 8:3, 5), or as participle (2 Sam. 16:5, Jer. 41:6), or as a participial adjective (Gen. 26:13, Judg. 4:24); in the connection of הַלְכְּכָה קאש, on the contrary, it is unquestionably the gerundive: the partic. denoting the progress joins itself either with the partic., Jon. 1:11, or with the participial adjective, 2 Sam. 3:1, 2 Chron. 17:12, or with another adjective formation, 2 Sam. 15:12, Esth. 9:4 (where קאש after קאש of other places appears to be intended as an adjective, not after 2 Sam. 5:10 as gerundive). Thus יאש, as also יאש, 1 Sam. 2:26, will be participial after the form בֵּש, being ashamed (Ges. § 72, 1); cf. בּ, Zech. 10:5, קאש, 2 Kings 16:7. “The light of truth quite corresponds to the Greek τὸ σταθηρὸν τῆς ἡμέρας ἡ σταθηρὰ μεσημβρία (as one also says τὸ σταθηρὸν τῆς νυκτός), and to the Arabic qâ’mt l-nhâr and qâ’mt l-dhîr. The figure is probably derived from the balance (cf. Lucan’s Pharsalia, lib. 9: quam cardine summo Stat librata dies): before and after midday the tongue on the balance of the day bends to the left and to the right, but at the point of midday it stands directly in the midst” (Fleischer). It is the midday time that is meant, when the clearness of the day has reached its fullest intensity,—the point between increasing and decreasing, when, as we are wont to say, the sun stands in the zenith (= Arab. samt, the point of support, i.e., the vertex). Besides Mark 4:28, there is no biblical passage which presents like these two a figure of gradual development. The progress of blissful knowledge is compared to that of the clearness of the day till it reaches its midday height, having reached to which it becomes a knowing of all in God, 28:5, 1 John 2:20.

Proverbs 4:20–22. The paternal admonition now takes a new departure:

20 My son, attend unto my words, Incline thine ear to my sayings.

21 Let them not depart from thine eyes; Keep them in the midst of thine heart.

22 For they are life to all who get possession of them, And health to their whole body.

Regarding the Hiph. קלי (for קלי), v. 21, formed after the Chaldee manner like קלי, קלי, קלי, קלי, Gesenius, § 72, 9; — Ewald, § 114, c, gives to it the meaning of “to mock,” for he interchanges it with בוש, instead of the meaning to take away, efficere ut recedat (cf. under 2:15). This supposed causative meaning it has also here: may they = may one (vid., under 2:22) not remove them from thine eyes; the object is (v. 20) the words of the paternal admonition. Hitzig, indeed, observes that “the accusative is not supplied;” but with greater right it is to be remarked that יִלְדוּ (fut. Hiph. of ילָד (fut. Kal of id.) are not one and the same, and the less so as ילָד occurs, but the masoretical and grammatical authorities (e.g., Kimchi) demand ילָד. The plur. is fundamentally an active conception, like our “finden,” to find; it means to attain, to produce, to procure, etc. מָצָא means, according as the מ is understood of the “that = ut” of the action or of the “what” of its performance, either health or the means of health; here, like רֵאָת 3:8, not with the underlying conception of sickness, but of the fluctuations connected with the bodily life of man, which make needful not only a continual strengthening of it, but also its being again and again restored. Nothing preserves soul and body in a healthier state than when we always keep before our eyes and carry in our hearts the good doctrines; they give to us true guidance on the way of life: “Godliness has the promise of this life, and of that which is to come.” 1 Tim. 4:8.

Proverbs 4:23–27. After this general preface the exhortation now becomes special:
23 Above all other things that are to be guarded, keep thy heart, For out from it life has its issues.
24 Put away from thee perverseness of mouth, And waywardness of lips put far from thee.
25 Thine eyes should look straight forward, And thine eyelids look straight to the end before thee.
26 Make even the path of thy feet, And let all thy ways be correct.
27 Turn not aside to the right and to the left; Remove thy foot from evil.

Although מֵשְׁכָּר in itself and in this connection may mean the object to be watchfully avoided (cavendi) (vid., under 2:20b); thus the usage of the language lying before us applies it, yet only as denoting the place of watching or the object observandi; so that it is not to be thus explained, with Raschi and others: before all from which one has to protect himself (ab omni re cavenda), guard thine heart; but: before all that one has to guard (praem omni re custodiendo), guard it as the most precious of possessions committed to thy trust. The heart, which according to its etymon denotes that which is substantial (Kernhafte) in man (cf. Arab. lubb, the kernel of the nut or almond), comes here into view not as the physical, but as the intellectual, and specially the ethical centrum.

Proverbs 4:24. The תוצָאות are the point of a thing, e.g., of a boundary, from which it goes forth, and the linear course proceeding from thence. If thus the author says that the תוצָאות go out from the heart, he therewith implies that the life has not only its fountain in the heart, but also that the direction which it takes is determined by the heart. Physically considered, the heart is the receptacle for the blood, in which the soul lives and rules; the pitcher at the blood-fountain which draws it and pours it forth; the chief vessel of the physically self-subsisting blood-life from which it goes forth, and into which it disembogues (Syst. der bib. Psychol. p. 232). What is said of the heart in the lower sense of corporeal vitality, is true in the higher sense of the intellectual soul-life. The Scripture names the heart also as the intellectual soul-centre of man, in its concrete, central unity, its dynamic activity, and its ethical determination on all sides. All the radiations of corporeal and of soul life concentrate there, and again unfold themselves from thence; all that is implied in the Hellenic and Hellenistic words νοῦς, λόγος, συνείδησις, νους, πνεῦμα, comes in the light of consciousness (Id. p. 251). The heart is the instrument of the thinking, willing, perceiving life of the spirit; it is the seat of the knowledge of self, of the knowledge of God, of the knowledge of our relation to God, and also of the law of God impressed on our moral nature; it is the workshop of our individual spiritual and ethical form of life brought about by self-activity,—the life in its higher and in its lower sense goes out from it, and receives from it the impulse of the direction which it takes; and how earnestly, therefore, must we feel ourselves admonished, how sacredly bound to preserve the heart in purity (Ps. 73:1), so that from this spring of life may go forth not mere seeming life and a caricature of life, but a true life well-pleasing to God! How we have to carry into execution this careful guarding of the heart, is shown in v. 24 and the golden rules which follow. Mouth and lips are meant (v. 24) as instruments of speech, and not of its utterance, but of the speech going forth from them. ῥύμαις πόλεως, distorsio, refers to the mouth (Prov. 6:12), when what it speaks is disfiguring and deforming, thus falsehood as the contrast of truth and love (Prov. 2:12); and to the lips רוח, when that which they speak turns aside from the true and the right to side-ways and by-ways. Since the Kametz of such abstracta, as well of verbs יָדִיעָה יְרָה, Ezek. 32:5, as of verbs יָדִיעָה יְרָה, Isa. 45:13, יָדִיעָה, Isa. 28:18, is elsewhere treated as unalterable, there lies in this רוח either an inconsistency of punctuation, or it is presupposed that the form רוח was vocalized like רוֹחֶה = רוֹחֶה, Num. 21:29.

Proverbs 4:25. Another rule commends gathering together (concentration) in opposition to dissipation. It is also even externally regarded worthy of consideration, as Ben-Sira, 9:5, expresses it: μη περιθλέποι ἐν ρόμαις πόλεος—purposesless, curious staring about operates upon the soul, always decentralizing and easily defiling it. But the rule does not exhaust itself in this meaning with reference to external self-discipline; it counsels also straight-forward, unserving directness toward a fixed goal (and what else can this be in such a connection than that which wisdom places before man?), without the turning aside of the eye toward that which is profitless and forbidden, and in this inward sense it falls in with the demand for a single, not squinting eye, Matt. 6:22, where Bengel explains ἀπλόος by simplex et bonus, intentus in caelum, in Deum, unice. ἁπλόος (R. וְאֶבֶן) means properly fixing, or holding fast with the look, and νῆσος (as the Arab. najad, to be clear, to be in sight, shows) the rising up which makes the object stand conspicuous before the eyes; both denote here that which lies straight before us, and presents itself to the eye looking straight out. The naming of the seeing apparatus of the eye but to its protection, is introduced by the poetical parallelism; for the eyelids, including in this word the twinkling, in their movement follow the direction of the seeing eye. On the form יָשִיר (fut. Hiph. of יֵשִיר, to be straight), defective according to the Masora, with the Jod audible, cf. Hos. 7:12, 1 Chron. 12:2, and under Gen. 8:17; the softened form יֵשִיר does not occur, we find only יֵשִיר or יֵשִיר.

Proverbs 4:26. The understanding of this rule is dependent on the right interpretation of פֶלֶס, which means neither "weigh off" (Ewald) nor "measure off" (Hitzig, Zöckler). פֶלֶס has once, Ps. 58:3, the meaning to weigh out, as the denom. of פֶלֶס, a level, a steelyard; everywhere else it means to make even, to make level, to open a road: vid., under Isa. 26:7, 40:12. The admonition thus refers not to the careful consideration which measures the way leading to the goal which one wishes to reach, but to the preparation of the way by the removal of that which prevents unhindered progress and makes the way insecure. The same meaning appears if פֶלֶס, of cognate meaning with פֶלֶס, denoted first to level, and then to make straight with the level (Fleischer). We must remove all that can become a moral hindrance or a dangerous obstacle, in our life-course, in order that we may make right steps with our feet, as the LXX (Heb. 12:13) translate. 26b is only another expression for this thought. הָכִין דְּרוּ hurd (2 Chron. 27:6) means to give a direction to his way; a right way, which keeps in and facilitates the keeping in the straight direction, is accordingly called דֶּרֶךְ נָכון; and “let all thy ways be right” (cf. Ps. 119:5, LXX κατευθυνθείσαν) will thus mean: see to it that all the ways which thou goest lead straight to the end.

Proverbs 4:27. In closest connection with the preceding, 27a cautions against by-ways and indirect courses, and 27b continues it in the briefest moral expression, which is here מְׁזִמות instead of מַרְעָרָם מֻכְרֶת הָסֵר 3:7, for the figure is derived from the way. The LXX has other four lines after this verse (27), which we have endeavoured to retranslate into the Hebrew (Intro. p. 34). They are by no means genuine; for while in 27a right and left are equivalent to by-ways, here the right and left side are distinguished as that of truth and its contrary; and while there [in LXX] the ὀρθὰς τροχιὰς ποιεῖν is required of man, here it is promised as the operation of God, which is no contradiction, but in this similarity of expression betrays poverty of style. Hitzig disputes also the genuineness of the Hebrew v. 27. But it continues explanatorily v. 26, and is related to it, yet not as a gloss, and in the general relation of 26 and 27a there comes a word, certainly not unwelcome, such as 27b, which impresses the moral stamp on these thoughts.

That with v. 27 the admonition of his father, which the poet, placing himself back into the period of his youth, reproduces, is not yet concluded, the resumption of the address בְּנִי 5:1, makes evident; while on the other hand the address בְּנִים in 5:7 shows that at that point there is advance made from the recollections of his father’s house to conclusions therefrom, for the circle of young men by whom the poet conceives himself to be surrounded. That in 5:7ff. a subject of the warning with which the seventh address closes is retained and further prosecuted, does not in the connection of all these addresses contradict the opinion that with 5:7 a new address begins. But the opinion that the warning against adultery does not agree (Zöckler) with the designation יָרְדָן, 4:3, given to him to whom it is addressed, is refuted by 1 Chron. 22:5, 2 Chron. 13:7.

Proverbs 5:1–6. Here a fourth rule of life follows the three already given, 4:24, 25, 26–27:

1. My son, attend unto my wisdom, and incline thine ear to my prudence,
2. To observe discretion, and that thy lips preserve knowledge.
3. For the lips of the adulteress distil honey, and smoother than oil is her mouth;
4. But her end is bitter like wormwood, sharper than a two-edged sword.
5. Her feet go down to death, her steps cleave to Hades.
6. She is far removed from entering the way of life, her steps wander without her observing it.

Wisdom and understanding increase with the age of those who earnestly seek after them. It is the father of the youth who here requests a willing ear to his wisdom of life, gained in the way of many years’ experience and observation. In v. 2 the inf. of the object is continued in the finitum, as in 2:2, 8. מְׁזִמות (vid., on its etymon under 1:4) are plans, projects, designs, for the most part in a bad sense, intrigues and artifices (vid., 24:8), but also used of well-considered resolutions toward what is good, and hence of the purposes of God, Jer. 23:20. This noble sense of the word מְׁזִימה, with its plur., is peculiar to the introductory portion (1–9) of the Book of Proverbs. The plur. means here and at 8:12 (placing itself with חָכְמוֹת and תְׁבוּנות, vid., p. 48) the reflection and deliberation which is the presupposition of well-considered action, and שְׁמֹר is thus not otherwise than at 19:8, and everywhere so meant, where it has that which is obligatory as its object: the youth is summoned to careful observation and persevering exemplification of the quidquid.
agas, prudenter agas et respice finem. In 2b the Rebia Mugrash forbids the genitive connection of the two words (ךְחָנ nafath, Arab. hanak, imbuere, e.g., after the manner of Beduins, the mouth of the newly-born infant with date-honey), comes into view here, as at 8:7, etc., as the instrument of speech: smoother than oil (cf. Ps. 55:22), it shows itself when it gives forth amiable, gentle, impressive words (Prov. 2:16, 6:24); also our "schmeicheln" (= to flatter, caress) is equivalent to to make smooth and fair; in the language of weavers it means to smooth the warp.

Proverbs 5:4, 5. In verse 4 the reverse of the sweet and smooth external is placed opposite to the attraction of the seducer, by whose influence the inconsiderate permits himself to be carried away: her end, i.e., the last that is experienced of her, the final consequence of intercourse with her (cf. 23:32), is bitter as wormwood, sharp as a two-edged sword. The O.T. language regards bitterness and poison as related both in meaning and in reality; the word לֵשְׁנָה (Aq. ἄψινθον = wormwood) means in Arab. the curse. For חֶרֶב פִּיפִיות חֶרֶב פִּיפִיות a Grace Notes study of incorporeal shadow is equivalent to, they strike against the honeyside as a punishment, with which is associated the idea of divine wrath. In Hebr. this descendentes ad mortem is expressed by the genitive of connection; מַחְסָר, 1:12; elsewhere the author uses מַחְסָר, 7:27, 2:18. Death, מַחְסָר (so named from the stretching of the corpse after the stiffness of death), denotes the condition of departure from this side as a punishment, with which is associated the idea of divine wrath. In שָא ל, from שָא ל, R. שָא ל, שָא ל, vid., under Isa. 5:14), lie the ideas of the grave as a place of corruption, and of the under-world as the place of incorporeal shadow-life. Her steps hold fast to Hades and go straight to it; similar to this is the Arab. expression, _hdha āldr bāykhdh āly ālbld_: this way leads straight forward to the town (Fl.).

Proverbs 5:6. If we try to connect the clause beginning with פֶן with 5b as its principal sentence: she goes straight to the abyss, so that by no means does she ever tread the way of life (thus e.g., Schultens), or better, with 6b: never more to walk in the way of life, her paths fluctuate hither and thither (as Gr. Venet. and Kamphausen in Bunsen’s Bibelwerk, after Bertheau and Ewald, translate); then in the former case more than in the latter the difference of the subject opposes itself, and in the latter, in addition, the לֹא תֵדָע, only disturbing in this negative clause. Also by the arrangement of the words, 6a appears as an independent thought. But with Jewish expositors (Rashi, Aben-Ezra, Ralbag, Malbim, etc.) to interpret תְּפֵלָס, after the Talmud (b. Moëd katan 9a) and Midrash, as an address is impracticable; the warning: do not weigh the path of life, affords no meaning suitable to this connection—for we must, with Cartwright and J. H. Michaelis, regard 6a as the antecedent to 6b: _ne forte semitam vitae ad sequendum eligas, te per varios deceptionum meandros abritip ut non noveris, ubi locorum sis_; but then the continuation of the address is to be expected in 6b. No, the subject to תְּפֵלָס is the adulteress, and פֶן is an intensified לֹא. Thus the LXX, Jerome, Syr., Targ., Luther, Geier, Nolde, and among Jewish interpreters Heidenheim, who first broke with the tradition sanctioned by the Talmud and the Midrash, for he interpreted 6a as a negative clause spoken in the tone of a question. But פֶן is not suitable for a question, but for a call. Accordingly, Böttcher explains: _viam vitae ne illa complanare studeat!_ (כֶּפֶן in the meaning _complanando operam dare_). But the adulteress as such, and the striving to come to the way of life, stand in contradiction: an effort to return must be meant, which, because the power of sin over her is too great, fails; but the words do not denote that, they affirm the direct contrary, viz., that it does not happen to the adulteress ever to walk in the way of life. As in the warning the independent לֹא may be equivalent to _cave ne_ (Job 32:13), so also in the declaration it may be equivalent to _absit ut_, for פֶן (from פָנָה, after the forms בֵן = Arab. _banj_., פָנָה = Arab. _'asj_) means turning away, removal. Thus: Far from taking the course of the way of life (which has life as its goal and reward)—for פֵלֶס, to open, to open a road (Ps. 78:50), has here the meaning of the open road itself—much rather do her steps wilfully stagger (Jer. 14:10) hither and thither, they go without order and without aim, at one time hither, at another time thither, without her observing it; i.e., without her being concerned at this, that she thereby runs into the danger of falling headlong into the yawning abyss. The unconsciousness which the clause לֹא תֵדָע expresses, has as its object not the falling (Ps. 35:8), of which there is here nothing directly said, but just this staggering, vacillation, the danger of which she does not watch against. לֹא has Mercha under the ל with _Zinnorith_ preceding; it is _Milra_ [an oxytone] (Michlol 111b); the punctuation varies in the accentuations of the form without evident reason: Olsh. § 233, p. 285. The old Jewish interpreters (and recently also Malbim) here, as also at 2:16, by the לֹא [strange woman] understand heresy (_מינות_), or the philosophy that is hostile to revelation; the ancient Christian interpreters understood by it folly (Origen), or sensuality (Procopius), or heresy (Olympiodorus), or false doctrine (Polychronios). The LXX, which translates, v. 5, וֹרִית תֵּלֶס by τῆς ἀφροσύνης οἱ πόδες, looks toward this allegorical interpretation. But this is unnecessary, and it is proved to be false from 5:15–20, where the לֹא is contrasted with the married wife.
Eighth Introductory Mashal Discourse, 5:7–23

Warning Against Adultery and Commendation of Marriage

Proverbs 5:7–23. With 5:1–6, which like 4:20 commences it once more, the seventh discourse is brought to a conclusion. The address בְׁנִי is three times repeated in similar connections, 4:10, 20, 5:1. There is no reason for breaking off the fatherly admonition (introduced with the words, “And he said to me,” 4:4), which was addressed to the author in the period of his youth, earlier than here, where the author again resumes the שִמְׁעוּ בָנִים with which he had begun (Prov. 4:1) this seventh narrative address. That after the father has ceased speaking he does not express himself in a rounded manner, may be taken as a sign that toward the end he had become more and more unmindful of the rôle of the reporter, if this מֵעָלֶיהָ following, with which he realizes for his circle of hearers the admonition which had been in part addressed to himself, does not prove the contrary.

Proverbs 5:7–11. The eighth discourse springs out of the conclusion of the seventh, and connects itself by its reflective מֵעָלֶיהָ so closely with it that it appears as its continuation; but the new beginning and its contents included in it, referring only to social life, secures its relative independence. The poet derives the warning against intercourse with the adulteress from the preceding discourse, and grounds it on the destructive consequences.

7 And now, ye sons, hearken unto me, And depart not from the words of my mouth.
8 Hold thy path far from her neighbourhood, And come not to the door of her house!
9 That thou mayest not give the freshness of thy youth to another, Nor thy years to the cruel one;
10 That strangers may not sate themselves with thy possessions, And the fruit of thy toils come into the house of a stranger, 11 And thou groanest at the end, When thy flesh and thy body are consumed.

Neither here nor in the further stages of this discourse is there any reference to the criminal punishment inflicted on the adulterer, which, according to Lev. 20:10, consisted in death, according to Ezek. 16:40, cf. John 8:5, in stoning, and according to a later traditional law, in strangulation (חֶנֶק). Ewald finds in v. 14 a play on this punishment of adultery prescribed by law, and reads from v. 9f. that the adulterer who is caught by the injured husband was reduced to the state of a slave, and was usually deprived of his manhood. But that any one should find pleasure in making the destroyer of his wife his slave is a far-fetched idea, and neither the law nor the history of Israel contains any evidence for this punishment by slavery or the mutilation of the adulterer, for which Ewald refers to Grimm’s Deutsche Rechtsaltertümer. The figure which is here sketched by the poet is very different. He who goes into the net of the wanton woman loses his health and his goods. She stands not alone, but has her party with her, who wholly plunder the simpleton who goes into her trap. Nowhere is there any reference to the husband of the adulteress. The poet does not at all think on a married woman. And the word chosen directs our attention rather to a foreigner than to an Israelitish woman, although the author may look upon harlotry as such as heathenish rather than Israelitish, and designate it accordingly. The party of those who make prostitutes of themselves consists of their relations and their older favourites, the companions of their gain, who being in league with her exhaust the life-strength and the resources of the befuddled youth (Fl.). This discourse begins with מֵעָלֶיה, for it is connected by this concluding application (cf. 7:24) with the preceding.

Proverbs 5:8, 9. In verse 8, one must think on such as make a gain of their impurity. Schultens remarks, with reference to Ezek. 23:18, crebrum in rescisso omni commercio: מַעְנֵּשׁ denotes the departure, and מֵעָלֶיה the nearness, from which one must remove himself to a distance. Regarding מַעְנֵּשׁ (v. 9), which primarily, like our Pracht (bracht from brechen = to break) [pomp, magnificence], appears to mean fulness of sound, and then fulness of splendour, see under Job 39:20; here there is a reference to the freshness or the bloom of youth, as well as the years, against the sacrifice of which the warning is addressed—in a pregnant sense they are the fairest years, the years of youthful fulness of strength. Along with the singulare-tantum (vid., Jer. 50:42) has a collective sense; regarding the root-meaning, vid., under Isa. 13:9. It is the adj. relat. of אכזר, which is formed not from נacre, but from an unknown verb נזר. The ancients referred it to death and the devil; but the אכזר belongs to the covetous society, which impels ever anew to sin, which is their profit, him who has once fallen into it, and thus brings bodily ruin upon him; they are the people who stand far aloof from this their sacrifice, and among them are barbarous, rude, inexorably cruel monsters (Graecus Venetus, το ἀπανθρώπως), who rest not till their victim is laid prostrate on the ground and ruined both bodily and financially.

Proverbs 5:10. This other side of the ruin v. 10 presents as an image of terror. For רבד refers to the person in his stately appearance, but דק to his possessions in money and goods; for this word, as well as in the strikingly similar passage Hos. 7:9, is used as the synonym of מים (Gen. 34:29, etc.), in the sense of ability, estate. This meaning is probably mediated by means of a metonymy, as Gen. 4:12, Job 31:39, where the idea of the capability of producing is passed over into that of the produce conformable to it; so here the idea of work-power passes over into that of the gain resulting therefrom. תּוֹלָדְךָ (and thy toils) is not, like בָּשָׂר, the accusative governed by מַאֲכַל עַבְּדָךְ; the carrying over of this verb disturbs the parallelism, and the statement in the passage besides does not accord therewith, which, interpreted as a virtual predicate, presents 10b as an independent prohibitive clause: neve sint labores tui in domo peregrini, not peregrina; at least according to the usage of the language is always personal, so that בָּשָׂר (cf. Lam. 5:2), like מַעֲלָה, מַעֲלֶה נָכְרִי, Zeph. 1:8, is to be explained after כֹּחֶךָ, יִשְׁבְׁע, וּעֲצָבֶי, Job 31:39, where the produce conformable to the capability of producing is passed over into that of the gain resulting therefrom. So here the idea of work passes over into that of the produce conformable to it; as if one had said: All thy tears and thy weeping help thee nothing (Fl.); he loves this heaping together of synonyms, as we have shown at p. 24. When the blood-relation of any one is called שֵׂאִיר, Lev. 18:6, 25:49, these two synonyms show themselves in subordination, as here in close relation. שֵׂאִיר appears to be closely connected with שֵׂאִיר, muscles and sinews, and with שֹׂר, the umbilical cord, and thus to denote the flesh with respect to its muscular nature adhering to the bones (Mic. 3:2), as כֹּח denotes... it with respect to its tangible outside clothed with skin (vid., under Isaiah, p. 418).

Proverbs 5:12–14. The poet now tells those whom he warns to hear how the voluptuary, looking back on his life-course, passes sentence against himself.

12 And thou sayest, "Why have I then hated correction, and my heart despised instruction!"
13 And I have not listened to the voice of my teachers, nor lent mine ear to my instructors.
14 I had almost fallen into every vice in the midst of the assembly and the congregation!"

The question 12a (here more an exclamation than a question) is the combination of two: How has it become possible for me? How could it ever come to it that … Thus also one ways in

Proverbs 5:13. שָמַע בְּ וְּרָאָה ב signifies to cleave to anything in hearing, as רָאָה ב is to do so in seeing; רָאָה ב yet more closely corresponds with the classic ἐπακούειν, obedire, e.g., Ps. 81:9; שָמַע בְּרָאָה ב is the usual phrase for "hearken!"

Proverbs 5:14. כִּמְעַ ט with the perf. following is equivalent to: it wanted but a little that this or that should happen, e.g., Gen. 26:10. It is now for the most part thus explained: it wanted but a little, and led astray by that wicked companionship I would have been drawn away into crime, for which I would then have been subjected to open punishment (Fl.). Ewald understands יֵעַ directly of punishment in its extreme form, stoning; and Hitzig explains כִּמְעַ ט by “the totality of evil,” in so far as the disgraceful death of the criminal comprehends in it all other evils that are less. But כִּמְעַ ט means, either, into every evil, misfortune, or into every wickedness; and since יֵעַ, in contradistinction to ל (Hitzig compares Ezek. 36:5), is a conception of a species, then the meaning is equivalent to in omni genere mali. The reference to the death-punishment of the adulteress is excluded thereby, though it cannot be denied that it might be thought of at the same time, if he who too late comes to consider his ways were distinctly designated in the preceding statements as an adulterer. But it is on the whole a question whether כִּמְעַ ט is meant of the evil which follows sin as its consequence. The usage of the language permits this, cf. 2 Sam. 16:8, Ex. 5:19, 1 Chron. 7:23, Ps. 10:6, but no less the reference to that which is morally bad, cf. Ex. 32:22 (where Keil rightly compares with 1 John 5:19); and אָדָועו כְּכַל also (for which in the first case one expected כְּכַל־רָע, I fell into, vid., 13:17, 17:20, 28:14) is even more favourable to the latter reference. Also הבורר קֶהֶל (cf. on the heaping together of synonyms under 11b), this paraphrase of the palam ac publice, with its יָעּדוּ (cf. Ps. 111:1, 2 Chron. 20:14), looks rather to a heightening of the moral self-accusation. He found himself in all wickedness, living and moving therein in the midst of the congregation, and thereby giving offence to it, for he took part in the external worship and in the practices of the congregation, branding himself thereby as a hypocrite. That by the one name the congregation is meant in its civil aspect, and by the other in its ecclesiastical aspect, is not to be supposed: in the congregation of the people of the revealed law, the political and the religious sides are not so distinguished. It is called without distinction קָהָל and עֵדָה (from יָעָד) —the placing of them together serves thus only to strengthen the conception.

Proverbs 5:15–17. The commendation of true conjugal love in the form of an invitation to a participation in it, is now presented along with the warning against non-conjugal intercourse, heightened by a reference to its evil consequences.

16 Shall thy streams flow abroad, The waterbrooks in the streets!
17 Let them belong to thyself alone, And not to strangers with thee.

One drinks water to quench his thirst; here drinking is a figure of the satisfaction of conjugal love, of which Paul says, 1 Cor. 7:9, κρεῖσσόν ἐστι γαμῆσαι ὴ πυροῦσθαι τὸ ἑαυτοῦ σκεῦος, and this comes into view here, in conformity with the prevailing character of the O.T., only as a created inborn natural impulse, without reference to the poisoning of it by sin, which also within the sphere of married life makes government, moderation, and restraint a duty. Warning against this degeneracy of the natural impulse to the πάθος ἐπιθυμίας authorized within divinely prescribed limits, the apostle calls the wife of any one to ἐναυοῦ σκέδος (cf. 1 Pet. 3:7). So here the wife, who is his by covenant (Prov. 2:17), is called "cistern" (בְׂאֵר) and "fountain" (בָּשָׂר) of the husband to whom she is married. The figure corresponds to the sexual nature of the wife, the expression for which is נְׁקֵבָה; but Isa. 51:1 holds to the natural side of the figure, for according to it the wife is a pit, and the children are brought out of it into the light of day. Aben-Ezra on Lev. 11:36 rightly distinguishes between בּאר and בָּשָׂר: the former catches the rain, the latter wells out from within. In the former, as Rashi in Erubin ii. 4 remarks, there are מַשְׁיִים, מְיָם מְכַנְסָים, in the latter מִתי and מְיָם מְכַנְסָים.

The post-biblical Hebrew observes this distinction less closely (vid., Kimchi’s Book of Roots), but the biblical throughout; so far the Kerî, Jer. 6:7, rightly changes בּאר into the form בָּשָׂר, corresponding to the Arab. byar. Therefore בָּשָׂר is the cistern, for the making of which נְׁקֵבָה, Jer. 2:13, and the well, for the formation of which דבר, Gen. 21:30, and דבר, 26:25, are the respective words usually employed (vid., Malbim, Sifra 117b). The poet shows that he also is aware of this distinction, for he calls the water which one drinks from the בּאר by the name מִתי, but on the other hand that out of the בָּשָׂר by the name מִתּוֹך, running waters, fluenta; by this we are at once reminded of Cant. 4:15, cf. 12. The Sohar offers only stagnant water (according to the Sohar, the בּאר has no water of its own, but only that which is received into it), although coming down into it from above; but the בָּשָׂר has living water, which wells up out of its interior (מצוק, 15b, intentionally for the mere בָּשָׂר), and is fresh as the streams from Lebanon (בער, properly labi, to run down, cf. אָזֵר, placide ire, and generally ire; Arab. zâl, loco cedere, desinere; Arab. zll, IV, to cause to glide back, deglutire, of the gourmand). What a valuable possession a well of water is for nomads the history of the patriarchs makes evident, and a cistern is one of the most valuable possessions belonging to every well-furnished house. The figure of the cistern is here surpassed by that of the fountain, but both refer to the seeking and finding satisfaction (cf. the opposite passage, 23:27) with the wife, and that, as the expressive possessive suffixes denote, with his legitimate wife.

Proverbs 5:16. Here we meet with two other synonyms standing in a similar relation of progression. As מִתי denotes the fountain as to its point of outflow, so מַמְנִין (n. loci) means water flowing above on the surface, which in its course increases and divides itself into several courses; such a brook is called, with reference to the water dividing itself from the point of outflow, or to the way in which it divides, פֶּלֶג (from פֶּלֶג, Job 38:25). Arab. falaj (as also the Ethiop.) or fajl, which is explained by nahar ṣaghayr (Fl). We cannot in this double figure think of any reference to the generative power in the sperma; similar figures are the waters of Judah, Isa. 48:1, and the waters of Israel flowing.

is the parallel word to מָּסֶה, cf. also the proper name מַעֲה (from מַעָה, מַעֲה, diffluere),

Arab. sajal (whence sajl = סִּיל, situla), which is set aside by the Keri. Many interpreters have by
and recently Hitzig, Zöckler, Kamphausen, and Lagarde, as also Cappellus, as original: the three Göttingen theologians (Ewald, Bertheau, and Elster) accordingly make the emendation אָלֵיִיוּצֵי. But that מַעֲה of the LXX was not added till a later period; the original expression, which the Syro-Hexapli. authorizes, was שִׁפְּלֵי without מַעֲה, as also in the version of Aquila, דַּיוֹקְרָפְּלָזָא with מַעֲה (vid., Field). The Hebrew text also does not need מַעֲה. Clericus, and recently Hitzig, Zöckler, Kamphausen, avoid this remedy, for they understand this verse interrogatively—an expedient which is for the most part and also here unavailing; for why should not the author have written אֶּת מַעֲה? Schultens rightly remarks: nec negationi nec interrogatio nullus hic locus, for (with Fleischer and von Hofmann, Schriftbeweis, ii. 2, 402) he regards v. 16 as a conclusion: tunc exundabunt; so that he strengthens the summons of v. 15 by the promise of numerous descendants from unviolated marriage. But to be so understood, the author ought to have written אֶת מַעֲה. So, according to the text, מַעֲה as jussive continues the imper. שִׁפְּלֵי (15a), and the full meaning according to the connection is this:
that within the marriage relation the generative power shall act freely and unrestrained.

thinks of that which is without as the contrast of the house, the city, or the country. Here можно is the contrast of the person, and thus that which figurative expressions are the description of the libero flumine, and the contrast, that restriction of self which the marriage relation, according to 1 Cor. 7:3–5, condemns.

Proverbs 5:17. That such matters as there are thought of, is manifest from this verse. As יִהְיוּ comprehends with the cause (sperma) the effect (posterity), so, in v. 16, with the effusio roboris virilis is connected the idea of the beginnings of life. For the subjects of v. 17 are the effusiones seminis named in v. 16. These in their effects (v. 17) may belong to thee alone, viz., to thee alone (לְּךָ, properly in thy separateness) within thy married relation, not, as thou hast fellowship with other women, to different family circles, Aben-Ezra rightly regards as the subject, for he glosses thus:

Like מָקוּר, מַקְוּ, מַקְוָה and מַקָּר is also a figure of the wife; the root-word is מַקָּר, מַקָּר, מַקְוָה, מַקְוָה, מַקְוָה, מַקְוָה the meanings of which, to dig and make round, come together in the primary conception of the round digging out or boring out, not מַקָּר = קָרָה, but the Hiph. of which means (Jer. 6:7) to well out cold (water). It is the fountain of the birth that is meant (cf. מַקָּר of the female מַקְוָה, מַקְוָה, e.g., Lev. 20:18), not the procreation (LXX, ἐκ σῶν φυλαξ, viz., φυλάξ γυναικί; the blessing wished for by him is the blessing of children, which so much the more distinctly denotes if מַקָּר, Arab. barak, means to spread out, and thus to cause a spreading out. The מַקָּר, 18b, explains itself from the idea of drawing (water), given with the figure of a fountain; the word מַקָּר found in certain codices is, on the contrary, prosaic (FL). Whilst מַקָּר is found elsewhere (Eccles. 2:20, 2 Chron. 20:27) as meaning almost the same as מַקָּר; the former means rejoicing from some place, the latter in something. In the genitive connection, "wife of thy youth" (cf. 2:17), both of these significations lie: thy youthful wife, and she who was chosen by thee in thy youth, according as we refer the suffix to the whole idea or only to the second member of the chain of words.

Proverbs 5:19. The subject, 19a, set forth as a theme courts love for her who is to be loved, for she presents herself as lovely. מַקְוָה is the female of the stag, which may derive its name מַקְוָה from the weapon-power of its horns, and מַקְוָה (from מַקְוָה, Arab. wa’al, to climb), that of the wild-goat (רָבָע); and thus properly, not the gazelle, which is called מַקְוָה account on its elegance, but the chamois. These animals are commonly used in Semitic poetry as figures of female beauty on account of the delicate beauty of their limbs and their sprightly black eyes. מַקְוָה signifies always sensual love, and is interchanged in this erotic meaning (Prov. 7:18) with רָבָע. In 19b the predicate follows the subject. The Graec. Venet. translates as if the word were רָבָע, רָבָע, and the Syr. as if it were רָבָע, רָבָע, but Aquila rightly translates רָבָע αὐτής. As רָבָע is derived (vid., Curtius, Griech. Etymologie, Nr. 307) from הדָּה, to suck (causative, with anu, to put to sucking), so רָבָע, Arab. thady (commonly in dual thadjein), from דָּה, Arab. thdy, rigare, after which also the verb רָבָע is chosen: she may plentifully give thee to drink; figuratively equivalent to, refresh or (what the Aram. רָבָע precisely means) fascinate thee, satisfy thee with love. רָבָע also is an erotic word, which besides in this place is found only in Ezekiel (Ezek. 23:3, 8, 21). The LXX obliterates the strong sensual colouring of this line. In 19c it changes רָבָע into מַקָּר, פָּלַלָם הָיָה, πολλοστος κτης, perhaps also because the former appeared to be too sensual. Moses ha-Darshan (in Rashi) proposes to explain it after the Arab. syj, to cover, to cast over, to come over anything (III = שָדָה, to employ oneself with something): engage thyself with her love, i.e., be always devoted to her in love. And Immanuel himself, the author of a Hebrew Divan expatiating with unparalleled freedom in erotic representations, remarks, while he rightly understands the fascination of love: וּלְהָפַתַּת וַתַּתְּמַר גָּפֶה מַלְאָךְ יְרָעְבֵיהּ, he calls the husband’s continual caressing of the wife an error. But this moral side-glance lies here at a distance from the poet. He speaks here of a morally permissible love-ecstasy, or rather, since מַקָּר excludes that which is extraordinary, of an intensity of love connected with the feeling of superabundant happiness. מַקָּר properly signifies to err from the way, therefore figuratively, with ב of a matter, like delirare ea, to be wholly captivated by her, so that one is no longer in his own power, can no longer restrain himself—the usual word for the intoxication of love and of wine, 20:1 (Fl.).

Proverbs 5:20. The answer to the Why? in this verse is: no reasonable cause,—only beastly sensuality only flagitious blindness can mislead thee. The ב of בְׁזָרָה is, as 19b and Isa. 28:7, that of the object through which one is betrayed into intoxication. חֵק (thus, according to the Masora, four times in the O.T. for חֵיק) properly means an incision or deepening, as Arab. ḥujr (from ḥjr, cohibere), the front of the body, the part between the arms or the female breasts, thus the bosom, Isa. 40:11 (with the swelling part of the clothing, sinus vestis, which the Arabs call jayb), and the lap; הב (as 4:8), to embrace, corresponds here more closely with the former of these meanings; also elsewhere the wife of any one is called אשת חיקו, as she who rests on his breast. The ancients, also J. H. Michaelis, interpret vv. 15–20 allegorically, but without thereby removing sensual traces from the elevated N.T. consciousness of pollution, striving against all that is fleshly; for the castum cum Sapientia conjugium would still be always represented under the figure of husband and wife dwelling together. Besides, though הר chủ might be, as the contrast of הר chủ, the personified lust of the world and of the flesh, yet 19a is certainly not the הר chủ, but a woman composed of flesh and blood. Thus the poet means the married life, not in a figurative sense, but in its reality—he designedly describes it thus attractively and purely, because it bears in itself the preservative against promiscuous fleshly lust.

Proverbs 5:21–23. That the intercourse of the sexes out of the married relationship is the commencement of the ruin of a fool is now proved.

21 For the ways of every one are before the eyes of Jahve, And all his paths He marketh out.

22 His own sins lay hold of him, the evil-doer, And in the bands of his sins is he held fast.

23 He dies for the want of correction, And in the fulness of his folly he staggers to ruin.

It is unnecessary to interpret נֹכ ח as an adverbial accusative: straight before Jahve's eyes; it may be the nominative of the predicate; the ways of man (for שָא is here an individual, whether man or woman) are an object (properly, fixing) of the eyes of Jahve. With this the thought would suitably connect itself: et onmes orbitas ejus ad amussim examinat; but פִלֵס, as the denom. of פָלֵס, Ps. 58:3, is not connected with all the places where the verb is united with the obj. of the way, and Ps. 78:50 shows that it has there the meaning to break through, to open a way (from פל, to split, cf. מְפֻּלָש, opened, accessible, from פל, Syriac plâs, perfodere, fodiendo viam, aditum sibi aperire). The opening of the way is here not, as at Isa. 26:7, conceived of as the setting aside of the hindrances in the way of him who walks, but generally as making walking in the way possible: man can take no step in any direction without God; and that not only does not exempt him from moral responsibility, but the consciousness of this is rather for the first time rightly quickened by the consciousness of being encompassed on every side by the knowledge and the power of God. The dissuasion of v. 20 is thus in v. 21 grounded in the fact, that man at every stage and step of his journey is observed and encompassed by God: it is impossible for him to escape from the knowledge of God or from dependence on Him. Thus opening all the paths of man, He has also appointed to the way of sin the punishment with which it corrects itself: "his sins lay hold of him, the evil-doer."

The suffix רג- does not refer to שָא of v. 21, where every one without exception and without distinction is meant, but it relates to the obj. following, the evil-doer, namely, as the explanatory permutative annexed to the “him” according to the scheme, Ex. 2:6; the permutative is distinguished from the apposition by this, that the latter is a forethought explanation which heightens the understanding of the subject, while the former is an explanation afterwards brought in which guards against a misunderstanding. The same construction, 14:13b, belonging to the syntaxis ornata in the old Hebrew, has become common in the Aramaic and in the modern Hebrew. Instead of אָדוֹן (v. 22), the poet uses poetically הָבֹּלֶת, the interposed יִכְלָבֵית may belong to the emphatic ground-form קְלֹבֻּת, but is epenthetif one compares forms such as קְלֹבֻּת (R. כּלֶב), Num. 23:13 (cf. p. 52). The name of the subject of chastity till the twelfth discourse, 6:1–5. Between the eight and the twelfth three other groups of moral proverbs are introduced, which are neither connected with one another nor with the eight discourses which precede them. Must we therefore, with Hitzig and Kamphausen, hold 6:1–5, 6–11, 12–19, to be an interpolation here introduced from some other place? We find here the fondness for synonyms and words similar in sound peculiar to the author of the introduction, 6:2, 3, 5, and meet with the same interchange of words, 6:4, cf. 4:25, and figurative expressions, 6:18, cf. 3:29 (ῥήσις), word-formations, 6:10 (ῥήμα), cf. 3:8 (ῥήμα), ideas, 6:12, cf. 4:27, 6:14, cf. 2:12, 13 (ἐφημερία), and constructions, 6:12 (ἐφημερία), cf. 2:7 (كسبت الفه), ἐξαρχία, like delineations of character, 6:18b, cf. 1:16, and threatenings, 6:15, cf. 1:26f., 3:25—as many marks of identity of the authorship as could be expected. And what had moved the interpolators to introduce the three groups of proverbs, 6:1–5, 6–11, 12–19, just here? In vain does Hitzig seek to extract from Prov. 5 certain words and ideas common to it with Prov. 6 which shall make it clear that the groups of proverbs in question are here an interpolation; the points of contrast are not prominent. If now the poet has already in 3:1–18, but still more in 3:27f., connected together all manner of rules of life without any close or visible connection, it is not strange if at 6:1, where besides the בְּמֵד denotes the new section, he breaks off to a new subject out of the fulness of his matter; and the connection wanting between 6:1 and 5:23, as well as between 3:27 and 3:26, does not therefore warrant critical suspicion.

1. My son, if thou hast become surety for thy neighbour, Hast given thy hand for another:

2. Thou art entangled in the words of thy mouth, Ensnared in the words of thy mouth.

3. Do this then, my son, and free thyself— For thou hast come under the power of thy neighbour— Go, instantly entreat and importune thy neighbour.
4 Give no sleep to thine eyes, And no slumber to thine eyelids;
5 Tear thyself free like a gazelle from his hand, And as a bird from the hand of the fowler.

The chief question here is, whether ל afterward introduces him for whom or with whom one becomes surety. Elsewhere רע (R. כ, whence also א, nectere, to twist close and compact) with the accusative of the person means to become surety for any one, to represent him as a surety, 11:15, 20:16 (Prov. 27:13), Gen. 43:9, 44:33 (as with the accusative of the matter, to pledge anything, to deposit it as a pledge, Jer. 30:21, Neh. 5:3, = Arab. wad’a, Job 17:3); and to become surety with any one is expressed, 17:18, by רע תַּלֵּפָה. The phrase ל is not elsewhere met with, and is thus questionable. If we look to v. 3, the רַי (レイ) mentioned there cannot possibly be the creditor with whom one has become surety, for so impetuous and urgent an application to him would be both purposeless and unbecoming. But if he is meant for whom one has become surety, then certainly לְ is also to be understood of the same person, and ל is thus dat. commodi; similar to this is the Targumic רַי, suretyship for any one, 17:18, 22:26. But is the ל, 1b, distinguished from רע, the stranger with whom one has become surety? The parallels 11:15, 20:16, where ל denotes the person whom one represents, show that in both lines one and the same person is meant; ל is in the Proverbs equivalent to א, each different from the person in the discourse, 5:17, 27:2, —thus, like רע, denotes not the friend, but generally him to whom one stands in any kind of relation, even a very external one, in a word, the fellow-creatures or neighbours, 24:28 (cf. the Arab. sahbk and karynk, which are used as vaguely and superficially). It is further a question, whether we have to explain 1b: if thou hast given thine hand to another, or for another. Here also we are without evidence from the usage of the language; for the phrase מַקֵּשׁ כֹּז, or merely מִקְּפֵשׁ כֹּז, appears to be used of striking the hand in suretyship where it elsewhere occurs without any further addition, 17:18, 22:26, 11:15; however, Job 17:3, appears the same: to strike into the hand of any one, i.e., to give to him the hand-stroke. From this passage Hitzig concludes that the surety gave the hand-stroke, without doubt in the presence of witnesses, first of all of the creditor, to the debtor, as a sign that he stood for him. But this idea is unnatural, and the “without doubt” melts into air. He on whose hand the stroke falls is always the person to whom one gives suretyship, and confirms it by the hand-stroke. Job also, l.c., means to say: who else but Thou, O Lord, could give to me a pledge, viz., of my innocence? If now the ל, v. 1b, is, as we have shown, not the creditor, but the debtor, then is the ל dat. commodi, as 1a, and the two lines perfectly correspond. מַקֵּשׁ כֹּז properly means to drive, to strike with a resounding noise, cogn. with the Arab. wak’a, which may be regarded as its intrans. (Fl.); then particularly to strike the hand or with the hand. He to whom this hand-pledge is given for another remains here undesignated. A new question arises, whether in v. 6, where מָקֵשׁ כֹּז (illequari) and מַקֵּשׁ כֹּז (comprehendi) follow each other as Isa. 8:15, cf. Jer. 50:24, the hypothetical antecedent is continued or not. We agree with Schultens, Ziegler, and Fleischer against the continuance of the ל. The repetition of the מַקֵּשׁ כֹּז (cf. 2:14) serves rightly to strengthen the representation of the thought: thou, thou thyself and no other, hast then ensnared thyself in the net; but this strengthening of the expression would greatly lose in force by placing v. 2 in the antecedent, while if v. 2 is regarded as the conclusion, and thus as the principal proposition, it appears in its full strength.

Proverbs 6:3. The new commencement needs no particle denoting a conclusion; the לִפְּנֵי, making the summons emphatic (cf. 2 Kings 10:10, frequently in interrogative clauses, connects it closely enough. neut., refers to what follows. The  before is explanatory, as we say in familiar language: Be so good as tell me, or do me the favour to come with me; while no Frenchman would say, Faites-moi le (ce) plaisir et venez avec moi (Fl.). The clause is not to be translated: in case thou art fallen into the hand of thy neighbour; for this is represented (vv. 1, 2) as having already in fact happened. On two sides the surety is no longer sui juris: the creditor has him in his hand; for if the debtor does not pay, he holds the surety, and in this way many an honourable man has lost house and goods, Sirach 29:18, cf. 8:13; — and the debtor has him, the surety, in his hand; for the performance which is due, for which the suretyship avails, depends on his conscientiousness. The latter is here meant: thou hast made thy freedom and thy possessions dependent on the will of thy neighbour for whom thou art the surety. The clause introduced with gives the reason for the call to set himself free (v. R. not, to draw out or off); it is a parenthetical sentence.

The meaning of is certain. The verb (רָפָס, רָשָׁא, רָפָה, רָפָע) signifies to stamp on, calcare, concrucare; the Kamûs explains rafas by rakad balarjal. The Hithpa. might, it is true, mean to conduct oneself in a trampling manner, to tread roughly, as in Niph. to conduct oneself speaking (in an impassioned manner); but Ps. 68:31 and the analogy of favour the meaning to throw oneself in a stamping manner, i.e., violently, to the ground, to trample upon oneself, — i.e., let oneself be trampled upon, to place oneself in the attitude of utmost humble prayer. Thus the Graec. Venet. παρ' οἴκος, Rashi ("humble thyself like to the threshold which is trampled and trode upon"), Aben-Ezra, Immanuel ("humble thyself under the soles of his feet"); so Cocceius, J. H. Michaelis, and others: conculcandum te praeb. is more controverted. The Talmudic-Midrash explanation (b. Joma, 87a; Bathra, 173b, and elsewhere): take with thee in great numbers thy friends (רָפָה = רָפָה), is discredited by this, that it has along with it the explanation of solve palmam (manus), i.e., pay what thou canst. Also with the meaning to rule (Parchon, Immanuel), which besides has not, nothing is to be done. The right meaning of רָפָא is to rush upon one boisterously, Isa. 3:5. רָפָה means in general to be violently excited (Arab. rahiba, to be afraid), and thus to meet one, here with the accusative: assail impetuously thy neighbour (viz., that he fulfil his engagement).

Accordingly, with a choice of words more or less suitable, the LXX translates by παρόρμησον, Symm., Theodotion by παρόρμησον, the Graec. Venet. by ἐνίσχυσον, the Syr. (which the Targumist copies) by הבט (solicita), and Kimchi glosses by: lay an arrest upon him with pacifying words. The Talmud explains דָּגַע as plur.; but the plur., which was permissible in 3:28, is here wholly inadmissible: it is thus the plena scriptio for דָּגַע with the retaining of the third radical of the ground-form of the root-word (רָעָה), or with α as mater lectionis, to distinguish the pausal-form from that which is without the pause; cf. 24:34. LXX, Syr., Jerome, etc., rightly translate it in the sing. The immediateness lying in דָּגַע (cf. ὕπαγε, Matt. 5:24) is now expressed as a duty, v. 4f. One must not sleep and slumber (an expression quite like Ps. 132:4), not give himself quietness and rest, till the other has released him from his bail by the performance of that for which he is surety. One must set himself free as a gazelle or as a bird, being caught, seeks to disentangle itself by calling forth all its strength and art.

Proverbs 6:5. The naked רָפָע is not to be translated “immediately;” for in this sense the word is rabbinical, not biblical. The versions (with exception of Jerome and the Graec.

Proverbs 6:6–8. As Elihu (Job 35:11) says that God has set the beasts as our teachers, so he sends the sluggard to the school of the ant (Amiise), so named (in Germ.) from its industry (Emsigkeit):

6 Go to the ant, sluggard; Consider her ways, and be wise!

7 She that hath no judge, Director, and ruler:

8 She prepareth in summer her food, Has gathered in harvest her store.

The Dechi written mostly under the לֶל separates the inseparable. The thought, Go to the ant, sluggard! permits no other distinction than in the vocative; but the Dechi of לֶל אֲנִמֲלָה is changed into Munach on account of the nature of the Athnach-word, which consists of only two syllables without the counter-tone. The ant has for its Hebrew-Arabic name מְנֹל, from the R. מ (Isaiah, p. 687), which is first used of the sound, which expresses the idea of the low, dull, secret,—thus of its active and yet unperceived motion; its Aramaic name in the Peshito, שֶׁמֶשָמְא, and in the Targ. שֶׁמֶשְמָא (also Arab. sumsum, simsim, of little red ants), designates it after its quick activity, its busy running hither and thither (vid., Fleischer in Levy’s Chald. Wörterb. ii. 578). She is a model of unwearied and well-planned labour. From the plur. מְנֹלָה it is to be concluded that the author observed their art in gathering in and laying up in store, carrying burdens, building their houses, and the like (vid., the passages in the Talmud and Midrash in the Hamburg Real-Encyklopädie für Bibel und Talmud, 1868, p. 83f.). To the ant the sluggard (עָצֵל, Aram. and Arab. עָצֵל, with the fundamental idea of weight and dulness) is sent, to learn from her to be ashamed, and to be taught wisdom.

Proverbs 6:7. This relative clause describes the subject of v. 8 more fully: it is like a clause with quamquam. The community of ants exhibits a peculiar class of workers; but it is Venet.) translate as if the word were מַפְשָׁח [out of the snare]. Bertheau prefers this reading, and Böttcher holds רֶפֶת [a hunger] to have fallen out after דְּרָכֶיהָ. It is not a parallelism with reservation; for a bird-catcher is not at the same time a gazelle-hunter. The author, if he has so written, has conceived of מִפְחֵי כְּרֵבִים מִדָּו as at 1 Kings 20:42, as absolute, and connected it with בָּמֶל, tear thyself free like the gazelle from the hand into which thou hast fallen (Hitzig); according to which, the section should be accentuated thus: בָּמֶל, the bird, from its whistling (Arab. safar, R. צ, cf. Arab. saffârat, the whistling of a bird), Arab. safar, whistler (with prosthesis, ṣaṣfarvar, warbler, Psalm. p. 794). The bird-catcher is called יְקֹשׁ (from לִקָּח, to take, cog. לִקָח, Isa. 29:21, יֹקְשׁ, R. קוש, Kosh, fem. יְקֹשֲׂים, Koshim, or בְקִושׁ, Kosh). One would think that the Kametz, after the form kâtwl (vid., under Isa. 1:17), must here be fixed, but in Jer. 5:26 the word is vocalized קָשׁ.

Tenth Introductory Mashal Discourse, 6:6–11

Call to the Sluggard to Awake

Proverbs 6:6–11. Altera paraenesis (remarks J. H. Michaelis) ad debitorem potius directa, sicut prima ad fidejussorem. But this connection is a subtile invention. These brief proverbial discourses, each of which forms a completed whole, have scarcely been a priori destined for this introduction to the Salomonic Book of Proverbs edited by the author; but he places them in it; and that he so arranges them that this section regarding sluggards follows that regarding sureties, may have been occasioned by accidental points of contact of the one with the other (cf. קָשׁ, 6a, with 3b; רֶפֶת, דְּרָכֶיהָ, v. 10, with v. 4), which may also further

not, like that of bees, composed of grades germinating in the queen-bee as the head. The three offices here named represent the highest judiciary, police, and executive powers; for קציר (from הקציר, to distinguish, with the ending in, vid., Jesurun, p. 215 s.) is the judge; שכר (from שכר, Arab. satr; to draw lines, to write) is the overseer (in war the director, controller), or, as Saalschütz indicates the province of the schotrim both in cities and in the camp, the office of police; משלי (vid., Isaiah, p. 691), the governors of the whole state organism subordinated to the shaftim and the schotrim. The Syr., and the Targ. slavishly following it, translate משלי by קציר (harvest), for they interchange this word with קציר.

Proverbs 6:8. In this verse the change of the time cannot be occasioned by this, that קציר and קציר are distinguished as the earlier and the later period of the year; for קציר (= Arab. kāyit, from kāt, to be glowing hot, cf. Arab. kgyyt of the glow of the mid-day heat) is the late summer, when the heat rises to the highest degree; but the son of the Shunammite succumbed to the sun-stroke in the time of harvest (2 Kings 4:18 f.). Löwenstein judiciously remarks that קציר refers to immediate want, אכילה to that which is future; or, better, the former shows them engaged in persevering industry during the summer glow, the latter as at the end of the harvest, and engaged in the bringing home of the winter stores. The words of the procuring of food in summer are again used by Agur, Prov. 30:25; and the Aramaic fable of the ant and the grasshopper, which is also found among those of Aesop and of Syntipas, serves as an illustration of this whole verse. The LXX has, after the “Go to the ant,” a proverb of five lines, ἥ πορεύθητι πρὸς τὴν μέλισσαν. Hitzig regards it as of Greek origin; and certainly, as Lagarde has shown, it contains idiomatic Greek expressions which would not occur to a translator from the Hebrew. In any case, however, it is an interpolation which disfigures the Hebrew text by overlading it.

Proverbs 6:9–11. After the poet has admonished the sluggard to take the ant as an example, he seeks also to rouse him out of his sleepiness and indolence:
9. How long, O sluggard, wilt thou lie? When wilt thou rise up from thy sleep?
10. “A little sleep, a little slumber, A little folding of the hands to rest!”
11. So comes like a strong robber thy poverty, And thy want as an armed man.

Proverbs 6:9, 10. The awakening cry, v. 9, is not of the kind that Paul could have it in his mind, Eph. 5:14. The כל has, as the vocative, Pasek after it, and is, on account of the Pasek, in correct editions accentuated not with Monach, but Merchia. The words, v. 10, are not an ironical call (sleep only yet a little while, but in truth a long while), but per mimesin the reply of the sluggard with which he turns away the unwelcome disturber. The plurals with פסח sound like self-delusion: yet a little, but a sufficient! To fold the hands, i.e., to cross them over the breast, or put them into the bosom, denotes also, Eccles. 4:5, the idler. חֲסָר, complicatio (cf. in Livy, compressis quod aiunt manibus sidere; and Lucan, 2:292, compressas tenuisse manus), for formed like שֶׁשֶׁר, 3:8, and the inf. שֶׁשֶׁר like רָסָר, 10:21, and שֶׁשֶׁר, 16:19. The perf. consec. connects itself with the words heard from the mouth of the sluggard, which are as a hypothetical antecedent thereto: if thou so sayest, and always again sayest, then this is the consequence, that suddenly and inevitably poverty and want come upon thee. That מְעֵט denotes the grassator, i.e., vagabond (Arab. dawwar, one who wanders much about), or the robber or foe (like the Arab. 'aduw, properly transgressor finium), is not justified by the usage of the language; מְעֵט signifies, 2 Sam. 12:4, the traveller, and מְעֵט is one who rides quickly forward, not directly a κακὸς ὀδοιπόρος (LXX).
Proverbs 6:11. The point of comparison, 11a, is the unforeseen, as in quick march or assault (Böttcher), and 11b the hostile and irretrievable surprise; for a man in armour, as Hitzig remarks, brings no good in his armour: he assails the opponent, and he who is without defence yields to him without the possibility of withstanding him. The LXX translate רָאִיתָ מִכֶּנֶּה by ὃσπερ ἄγαθος δρομεύς (cf. δρομεύς = מִרְפֵּא, Job 7:6, LXX, Aq.), for what reason we know not. After v. 11 they interpose two other lines: "but if thou art assiduous, thy harvest will come to thee as a fountain, but want will go away ὥσπερ κακὸς δρομεύς." Also this "bad runner" we must let go; for Lagarde’s retranslation, מִתְּהֵךְ בְּאִישָׁנָמ, no one can understand. The four lines, vv. 10, 11 are repeated in the appendix of Words of the Wise, 24:33f.; and if this appendix originated in the time of Hezekiah, they may have been taken therefrom by the poet, the editor of the older Book of Proverbs. Instead of מַמְשֵׁךְ מַמְשֵׁךְ is there used (so comes forward thy poverty, i.e., again and again, but certainly moving forward); and instead of מַמְשֵׁךְ מַמְשֵׁךְ is written, as also here, v. 6, for the variant מַמְשֵׁךְ with Jod as mater lectionis of the pausal Segol.

Eleventh Introductory Mashal Discourse, 6:12–19

Warning Against Deceit and Malice

Proverbs 6:12–19. There follows now a third brief series of instructions, which run to a conclusion with a deterring prospect similar to the foregoing.

13 Who winketh with his eyes, scrapeth with his foot, Pointeth with his fingers.
14 Malice is in his heart, He deviseth evil at all times, He spreadeth strife.
15 Therefore suddenly his destruction shall come, Suddenly shall he be destroyed, and there is no remedy.

It is a question, what is the subject and what the predicate in v. 12. Thus much is clear, that upon him who is here described according to his deceitful conduct the sentence of condemnation shall fall. He who is so described is thus subject, and הוֹאֵם בְּלִיעַל is without doubt predicate. But does the complex subject begin with איש און?

Thus e.g., Hitzig: "A worthless man is the wicked man who ..." But the interchange of איש and און is a sign of parallel relation; and if 12b belonged attributively to איש און, then since איש is not used, it ought at least to have been continued by הקמה. The general moral categories, 12a, are thus predicates, as was indeed besides probable; the copious division of the subject demands also in point of style a more developed predicate. 16:27 is simpler in plan, and also logically different. There the expression is, as is usual, איש בליעל. Since איש בליעל is not possible, the author uses instead בליעל. This word, composed of בל and يָע ל (from יָע ל, to be useful, to be good for), so fully serves as one word, that it even takes the article, 1 Sam. 25:25. It denotes worthlessness, generally in a chain of words in the genitive, but also the worthless, Job 34:18; and it is to be so taken here, for איש does not form a constructivus, and never governs a genitive. This word, composed of בליעל and און (from an, to breathe), wickedness, i.e., want of all moral character. Thus worthless and wicked is he who practiseth deceit with his mouth (cf. 4:24), i.e., who makes language the means of untruthfulness and uncharitableness. בליעל is meant in a moral sense, but without excluding that distortion of the mouth which belongs to the mimicry of the malicious. It is the accus. of the object; for יָע ל is also bound in a moral sense with the accusative of that which one practises, i.e., dealing with, exercises himself in, 2:7, 28:18, Isa. 33:15.

Proverbs 6:13. קָרֵץ בְׁעֵינָיו is translated according to the sense: who winks (nictat) with his eyes; but that is not the proper meaning of the word, for קָרֵץ is used not only of the eyes.

10:10 (cf. 16:30, qui oculos morsicat or connivet), Ps. 35:19, but also of the lips, 16:30. Thus Löwenstein's explanation: who opens up the eyes, is incorrect. The verb קָרֵץ, کَرْص, Aq. (a g. of کَرْص, from کَرْص balskyn, the parched ears of corn (Jerome, (qui) terit pede, and Rashi notes thereon, the Proverbs of Ali, p. 100f. regards the omission of the phrase which follows, for which the Kerî has the word, for which the Kerî has Kerî or Masád, 18:19; 21:9, 19; 23:29; 25:24; 26:21; 27:15. The forms מדרים and מדרים are also recognised: the former stands alone without any analogous example; the latter is compared at least with קָרָץ, Arab. masád (Psalmen, p. 163, 3). Probably these two forms are warranted by Gen. 25:2, cf. 37:28, 36, where מְצָד and מְצָד appear as the names of two sons of Abraham by Keturah. But the national name מְסָד is no reason for the seven times laying aside of the regular form מְדָנִים, which is the plur. of מְדָנִים after the forms מְדָנִים, מְדָנִים, מְדָנִים, מְדָנִים, מְדָנִים, מְדָנִים, מְדָנִים.
Although, ἐμφασις, ἁμαρτία, is also found.

Proverbs 6:15. With the 14th verse the description terminates. A worthless and a wicked person is he who does such things. The point lies in the characteristic out of which the conclusion is drawn: therefore his ruin will suddenly come upon him, etc. Regarding יַצֵּיר, בַּעֲלָקַת, the root-meaning of which is illustrated by Amos 2:13, vid., at 1:26. פֵתֶא is an old accus. of an absol. פָּרַק, of the same meaning as הָשָּׁר, used as an adverbial accus., both originating in the root-idea of splitting, opening, breaking out and breaking forth. “Shall be broken to pieces” (as a brittle potter’s vessel, Ps. 2:9, Isa. 30:14, Jer. 29:11) is a frequent figure for the destruction (שָׁר) of an army (cf. Arab. ānksar āljysh), of a city or a state, a man. יַשֵּר continues the שָׁר as 29:1: there shall be as it were no means of recovery for his shattered members (Fl.). Without the Vav this אֵין מְדוּנִים would be a clause conceived of accusatively, and thus adverbially: without any healing.

Proverbs 6:16–19. What now follows is not a separate section (Hitzig), but the corroborative continuation of that which precedes. The last word (מְדוּנִים, strife) before the threatening of punishment, 14b, is also here the last. The thought that no vice is a greater abomination to God than the (in fact satanical) striving to set men at variance who love one another, clothes itself in the form of the numerical proverb which we have already considered, pp. 10, 11. From that place we transfer the translation of this example of a Midda:—

16 There are six things which Jahve hateth, And seven are an abhorrence to His soul: 17 Haughty eyes, a lying tongue, And hands that shed innocent blood; 18 An heart that deviseth the thoughts of evil, Feet that hastily run to wickedness, 19 One that uttereth lies as a false witness, And he who soweth strife between brethren.

The sense is not, that the six things are hateful to God, and the seventh an abomination to Him besides (Löwenstein); the Midda -form in Amos 1:3–2:6, and in the proverb in Job 5:19, shows that the seven are to be numbered separately, and the seventh is the non plus ultra of all that is hated by God. We are not to translate: sex haecce edit, for which, and of a city or a state, a man.

Alāl, although, alāl, is never, like the Chald. haecce odit, employed as an accus. in the sense of, “These six things (viz., vv. 12–15) Jahve hateth.” But also Hitzig’s explanation, “These six things (viz., vv. 12–15) Jahve hateth,” is impossible; for (which is also against that haecce) the substantive pronoun is never, like the Chald.

In the writing occasioned by the numeral (vid., at 30:15 and elsewhere: sex, seven) the substantive pronoun is never, like the Chald. Boëthius, employed as an accus. in the sense of, haecce, which expresses itself in elatum.

The first three characteristics are related to each other as mental, verbal, actual, denoted by the members of the body by means of which these characteristics come to light. The virtues are taken all together as a body (organism), and meekness is its head. Therefore there stands above all, as the sin of sins, the mentis elatae tumor, which expresses itself in elatum.
(grande) supercilium: כזבים, the feature of the רוח, haughty (cf. Ps. 18:28 with 2 Sam. 22:28), is the opposite of the feature of the רוח עינים, Job 22:29; רוח is in the O.T. almost always (vid., Cant. 4:9) fem., and adjectives of course form no dual. The second of these characteristics is the lying tongue, and the third the murderous hands. נפש יפה is innocent blood as distinguished from ידים עינים, the blood of the innocent, Deut. 19:13.

Proverbs 6:18. The fourth characteristic is a deceitful heart. On קוח, vid., v. 14, 3:29, and on נפש, v. 12. The fifth: feet running with haste to evil; עיניים כזבים as in Isa. 59:7, echoing the distich מ yargı, 1:16, as here, 17b and 18b. The connection המרה ירידה, propere cucurrit (contrast ל אשuve ל, equivalent to ירים מהר).

Proverbs 6:19. The sixth: “A speaker of lies, a tongue of falsehood,” is hateful to God. It is one subject which is thus doubly characterized. קוח and יפה are fictions, and יפה is the disfiguring (deformatio) of the actual facts. They are purposely placed together in this connection. The derivations of these synonyms are obscure; Fürst gives to the former the root-idea of spinning (properly knotting together), and to the latter that of painting. יפה is introduced to support יפה. It would also be verbally permissible to interpret יפה as יפה in the sense of הביס, יוהוד יפה; but in the nearest parallel, 14:15, the idea is personal, for it is said of the ראש דעしてしまう that he breathes out lies. In that place there can be no doubt that the clause is a verbal one, and יפה, פותח, יפה, פותח, is treated as fixed. This were equivalent to יפה, but is mostly connected with קוח, not without reference to the fact that that which is false is without reality and is nothing more than הביס רוח. But what kind of a form is יפה, where it is not, as 14:5, the predicate of a verbal clause, but in connection with קוח, as here and at 14:25, 19:5, 9 (once with אמת, 12:17), is the subject of a substantival clause? That which lies nearest is to regard it as a noun formed from the fut. Hiph. Such formations we indeed meet only among proper names, such as קוח, יחים, יSymfony; however, at least the one יировка והר (an adversary) is found, which may be formed from the Hiph. as well as from the Kal. But should not the constr. of ייפה יי be יי, after the form ייפה יי after the form ייפה יי?

One does not escape from this consideration by deriving ייפה יי, from after the forms ייפה יי, יי, יי, and the like, from a secondary verb יי, the existence of which is confirmed by Jer. 4:31, and from which also יי, 27:12, appears to be derived, although it may be reduced also, after the form יי (with יי), to יי. But in this case also one expects as a connecting form יי, יי, like as in reality יי from יי (cf. יי, יי, יי, יי). Shall it now be assumed that the Kametz is treated as fixed? This were contrary to rule, since it is not naturally long. Thus the connection is not that of the genitive. But if ייפה יי were a substantive formed with the preformative of the second modus like יי (1 Sam. 17:40), or were it a participial intensive form of active signification such as יי, then the verbal force remaining in it is opposed to the usage of the language. There remains nothing further, therefore, than to regard ייפה, ייפה, as an attributive put in the place of a noun: one who breathes out; and there is a homogeneous example of this, for in any other way we cannot explain ייפה, ייפה, Eccles. 1:18. In 19b the numeral proverb reaches its point. The chief of all that God hates is he who takes a fiendish delight in setting at variance men who stand nearly related. Thus this brief proverbial discourse rounds itself off, coming again to 14b as a refrain.

Warning Against Adultery, by Reference to Its Fearful Consequences

Proverbs 6:20–35. After these three smaller sections, the teacher of wisdom returns here to the theme of the eighth: Warning against sins of the flesh, whose power and prevalence among men is so immeasurably great, that their terrible consequences cannot sufficiently be held up before them, particularly before youth.

20 Keep, my son, the commandment of thy father, And reject not the instruction of thy mother.

21 Bind them to thy heart evermore, Fasten them about thy neck.

The suff. -ēm refers to the good doctrine (cf. 7:3) pointed out by מִצְׁוָה and תּוֹרָה; the masc. stands, as is usual (e.g., 1:16, 5:2), instead of the fem. Regarding the figure, reminding us of the Tefillin and of Amuletes for perpetual representation, vid., under 3:3. Similarly of persons, Cant. 8:6. The verb נַחָה, with its Hiph. in a strengthened Kal-signification, is more frequently found in the Psalms than in the Proverbs; the Arab. nh' shows that it properly signifies to direct (dirigere), to give direction, to move in a definite direction. We fulfil with, to take into protection, we had already 2:11; this author has favourite forms of expression, in the repetition of which he takes delight. With lying down, sleeping is associated. מֵיתָּךְ, as Ps. 139:18, the hypoth. perf., according to Ewald, § 357 a: et ut expergefactus es, illa te compellabit. Bertheau incorrectly: she will make thee thoughtful. But apart from the fact that there is no evidence of the existence of this Hiph. in the language of the Bible, the personification demands a clearer figure. שִיח (שוּח) signifies mental speech and audible speech (Gen. 24:63, poet., in the Talmudic a common word); with א, speaking concerning something (fabulari de), Ps. 69:13; with the accus., that which is said of a thing, Ps. 145:5, or the address, briefly for שִיח ל, Job 12:8 (as מִגֵן with accus. 4:9 = מֵגֶן ל): when thou art awake, wisdom will forthwith enter into conversation with thee, and fill thy thoughts with right matter, and give to thy hands the right direction and consecration.

Proverbs 6:23. Since in אֲדֹנָי the idea of wisdom and of wholesome doctrine lie in one another, the author can proceed with proof: For a lamp is the commandment, and instruction a light (Jerome et lex lux); And a way of life, disciplinary reproofs. That אֲדֹנָי has here not the positive, specifically Israelitish sense, but the generalized sense of instruction in conformity with truth regarding the will of God and the duty of man, vid., p. 42. This instruction mediated by man, but of divine origin, is אור, light, which enlightens the man who submits to it; and the commandment, מִצְוָה, which directs men in every case to do what is right, and forbids that which is wrong (including the prohibition Lev. 4:2), is נר, a lamp which, kindled at that light, enlightens all the darkness of ignorance with reference to human conduct and its consequences. נר and נר are related to each other as general and particular, primary and derivative. Löwenstein accentuates incorrectly והורה ערכה קשׁה מעבריה instead of והורה ערכה (as the Cod. 1294 and the 3 Erfurt Codd.); vid., on the retrogression of the tone, not existing here, under 3:15. The gen. מוסר denotes the object or character of the admonition: not disciplinary in the external sense of the word, but rather moral, having in view discipline in the sense of education, i.e., moral edification and elevation. Such corrections are נר, נר, the way to true life, direction how to obtain it.

Proverbs 6:24. The section thus closes: To keep thee from the vile woman, From the flatery of the strange tongue.

Regarding the genitive connection אשה רעים, a woman of a wicked character, vid., under 2:14; and regarding the adjectival connection לשון לנכריה, under v. 17; the strange tongue is the tongue (לשון) of the strange (foreign) woman (vid., p. 58), alluring with smooth words (Prov. 2:16). Ewald, Bertheau: from her of a smooth tongue, the stranger, as Symm., Theod., ἀπὸ λεικογλώσσου ἱδρύματος, but נמר is a substantive (Gen. 27:16), and as a fem. adjct form is without an example. Rather כלת לשון is to be regarded as the first member and נכריה as the second of the st. constr., for the former constitutes one idea, and נכריה on this account remains unabbreviated; cf. Ps. 68:22, Isa. 28:1; but (1) this syntactical phenomenon is yet problematical, vid., Friedr. Philippi, Wesen und Ursprung des St. Constr. p. 17; and (2) the supposition of such an anomaly is here unnecessary.

Proverbs 6:25, 26. The proaemium of these twelve proverbial discourses is now at an end.

Wisdom herself begins striking the note of the Decalogue:

26 Because for a harlot one cometh down to a piece of bread, And a man's wife lieth in wait for a precious soul.

The warning 25a is in the spirit of the “thou shalt not covet,” Ex. 20:17, and the ἐν τῇ κυρίῳ αὐτοῦ, Matt. 5:28, of the Preacher on the Mount. The Talmudic proverb הרוחני ערכה קשׁה מעבריה (Joma 29a) means only that the imagination of the sinful act exhausts the body even more than the act itself. The warning, "let her not catch thee with her eyelids," refers to her (the adulteress's) coquettish ogling and amorous winking. In the reason added, beginning with כי בעד (thus it is to be punctuated), there is the appositional connection אשה זונה ונכריה, Gesen. § 113; the idea of זונה goes over into 26b. כִּכֶר יְחֵלֶם [כִּכֶר יְחֵלֶם] כִּכֶר יְחֵלֶם, R. Ṛ, to round, vid., at Gen. 49:5], properly a circle of bread, is a small round piece of bread, such as is still baked in Italy (pagnotta) and in the East (Arab. kurs), here an expression for the smallest piece" (Fl). יְחֵלֶם (constr. of בעד), as Job 2:4, Isa. 32:14, is used in the sense of ὑπέρ, pro, and with בעד there is connected the idea of the coming down to this low point. Ewald, Bertheau explain after the LXX, τιμὴ γὰρ πόρνης ὅση καὶ ἑνὸς ἄρτοὺ γυνὴ δὲ ἁγιώσας τιμὶς πνεῦμά ἐρείεται. But nothing is said here of price (reward); the parallelism is synonymous, not antithetic: he is doubly threatened with loss who enters upon such a course. The adulterer squanders his means (Prov. 29:3) to impoverishment (vid., the mention of a loaf of bread in the description of poverty 1 Sam. 2:36), and a man's wife (but at the same time seeking converse with another) makes a prey of a precious soul; for whoever consents to adulterous converse with her, loses not perhaps his means, but certainly freedom, purity, dignity of soul, yea, his own person. צוד comprehends—as צידון, fisher's town [Zidon], Arab. syâd, hunter and fisher, show—all kinds of hunting, but in Hebr. is used only of the hunting of wild beasts. The root-meaning (cf. פֶחָם) is to spy, to seize.

Proverbs 6:27–29. The moral necessity of ruinous consequences which the sin of adultery draws after it, is illustrated by examples of natural cause and effect necessarily connected: 27 Can one take fire in his bosom And his clothes not be burned? 28 Or can any one walk over burning coals And his feet not be burned? 29 So he that goeth to his neighbour’s wife, No one remains unpunished that toucheth her. We would say: Can any one, without being, etc.; the former is the Semitic “extended (paratactic) construction.” The first אֱָֹ֖שׁ has the conjunctive Shalsheleth. tertiary יָָ֖ה signifies to seize and draw forth a brand or coal with the fire-tongs or shovel (הַקְַּחַת, the instrument for this); cf. Arab. khatâ, according to Lane, “he seized or snatched away a thing;” the form הַקְַּחַת is Kal, as תִּכָוֶינָה (vid., Köhler, De Tetragrammate, 1867, p. 10). הַקְַּחַת (properly indentation) is here not the lap, but, as Isa. 40:11, the bosom.

Proverbs 6:28. A second example of destructive consequences naturally following a certain course is introduced with סָּא of the double question. לָטֵּא (from לָטַּה, after the form לָטֶה, but for which לָטַּה is used) is the regular modification of gaḥhalîm (Gesen. § 27, 2). The fem. לָטְא (from לַטָא) is followed here (cf. on the other hand 1:16) by the rhythmically full-sounding form לָטָא (retaining the distinction of gender), from הַקְַּחַת. Arab. kwy, to burn so that a brand-mark (ר, Isa. 3:24, cauterium) remains.

Proverbs 6:29. The instruction contained in these examples here follows: דָּוֶה כָּאִי חַרְּכָא, וְאָמֵר חַרְּכָא שָׁמֵשׁ (Pythagoras in Maximi Eclog. c. 39). יִָ֖שׁ אֱָֹ֖שׁ אֱָֹ֖שׁ is here, as the second in Ps. 51:1, a euphemism, and בִּ֑ךָ, to come in contact with, means, as גֵּ֖זִעֲנִים, to touch, Gen. 20:6. He who goes in to his neighbour’s wife shall not do so with impunity (הֵּ֖ר). Since both expressions denote fleshly nearness and contact, so it is evident he is not guiltless.

Proverbs 6:30, 31. The thief and the adulterer are not placed in comparison with one another, in such a way that adultery is supposed to be a yet greater crime.

30 One does not treat the thief scornfully if he steals To satisfy his craving when he is hungry; 31 Being seized, he may restore sevenfold, Give up the whole wealth of his house. For the most part 30a is explained: even when this is the case, one does not pass it over in the thief as a bagatelle. Ewald remarks: הב ר י stands here in its nearest signification of overlooking, whence first follows that of contempting. But this “nearest” signification is devised wholly in favour of this passage;—the interpretation, “they do not thus let the thief pass,” is set aside by Cant. 8:1, 7; for by 31b, cf. Cant. 8:7b, and 34a, cf. Cant. 8:6a, it is proved that from v. 30 on, reminiscences from the Canticles, which belong to the literature of the Chokma, find their way into the Mashal language of the author. Hitzig’s correct supposition, that הב ר י always signifies positive contempting, does not necessitate the interrogative interpretation: “Does not one despise the thief if … ?” Thus to be understood, the author ought to have written הב ר י or הב ר י א ת. Michaelis rightly: furtum licet merito pro infami in republica habetur, tamen si cum adultero comparatur, minus probrosum est. Regarding名词 in the sense of appetite, and even throat and stomach, vid, Psychologie, p. 204. A second is, that the thief, if he is seized (but we regard הב ר י as not as the hypoth. perf., but as the part. deprehensus), may make compensation for this crime. The fut. הב ר י thus to be understood as the potential lies near from this, that a sevenfold compensation of the thing stolen is unheard of in the Israelitish law; it knows only of a twofold, fourfold, fivefold restoration, Ex. 21:37, 22:1–3, 8 (cf. Saalschütz,
This excess over that which the law rendered necessary leads into the region of free-will: he (the thief, by which we are now only to think of him whom bitter necessity has made such) may make compensation sevenfold, i.e., superabundantly; he may give up the whole possessions (vid., on יון at 1:13) of his house, so as not merely to satisfy the law, but to appease him against whom he has done wrong, and again to gain for himself an honoured name. What is said in vv. 30 and 31 is perfectly just. One does not contemn a man who is a thief through poverty, he is pitied; while the adulterer goes to ruin under all circumstances of contempt and scorn.

Proverbs 6:32, 33. Here there is a contrast stated to v. 30:

32 He who commits adultery (adulterans mulierem) is beside himself, A self-destroyer— who does this.

which primarily seems to mean excedere, to indulge in excess, is, as also in the Decalogue, cf. Lev. 20:10, transitive: ὁ μοιχεύων γυναῖκα. Regarding being mad (herzlos = heartless) = amens (excors, vecors), vid., Psychologie, p. 254. is he who goes to ruin with wilful perversity. A self-murderer—i.e., he intends to ruin his position and his prosperity in life— who does it, viz., this, that he touches the wife of another. It is the worst and most inextinguishable dishonouring of oneself. Singularity Behaji: who annihilates it (his soul), with reference to Deut. 21:12. Eccles. 4:17, where בּוּר would be equivalent to בּוּר, καταργεῖν, which is untrue and impossible. refers to the corporal punishment inflicted on the adulterer by the husband (Deut. 17:8, 21:5); Hitzig, who rejects v. 32, refers it to the stripes which were given to the thief according to the law, but these would be called (מָצָא). The punctuation נֶג ע־וְׁקָלון is to be exchanged for נֶג ע נפָשֵׁר (Löwenstein and other good editors). has a more active signification than our “finden” (to find): consequitur, τυγχάνει.

Proverbs 6:34, 35. One who has been stolen from is to be appeased, but not the injured husband.

34 For jealousy is the fury of a husband, And he spareth not in the day of vengeance.

35 He regardeth not any ransom, And is not contented though thou offerest to him gifts ever so great.

The connection marks כזא as the subject; for it respects carnal intercourse with another’s wife. Jealousy is not usually חֵמָה, the glow of anger (from יָח ם, as שֵנָה from יָשֵן), but וְׁגָבֶר (constr. as שֶנ), the glow of a man’s anger, who with the putting forth of all his manly strength will seek satisfaction to his wounded honour. here significant for שָא, with the fundamental idea of strength, firmness; cf. Arab. jabr, to make fast, to put right again something broken in pieces, particularly a broken vessel, hence Algebra, properly the operation by which an incomplete magnitude is completed (FL). The following אִיש, וְׁלֹא־י חְׁמֹל, with the orthophonic Dagesh, as v. 25 אִש, and with Makkeph) is connected with בּוּר, with definite reference to the man whom the faithless guest has made a cuckold. When the day comes in which the adultery brought to light demands and admits of vengeance, then, wounded in his right and in his honour, he knows no mercy; he pays no regard to any atonement or recompense by which the adulterer seeks to appease him and induce him not to inflict the punishment that is due: he does not consent, even though thou makest ever so great the gift whereby thou thinkest to gain him. The phrase נָשָא פָנִים, πρόσωπον λαμβάνειν, signifies elsewhere to receive the countenance, i.e., the appearance and the impression of a man, i.e., to let it impress one favourably; here it is used of the בּוּר, i.e., the means by which covering, i.e., non-punishment, pardon of the crime, impunity of the guilty, is obtained. Regarding אָבָה, to consent to, vid., at 1:10. שֹח ד, Aram. שוּח ד, is a gift, particularly bribery. That the language may again finally assume the form of an address, it beautifully rounds itself off.

Proverbs 7
Thirteenth Introductory Mashal Discourse, 7
Warning Against Adultery by the Representation of Its Abhorrent and Detestable Nature as Seen in an Example

Proverbs 7. The fearful desolation which adultery, and in general the sin of uncleanness, occasions in the life of the individual who is guilty of it, as well as in society, does not suffer the author of this discourse, directed to youth, to abandon his theme, which he has already treated of under different aspects. He takes up his warning once more, strengthens it by an example he himself had witnessed of one who fell a sacrifice to this sin, and gives it a very impressive conclusion, v. 24ff.

Proverbs 7:1–3. The introduction first counsels in general to a true appreciation of these well-considered life-rules of wisdom.
1 My son, keep my words, And treasure up my commandments with thee.
2 Keep my commandments, and thou shalt live; And my instruction as the apple of thine eye.
3 Wind them about thy fingers, Write them on the tablet of thy heart.

The LXX has after v. 1 another distich; but it here disturbs the connection. Regarding צָפָן, vid., at 2:1; מֵאָש refers, as there, to the sphere of one’s own character, and that subjectively. Regarding the imper. מִנָּה, which must here be translated according to its sense as a conclusion, because it comes in between the objects governed by שְׁמֹר, vid., at 4:4. There is punctuated with Silluk; here, according to Kimchi (Michlol 125a), with Segol-Atnach, מִנָּה, as in the Cod. Erfurt. 2 and 3, and in the editions of Athias and Clodius, so that the word belongs to the class מִנָּה (with short instead of long vowel by the pausal accent): no reason for this is to be perceived, especially as (Prov. 4:4) the Tsere (è from af) which is characteristic of the imper. remains unchanged. Regarding אִישון הָע יִן, Arab. insân el-‘ain, the little man of the eye, i.e., the apple of the eye, named from the miniature portrait of him who looks into it being reflected from it, vid., at Ps. 17:8; the ending ôn is here diminutive, like Syr. Achuno, little brother, b runo, little son, and the like. On v. 3, vid., at 6:21; 3:3. The תֶקֶף תֶאֶס ד ה were wound seven times round the left arm and seven times round the middle finger. The writing on the table of the heart may be regarded as referring to Deut. 6:9 (the Mezuzoth).

Proverbs 7:4, 5. The subject-matter of this earnest warning are the admonitions of the teacher of wisdom, and through him of Wisdom herself, who in contrast to the world and its lust is the worthiest object of love, and deserves to be loved with the purest, sincerest love:
4 Say to wisdom: “Thou art my sister!” And call understanding “Friend;”
5 That they may keep thee from the strange woman, From the stranger who useth smooth words.

The childlike, sisterly, and friendly relationship serves also to picture forth and designate the intimate confidential relationship to natures and things which are not flesh and blood. If in Arabic the poor is called the brother of poverty, the trustworthy the brother of trustworthiness, and abu, um (אֵם), achu, ucht, are used in manifold ways as the expression for the interchangeable relation between two ideas; so (as also, notwithstanding Ewald, § 273b, in many Hebr. proper names) that has there become national, which here, as at Job 17:14; 30:29, mediated by the connection of the thoughts, only first appears as a poetic venture.
The figurative words of v. 4 not merely lead us to think of wisdom as a personal existence of a higher order, but by this representation it is itself brought so near, that בִּשְׁנָב easily substitutes itself, 2:3, in the place of אֱלֶה of Solomon’s address to the bride brought home is in its connection compared with Book of Wisdom 8:2. While the בְּניה by no means arises from abstr. thú, but acelho is derived from achath, מודע, properly means acquaintance, and then the person known, but not in the superficial sense in which this word and the Arab. ma’araf are used (e.g., in the Arabic phrase quoted by Fleisch, kanna aṣḥaab ṣarna m’aaraf—nous étions amis, nous en sommes plus que de simples connaissances), but in the sense of familiar, confidential alliance. The מְדֹעַ does not need for its explanation some intermediate thought to be introduced: quod eo conductet tibi ut (Mich.), but connects itself immediately as the purpose: bind wisdom to thyself and thyself to wisdom thus closely that thou mayest therewith guard thyself. As for the rest, vid., 2:16; this verse repeats itself here with the variation of one word.

Proverbs 7:6, 7. How necessary it is for the youth to guard himself by the help of wisdom against the enticements of the wanton woman, the author now shows by a reference to his own observation.

6 For through the window of my house, From behind the lattice I looked out; to be agreeable, cool, fresh) is the window-lattice or lattice-window, i.e., lattice for drawing down and raising up, which keeps off the rays of the sun. (Fleischer). That it was far in the night, as we learn at v. 9, does not contradict this looking out; for apart from the moon, and especially the lighting of the streets, there were star-lit nights, and to see what the narrator saw there was no night of Egyptian darkness. But because it was night 6a is not to be translated: I looked about among those devoid of experience (thus e.g., Löwenstein); but he saw among these, observed among the youths, who thus late amused themselves without, a young man whose want of understanding was manifest from what further happened. Bertheau: that I might see, is syntactically impossible. The meaning of אָבִינָה is not determined by the aorist following, but conversely אָבִינָה stands under the operation of מְדֹעַ, אָבִינָה (= נַכַּעַב, Neh. 13:7), characterizing the historic aorist. Regarding פְּתִי, vid., at 1:4. בָּנוֹת is the masc. of בָּנוֹת, Arab. benêt in the meaning maiden. It has in correct texts, according to the accents, the ב רaphatum.
7 Then saw I among the simple ones, Discerned among the young people, a youth devoid of understanding.

Proverbs 7:8, 9. Now follows, whither he saw the young fop [Laffen ] then go in the darkness.

8 Going up and down the street near her corner, And he walked along the way to her house,
9. In the twilight, when the day declined, in the midst of the night and deep darkness. We may interpret 'אצֶל as appos.: juvenem amentem, ambulantem, or as the predicate accus.: vidi juvenem ... ambulantem; for that one may so express himself in Hebrew (cf. e.g., Isa. 6:1, Dan. 8:7), Hitzig unwarrantably denies. The passing over of the part. into the finite, 8b, is like 2:14, 17, and that of the inf. 1:27, 2:8. Arab. suk (dimin. suweika, to separate, from sikkat, street, alley), still means, as in former times, a broad street, a principal street, as well as an open place, a market-place where business is transacted, or according to its etymon: where cattle are driven for sale. On the street he went backwards and forwards, yet so that he kept near to her corner (i.e., of the woman whom he waited for), i.e., he never withdrew himself far from the corner of her house, and always again returned to it. The corner is named, because from that place he could always cast a look over the front of the house to see whether she whom he waited for showed herself. Regarding רְבֵּך in v. 6a, vid., at Ps. 27:5: a primary form יָדָה has never been in use; יָכֵף, Zech. 14:10, is plur. of אֲפֵלָה (from אֲפֵל, Arab. wasl, to bind) is, as a substantive, the side (as the place where one thing connects itself with another), and thus as a preposition it means (like juxta from jungere) beside, Ital. allato. יַדְעָה is the object. accus., for thus are construed verbs eundi (e.g., Hab. 3:12, Num. 30:17, cf. 21:22).

Proverbs 7:9. The designations of time give the impression of progress to a climax; for Hitzig unwarrantably denies that 'אצֶל means the twilight; the Talmud, Berachoth 3b, correctly distinguishes two twilights, the evening and the morning twilight. But the idea is not limited to this narrow sense, and does not need this, since the root-word יָצֵל (vid., at Isa. 40:24) permits the extension of the idea to the whole of the cool half (evening and night) of the entire day; cf. the parallel of the adulterer who veils himself by the darkness of the night and by a mask on his countenance, Job 24:15 with Jer. 13:16. However, the first group of synonyms, יָמָה ... בְׁעֶרֶב בְׁנֶשֶף (with the Cod. Frankf. 1294, to be thus punctuated), as against the second, appears to denote an earlier period of the second half of the day; for if one reads, with Hitzig, בְׁעֶרֶב (after Judg. 19:9), the meaning remains the same as with בְׁעֶרֶב בְׁנֶשֶף, viz., advesperascente die (Jerome), for בְׁעֶרֶב = Arab. gharab, means to go away, and particularly to go under, of the sun, and thus to become evening. He saw the youth in the twilight, as the day had declined (κέκλικεν, Luke 24:29), going backwards and forwards; and when the darkness of night had reached its middle, or its highest point, he was still in his lurking-place. אֶשֶּן is, as elsewhere, heart of the night, the poetic designation of the middle of the night. Gusset incorrectly: crepusculum in quo sicut in oculi pupilla est nigredo sublustris et quasi mistura lucis ac tenebrarum. אֶשֶּן is, as elsewhere, particularly the middle; the application to the night was specially suitable, since the apple of the eye is the black part in the white of the eye (Hitzig). It is to be translated according to the accus., in pupilla noctis et caligine (not caliginis); and this was probably the meaning of the poet, for a ב is obviously to be supplied to אֶשֶּן.

Proverbs 7:10–12. Finally, the young man devoid of understanding sees his waiting rewarded: like meets like.

10. And, lo, a woman coming to meet him, in the attire of an harlot and of subtle heart.

11. Boisterous is she, and ungovernable; Her feet have no rest in her own house.

12. At one time before her door, at another in the street, And again at every corner she places herself on the watch.

'V. 12 (Hitzig) expresses what is wont to be, instead of a single event, v. 11, viz., the custom of a street harlot. But she who is spoken of is... not such an one; lurking is not applicable to her (cf. Job 31:9), and, v. 11, it is not meant that she is thus inclined.” But Hitzig’s rendering of v. 11, “she was boisterous ... in her house her feet had no rest,” is inaccurate, since neither מָצְרַי nor קָשָׂם is used. Thus in vv. 11 and 12 the poet gives a characteristic of the woman, introduced by תְּרֵהֵם into the frame of his picture, which goes beyond that which then presented itself to his eyes. We must with v. 12 reject also v. 11; and even that would not be a radical improvement, since that characteristic lying behind the evident, that which was then evident begins with מבירה ולֶב (and subtle in heart). We must thus suppose that the woman was not unknown to the observer here describing her. He describes her first as she then appeared. שִית Hitzig regards as equivalent to similitude (from פָּשָׂם), and why? Because שִית does not mean “to lay against,” but “to place.” But Ex. 33:4 shows the contrary, and justifies the meaning attire, which the word also has in Ps. 73:6. Meîri less suitably compares 2 Kings 9:30, but rightly explains צָרוּת (dressing, ornament), and remarks that שִית elliptical is equivalent to צָרוּת. It is not the nominative (Bertheau), but the accusative, as Ps. 144:12, Ewald, § 279d. How Hitzig reaches the translation of לֶב תבנית by “and an arrow in her heart” (et saucia corde), one can only understand by reading his commentary. The usage of the language, 4:23, he remarks, among other things, would stamp her as a virtuous person. As if a phrase like this could be used both sensu bene and sensu malo! One can guard his heart when he protects it carefully against moral danger, or also when he purposely conceals that which is in it. The part. צָרוּת signifies, Isa. 1:8, besieged (blockaded), Ezek. 16:12, protected, guarded, and Isa. 48:6; 65:4, concealed, hidden. Ewald, § 187b, refers these three significations in the two passages in Isaiah and in the passage before us to צָרוּת, Niph.

Proverbs 7:12. This verse shows how she conducts herself when she wanders abroad. It is no common street-walker who is designated (no “Husterin,” Arab. kahbât, after which also the female demon-name (Arab.) se’alâ is explained), but that licentious married wife, who, no better than such a strumpet when she wanders abroad, hunts after lovers. The alternating פָּשָׂם (properly a stroke) Fleischer compares with the Arab. synonyms, marrt, a going over, karrt, a going back, una volta, una fiata, une fois (Orelli, Synon. der Zeit und Ewigkeit, p. 51). Regarding והזר, vid., at 5:16: it is the free space without, before the house-door, or also before the gate of the city; the parallelism speaks here and at 1:20 more in favour of the former signification.

Proverbs 7:13. After this digression the poet returns to the subject, and further describes the event as observed by himself. And she laid hold on him and kissed him; Put on a bold brow and said to him.

The verb נשך is here, after its primary signification, connected with the dat: osculum fixit ei. Thus also Gen. 27:26 is construed, and the Dagesh in יל is, as there, Dag. forte conj., after the law for which the national grammarians have coined the technical name איח מרדיק (veniens e longinquo, “coming out of the distance,” i.e., the attraction of a word following by one accented on the penult.). The penult.-accenting of נשך is the consequence of the retrogression of the accent (הציר), which, here where the word from the first had the penult, only with Metheg, and thus with a half a tone, brings with it the dageshing of the יל following, as the original penultima-accenting of נשך does of the יל which follows it, for the reading יל וב by Löwenstein is contrary to the laws of punctuation of the Textus receptus under consideration here. As and יל יל have received the doubling Dagesh, so on the other hand, according to Ewald, § 193b, it has disappeared from נשך (written with Raphe according to Kimchi, Michlol 145a). And as נשך has the tone thrown back, so the proper pausal תמסר is accented on the ult., but without attracting the יל following by dageshing, which is the case only when the first of the two words terminates in the sound of ā (āh). נשך נשך is said of one who shows firmness of hardness of countenance (Arab. slabt alwajh); i.e., one who shows shamelessness, or, as we say, an iron forehead (Fl.).

Proverbs 7:14, 15. She laid hold on him and kissed him, both of which actions were shameless, and then, assuming the passivity and modesty befitting the woman, and disregarding morality and the law, she said to the youth:

14 “To bring peace-offerings was binding upon me, To-day have I redeemed my vows.

15 Therefore am I come out to meet thee, To seek thy face, and have found thee.”

We have translated יבויח שלמים “peace-offerings,” proceeding on the principle that שלמים (sing. only Amos 5:22, and on the Phoenician altar at Marseilles) denotes contracting friendship with one (from שלם, to hold friendly relationship), and then the gifts having this in view; for the idea of this kind of offering is the attestation and confirmation of communion with God. But in view of the derivatives שלמים and שלם, it is perhaps more appropriate to combine שלם with שלמים, to discharge perfectly, and to translate it thank-payment-offering, or with v. Hofmann, a due-offering, where not directly thank-offering; for the proper eucharistic offering, which is the expression of thanks on a particular occasion, is removed from the species of the Shelamim by the addition of the words שלמים (Lev. 7:12–25).

The characteristic of the Shelamim is the division of the flesh of the sacrifice between Jahve and His priests on the one side, and the person (or persons) bringing it on the other side: only one part of the flesh of the sacrifice was Jahve’s, consumed by fire (Lev. 3:16); the priests received one part; those who brought the offering received back another part as it were from the altar of God, that they might eat it with holy joy along with their household. So here the adulteress says that there was binding upon her, in consequence of a vow she had taken, the duty of presenting peace-offerings, or offerings that were due; to-day (she reckons the day in the sense of the dies civis from night to
The beginning of the second half-verse is in no case an adjective to מָרַבִּים, in every case only appos., probably an independent conception; not derived from מִרְבֶּה (cogn. מְרָב), to hew wood (whence Arab. ḥṭab, fire-wood), according to which Kimchi, and with him the Graec. Venet. (ἤπειμονας), understands it of the carefully polished bed-poles or bed-boards, but from מַחְטָבָה = Arab. khaṭeba, to be streaked, of diverse colours (vid., under Ps. 144:12), whence the Syriac machtabo, a figured (striped, checkered) garment. Hitzig finds the idea of coloured or variegated here unsuitable, but without justice; for the pleasantness of a bed is augmented not only by its softness, but also by the impression which its costliness makes on the eye. The following אֲשֶׁר מַעֲרַד stands in an appositional relation to וְהָעָבַר, as when one says in Arabic tạub-un diḅāgʿ-un, a garment brocade = of brocade. אֱטוֹן (after the Syr. for אֶפְּטּוֹן, as אֶפְּטִטּוֹן) signifies in the Targum the dye stuffs found in the plants and fossils o the country (Klemm's Culturgeschichte, v. 308–310).

Proverbs 7:17, 18. These verses remind us of expressions in the Canticles. There, at 4:14, are found the three names for spicery as here, and one sees that מֵרָבִּים are not to be connected genitively: there are three things, accented as in the title-verse 1:3. The myrrh, מַרְרָה (Balsamodendron myrrha), belongs, like the frankincense, to the species of the Amyris, which is an exotic in Palestine not less than with us; the aromatic quality in them does not arise from the flowers or leaves, so that Cant. 1:13 leads us to think of a bunch of myrrh, but from the resin oozing through the bark (Gummi myrrhae or merely myrrha), consisting of bright glossy red or golden-yellow grains more or less transparent. The verbal form דודים (used by Balaam, Num. 24:6) is the Semitic Old-Indian name of the aloë, agaru or aguru; the aromatic quality is in the wood of the Aquilaria agallocha, especially its root (agallochum or lignum aloes) dried in the earth,—in more modern use and commerce the inspissated juice of its leaves.

κιννάμωμον (like κιννάμωμος, a Semitic word that had come to the Greeks through the Phoenicians), the cinnamon, i.e., the inner rind of the Cinnamomum zeylanicum. The myrrh is native to Arabia; the aloë, as its name denotes, is Indian; the cinnamon in like manner came through Indian travellers from the east coast of Africa and Ceylon (Taprobane). All these three spices are drugs, i.e., are dry apothecaries’ wares; but we are not on that account to conclude that she perfumed (Hitzig) her bed with spices, viz., burnt in a censer; an operation which, according to Cant. 3:6, would rather be designated קִט רְׁתִי. The verb קִט (only here as Kal) signifies to lift oneself up (vid., under Ps. 48:13), and transitively to raise and swing hither and thither (= קִט). Here with a double accusative, to besprinkle anything out of a vessel moved hither and thither. According to this sense, we must think of the three aromas as essences in the state of solution; cf. Ex. 30:22–33, Esth. 2:12. Hitzig’s question, “Who would sprinkle bed-sheets with perfumed and thus impure water?” betrays little knowledge of the means by which even at the present day clean linen is made fragrant. The expression מְרוֹם מַרְוָה (Cant. 5:1) sounds like מְרוֹם מַרְוָה, although there is probably the voc., and not, as here, the accus.; מְרוֹם is the Kal of מִמָּרְוָה 5:19, and signifies to drink something copiously in full draughts. The verbal form מְרוֹם for מֲרֹם is found besides only in Job 20:18; 39:13; the Hithpa. signifies to enjoy oneself greatly, perhaps (since the Hithpa. is sometimes used reciprocally, vid., under Gen. 2:25) with the idea of reciprocity (Targ. דודים). We read bo habim with Chateph-Kametz after Ben-Asher (vid., Kimchi’s Lex.); the punctuation מְרוֹם is that of Ben-Naphtali.

Proverbs 7:19, 20. The adulteress now deprives the youth of all fear; the circumstances under which her invitation is given are as favourable as possible.

19 “For the man is not at home, He has gone on a long journey.

20 He has taken the purse with him: He will not return home till the day of the full moon.”

It is true that the article stands in more modern use and commerce the inspissated juice of its leaves.

way back. Michaelis has well remarked here: \textit{ut timorem ei penitus adimat, veluti per gradus incedit}. He has undertaken a journey to a remote point, but yet more: he has taken money with him, has thus business to detain him; and still further: he has even determined the distant time of his return. (\textit{τῇ ἡμέρᾳ τοῦ καιροῦ} (thus to be written after Ben-Asher, vid., Baer’s \textit{Torath Emeth}, p. 41) is the purse (from רֶסֶף, to bind together), not one of many, but that which is his own. The terminus precedes 20\textit{b} to emphasize the lateness; vid., on אָסָּה כֶסֶף under Ps. 81:4. \textit{Graec. Venet. ἡ ἡμέρα τοῦ καιροῦ τοῦ καποὺ,} after Kimchi and others, who derive כֶסֶף (כֶסֶף) from the root כֶּסֶא, to reckon, and regard it as denoting only a definite time. But the two passages require a special idea; and the Syr. \textit{κέσο,} which in 1 Kings 12:32, 2 Chron. 7:10, designates the time from the 15th day of the month, shows that the word denotes not, according to the Talmud, the new moon (Hitzig), when the night is without moonlight. Since the derivation of the word from כֶּסֶא (כֶּסֶף), to cover, gives the satisfactory idea of the covering or filling of the moon’s disk, we do not seek after any other; Dietrich fixes on the root-idea of roundness, and Hitzig of vision (כֶּסֶף, vid., on the contrary, under Ps. 143:9). The \textit{ב} is that of time at which, in which, about which, anything is done; it is more indefinite than \textit{ב} would be. He will not return for some fourteen days.

21 She beguiled him by the fulness of her talking. By the smoothness of her lips she drew him away. Here is a climax. First she brought him to yield, overcoming the resistance of his mind to the last point (cf. 1 Kings 11:3); then drove him, or, as we say, hurried him wholly away, viz., from the right path or conduct (cf. Deut. 13:6, 11). With \textit{ἐπὶ σφαγὴν ἄγεται} (\textit{ẑarər} = the chief \textit{factum}, the past imperf. is interchanged, 21\textit{b}. Regarding \textit{הִט תְּתִלָּה}, see above, p. 40. Here is the rhetoric of sin (Zöckler); and perhaps the \textit{לֶק חֶלֶק} of 20\textit{a} has suggested this antiphrastic \textit{הִט תְּתִלָּה} to the author (Hitzig), as \textit{לְקַח הַכֶּסֶף} (the inverted \textit{ץְכָּסָה לְקַח}, formed like \textit{ץְכָּסָה לְקַח} which is the \textit{abstr.} of \textit{ץְכָּסָה לְקַח} as that is of \textit{ץְכָּסָה לְקַח} and which are reciprocally conditioned, for the idea of the slippery (Ps. 73:18) connects itself with \textit{לָכֶסֶף.}

\textbf{Proverbs 7:22, 23.} What followed:—

22 So he goes after her at once As an ox which goeth to the slaughter-house, And as one bereft of reason to the restraint of fetters, 23 As a bird hastens to the net, Without knowing that his life is at stake— Till the arrow pierces his liver.

The \textit{part. חָלָק} (thus to be accentuated according to the rule in Baer’s \textit{Torath Emeth}, p. 25, with \textit{Mercha} to the tone-syllable and \textit{Mahpach} to the preceding open syllable) preserves the idea of the fool’s going after her. \textit{מְחַפַּך} (suddenly) fixes the point, when he all at once resolves to betake himself to the rendezvous in the house of the adulteress, now a \textit{kəfərəq∂}, as the LXX translates, i.e., as we say, a simpleton who has gone on the lime-twig. He follows her as an ox goes to the slaughter-house, unconscious that he is going thither to be slaughtered; the LXX ungrammatically destroying the attributive clause: \textit{ἐπὶ σφαγὴν ἄγεται}. The difficulties in \textit{ךֶבֶשׁ}, as that is of \textit{ךֶבֶשׁ}, and not \textit{ךֶבֶשׁ}, as is frequently the case) multiply, and it is not to be reconciled with the traditional text. The ox appears to require another beast as a side-piece; and accordingly the LXX, Syr., and Targ. find in כֶבֶשׁ a dog (to which from \textit{ךֶבֶשׁ} they also pick out \textit{אַלּוֹ, a stag), Jerome a lamb (\textit{et quasi agnus כֶּבֶשׁ}, Rashi a venomous serpent (perhaps after ἔχος?), Löwenstein and Malbim a rattlesnake (וְּכָבֵּד מְצִל); but all this is mere conjecture. Symmachus’ σκάφων (ἐπὶ δεσμῖν ἀφρον) is without support, and, like the favourite rendering of Schelling, et sicut saliens in vinculum cervus (אֶל), is unsuitable on account of the unsemitic position of the words. The noun עכס, plur. עכסים, signifies, Isa. 3:18, an anklet as a female ornament (whence v. 16 the denom. עכס, to make a tinkling of the anklets).

In itself the word only means the fetter, compes, from עכס, Arab. ‘akas, ‘akash, contrahere, constringere (vid., Fleischer under Isa. 59:5); and that it can also be used of any kind of means of checking free movement, the Arab. ‘ıdās, as the name of a cord with which the camel is made fast by the head and forefeet, shows. With this signification the interpretation is: et velut pedicā (=כבעכס) implicitus ad castigationem stulti, he follows her as if (bound) with a fetter to the punishment of the fool, i.e., of himself (Michaelis, Fleischer, and others). Otherwise Luther, who first translated “in a fetter,” but afterwards (supplying כ, not כּ) “and as if to fetters, where one corrects fools.” But the ellipsis is harsh, and the parallelism leads us to expect a living being in the place of עכס.

Now since, according to Gesenius, עכס, fetter, can be equivalent to a fettered one neither at Isa. 17:5; 21:17, nor Prov. 23:28 (according to which עכס must at least have an active personal signification), we transpose the nouns of the clause and write עכס, עכסים, וְּכָבֵּד, עכס, he follows her as a fool (Psychol. p. 292) to correction (restraint) with fetters; or if עכס is to be understood not so much physically as morally, and refers to self-destroying conduct (Ps. 107:7): as a madman, i.e., a criminal, to chains. The one figure denotes the fate into which he rushes, like a beast devoid of reason, as the loss of life; and the other denotes the fate to which he permits himself to be led by that woman, like a criminal by the officer, as the loss of freedom and of honour.

Proverbs 7:23. The confusion into which the text has fallen is continued in this verse. For the figure of the deadly arrow connects itself neither with that of the ox which goes to the slaughter-house, nor with that of the madman who is put in chains: the former is not killed by being shot; and with the latter, the object is to render him harmless, not to put him to death. The LXX therefore converts לְּ אוּליא into לְּ אוּלֶה, a stag, and connects the shooting with an arrow with this: ἡ ὡς ἐλαφος τοξεύματι πεπληγώς εἰς τὸ ἱµαρ. But we need no encroachment on the text itself, only a correct placing of its members. The three thoughts, v. 23, reach a right conclusion and issue, if with כֹּפֶר צִפֹּר אַלְיָפ (here Merchamphach) a new departure is begun with a comparison: he follows her with eager desires, like as a bird hastens to the snare (vid., regarding כֹּפֶר a snare, and כֹּפֶר, a noose, under Isa. 8:15). What then follows is a continuation of 22a. The subject is again the youth, whose way is compared to that of an ox going to the slaughter, of a culprit in chains, and of a fool; and he knows not (non novit, as 4:19; 9:18, and according to the sense, non curat, 3:6; 5:6) that it is done at the risk of his life (בּסְתָמ as 1 Kings 2:23, Num. 17:3), that his life is the price with which this kind of love is bought (גשמ, neut., as not merely Eccles. 2:1 and the like, but also e.g., Lev. 10:3, Esth. 9:1)—that does not concern him till (דַע יְהוָה וְאִי-שָׁר) the arrow breaks or pierces through (בַּל פִּסֵּל as Job 16:13) his liver, i.e., till he receives the death-wound, from which, if not immediately, yet at length he certainly dies. Elsewhere the part of the body struck with a deadly wound is called the reins or loins (Job, etc.), or the gall-bladder (Job 20:25); here the liver, which is called כָּבֵּד, Arab. kebid, perhaps as the organ in which sorrowful and painful affections make themselves felt (cf. Aeschylus, Agam. 801: δήγμα λύπης ὑφ’ ἡμόρ προσκυνεῖται), especially the latter, because the passion of sensual love, according to the idea of the ancients, reflected itself in the liver. He who is love-sick has jecur ulcerosum (Horace, Od. i. 25. 15); he is diseased in his liver (Psychol. p. 268). But the arrow is not here the arrow of love which makes love-sick, but the arrow of death, which slays him who is ensnared in sinful love. The befooled youth continues the disreputable relation into which he has entered till it terminates in adultery and in lingering disease upon his body, remorse in his soul, and dishonour to his name, speedily ending in inevitable ruin both spiritually and temporally.

Proverbs 7:24, 25. With וְׁע תָה, as at 5:7, the author now brings his narrative to a close, adding the exhortation deduced from it:

24 And now, ye children, give ear unto me, and observe the words of my mouth!
25 Let not thine heart incline to her ways, and stray not in her paths.

The verb שָטָה (whence יְשַׂ֣טֵה, like יְטֵה, 4:15, with long ĕ from ʼi) the author uses also of departure from a wicked way (Prov. 4:15); but here, where the portraiture of a faithless wife (אַשָּׁ֣ת אֲשֶׁר) is presented, the word used in the law of jealousy, Num. 5, for the trespass of an אַשָּׁ֣ת אֲשֶׁר is specially appropriate. יְשַׂ֣טֵה is interchanged with תָּֽעָה (cf. Gen. 21:14): wander not on her paths, which would be the consequence of straying on them. Theodotion: καὶ μὴ πλανηθ ς ἐν ἀτραποῖς αὐτῆς, with καί, as also Syr., Targ., and Jerome. The Masora reckons this verse to the 25 which have בֵּיתָ at the beginning and בֵּיתה at the middle of each clause (vid., Baer in the Luth. Zeitschrift, 1865, p. 587); the text of Norzi has therefore correctly יִבְּהַ, which is found also in good MSS (e.g., the Erfurt, 2 and 3).

Proverbs 7:26, 27. The admonition, having its motive in that which goes before, is now founded on the emphatic finale:

26 For many are the slain whom she hath caused to fall, and many are her slain.
27 A multiplicity of ways to help is her house, going down to the chambers of death.

The translation "for many slain has she laid low" (Syr., Targ., Jerome, Luther) is also syntactically possible; for רבים can be placed before its substantive after the manner of the demonstratives and numerals (e.g., Neh. 9:28, מִאמְרָה, Cant. 4:9), and the accentuation which requires two servants (the usual two Munachs) to the Atnach appears indeed thus to construe it. It is otherwise if here רְבִים here meant magni (thus e.g., Ralbag, and recently Bertheau), and not multi; but רְבִים and עֲצֻּמִים stand elsewhere in connection with each other in the signification many and numerous, Ps. 35:18, Joel 2:2, Mic. 4:3. “Her slain” are those slain by her; the part. pass. is connected with the genitive of the actor, e.g., 9:18; cf. (Arab.) katyl almhabbt, of one whom love kills (Fl.). With v. 27 cf. 2:18; 9:18.

In 27a, יודר בירת is not equivalent to הַבִּיתָ after 8:2, also not elliptical and equivalent to יודר בירת; the former is unnecessary, the latter is in no case established by Ps. 45:7, Ezra 10:13, nor by Deut. 8:15, 2 Kings 23:17 (see, on the other hand, Philipp’s Status Constructus, pp. 87–93). Rightly Hitzig has: her house forms a multiplicity of ways to hell, in so far as adultery leads by a diversity of ways to hell. Similarly the subject and the predicate vary in number, 16:25, Ps. 110:3, Job 26:13, Dan. 9:23, and frequently. If one is once in her house, he may go in this or in that way, but surely his path is to destruction: it consists of many steps to hell, such as lead down (בֵּית, fem. Isa. 37:34, masc. Isa. 30:21) to the extreme depths of death (cf. Job 9:9, “chambers of the south” = its remotest regions veiling themselves in the invisible); for דְּרֵי מָוֶת (Arab. khiddr) is the part of the tent or the house removed farthest back, and the most private (Fl.). These cf. עִמְׁקֵי שְׁאֹל, 9:18, approach to the conception of גֵיהִנֹם, which is afterwards distinguished from שְׁאֹל.
Proverbs 8

Fourteenth Introductory Mashal Discourse, 8

A Discourse of Wisdom Concerning Her Excellence and Her Gifts

Proverbs 8. The author has now almost exhausted the ethical material; for in this introduction to the Solomonic Book of Proverbs he works it into a memorial for youth, so that it is time to think of concluding the circle by bending back the end to the beginning. For as in the beginning, 1:20ff., so also here in the end, he introduces Wisdom herself as speaking. There, her won testimony is delivered in contrast to the alluring voice of the deceiver; here, the daughter of Heaven in the highways inviting to come to her, is the contrast to the adulteress lurking in the streets, who is indeed not a personification, but a woman of flesh and blood, but yet at the same time as the incarnate ἀπάτη of worldly lust. He places opposite to her Wisdom, whose person is indeed not so sensibly perceptible, but who is nevertheless as real, coming near to men in a human way, and seeking to win them by her gifts.

1 Doth not Wisdom discourse, And Understanding cause her voice to be heard?
2 On the top of the high places in the way, In the midst of the way, she has placed herself.
3 By the side of the gates, at the exit of the city, At the entrance to the doors, she calleth aloud.

As הִנֵה calls to a consideration of it (cf. 14:22); the question before the reader is doubly justified with reference to 1:20ff. With חכמה, חכמה is interchanged, as e.g., 2:1–6; such names of wisdom are related to its principal name almost as אלהים, אלהים, and the like, to יהוה. In describing the scene, the author, as usual, heaps up synonyms which touch one another without coming together.

Proverbs 8:2. By מְׁרֹמִים Hitzig understands the summit of a mountain, and therefore regards this verse as an interpolation; but the “high places” are to be understood of the high-lying parts of the city. There, on the way which leads up and down, she takes her stand. יָדֵּי = Arab. יָלָל, old and poetic for יָלָל, signifies here “hard by, close to,” properly, so that something stands forward over the edge of a thing, or, as it were, passes over its borders (Fl.). The רְחֵב, Hitzig, as Bertheau, with LXX, Targ., Jerome, interpret prepositionally as a strengthening of ב (in the midst); but where it once, Ezek. 1:27, occurs in this sense, it is fully written בֵית לה. Here it is the accus. loci of the substantive; “house of the ascent” (Syr. bēth urchotho) is the place where several ways meet, the uniting point, as אֵם הַדְּרָדָר (Ezek. 21:26), the point of departure, exit; the former the crossway, as the latter the separating way. Thus Immanuel: the place of the frequented streets; Meïri: the place of the ramification (more correctly, the concentration) of the ways. נִצָבָה signifies more than קָמָה (she raises herself) and עָמְּדָה (she goes thither); it means that she plants herself there.

Proverbs 8:3. In this verse Bertheau finds, not inappropriately, the designations of place: on this side, on that side, and within the gate. יָדֵּי, at the hand, is equivalent to at the side, as Ps. 140:6. יָלָל, of the town, is the same as לְׁפִי הַחַעַד, 9:14, of the house: at the mouth, i.e., at the entrance of the city, thus where they go out and in. There are several of these ways for leaving and entering a city, and on this account מָבוא are connected: generally where one goes out and in through one of the gates (doors).

There are several of these ways for leaving and entering a city, and on this account מָבוא are connected: generally where one goes out and in through one of the gates (doors).
Proverbs 8:4–9. Now begins the discourse. The exordium summons general attention to it with the emphasis of its absolute truth:

4 “To you, ye men, is my discourse addressed, And my call is to the children of men!
5 Apprehend, O ye simple ones, what wisdom is; And, ye fools what understanding is.
6 Hear, for I will speak princely things, And the opening of my lips is upright.
7 For my mouth uttereth truth, And a wicked thing is an abomination to my lips.
8 The utterances of my mouth are in rectitude, There is nothing crooked or perverse in them.
9 To the men of understanding they are all to the point, And plain to those who have attained knowledge.”

Hitzig rejects this section, 4–12, as he does several others in 8 and 9, as spurious. But if this preamble, which reminds us of Elihu, is not according to every one’s taste, yet in respect of the circle of conception and thought, as well as of the varying development of certain fundamental thoughts, it is altogether after the manner of the poet. The terminology is one that is strange to us; the translation of it is therefore difficult; that which is given above strives at the point, which remains fast, like a kernel, the central-point) is used for the understanding of which it is the seat (Psychol. p. 249), or heartedness = intelligence (cf. Ewald, § 172).

Proverbs 8:6. That to which Wisdom invites, her discourse makes practicable, for she speaks of πρῶτοι, manifest truths, which the Graev. Venet. understands to be ἐναντία, after Kimchi’s interpretation: truths which one makes an aim and object (πρῶτος), on account of their worth. Fürst, however, says that from πρῶτος, Arab. najad, means to be elevated, exalted, and thereby visible (whence also ἀνους, to bring to light, to bring forward); and that by πρῶτος, as the plur. of this word, is to be understood princeps in the sense of principalia, or praestantia (LXX σεμνά; Theodot. ηγεμονικά; Jerome, de rebus magnis) (cf. νόμος βασιλικός of the law of love, which surpasses the other laws, as kings do their subjects), which is supported by the similar expression, 22:20. But that we do not need to interpret πρῶτος as abstr., like αἰσχρός, and as the acc. adverb: in noble ways, because in that case it ought to be ἄνους (Berth.), is shown by 22:20, and also 16:13; cf. on this neuter use of the masc., Ewald, § 172a. “The opening of my lips (i.e., this, that they open themselves, not: that which they disclose, lay open) is upright” is to be regarded as metonymia antecedentis pro consequ.: that which I announce is ...; or also as a poetic attribution, which attributes to a subject that which is produced by it (cf. 3:17b): my discourse bearing itself right, brings to light (Fl.). 23:16, cf. 31, is parallel both in the words and the subject; צדק, that which is in accordance with fact and with rectitude, uprightness (vid., at 1:3), is a word common to the introduction (1–9), and to the first appendix to the first series of Solomonic Proverbs (Prov. 22:17–24:22), with the Canticles. In Cant. 5:16, also, as where (cf. 5:3, Job 6:30), the word palate [Gaumen] is used as the organ of speech.

Proverbs 8:7. יְּכָֽל continues the reason (began in v. 6) for the Hearken! (cf. 1:15–17; 4:16f.); so that this second reason is co-ordinated with the first (Fl.). Regarding הנפש, vid., at 3:3; הנה, here of the palate (cf. Ps. 37:30), as in 15:28 of the heart, has not hitherto occurred. It signifies quiet inward meditation, as well as also (but only poetically) discourses going forth from it (vid., at Ps. 1:2). The contrary of truth, i.e., moral truth, is עריות, wickedness in words and principles,—a segolate, which retains its Segol also in pausa, with the single exception of Eccles. 3:16.

Proverbs 8:8, 9. The י of בְּצֶדֶק is that of the close connection of a quality with an action or matter, which forms with a substantive adverbia as well as virtual adjectiva, as here: cum rectitudine (conjuncta i. e. vera sunt omnia dicta oris mei (Fl.); it is the י of the distinctive attribute (Hitzig), certainly related to the י of the distinctive essentiae (Prov. 3:26, according to which Schultens and Bertheau explain), which is connected with the abstract conception (e.g., Ps. 33:4), but also admits the article designating the gender (vid., at Ps. 29:4). The opposite of יְצִדָּק (here in the sense of veracitas, which it means in Arab.) is דֹלֶס, דוסֹל אוֹסֶרִים, dolosum ac perversum (cf. Gesen. § 84, 9) is that which is violently bent and twisted, i.e., estranged from the truth, which is, so to speak, parodied or caricatured. Related to it in meaning, but proceeding from a somewhat different idea, is רֶשֶׁע, used primarily of threads, cords, ropes, and the like, means to twist them, to twine them over and into one another, whence נפתל, a line or string made of several intertwined threads (cf. Arab. ftilt, a wick of a candle or lamp); Niph., to be twisted, specifically luctari, of the twisting of the limbs, and figuratively to bend and twist oneself, like the crafty (versutus) liars and deceivers, of words and thoughts which do not directly go forth, but by the crafty twistings of truth and rectitude, opp. (BDB, יד, Fl.). There is nothing of deception of error in the utterances of wisdom; much rather they are all יְצִדָּק, straight out from her (cf. Isa. 57:2), going directly out, and without circumlocution directed to the right end for the intelligent, the knowing (cf. Neh. 10:29); and יְצִדַּק, straight or even, giving no occasion to stumble, removing the danger of erring for those who have obtained knowledge, i.e., of good and evil, and thus the ability of distinguishing between them (Gesen. § 134, 1)—briefly, for those who know how to estimate them.

10 “Receive my instruction, and not silver, And knowledge rather than choice gold!
11 For wisdom is better than corals, And all precious jewels do not equal her.
12 I, Wisdom, inhabit prudence, And the knowledge of right counsels is attainable by me.”

Instead of influenced by קְצָף אֵין, קְצַף, instead to be supplied; besides, with most Codd. and older editions, we are to accentuate קַצָּף מַקְקֶפֶף with the erasure of the Makkeph.

“Such negations and prohibitions,” Fleischer remarks, “are to be understood comparatively: instead of acquiring silver, rather acquire wisdom. Similar is the old Arabic l-nâr w-l: ‘l- ’âr, the fire, and not the disgrace! Also among the modern Arabic proverbs collected by Burckhardt, many have this form, e.g., No. 34, alhajamat balafas wala alhajat alanas, Better to let oneself be cut with the axe then to beg for the favour of another. 10b is to be translated, with Jerome, Kimchi, and others: and knowledge is more precious than fine gold (בְּכֵרוֹת, neut.: auro pretiosius); and in view of 16:16, this construction appears to be intended. But Fleischer has quite correctly affirmed that this assertatory clause is unsuitably placed as a parallel clause over against the preceding imperative clause, and, what is yet more important, that then v. 11 would repeat idem per idem in a tautological manner. We therefore, after the Aramaic and Greek translators, take מְׁזִמות oĩkῶν together here as well as at v. 19, inasmuch as we carry forward the καὶ ἐν τῷ ἐνδυματίῳ, becomes a substantive, the author uses, et scientiam prae auro lectissimo, which is also according to the accentuation. Equally pregnant is the מְׁלֹאת מַעְרִית of the passage 3:14, 15, which is here varied.

Proverbs 8:12. Ver. 12 follows v. 11 = 3:15 as a justification of this estimating of wisdom above all else in worth. Regarding אֲנִי אָצְמִית עָלָיו with Gaja, vid., the rule which the accentuation of this word in the three so-called metrical books follows in Merg' Archiv, 1868, p. 203 (cf. Baer's Torath Emeth, p. 40). We translate: ego sapientia involo for the verb שָׁפֵן is construed with the accusative of the object, 2:21; 10:30, Ps. 37:3 (cf. פָּן, Ps. 5:5), as well as with ב, Gen. 26:2, Ps. 69:37. Wisdom inhabits prudence, has settled down, as it were, and taken up her residence in it, is at home in its whole sphere, and rules it. Bertheau not unsuitably compares οἶκον with μονός ἐξον, 1 Tim. 6:16. Regarding מֵחָרוּץ, vid., 1:4; 5:2. It denotes well-considered, carefully thought out designs, plans, conclusions, and לֵבָב is here the knowledge that is so potent. This intellectual power is nothing beyond wisdom, it is in her possession on every occasion; she strives after it not in vain, her knowledge is defined according to her wish. Wisdom describes herself here personally with regard to that which she bestows on men who receive her.

Proverbs 8:13. Far remote is the idea that 13a is dependent on אֶמְצָא (I acquire) (Löwenstein, Bertheau). With this verse begins a new series of thoughts raising themselves on the basis of the fundamental clause 13a. Wisdom says what she hates, and why she hates it: 13 “The fear of Jahve is to hate evil; Pride and arrogancy, and an evil way And a deceitful mouth, do I hate.”

If the fear of God is the beginning of wisdom (Prov. 9:10; 1:7), then wisdom, personally considered, stands before all else that is to be said of her in a relation of homage or reverence toward God corresponding to the fear of God on the part of man; and if, as the premiss 13a shows, the fear of God has as its reverse side the hatred of evil, then there arises what Wisdom says in שָׁנָא (I hate) of herself. Instead of the n. actionis שָׁנָא (hatred), formed in the same way with רָעַה, which, admitting the article, becomes a substantive, the author uses, in order that he might designate the predicate as such (Hitzig), rather the n. actionis שָׁנָא as מֵחָרוּץ, Jer. 29:10, Judg. 8:1, is equivalent to מֵחָרוּץ, being, like מִשְׁנָא, the becoming dry, יְכֶלֶל, the being able; cf. (Arab.) shanat, hating, malât, well-being, karât, reading (Fl.). The evil which Wisdom hates is now particularized as, 6:16–19, the evil which Jahve hates. The virtue of all virtues is humility; therefore Wisdom hates, above all, self-exaltation in all its forms. The paronomasia שָׁנָאָה (pride and haughtiness) expresses the idea in the whole of its contents and compass (cf. Isa. 15:6; 3:1, and above at 1:27). יְכֶלֶל (from יַכֹּל, the nominal form), that which is lofty = pride, stands with מֵחָרוּץ, as Job 4:10, יְכֶלֶל, that which is high = arrogance. There follows the viam mali, representing the sins of walk, i.e., of conduct, and os fullax (vid., at 2:12), the sins of the mouth. Hitzig rightly rejects the interpunctuation יְכֶלֶל, and prefers יְכֶלֶל. In consequence of this Dechi (Tiphcha init.), have in Codd. and good editions the servants Asla and Illuj (vid., Baer’s Torath Emeth, p. 11); Aben-Ezra and Moses Kimchi consider the Asla erroneously as disjunctive, and explain יְפִי by et os = axioma meum, but Asla is conjunctive, and has after it the ῥαφατάμ.

Proverbs 8:14–16. After Wisdom has said what she hates, and thus what she is not, she now says what she is, has, and promises: 14 “Mine is counsel and promotion; I am understanding, mine is strength. 15 By me kings reign, And rulers govern justly. 16 By me princes rule, and nobles—all judges of the earth.”

Whoever gives anything must himself possess it; in this sense Wisdom claims for herself counsel, promotion (in the sense of offering and containing that which is essentially and truly good; vid., concerning חֹשֵׁה, 2:7), and energy (vid., Eccles. 7:19). But she does not merely possess חָי; this is much rather her peculiar nature, and is one with her. That v. 14 is formed after Job 12:13, 16 (Hitzig) is possible, without there following thence any argument against its genuineness. And if v. 15f., and Isa. 32:1; 10:1, stand in intentional reciprocal relation, then the priority is on the side of the author of the Proverbs. The connection gives to the laconic expression its intended comprehensiveness. It is not meant that Wisdom has the highest places in the state of give, but that she makes men capable of holding and discharging the duties of these.

Proverbs 8:15b. Here we are led to think of legislation, but the usage of the language determines for the Po. лишь only the significations of commanding, decreeing, or judging; רֹזָן is the object accus., the opposite of חֵקֵק (decrees of unrighteousness), Isa. 10:1. רָזָן is a poetic word, from הָזָן = Arab. razuna, to be heavy, weighty, then to be firm, incapable of being shaken, figuratively of majestic repose, dignity (cf. Arab. wqâr and בּוֹדָא) in the whole external habitus, in speech and action such as befits one invested with power (Fl).

Proverbs 8:16a. We may not explain the second clause of this verse: et ad ingenua impelluntur quicunque terrae imperant, for יְפִי is adj. without such a verbal sense. But besides, נדיב is not pred., for which it is not adapted, because, with the obscuring of its ethical signification (from יְפִי, to impel inwarily, viz., to noble conduct, particularly to liberality), it also denotes those who are noble only with reference to birth, and not to disposition (Isa. 32:8). Thus נדיב is a fourth synonym for the highly exalted, and נדיבים is the summary placing together of all kinds of dignity; for נדיב unites in itself references to government, administration of justice, and rule. נדיבים is used, and not נדיבים—a so-called asyndeton summativum. Instead of נדיבים (LXX) there is found also the word צֶדֶק (Syr., Targ., Jerome, Graec. Venet., adopted by Norzi after Codd. and Neapol. 1487). But this word, if not derived from the conclusion of the preceding verse, is not needed by the text, and gives a summary which does not accord with that which is summed up (جزيرة, שורם, רגלים, מִלְכָּם; besides, the Scripture elsewhere calls God Himself שופט צדק (Ps. 9:5; Jer. 11:20). The Masoretic reading of most of the editions, which is also found in the Cod. Hillel (ספר הללי), merits the preference.

Proverbs 8:17–21. The discourse of Wisdom makes a fresh departure, as at v. 13: she tells how, to those who love her, she repays this love:

17 “I love them that love me, And they that seek me early find me.
18 Riches and honour are with me, Durable riches and righteousness.
19 Better is my fruit than pure and fine gold, And my revenue (better) than choice silver.
PROVERBS
By C. F. Keil and F. Delitzsch

21 To give an inheritance to them that love me And I fill their treasuries.”

The Chethib אֵה בֵּיהֵי אָמָן (ego hos qui eam amant redamo), Gesenius, Lehrgeb. § 196, 5, regards as a possible synallage (eam = me), but one would rather think that it ought to be read (יהוה = יד י). The ancients all have the reading אֵה בֵּיה (אָמָן), with the change of the ēē into ê, and the compression of the radical א, cf. אֵה בֵּיה אָמָן, 1:10) is the form of the fut. Kal, which is inflected יָה שֶׁבֶר, 1:22. Regarding יָה שֶׁבֶר (the Graec. Venet. well: oi ὀρθρίζοντέ μοι), vid., 1:28, where the same epenthet. fut. form is found.

Proverbs 8:18. In this verse part of 3:16 is repeated, after which יָקָר is meant of possession (mecum and penes me). Regarding יָקָר, vid., 1:13; instead of the adjectival יָקָר there, we have here יָקָר. The verb signifies promoveri, to move forwards, whence are derived the meanings old (cf. aetas propecta, advanced age), venerable for age, and noble, free (cf. יָקָר, Isa. 28:9, and Arab. 'atik, manumissus), unbound, the bold. Used of clothing, יָקָר (Isa. 23:18) expresses the idea of venerable for age. יָקָר used of possessions and goods, like the Arab 'atik, denotes such goods as increase during long possession as an inheritance from father to son, and remain firm, and are not for the first time gained, but only need to be inherited, opes perennes et firmae (Schultens, Gesenius’ Thesaur., Fleischer), although it may be also explained (which is, however, less probable with the form יָקָר) of the idea of the venerable from opes superbae (Jerome), splendid opulence. יָקָר is here also a good which is distributed, but properly the distributing goodness itself, as the Arab. sadakat, influenced by the later use of the Hebrew דְּאָדָק (דִּיקָאָסְפָּנָה = ἕλεγχοςσόνη), denotes all that which God of His goodness causes to flow to men, or which men bestow upon men (Fl.). Righteousness is partly a recompensative goodness, which rewards, according to the law of requital, like with like; partly communicative, which, according to the law of love without merit, and even in opposition to it, bestows all that is good, and above all, itself; but giving itself to man, it assimilates him to itself (vid., Ps. 24:7), so that he becomes יָד וּרְכָר, and is regarded as such before God and men, v. 19.

The fruit and product of wisdom (the former a figure taken from the trees, 3:18; the latter from the sowing of seed, 3:9) is the gain and profit which it yields. With יָד וּרְכָר, 8:10; 3:14, יָד is here named as the place of fine gold, briefly for מָסִי מִפָז, solid gold, gold separated from the place of ore which contains it, or generally separated gold, from יָד, violently to separate metals from base mixtures; Targ. יָד וּרְכָר, ϵρήσα αὐτοῖς, gold which has stood the fire-test, obrussa, of the crucible, Greek ὄβρυζον, Pers. ebrîz, Arab. ibriz. In the last clause of this verse, as also in 10b, יָד וּרְכָר is to be interpreted as pred. to יָד, but the balance of the meaning demands as a side-piece to the word מָסִי מִפָז (19a) something more than the mere יָד וּרְכָר. In 20f. the reciprocal love is placed as the answer of love under the point of view of therequiting righteousness. But recompensative and communicative righteousness are here combined, where therefore the subject is the requital of worthy pure love and loving conduct, like with like. Such love requires reciprocal love, not merely cordial love, but that which expresses itself outwardly.

Proverbs 8:20, 21. In this sense, Wisdom says that she acts strictly according to justice and rectitude, and adds (21) wherein this her conduct manifests itself. The Piel יָדִיל expresses firm, constant action; and יָד וּרְכָר means that she turns from this line of conduct on no side.

tribuendo; the former denotes the direction of the activity, the latter its nature and manner; both combine if we translate ita ut ... Regarding the origin of שִׁפְיָה and טֶהֶר (real possession), it would denote the being founded, thus substantia, and appears here, like the word in mediaeval Latin and Romanic (Ital. sustanza, Span. substancia), and like ὄσια and ὑπάρχοντα (τά ὑπάρχοντα) in classic Greek, to denote possessions and goods. But since this use of the word does not elsewhere occur (therefore Hitzig explains שִׁפְיָה = טֶהֶר, *I have it [= presto est]), and here, where Wisdom speaks, שִׁפְיָה connects itself in thought with נִשְׁמָע it will at least denote real property (as we also are wont to call not every kind of property, but only landed property, real possession), such possession as has real worth, and that not according to commercial exchange and price, but according to sound judgment, which applies a higher than the common worldly standard of worth. The Pasek between יָסָר and טֶהֶר is designed to separate the two Jods from each other, and has, as a consequence, for Developing the accentuation with Tarcha and Mercha (vid., *Accentssystem, vi. § 4; cf. Torath Emeth, p. 17, § 3). The carrying forward of the inf. with the finite, 21b, is as 1:27; 2:2, and quite usual.

Proverbs 8:22. Wisdom takes now a new departure, in establishing her right to be heard, and to be obeyed and loved by men. As the Divine King in Ps. 2 opposes to His adversaries the self-testimony: "I will speak concerning a decree! Jahve said unto me: Thou art my Son; this day have I begotten Thee;" so Wisdom here unfolds her divine patent of nobility: she originates with God before all creatures, and is the object of God's love and joy, as she also has the object of her love and joy on God's earth, and especially among the sons of men: "Jahve brought me forth as the beginning of His way,

The old translators render שֵׁפֶר (with Kametz by Dechi; vid., under Ps. 118:5) partly by verbs of creating (LXX ἐκτισε, Syr., Targ. גֶּרֶם), partly by verbs of acquiring (*Aquila, Symmachus, Theodotion, Venet. ἐκτίσσω; Jerome, possedit); Wisdom appears also as created, certainly not without reference to this passage, Sir. 1:4, προτέρα πάντων ἐκτισταα σοφία 1:9, αὐτὸς ἐκτισεν αὐτήν; 24:8, ὁ κτίσας με. In the christological controversy this word gained a dogmatic signification, for they proceeded generally on the identity of σοφία ὑποστατική (sapientia substantialis) with the hypostasis of the Son of God. The Arians used the ἐκτισα με as a proof of their doctrine of the filius non genitus, sed factus, i.e., of His existence before the world began indeed, but yet not from eternity, but originating in time; while, on the contrary, the orthodox preferred the translation ἐκτίσμα, and understood it of the co-eternal existence of the Son with the Father, and agreed with the ἐκτισα of the LXX by referring it not to the actual existence, but to the position, place of the Son (Athanasius: Deus me creavit regem or caput operum suorum; Cyrill.: non condidit secundum substantiam, sed constituie totius universi principium et fundamentum). But (1) Wisdom is not God, but is God's she has personal existence in the Logos of the N.T., but is not herself the Logos; she is the world-idea, which, once projected, is objective to God, not as a dead form, but as a living spiritual image; she is the archetype of the world, which, originating from God, stands before God, the world of the idea which forms the medium between the Godhead and the world of actual existence, the communicated spiritual power in the origination and the completion of the world as God designed it to be. This wisdom the poet here personifies; he does not speak of the person as Logos, but the further progress of the revelation points to her actual personification in the Logos. And (2) since to her the poet attributes an existence preceding the creation of the world, he thereby declares her to be eternal, for to be before the world is to be before time. For if he places her at the head of the creatures, as the first of them, so therewith he does not seek to make her a creature of this world having its commencement in time; he connects her origin with the origin of the creature only on this account, because that à priori refers and tends to the latter; the power which was before heaven and earth were, and which operated at the creation of the earth and of the heavens, cannot certainly fall under the category of the creatures around and above us. Therefore (3) the translation with ἐκτισαν has nothing against it, but it is different from the κτίσις of the heavens and the earth, and the poet has intentionally written not κένα, but κένα. Certainly קֶנָה, Arab. קֶנָה, like all the words used of creating, refers to one root-idea: that of forging (vid., under Gen. 4:22), as αὐτὸς δὲ κτισθείς does to that of cutting (vid., under Gen. 1:1); but the mark of a commencement in time does not affix itself to קֶנָה in the same way as it does to בְּרָא, which always expresses the divine production of that which has not hitherto existed. קֶנָה comprehends in it the meanings to create, and to create something for oneself, to prepare, parare (e.g., Ps. 139:13), and to prepare something for oneself, comparare, as κτίζειν and κτισθαι, both from shki, to build, the former expressed by struere, and the latter by sibi struere. In the קָנָה, then, there are the ideas, both that God produced wisdom, and that He made Himself to possess it; not certainly, however, as a man makes himself to possess wisdom from without, 4:7. But the idea of the bringing forth is here the nearest demanded by the connection. For מֵאָז נֶס דְּתִי (Syri., Targ., Luther), as Jerome also reads: Ita enim scriptum est: ADONAI CANANI BRESITH DERCHO (Ep. cxxl. ad Cyprian); but it is, as Job 40:19 shows, the second accusative of the object (LXX, Aquila, Symmachus, Theodotion). But if God made wisdom as the beginning of His way, i.e., of His creative efficiency (cf. Rev. 3:14 and Col. 1:15), the making is not to be thought of as acquiring, but as a bringing forth, revealing this creative efficiency of God, having it in view; and this is also confirmed by the ἐκ τὴν ἀκολουθίαν, κατασκευάσθαι, genui (foremost of His works) has to be regarded as a parallel second object. accusative. All the old translators interpret κένα as a preposition [before], but the usage of the language before us does not recognise it as such; this would be an Aramaism, for בְּרָא, Dan. 7:7, frequently (Syr., Targ.), is so used. But as בְּרָא signifies previous existence in space, and then in time (vid., Orelli, Zeit und Ewigkeit, p. 76), so it may be used of the object in which the previous existence appears, thus (after Sir. 1:4): προτέραν τῶν ἔργων αὐτοῦ (Hitzig).

Proverbs 8:23. A designation of the When? expressed first by נָס דְּתִי (Isa. 48:8, cf. 40:21), is further unfolded: "From everlasting was I set up, From the beginning, from the foundations of the earth."

That נָס כְּתִי cannot be translated: I was anointed = consecrated, vid., at Ps. 2:6. But the translation also: I was woven = wrought (Hitzig, Ewald, and previously one of the Greeks, ἔδιασθην), does not commend itself, for רֻקַּם (Ps. 139:15), used of the embryo, lies far from the metaphorical sense in which נָס דְּתִי = Arab. nasaj, texere, would here be translated of the origin of a person, and even of such a spiritual being as Wisdom; נֹס דְּתִי, as the LXX reads (ἐθεμιλοσέω), is not once used of such. Rightly Aquila, κατασκευάσθαι; Symmachus, προκεχείρισμα; Jerome, ordinata sum. Literally, but unintelligibly, the Gr. Venet. κέχυμαι, according to which (cf. Sir. 1:10) Böttcher: I was poured forth = formed, but himself acknowledging that this figure is not suitable to personification; nor is it at all likely that the author applied the word, used in this sense of idols, to the origin of Wisdom. The fact is, that נָס, used as seldom of the anointing or consecration of kings, as נָס הַנְּסוּכַּא (Ps. 21, a pillar), passes over, like נָשָׁא (אֶWISE), נָסִי (נָסִי), from the meaning of pouring out to that of placing and appointing; the mediating idea appears to be that of the pouring forth of the metal, since נָסִי, Dan. 11:8, like נֵס, signifies a molten image. The Jewish interpreters quite correctly remark, in comparing it with the princely name נָסִי [cf. Ps. 83:12] (although without etymological insight), that a placing in princely dignity is meant. Of the three synonyms of aeternitas a parte ante, מֵעולָם points backwards into the infinite distance, מִרֹאש into the beginning of the world, מִק דְׁמֵי־אָרֶץ not into the times which precede the origin of the earth, but into the oldest times of its gradual arising; this is impossible to render, in conformity with the Hebr. use of language: it is an extensive plur. of time, Böttcher, § 697. The מִן repeated does not mean that the origin and greatness of Wisdom are contemporaneous with the foundation of the world; but that when the world was founded, she was already an actual existence. Proverbs 8:24–26. This her existence before the world began is now set forth in yet more explicit statements:

24 “When there were as yet no floods was I brought forth, When as yet there were not fountains which abounded with water; 25 For before the mountains were settled, Before the hills was I brought forth, 26 While as yet He had not made land and plains, And the sum of the dust of the earth.” The description is poetical, and affords some room for imagination. By תְׁהומות are not intended the unrestrained primeval waters, but, as also 3:20, the inner waters, treasures of the earth; and consequently by מעיינות, not the fountains of the sea on this earth (Ewald, after Job 38:16), but he springs or places of springs (for מִעיִינָּה is n. loci to יָין, a well as an eye of the earth; vid., Gen. 16:7), by means of which the internal waters of the earth communicate themselves to the earth above (cf. Gen. 7:11 with 49:25). נִכְׁבָדֵי מֵעיִינָּה (abounding with water) is a descriptive epitheton to מֵעיִנות, which, notwithstanding its fem. plur., is construed as masc. (cf. 5:16). The Masora does not distinguish the thrice-occurring נִכְׁבָדְּי according to its form as written (Isa. 23:8, 9). The form נִכְׁבַדְי (which, like בָתִים, would demand Metheg) is to be rejected; it is everywhere to be written נִכְׁבָד (Ewald, § 214b) with Pathach, with Dagesh following; vid., Kimchi, Michlol 61b. Kimchi adds the gloss מעיני מים רבים, which the Gr. Venet., in accordance with the meaning of elsewhere, renders by πηγαῖς δεδοξασμένων ὑδάτων (as also Böttcher: the most honoured = the most lordly); but Melri, Immanuel, and others rightly judge that the adjective is here to be understood after Gen. 13:2, Job 14:21 (but in this latter passage does not mean “to be numerous”): loaded = endowed in rich measure.

Proverbs 8:25. Instead of בְׁאֵין, in (yet) non-existence (24), we have here טֶרֶם, a subst. which signifies cutting off from that which already exists (vid., at Gen. 2:5), and then as a particle nondum or antequam, with ב always antequam, and in v. 26 עָדָה, so long not yet (this also originally a substantive from עָדָה, in the sense of progress). With טֶרֶם (were settled) (as Job 38:6, from טָבָע, to impress into or upon anything, imprimere, infigere) the question is asked: wherein? Not indeed: in the depths of the earth, but as the Caraite Ahron b. Joseph answers, אל קרקע הים, in the bottom of the sea; for out of the waters they rise up, Ps. 104:8 (cf. at Gen. 1:9).

Proverbs 8:26. אֶרֶץ וְׁחוּצות is either, connecting the whole with its part: terra cum campis, or אֶרֶץ gains by this connection the meaning of land covered with buildings, while חוּצות the expanse of unoccupied land, or the free field outside the towns and villages (cf. בַר, Arab. barytt) (Fl.), vid., Job 5:10; 18:17 (where we have translated “in the steppe far and wide”); and regarding the fundamental idea, vid., above
I was there, When He measured out a circle for the mirror of the multitude of waters."

Again a sentence clothed with two designations of time. The adv. of place שָם is used, chiefly poetically, for זָמִים, εἰς τὸ εἴδημεν (Arab. thumm, in contradistinction to thamm, eo loco); but here it has the signification of place, which includes that of time: Wisdom was there when God created the world, and had then already long before that come into existence, like as the servant of Jahve, Isa. 48:16, with just such a שָם, says that He is there from the time that the history of nations received a new direction, beginning with Cyrus. θρόνος signifies to give a firm position or a definite direction. Thus Job 28:27 of Wisdom, whom the Creator places before Himself as a pattern (ideal); here, as Jer. 10:12, Ps. 65:7, of the setting up, restoring throughout the whole world. In the parallel member, כַּיּוֹם, corresponding to שָם, appears necessarily to designate the circle or the vault of the heavens (Job 22:14), which, according to the idea of the Hebrews, as in Homer, rests as a half-globe on the outermost ends of the disc of the earth surrounded with water, and thus lies on the waters. Vid., Hupfeld under Ps. 24:2. This idea of the ocean girdling the earth is introduced into the O.T. without its being sanctioned by it. The LXX (καὶ ὅτε ἀφώριζε τὸν ἁμαρτήματος ἀπὸ τήν ἀναίρεσαν) appears to understand θαῦμα τῆς θαύματος τῶν ὑδάτων above; but never has this meaning. יָם (Job 9:8; 36:30) might rather be interpreted of the ocean of the heavens. The passage in accordance with which this before us is to be expounded is Job 26:10: He has set a limit for the surface of the waters, i.e., describing over them a circle setting bounds to their region. So here, with the exchange of the functions of the two words; when He marked out a circle over the surface of the multitude of waters, viz., to appoint a fixed region (םָקָמ, Gen. 1:10) for them, i.e., the seas, fountains, rivers, in which the waters under the heavens spread over the earth. קָמָן signifies incidere, figere, to prescribe, to measure off, to consign, and directly to mark out, which is done by means of firm impressions of the graver’s tools. But here this verb is without the Dagesh, to distinguish between the infinitive and the substantive הָרָכָשׁ (his statute or limit); for correct texts have הָרָכָשׁ (Michlol 147a); and although a monosyllable follows, yet there is no throwing back of the tone, after the rule that words terminating in o in this case maintain their ultima accentuation (e.g., מַשֵּׁמַר, Num. 24:23). Fleischer also finally decides for the explanation: quum delinearet circulum super abysso, when He marked out the region of the sea as with the circle.

Proverbs 8:28, 29. In 28, 29, these two features of the figure of the creation of the world return (the beginning of the firmament, and the embankment of the under waters); hence we see that the discourse here makes a fresh start with a new theme: 28 “When He made firm the ether above, When He restrained the fountains of the waters; 29 When He set to the sea its bounds, That the waters should not pass their limits; When He settled the pillars of the earth; 30 Then was I with Him as director of the work, And was delighted day by day, Rejoicing always before Him, 31 Rejoicing in His earth, And having my delight in the children of men.”

We have, with Symmachus, translated שָחָקִים (from שָחָק, Arab. shak, to grind, to make thin) by αἰθέρα, for so the fine transparent strata of air above the hanging clouds are called—a poetic name of the firmament. The making firm אָמֹן is not to be understood locally, but internally of the spreading out of the firmament over the earth settled for continuance (an expression such as Ps. 78:23). In 28b the Masora notices the plur. עֵינות instead of לֵיָּה as unicum (cf. Michlol 191a); the transition of the sound is as in לֵיָּה from galajta.

The inf. עָזַז appears on the first look to require a transitive signification, as the LXX and the Targ., the Graec. Venet. and Luther (da er festiget die Brünnen der tieffen = when He makes firm the fountains of the deep) have rendered it. Elster accordingly believes that this signification must be maintained, because בְּחֻּקוֹ here introduces creative activity, and in itself is probably the transitive use of בְּחֻּקוֹ, as the Arab. ‘azz shows: when He set His עָז בְּחֻּקוֹ against the מים בְּחֻּקוֹ (Isa. 43:16). But the absence of the subject is in favour of the opinion that here, as everywhere else, it is intransitive; only we may not, with Hitzig, translate: when the fountains of the flood raged wildly; but, since 28b, if not a creative efficiency, must yet express a creative work, either as Ewald, with reference to מים עזים, fortress: when they became firm, or better as Fleischer, with reference to מים פִיו: when they broke forth with power, with strong fulness. Whether the suff. of רָקִיע, 29a, refers back to the sea or to Jahve, is decided after the parallel מים עזים. If this word is equivalent to its coast (cf. Ps. 104:9), then both suffixes refer to the sea; but the coast of the sea, or of a river, is called מים עזים, not כָּלְקֶס, which only means ostium (mouth), not ora. Also Isa. 19:7 will require to be translated: by the mouth of the Nile, and that מִים פִיו, Ps. 133:2, may denote the under edge, arises from this, that a coat has a mouth above as well as below, i.e., is open. Thus both suff. are to be referred to God, and מים עזים is to be determined after Job 23:12. The clause beginning with מים עזים corresponds in periodizing discourse to a clause with ut, Ewald, § 338. מֵיסֶרוֹ is the same form, only written plene, as v. 27, מֵיסֶרוֹ = מֵיסֶרוֹ = מֵיסֶרוֹ. בָּרָכָשׁ = בָּרָכָשׁ = בָּרָכָשׁ. The inf. absol. in an adverbial sense is a judicious idea, and אָמֹן, to endure, remains indeed in אָמֹן וְאָמֹן.
Hitzig, Bertheau, and Zöckler, lies also at the foundation of the ἀρμόζουσα of the LXX, αμὴν of the Syr., the cuncta componens of Jerome, and the designation of Wisdom as η τῶν πάντων τεχνιτίς of the Book of Wisdom 7:21. The workmaster is called אומן, for which, Cant. 7:2, אוּמָנ, or rather אוּמָן (ommán), Aram. and Mishn. אומָן; not, perhaps, as he whom one entrusts with something in whom one confides or may confide in a work (vid., Fleischer, loc.), but from אומן, to be firm, as one who is strong in his art, as perhaps also the right hand, which has the name ימין as being the artifex among the members. The word occurs also as an adjective in the sense of “experienced, skilful,” and does not form a fem. according to the use of the word in this case before us, only because handicraft (יוֹכָד) belongs to men, and not to women; also in the Greek, δημιουργός in the sense of το δημόσια (εἰς το δημόσιον ἐγραμμένος has no fem.; and in Lat., artifex is used as a substantive (e.g., in Pliny: artifex omnium natura), like an adj. of double gender. It is thus altogether according to rule that we read אוּמָן and not אוּמָנה (after the form בָּנֵדָה); also we would make a mistake if we translated the word by the German “Werkmeisterin” [work-mistress, directress] (Hitzig), for it is intended to be said that she took up the place of a workmaster with Him, whereby chiefly the artistic performances of a מְדִיסָה [artificer] are thought of. This self-designation of Wisdom is here very suitable; for after she has said that she was brought forth by God before the world was, and that she was present when it was created, this אומן now answers the question as to what God had in view when He gave to Wisdom her separate existence, and in what capacity she assisted in the creation of the world: it was she who transferred the creative thoughts originally existing in the creative will of God, and set in motion by His creative order, from their ideal into their real effectiveness, and, as it were, artistically carried out the delineations of the several creatures; she was the mediating cause, the demiurgic power which the divine creative activity made use of, as is said, 3:19, “Jahve has by Wisdom founded the earth,” and as the Jerusalem Targ. Gen. 1:1, in connection with Prov. 8:22, translates: בְׁחוּכְׁמָא בְׁרָא יְׁיָ יַת שְׁמ יָא וְׁיַת אָמִּין.

But—this is now the question—does the further unfolding of the thoughts here agree with this interpretation of אָמִין? That we may not misunderstand what follows, we must first of all represent to ourselves, that if אָמִין meant the foster-child, Wisdom could not yet, in what follows, be thought of as a little child (Num. 11:12), for that would be an idea without any meaning; to rejoice [spieilen = play] is certainly quite in accordance with youth, as 2 Sam. 2:14 shows (where שָׁאוּם יָפָנִים is said of the sportive combat of youthful warriors before the captain), not exclusively little children. So, then, we must guard against interpreting שָׁשָׁעַים, with the LXX and Syr., in the sense of שָׁשָׁעַים פֵּנִים, — an interpretation which the Targ., Jerome, the Graev. Venet., and Luther have happily avoided; for mention is not made here of what Wisdom is for Jahve, but of what she is in herself. The expression is to be judged after Ps. 109:4 (cf. Gen. 12:2), where Hitzig rightly translates, “I am wholly prayer;” but Böttcher, in a way characteristic of his mode of interpretation, prefers, “I am ointment” (vid., Neue Aehrenlese, No. 1222). The delight is meant which this mediating participation in God’s creating work imparted to her—joy in the work in which she was engaged. The pluralet. שָׁשָׁעַים is to be understood here, not after Jer. 13:20, but after Isa. 11:8, Ps. 119:70, where its root-word, the Pilpel שֵׂשֶׁעַים (proceeding from the primary meaning of caressing, demulcere), signifies intransitively: to have his delight somewhere or in anything, to delight oneself,—a synonym to the idea of play (cf. Aram. אשׁשׁ, Ethpe. to play, Ethpa. to chatter); for play is in contrast to work, an occupation which has enjoyment in view. But the work, i.e., the occupation, which aims to do something useful, can also become a play if it costs no strenuous effort, or if the effort which it costs passes wholly into the background in presence of the pleasure which it yields. Thus Wisdom daily, i.e., during the whole course of creation, went forth in pure delight; and the activity with which she translated into fact the creative thoughts was a joyful noise in the sight of God, whose commands she obeyed with childlike devotion; cf. 2 Sam. 6:21, where David calls his dancing and leaping before the ark of the covenant a שָׁשָׁעַים פֵּנִים. But by preference, her delight was in the world, which is illustrated from the Persian Minokhired, which personifies Wisdom, and, among other things, says of her: “The creation of the earth, and its mingling with water, the springing up and the growth of the trees, all the different colours, the odour, the taste, and that which is pleasing in everything—all that is chiefly the endowment and the performance of Wisdom.” She also there says that she was before all celestial and earthly beings, the first with Ormuzd, and that all that is celestial and earthly arose and also remains in existence by her. But the earth was the dearest object of her delight in the whole world; to help in establishing it (Prov. 3:19) was her joyful occupation; to fashion it, and to provide it with the multiplicity of existences designed for it, was the most pleasant part of her creative activity. For the earth is the abode of man, and the heart-pleasure of Wisdom was with יִשָׁמֵע פֵּנִים the children of men; with them she found her high enjoyment, these were her peculiar and dearest sphere of activity.

Proverbs 8:31. Since the statements of Wisdom, as to her participation in the creation of the world, are at this point brought to a close, in this verse there is set forth the intimate relation into which she thus entered to the earth and to mankind, and which she has continued to sustain to the present day. She turned her love to the earth for the sake of man, and to man not merely as a corporeal, but especially as a spiritual being, to whom she can disclose her heart, and whom, if he receives her, she can bring back to God (Book of Wisdom 7:27). There are not here express references to Gen. 1 or 2. In 32, we have not to think of the six days of creation. But inasmuch as the whole description goes down to the extent of being an object of desire from her mediating place between God and the world, she begins with this verse (as 7:24; 5:7) the hortatory paränetische concluding part of her discourse: “And now, ye sons, hearken unto me, Blessing (v. 32b) following according to the Masora, we have to write אֲשֶׁר (אשֶּר) with Mercha, and on the first syllable Gaja (vid., Baer’s Torath Emeth, pp. 26, 29; cf. under Ps. 1:1). לְשׁוֹנָה signifies watch, not in the sense of ad vigilandum, but vigilando, as Isa. 5:22; 30:1; Ewald, § 380d. In contradistinction to עדסי והרָגִים, which denote watching as the consequence of wakefulness or an interruption of sleep, שָקַד signifies watching as a condition, and that as one which a person willingly maintains (Psychol. p. 275), the intentional watching (cf. Arab. shakidha, to fix penetrating eyes upon anything), with לְשׁוֹן of the place and object and aim (Jer. 5:6; cf. Arab.علی, Job 8:6). The plurals שָקַד (fores, as Jer. 1:18, maenia) and שָקַד are amplifying plurs. of extension, suggesting the idea of a palace or temple; שָקַד (postes portae, in quibus cardines ejus moveantur, from וְׁא ל־תִפְׁרָע, to move hither and thither) is intended to indicate that he to whom the discourse refers holds himself in closest nearness to the entrance, that he might not miss the moment when it is opened, or when she who dwells there presents herself to view. “The figure is derived from the service of a court: Wisdom is honoured by her disciples, as a queen or high patroness; cf. Samachchari’s Golden Necklaces, Pr. 35: Blessed is the man who knocks only at

The imper. אֲשֶׁר, 33a (et sapite), is to be judged after 4:4, 32b, cf. the Chethib, 13:20; one sees this from the words which follow, to which, after 15:32, as at 4:13, to pronounce אֲשֶׁר is to be placed as object: and throw not to the winds (ne missam faciatis; vid., regarding ו חֲכָנ 1:25), viz., instruction (disciplinam).

Proverbs 8:34. The summons אֲשֶׁר here following is related to it as assigning a motive, like the אֱלֻי (v. 32b) following according to the Masora, we have to write אֲשֶׁר with Mercha, and on the first syllable Gaja (vid., Baer’s Torath Emeth, pp. 26, 29; cf. under Ps. 1:1). לְשׁוֹנָה signifies watch, not in the sense of ad vigilandum, but vigilando, as Isa. 5:22; 30:1; Ewald, § 380d. In contradistinction to עדסי והרָגִים, which denote watching as the consequence of wakefulness or an interruption of sleep, שָקַד signifies watching as a condition, and that as one which a person willingly maintains (Psychol. p. 275), the intentional watching (cf. Arab. shakidha, to fix penetrating eyes upon anything), with לְשׁוֹן of the place and object and aim (Jer. 5:6; cf. Arab. עָלִי, Job 8:6). The plurals שָקַד (fores, as Jer. 1:18, maenia) and שָקַד are amplifying plurs. of extension, suggesting the idea of a palace or temple; שָקַד (postes portae, in quibus cardines ejus moveantur, from וְׁא ל־תִפְׁרָע, to move hither and thither) is intended to indicate that he to whom the discourse refers holds himself in closest nearness to the entrance, that he might not miss the moment when it is opened, or when she who dwells there presents herself to view. “The figure is derived from the service of a court: Wisdom is honoured by her disciples, as a queen or high patroness; cf. Samachchari’s Golden Necklaces, Pr. 35: Blessed is the man who knocks only at

Proverbs 8:32. After that Wisdom has shown in vv. 22–31 howworthy her fellowship is of being an object of desire from her mediating place between God and the world, she begins with this verse (as 7:24; 5:7) the hortatory paränetische concluding part of her discourse: “And now, ye sons, hearken unto me, And salvation to those who keep my ways!”

The LXX omits v. 33, and obviates the disturbing element of הַדְּלָתּוֹת, 32b, arising from its, by a transposition of the stichs. But this is as Job 37:12, where דְּלָתּוֹת is wholly, as קָרָה, and the like, an original accusative.

Proverbs 8:33–36. The summons 32a, and its reason 32b, are repeated in these verses which follow:

33 “Hear instruction, and be wise, And withdraw not.
34 Blessed is the man who hears me, Watching daily at my gates, Waiting at the posts of my doors!
35 For whosoever findeth me has found life, And has obtained favour from Jahve;
Proverbs 8:35. This verse gives the reason for pronouncing those happy who honour Wisdom. The Chethîb is כִי מֹצְׁא י מֹצְׁאֵי ח יִים, but the passing over into the sing. 35b is harsh and objectionable; the Kerî rightly regards the secondמצאי as a mistaken repetition of the first, and substitutes כי מֹצְׁאִי מָצָא חיים, with which the חוטְׁאִי (v. 36a) of the antithesis agrees.

Proverbs 8:36. חוטְׁאִי may, it is true, mean “my sinning one = he who sins against me (חוטֵא לִי),” as קם י is frequently equivalent to קם עלי, but the contrast ofמצאי places it beyond a doubt thatמצאי stands here in its oldest signification: to miss something after which one runs (Prov. 19:2), seeks (Job 5:24), at which one shoots (Hiph. Judg. 20:16), etc., id non attingere quod petitur, Arab. âkhta, to miss, opposite to âṣab, to hit (Fl.). Just because it is the idea of missing, which, ethnically applied, passes over into that of sin and guilt (of fault, mistake, false step, “Fehls, Fehlers, Fehltritts”), can stand not only with the accusative of the subject in regard to which one errs, Lev. 5:16, but also with the accusative of the subject which one forfeits, i.e., misses and loses, 20:2, cf. Hab. 2:10; so that not only נאשׁ תִּשְׁאָל, but also תִּשְׁאַל (animal suam nihili facit), is synonymous with תִּשְׁאַל (animalae suae h. e. sibi ipsi injuriam facit). Whoever misses Wisdom by taking some other way than that which leads to her, acts suicidally: all they who wilfully hate (Piel) wisdom love death, for wisdom is the tree of life, 3:18; wisdom and life are one, 35a, as the Incarnate Wisdom saith, John 8:51, “If a man keep my sayings, he shall never see death.” In the Logos, Wisdom has her self-existence; in Him she has her personification, her justification, and her truth.

Fifteenth Introductory Mashal Discourse, 9

A Double Invitation: That of Wisdom, and that of Her Rival, Folly

Proverbs 9. The preceding discourse pronounces those happy who, having taken their stand at the portal of Wisdom, wait for her appearance and her invitation. There is thus a house of Wisdom as there is a house of God, Ps. 84:11; and if now the discourse is of a house of Wisdom, and of an invitation to a banquet therein (like that in the parable, Matt. 22, of the invitation to the marriage feast of the king’s son), it is not given without preparation:

1 Wisdom hath builded for herself an house, Hewn out her seven pillars;
2 Hath slaughtered her beasts, mingled her wine; Hath also spread her table;
3 Hath sent out her maidens; she waiteth On the highest points of the city.

Regarding החכְּמות, vid., at 1:20. It is a plur. excellentiae, which is a variety of the plur. extensivus. Because it is the expression of a plural unity, it stands connected (as for the most part also אלהים, Deus) with the sing. of the predicate. The perfects enumerate all that Wisdom has done to prepare for her invitation. If we had a parable before us, the perf. would have run into the historical ו תִּנְהָה בְּנֵיהֶם לְבָא בִּית, but it is, as the Kether shows, an allegorical picture of the arrangement and carrying out of a present reality. Instead of הביתה פֵּינָה תָּלָה בְּנֵיהֶם, for the house is already in its origin represented as hers, and 1b is to be translated: she has hewn out her seven pillars (Hitzig); more correctly: her pillars, viz., seven (after the scheme (דִּבָּתָם רָעָה, Gen. 37:2); but the construction is closer. שבעה is, altogether like Ex. 25:37, the accusative of the second object, or of the predicate after the species of verba, with the idea: to make something, turn into something, which take to themselves a double accusative, Gesen. § 139, 2: \textit{excidit columnas suas ita ut septem essent}. Since the figure is allegorical, we may not dispense with the interpretation of the number seven by the remark, “No emphasis lies in the number” (Bertheau). First, we must contemplate architecturally the house with seven pillars: “They are,” as Hitzig rightly remarks, "the pillars of the מִסְדוֹר (porch) [vid. Bachmann under Judg. 3:23, and Wetstein under Ps. 144:12, where יִשָּׁב is used of the cutting out and hewing of wood, as יִשָּׁב of the cutting out and hewing of stone] in the inner court, which bore up the gallery of the first (and second) floors: four of these in the corners and three in the middle of three sides; through the midst of these the way led into the court of the house-floor [the area].” But we cannot agree with Hitzig in maintaining that, with the seven pillars of 8 and 9, the author looks back to the first seven chapters (Arab. ābwab, gates) of this book; we think otherwise of the component members of this Introduction to the Book of Proverbs; and to call the sections of a book “gates, שערים,” is a late Arabico-Jewish custom, of which there is found no trace whatever in the O.T. To regard them also, with Heidenheim (cf. Dante’s Prose Writings, translated by Streckfuss, p. 77), as representing the seven liberal arts (שבע חכמות) is impracticable; for this division of the 	extit{artes liberales} into seven, consisting of the 	extit{Trivium} (Grammar, Rhetoric, and Dialectics) and 	extit{Quadrivium} (Music, Arithmetic, Geometry, and Astronomy), is not to be looked for within the old Israelitish territory, and besides, these were the sciences of this world which were so divided; but wisdom, to which the discourse here refers, is wholly a religious-moral subject. The Midrash thinks of the seven heavens (שבעה רקיעים), or the seven climates or parts of the earth (שבעה ארצות), as represented by them; but both references require artificial combinations, and have, as also the reference to the seven churches (Vitringa and Chr. Ben. Michaelis), this against them, that they are rendered probable neither from these introductory proverbial discourses, nor generally from the O.T. writings. The patristic and middle-age reference to the seven sacraments of the church passes sentence against itself; but the old interpretation is on the right path, when it suggests that the seven pillars are the seven gifts of the Holy Ghost. The seven-foldness of the manifestation of the Spirit, already brought near by the seven lamps of the sacred candelabra (the מְנורָה, is established by Isa. 11:2 (vid., l.c.); and that Wisdom is the possessor and dispenser of the Spirit she herself testifies, 1:23. Her Spirit is the “Spirit of wisdom;” but at the same time, since, born of God, she is mediatrix between God and the world, also the “Spirit of Jahve,” He is the “spirit of understanding,” the “spirit of counsel,” and the “spirit of might” (Isa. 11:2); for she says, 8:14, “Counsel is men, and reflection; I am understanding, I have strength.” He is also the “spirit of knowledge,” and the “spirit of the fear of the Lord” (Isa. 11:2); for fear and the knowledge of Jahve are, according to 9:14, the beginning of wisdom, and essentially wisdom itself.

Proverbs 9:2. If thus the house of Wisdom is the place of her fellowship with those who honour her, the system of arrangements made by her, so as to disclose and communicate to her disciples the fulness of her strength and her gifts, then it is appropriate to understand by the seven pillars the seven virtues of her nature communicating themselves (apocalyptically expressed, the ἑπτὰ πνεύματα), which bear up and adorns the dwelling which she establishes among men. Flesh and wine are figures of the nourishment for the mind and the heart which is found with wisdom, and, without asking what the flesh and the wine specially mean, are figures of the manifold enjoyment which makes at once strong and happy. The segolate n. verbale ἄκρατον, which 7:22 denoted the slaughtering or the being slaughtered, signifies here, in the concrete sense, the slaughtered ox; Michaelis rightly remarks that in contradistinction to ἄκρατον, is the usual word for mactatio extrasacrificialis. Regarding ἄκρατον, vid., under Isa. 5:22; it is not meant of the mingling of wine with sweet scents and spices, but with water (warm or cold), and signifies simply to make the wine palatable (as κεραννύναι, temperare); the LXX ἐκκέρασεν ἄκρατον ἐκκέρασεν ἄκρατον, but ἐκκέρασεν ἄκρατον, but κεκερασμένον ἄκρατον, Rev. 14:10. The frequently occurring phrase ἀκρωτηρίον signifies to prepare the table (from ἄκρατον, properly the unrolled and outspread leather cover), viz., by the placing out of the dishes (vid., regarding ἄκρατον, under Gen. 22:9).

Proverbs 9:3. The verb ἄκρατεῖν, when a feast is spoken of, means to invite; κακός ἄκρατος is the guests. The LXX translates τοὺς ἑαυτῆς δούλους τοὺς ἑαυτῆς δούλους, but certainly here the disciples are meant who already are in the service of Wisdom; but that those who are invited to Wisdom are thought of as feminine, arises from the tasteful execution of the picture. The invitation goes forth to be known to all far and wide, so that in her servants Wisdom takes her stand in the high places of the city. Instead of ἄκρατον, δοῦλον, 8:2; 1:21, there is used here the expression ἀκρωτηρίον. We must distinguish the Semitic הַגָּף (= ganf), wings, from הָנָבָה = בנב to cover, and הָנָבָה = הָנָבָה, the bark, which is derived either from הָנָבָה or הָנָבָה, Arab. jnf, convexus, incurvus et extrinsecus gibber fuit, hence originally any surface bent outwards or become crooked (cf. the roots cap, caf, הקפ חף הפ וב, etc.), here the summit of a height (Fl.); thus not super alis (after the analogy of πτερύγιον, after Suidas = ἀκρωτηρίον), but super dorsis (as in Lat. we say dorsum montis, and also viae).

Proverbs 9:4–6. Now follows the street-sermon of Wisdom inviting to her banquet:

4 Who is simple? let him come hither!
Whoso wanteth understanding, to him she saith:

6 Cease, ye simple, and live, And walk straight on in the way of understanding.”

The question מי פֶתִי (thus with Munach, not with Makkeph, it is to be written her and at v. 16; vid., Baer’s Torath Emeth, p. 40), quis est imperitus, is, as Ps. 25:12, only a more animated expression for quisquis est. The retiring into the background of the ἀκρωτηρίον (servants), and the immediate appearance of Wisdom herself, together with the interruption, as was to be expected, of her connected discourses by the סְפֵרִים are signs that the pure execution of the allegorical representation is her at an end. Hitzig seeks, by the rejection of vv. 4, 5, 7–10, to bring in a logical sequence; but these interpolations which he cuts out are yet far more inconceivable than the proverbial discourses in the mouth of Wisdom, abandoning the figure of a banquet, which besides are wholly in the spirit of the author of this book. That Folly invites to her, v. 16, in the same words as are used by Wisdom, v. 4, is not strange; both address themselves to the simple (vid., on יָפִי at 1:4) and those devoid of understanding (as the youth, 7:7), and seek to bring to their side those who are accessible to evil as to good, and do not dully distinguish between them, which the emulating devertat huc of both imports. The fourth verse points partly backwards, and partly forwards; 4a has its introduction in the אָמְרָה לו מִי פֶתִי of v. 3; on the contrary, 4b is itself the introduction of what follows. The setting forth of the nom. absolutus המִי פֶתִי is conditioned by the form of 4a; the מ is (cf. 4a) is continued (in 4b) without its needing to be supplied: excors (= si quis est excors) dicit ei (not dixit, because syntactically subordinating itself to the καταρχάς). It is a nominal clause, whose virtual predicate (the devoid of understanding is thus and thus addressed by her) as in v. 16.

Proverbs 9:5. The plur. of the address shows that the simple (inexperienced) and the devoid of understanding are regarded as essentially one and the same class of men. The ב after לָחֶם and שָתָה proceeds neither from the idea of eating into (hewing into) anything, nor from the eating with anything, i.e., inasmuch as one makes use of it, nor of pampering oneself with anything (as ב עֲשָׂרָה; Michaelis at last makes a right decision (cf. Lev. 22:11, Judg. 13:16, Job 21:25, and particularly ב מָסַי, Ps. 141:4): communicationem et participationem in re fruenda denotat; the LXX φάγετε τῶν ἐμῶν άρτων. The attributive מָסַי stands with backward reference briefly for מְסַי. That Wisdom, v. 2, offers flesh and wine, but here presents bread and wine, is no contradiction, which would lead us, with Hitzig, critically to reject vv. 4 and 5 as spurious; לֶהֶם is the most common, all-comprehensive name for nourishment. Bertheau suitably compares Jahve’s invitation, Isa. 55:1, and that of Jesus, John 6:35.

Proverbs 9:6. That פְּתָאִין is a plur. with abstract signification (according to which the four Greek and the two Aramaean translations render it; the Graec. Venet., however, renders τοῖς νηπίοις) is improbable; the author forms the abstr. v. 13 otherwise, and the expression here would be doubtful. For פְּתָאִין מַתְאוּדַס is here to be rendered as the object-accus.: leave the simple, i.e., forsake this class of men (Ahron b. Joseph; Umbreit, Zöckler); or also, which we prefer (since it is always a singular thought that the “simple” should leave the “simple”), as the vocative, and so that means means not absolutely “leave off” (Hitzig), but so that the object to be thought of is to be taken from מַתְאוּדַס: give up, leave off, viz., the simple (Immanuel and others; on the contrary, Rashi, Meîri, and others, as Ewald, Bertheau, decide in favour of מְתָאֹדַס as n. abstr.Æ). Regarding וּוִחְּי, for et vivetis, vid., 4:4. The LXX, paraprasing: ἔνα εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα βασιλέωςσίτες. אִשֶּׁר נִתְנָה is related to אִשֶּׁר אָשְׁר, the Piel, not in its intrans. (vid., 4:14) but in its trans. sense (Isa. 1:17; 3:12, etc.), shows that the idea of going straight out and forwards connects itself therewith. The peculiarity of the פֶּדֶר is just the absence of character.

Proverbs 9:7–9. In what now follows the discourse of Wisdom is continued; wherefore she directs her invitation to the simple, i.e., those who have not yet decided, and are perhaps susceptible of that which is better:

7 “He who correcteth a scorner draweth upon himself insult; And he who communicateth instruction to a scorner, it is a dishonour to him.

8 Instruct not a scorner, lest he hate thee; Give instruction to the wise, so he will love thee.

9 Give to the wise, and he becomes yet wiser; Give knowledge to the upright, and he gains in knowledge.”

Zöckler thinks that herewith the reason for the summons to the “simple” to forsake the fellowship of men of their own sort, is assigned (he explains 6α as Ahron b. Joseph: מַתְאוּדַס מְתָאֹדַס); but his remark, that, under the term “simple,” mockers and wicked persons are comprehended as belonging to the same category, confounds two sharply distinguished classes of men. הָלֶם is the freethinker who mocks at religion and virtue (vid., 1:22), and לֵץ the godless who shuns restraint by God and gives himself up to the unbridled impulse to evil. The course of thought in v. 7 and onwards shows why Wisdom, turning from the wise, who already are hers, directs herself only to the simple, and those who are devoid of understanding: she must pass over the מַתְאוּדַס and Proverbs 9:8. The is that of consequence (apodosis imperativi): so he will love thee (as also Ewald now translates), not that he may love thee (Syr., Targ.), for the author speaks here only of the consequence, not of something else, as an object kept in view. The exhortation influences the mocker less than nothing, so much the more it bears fruit with the wise. Thus the proverb is confirmed habenti dabitur, Matt. 13:12; 25:29.

Proverbs 9:9. If anything is to be supplied to , it is that Wisdom is not merely an intellectual power, it is a moral quality; in this is founded her receptivity of instruction, her embracing of every opportunity for self-improvement. She is humble; for, without self-will and self-sufficiency, she makes God’s will her highest and absolutely binding rule (Prov. 3:7).

Proverbs 9:10. These words naturally follow:

10 “The beginning of wisdom is the fear of Jahve, And the knowledge of the Holy One is understanding.”

This is the highest principle of the Chokma, which stands (Prov. 1:7) as a motto at the beginning of the Book of Proverbs. The LXX translates יתנ诬י there (Prov. 1:7), and here, by τοὐχετέ, Gusset distinguishes the two synonyms as pars optima and primus actus; but the former denotes the fear of God as that which stands in the uppermost place, to which all that Wisdom accomplishes subordinates itself; the latter as that which begins wisdom, that which it proposes to itself in its course. With יתנ诬י as the internally multiplicative plur.
(Dietrich, Abhandlungen, pp. 12, 45), as 30:3, Josh. 24:9, Hos. 12:1, of God, the "Holy, holy, holy" (Isa. 6:3), i.e., Him who is absolutely Holy. Michaelis inaccurately, following the ancients, who understood not this non-numerical plur.: cognitio quae sanctos facit et sanctis propria est. The דָּעַת, parallel with יִרְשָׁהוּ, is meant of lively practical operative knowledge, which subordinates itself to this All-holy God as the normative but unapproachable pattern.

Proverbs 9:11. The singular reason for this proverb of Wisdom is now given: "For by me will thy days become many, And the years of thy life will be increased."

Incorrectly Hitzig: "and years of life will increase to thee;" יִוסָפָה is always and everywhere (e.g., also Job 38:11) transitive. In the similar passage, 3:2, יוסיפו had as its subject the doctrine of Wisdom; here הבמה and יבמות it is not practicable to interpret as subj., since 11α Wisdom is the subject discourseing—the expression follows the scheme, dicunt eos = dicuntur, as e.g., Job 7:3; Gesen. § 137—a concealing of the operative cause, which lies near, where, as 2:22, the discourse is of severe judgment, thus: they (viz., the heavenly Powers) will grant to thee years of life (חֵי יְמִין in a pregnant sense, as 3:2) in rich measure, so that constantly one span comes after another. But in what connection of consequence does this stand with the contents of the proverb, v. 10? The ancients say that the clause with כי refers back to v. 5f. The vv. 7–10 (according also to Fl.) are, as it were, parenthetic. Hitzig rejects these verses as an interpolation, but the connection of v. 11 with 5f. retains also something that is unsuitable: "steps forward on the way of knowledge, for by me shall thy days become many;" and if, as Hitzig supposes, v. 12 is undoubtedly genuine, whose connection with v. 11 is in no way obvious, then also will the difficulty of the connection of vv. 7–10 with the preceding and the succeeding be no decisive mark of the want of genuineness of this course of thought. We have seen how the progress of v. 6 to 7 is mediated: the invitation of Wisdom goes forth to the receptive, with the exclusion of the irrecoverable. And v. 11 is related to v. 10, as the proof of the cause from the effect. It is the fear of God with which Wisdom begins, the knowledge of God in which above all it consists, for by it is fulfilled the promise of life which is given to the fear of God, 10:27; 14:27; 19:23, cf. Deut. 4:40, and to humility, which is bound up with it. 10:17.

Proverbs 9:12. This wisdom, resting on the fear of God, is itself a blessing to the wise: "If thou art wise, thou art wise for thyself; And if thou mockest, thou alone shalt bear it."

The LXX, with the Syr., mangle the thought of 12α, for they translate: if thou art wise for thyself, so also thou wilt be wise for thy neighbour. The dat. commodi יִשים means that it is for the personal advantage of the wise to be wise. The contrast expressed by Job 22:2f.: not profitable to God, but to thyself (Hitzig), is scarcely intended, although, so far as the accentuation is antithetic, it is the nearest. The perf. יותֵה לְהֵמָּה is the hypothetical; Gesen. § 126, 1. To bear anything, viz., anything sinful (חֵטָא or עָון), is equivalent to, to atone for it, Job 34:2, cf. Num. 9:13, Ezek. 23:35. Also 12β is a contrast scarcely aimed at. Wisdom is its own profit to man; libertinism is its own disgrace. Man decides, whenever he prefers to be wise, or to be a mocker of religion and of virtue, regarding his own weal and woe. With this nota bene the discourse of Wisdom closes.

Proverbs 9:13–15. The poet now brings before us another figure, for he personifies Folly working in opposition to Wisdom, and gives her a feminine name, as the contrast to Wisdom required, and thereby to indicate that the seduction, as the 13th proverbial discourse (Prov. 7) has shown, appears especially in the form of degraded womanhood:

13 The woman Folly [Frau Thorheit] conducts herself boisterously, Wantonness, and not knowing anything at all;

14 And hath seated herself at the door of her house, On a seat high up in the city, 15 To call to those who walk in the way, Who go straight on their path.

The connection of בַּל־יָדְּעָה מָה is genitival, and the genitive is not, as in 6:24, specifying, but appositional, as in חָצָה מְׁיָשְׁרָה, v. 18 (vid., under Isa. 1:8). מְׁיָשְׁרָה [boisterous] is pred., as 7:11: object is sensual, and therefore her appearance excites passionately, overcoming the resistance of the mind by boisterousness. In 13b it is further said who and how she is. פְׁתִיוּת, she is called as wantonness personified. This abstract פְׁתִיוּת, derived from פְׁתִי, must be vocalized as פְׁתִיוּת. Hitzig thinks it is written with a on account of the following u sound, but this formation always ends in ijjûth, not aijjûth. But as from היה הוא as well as היה הוא is formed, so from היה היא as well as היה היא is preferred (instead of which פְׁתִיוּת is preferred) can be formed; Kimchi rightly (Michloï 181a) presents the word under the form מְׁיָשְׁרָה פְׁתִיוּת. With בַּל־יָדְּעָה מָה וּבַל־יָדְּעָה מָה (Prov. 14:7) poetic, and stronger than היה הוא, the designation of the subject is continued; the words גָּזִילָה פְׁתִיוּת (thus with Mercha and without Makkeph following, which is to be written, after Codd. and old editions) have the value of an adjective: and not knowing anything at all, as Num. 23:3, Job 13:13, and here in the negative clause, as in prose מְׁיָשְׁרָה, i.e., devoid of all knowledge. The Targ. translates explanatorily: not recognising, the good; and the LXX substitutes: she knows not shame, which, according to Hitzig, supposes the word כָּלָה, approved of by him; but כָּלָה means always pudectio, not pudor. To know nothing would be equivalent to, to let no shameing from without influence one; for shamelessness the poet would have made use of the expression פְׁתִיוּתָה, פְׁתִיוּתָה בְּלָיָדְּעָה, פְׁתִיוּתָה. In the declaration regarding the subject beginning with מְׁיָשְׁרָה, the declaration regarding the subject beginning with מְׁיָשְׁרָה is continued: Folly also has a house in which works of folly are carried one, and has set herself down by the door (Prov. 8:3) of this house; she sits there always. Most interpreters here think on a throne (LXX ἐπὶ δίποτα, used especially of the sella curulis); and Zöckler, as Umbreit, Hitzig, and others, connecting genitiv. therewith, changes in 14b the scene, for he removes the “high throne of the city” from the door of the house to some place elsewhere. But the sitting is in contrast to the standing and going on the part of Wisdom on the streets preaching (Evagrius well renders: in moli ignavaque sella); and if פְׁתִיוּת and house-door are named along with each other, the former is a seat before the latter, and the accentuation rightly separates by Mugrash changes in מְׁיָשְׁרָה מַרְגֶּרֶת מְּיָשְׁרָה מַרְגֶּרֶת from מְׁיָשְׁרָה מַרְגֶּרֶת מַרְגֶּרֶת. “According to the accents and the meaning, the name מְׁיָשְׁרָה מַרְגֶּרֶת is the acc. loci: on the high places of the city, as 8:2f.” (Fl.). They are the high points of the city, to which, as Wisdom, v. 3, 8:2, so also Folly, her rival (wherefore Eccles. 10:6 does not appertain to this place), invites followers to herself. She sits before her door to call עִבְרֵי יִרְדָּם (with Munach, as in Cod. 1294 and old editions, without the Makkeph), those who go along the way (genitive connection with the supposition of the accusative construction, transire viam, as 2:7), to call (invite) יִרְדָּם מְּיָשְׁרָה יִרְדָּם מְּיָשְׁרָה (to be pointed with מְרָפָת and Gaja going before, according to Ben-Asher’s rule; vid., Methegesetz. § 20), those who make straight their path, i.e., who go straight on, directly before them (cf. Isa. 57:2). The participial construction (the schemes amans Dei and amans Deum), as well as that of the verb קָרֵאת (first with the dat. and then with the accus.), interchange.

Proverbs 9:16, 17. The woman, who in her own person serves as a sign to her house, addresses those who pass by in their innocence (פת היי, 2 Sam. 15:11):

16 “Whoso is simple, let him turn in hither!”

And if any one is devoid of understanding, she saith to him:
17 “Stolen waters taste sweet, And the bread of secrecy is pleasant.”

חָסֶר־לב (folly, simplicity) has a side accessible to wisdom and its contrary: Wisdom is connected with the one side, and Folly with the other. And as the חסר־לב offers a vacuum to wisdom which may perhaps be filled with the right contents, so is this vacuum welcome to Folly, because it meets there no resistance. In this sense, v. 16 is like v. 4 (excepting the addition of a connecting ו and of a concluding ו: et si quis excors, tum dicit ei); the word is the same in both, but the meaning, according to the two speakers, is different. That to which they both invite is the pleasure of her fellowship, under the symbol of eating and drinking; in the one case it is intellectual and spiritual enjoyment, in the other sensual. That wisdom offers (Prov. 9:5) bread and wine, and Folly water and bread, has its reason in this, that the particular pleasure to which the latter invites is of a sensual kind; for to drink water out of his own or out of another fountain is (Prov. 3:15–20) the symbol of intercourse in married life, or of intercourse between the unmarried, particularly of adulterous intercourse. מִים גְׁנוּבִים (correct texts have it thus, without the Makkeph) is sexual intercourse which is stolen from him who has a right thereto, thus carnal intercourse with אֵשֶת אִיש; and מִים סְתָרִים fleshly lust, which, because it is contrary to the law, must seek (cf. furtem, secret love intrigue) concealment (Deuteronomy 32:22); they have forsaken the fellowship of the life and of the love of God, and have sunk into the deepest destruction. The house of infamy into which Folly allures does not only lead to hell, it is hell itself; and they who permit themselves to be thus befooled are like wandering corpses, and already on this side of death are in the realm of wrath and of the curse.

First Collection of Solomonic Proverbs, 10:1–22:16

Proverbs 10:1–22:16. The superscription, מִשְׁלֵי שְׁלֹמֹה, here shows that now we have reached that which the title of the book, 1:1–6, presented to view. Here we have the commencement of that collection of Solomonic Proverbs which under this title forms, together with the introduction, 1:7–9:18, the Older Book of Proverbs. The introduction is disproportionately long. It is the manner of the editor to extend himself in length and breadth; and besides, an educational zeal in behalf of youth, and his aim, which was without doubt to put them on their guard against certain prevailing moral evils of his time, make him thus persuasive; and if he detains his readers so long from the proper Solomonic Proverbs, yet this might be excused from the circumstance, that though his introduction does not strictly consists of Proverbs of Solomon, yet it consists of proverbs after the manner of Solomon, i.e., of proverbs which, as to their contents and form, take their structure from the pattern of those of Solomonic authorship.

In this introduction, 1–9, there are larger sections of interconnected thoughts having one common aim. Even in 6:1–19 there are manifestly three proverbial discourses distinguished from one another, shorter indeed, yet containing one fundamental thought. Such proverbs as are primarily designed to form one completed little whole of themselves, are not here to be met with. On the contrary, the Solomonic collection which now follows consists of pure distichs, for the most part antithetical, but at the same time going over all the forms of the technical proverb, as we have already shown; vid., p. 16. Accordingly the exposition must from this point onward renounce reproduced combinations of thought. The succession of proverbs here is nevertheless not one that is purely accidental or without thought; it is more than a happy accident when three of the same character stand together; the collector has connected together proverb with proverb according to certain common characteristics (Bertheau). And yet more than that: the mass separates itself into groups, not merely succeeding one another, but because a certain connection of ideas connects together a number of proverbs, in such a way that the succession is broken, and a new point of departure is arrived at (Hitzig). There is no comprehensive plan, such as Oetinger in his summary view of its contents supposes; the progressive unfolding follows no systematic scheme, but continuously wells forth. But that the editor, whom we take also to be the arranger of the contents of the book, did not throw them together by good chance, but in placing them together was guided by certain reasons, the very first proverb here shows, for it is chosen in conformity with the design of this book, which is specially dedicated to youth:

One sees here quite distinctly (cf. Hos. 13:13) that חָכָם (from חָכַם, properly to be thick, stout, solid, as πυκνός = σοφός) is primarily a practical and ethical conception. Similar proverbs are found further on, but consisting of synonymous parallel members, in which either the father both times represents the parents, as 17:21; 23:24, or father and mother are separated, each being named in different members, as 17:25; 23:25, and particularly 15:20, where 20a = 1a of the above proverb. It is incorrect to say, with Hitzig, that this contrast draws the division after it: the division lies nearer in the synonymous distichs, and is there less liable to be misunderstood than in the antithetic. Thus, from this proverb before us, it might be concluded that grief on account of a befooled son going astray in bypaths, and not coming to the right way, falls principally on the mother, as (Sir. 3:9) is often the case in unfortunate marriages. The idea of the parents is in this way only separated, and the two members stand in suppletive interchangeable relationship. הָיְשִׁמֵּה is the middle of the clause, and is the usual form in connection; הָיְשִׁמֲּה is the pausal form. הנון, from הָון (ורון), has pass. ע, as הָרִיתָן, act. ע. “The expression of the pred. 1b is like 3:17; 8:6; 10:14f.; cf. e.g., Arab. ālāṣṭaḳṣa furkat, oversharpening is dividing, i.e., effects it [inquiries become or lead to separation] (cf. our proverb, Allzuscharf macht scharig = too much sharpening makes full of notches); Burckhardt, Sprüchw. Nr. 337” (Fl.).

Proverbs 10:2. There follows now a series of proverbs which place possessions and goods under a moral-religious point of view:

Treasures of wickedness bring no profit; But righteousness delivers from death.

The LXX and Aquila translate ἀνόμους (ἀσεβεῖς). הועיל (to profit) with the accus. is possible, Isa.
57:12, but one does not use by itself; it requires a genitive designating it more closely. But also אָבַרְבְּרָא, אֵלֶּה שֹׁפְטַיָּן of Symmachus, fails; for the question still remains, to whom? Rightly Syr., Jerome, Theodotion, and the Quinta: ἀσβεβίας, cf. 4:17, Mic. 4:10; Luke 16:9, μαμωνᾶς τῆς ἀδικίας. Treasures to which wickedness cleaves profit not, viz., him who has collected them through wickedness. On the contrary, righteousness saves from death (2b = 11:4b, where the parallelism makes it clear that death as a judgment is meant). In Deut. 24:13 it had been already said that compassionate love is “righteousness before the Lord,” the cardinal virtue of the righteousness of life. Faith (Hab. 2:4) is its soul, and love its life. Therefore δικαιοσύνη and ἔλεημοσύνη are interchangeable ideas; and it ought not to be an objection against the Apocrypha that it repeats the above proverb, ἔλεημοσύνη ἐκ θανάτου ῥύεται, Tob. 4:10; 12:9, Sir. 3:30; 29:12, for Dan. 4:24 also says the very same thing, and the thought is biblical, in so far as the giving of alms is understood to be not a dead work, but (Ps. 112:9) the life-activity of one who fears God, and of a mind believing in Him and resting in His word.

Proverbs 10:3. Another proverb, the members of which stand in chiastic relation to those of the preceding: Jahve does not suffer the soul of the righteous to hunger; But the craving of the godless He disappointeth. The thought is the same as 13:25. There, as also at 6:30, the soul is spoken of as the faculty of desire, and that after nourishment, for the lowest form of the life of the soul is the impulse to self-preservation. The parallel ἀφεῖναι, in which LXX and Ar. erroneously find the meaning of ἀποθέω, life, the Syr. Targ. the meaning of ἰπτωμα, possession, means the desire, without however being related to ἰπτωμα (Berth.); it is the Arab. ḥawān, from ḥāwā, ḥāwā, which, from the fundamental meaning χαίνειν, hiare, to gape, yawn, signifies not only unrestrained driving along, and crashing overthrow (cf. 11:6; 19:13), but also the breaking forth, ferri in aliquid, whence ḥawān, Arab. ḥaway, violent desire, in Hebr. generally (here and Ps. 52:9, MiProv. 7:3) of desire without limits and without restraint (cf. the plur. ḥawād, arbitrary actions, caprices); the meanings deduced from this important verbal stem (of which also אָבַרְבְּרָא, אֵלֶּה שֹׁפְטַיָּן, accidere, and then esse, at least after the Arabic conception of speech, is an offshoot) are given by Fleischer under Job 37:6, and after Fleisher by Ethé, Schlafgemach der Phantasie, ii. p. 6f. The verb(signifies to push in the most manifold shades, here to push forth, repellere, as 2 Kings 4:27 (cf. Arab. ḥadhaf, to push off = to discharge); the fut. is invariably יָהֵב, like יָהֵב, ḥawān, ḥaway, ḥawān, ḥawān. God gives satisfaction to the soul of the righteous, viz., in granting blessings. The desire of the wicked He does not suffer to be accomplished; it may appear for a long time as if that which was aimed at was realized, but in the end God pushes it back, so that it remains at a distance, because contrary to Him. Instead of דָּבָר, דָּבָר, the Arabic ḥawān, ḥaway, ḥawān, ḥawān, some editions (Plantin 1566, Bragadin 1615) have דָּבָר, דָּבָר, דָּבָר, דָּבָר, others דָּבָר. דָּבָר, דָּבָר, but, in opposition to all decided testimony, only through a mistaken reference to 11:6.

Proverbs 10:4. There follow two proverbs which say how one man fails and another succeeds: He becomes poor who bears a sluggish hand; But the hand of the diligent maketh rich. These three proverbs, 19:15; 12:24, 27, are similar. From the last two it is seen that רְׁמִיָה, is a subst., as also from Ps. 120:2f. (לָשׁוֹן רְּמִיָה, from a crafty tongue) that it is an adjct., and from Lev. 14:15f. (where is fem.) that it may be at the same time an adjct. here also. The masc. is כַּפְפִית, ḥażah, like מֱרִית, מֱרִית, but neither of these occur; “the fundamental idea is that of throwing oneself down lazily, when one with unbent muscles holds himself no longer erect and stretched, Arab. taramay” (Fl.). The translation: deceitful balances (Löwenstein after Rashi), is contrary to biblical usage, which knows nothing of כפָּה in this Mishnic meaning. But if כפָּה is here regarded as fem., then it cannot be the subject (Jerome, gestatem operata est manus remissa), since we read רָאשִׁים רָשִׁים הַשֵּׁעָה, not לְאַרְשָׁי רָשָׁי, as Hitzig. But רָאשִׁים also is not suitable as the subject (LXX, Syr., Targ.), for poverty is called רָשִׁים, רַעִשׁ, on the contrary, רַעִשׁ, or רַעִשׁ, plur. is used adjectively. Since now the adj. רָאשִׁים 1 Sam. 12:14, is also written רָאשִׁים, it may be translated: Poor is he who ... (Bertheau); but we much rather expect the statement of that which happens to such an one, thus: Poor will he be ... רָאשִׁים, 3 praet. = שָהָר, Ps. 34:11, with the same (grammatically incorrect) full writing as לְאַרְשָׁי, Hos. 10:14. In the conception of the subject, רָאשִׁים, after Jer. 48:10, is interpreted as the accus. of the manner (Berth.: whoever works with sluggish hand); but since רָאשִׁים (in another sense indeed: to practise cunning) is a common phrase, Ps. 52:4; 101:7, so also will be regarded as the object: qui agit manum remissam, whoever carries or moves such a hand (Hitzig). In 4b working is placed opposite to bearing: the diligent hand makes rich, ditat or divertias parit, but not for itself (Gesen. and others: becomes rich), but for him who bears it. The diligent man is called כְּרָשִׁים, from קָצִיר, to sharpen, for, as in ὀξύς, acer, sharpness is transferred to energy; the form is the same as קָצִיר, smooth (for the ḫ is unchangeable, because responsible), a kindred form to חָרִוץ, and Arab. fā‘al as fashawsh, a boaster, wind-bag, either of active (as ἄγω) or (as שָעָה, ὁμιὸς, ἀρνιὸς, ἀλκήν) of passive signification.

Proverbs 10:5. There is now added a proverb which, thus standing at the beginning of the collection, and connecting itself with v. 1, stamps on it the character of a book for youth: He that gathereth in summer is a wise son; But he that is sunk in sleep in the time of harvest is a son that causeth shame.

Von Hofmann (Schriftb. ii. 2. 403) rightly interprets הביש בֵּן מֵבִיש and with Cocceius and others, as the subject, and not with Hitzig as predicate, for in nominal clauses the rule is to place the predicate before the subject; and since an accurate expression of the inverted relation would both times require us also referring to the subject, so we here abide by the usual syntax: he that gathers in summer time is ... Also the relation of the members of the sentence, 19:26, is a parallel from which it is evident that the misguided son is called מֵבִיש because recompensative), a kindred form to קָטול, which, thus: Poor will he be ... (Bertheau); but we much rather expect the idea to have insight and to act intelligently, lie into one another (cf. 14:35); the root-meaning of הביש is determined after כף־רמיה, which from שָכַל, compllicare, designates the intellect as the faculty of intellectual configuration. הביש, properly disturbari, proceeds from a similar conception as the Lat. condundi (puodore). קָצִיר and קַשׁ fall together, for קֵיס (from קָט = qāt, to be glowing hot) is just the time of the קַשׁ; vid., under Gen. 8:22. To the activity of a thoughtful ingathering, כף־רמיה, for a future store (vid., 6:7), stands opposed deep sleep, i.e., the state of one sunk in idleness. קַשׁ means, as Schultens has already shown, somno penitus obruit, omni sensu obstruoto et oppilato quasi, from רָדָם, רָדָם, to fill, to shut up, to conclude; the derivation (which has been adopted since Gesenius) from the Arab. word having the same sound, rdm, stridere, to shrill, to rattle (but not stereere, to snore), lies remote in the Niph, and also contradicts the usage of the word, according to which it designates a state in which all free activity is bound, and all reference to the external world is interrupted; cf. מְשִּׁרָה, 19:15, of dulness, apathy, somnolency in the train of slothfulness. The LXX has here one distich more than the Hebr. text.
Proverbs 10:6. There now follow two proverbs regarding the blessings and the curses which come to men, and which flow forth from them. Here, however, as throughout, we take each proverb by itself, that it might not appear as if we had a tetrastich before us. The first of these two antithetic distichs is: Blessings (come) on the head of the just; But violence covereth the mouth of the godless.

Blessings are, without being distinguished, bestowed as well as prayed for from above. Regarding the undistinguished uses of לְׁרֹאש (of a recompense of reward), בְׁרֹאש (of penal recompense), and ע ל־רֹאש (especially of punishment), vid., under Gen. 49:26. If we understand, with Ewald, Bertheau, Elster, Zöckler, and others, the two lines after v. 11, 19:28, cf. 10:18: the mouth of the wicked covers (hides under a mask) violence, inasmuch as he speaks words of blessing while thoughts of malediction lurk behind them (Ps. 62:5), then we renounce the sharpness of the contrast. On the contrary, it is preserved if we interpret פִי as object: the violence that has gone out from it covereth the mouth of the wicked, i.e., it falls back upon his foul mouth; or as Fleischer (and Oetinger almost the same) paraphrases it: the deeds of violence that have gone forth from them are given back to them in curses and maledictions, so that going back they stop, as it were, their mouth, they bring them to silence; for it is unnecessary to take פִי synecdochically for פִּיהוּם (cf. e.g., Ps. 69:8), since in Proverbs 6a are perhaps chiefly meant blessings of thankful acknowledgment on the part of men, and the giving prominence to the mouth of the wicked from which nothing good proceeds is well accounted for. The parallels do not hinder us thus to explain, since parts of proverbs repeating themselves in the Book of Proverbs often show a change of the meaning (vid., p. 18f.). Hitzig’s conjecture, יִכָסֶה (better יְׁכֻּסֶה, is unnecessary; for elsewhere we read, as here, that יִכָּס (violence), jure talionis, covers, יֵכֶס (violence), the wicked, Hab. 2:17, or that he, using “violence,” therewith covers the whole of his external appearance, i.e., gives to it the branded impress of the unrighteousness he has done (vid., Köhler under Mal. 2:16).

Proverbs 10:7. Thus, as v. 6 says how it goes with the righteous and the wicked in this life, so this verse tells how it fares with them after death: The memory of the righteous remains in blessings, And the name of the godless rots.

The tradition regarding the writing of זֵכֶר with five (זֵכֶר) or six points (זֶכֶר) is doubtful (vid., Heidenheim in his ed. of the Pentateuch, Meôr Enajim, under Ex. 17:14); the Cod. 1294 and old printed copies have here זֵכֶר. Instead of יְּבֹרָך might be used; the phrase היה לִקְּלָלָה (opp. היה לִבְּרָכָה), subordinate to the substantival clause, paraphrases the passive, for it expresses a growing to something, and thus the entrance into a state of endurance. The remembrance of the righteous endures after his death, for he is thought of with thankfulness (ז״צל = זכר צדיק לברכה, the usual appendix to the name of an honoured, beloved man who has died), because his works, rich in blessing, continue; the name of the godless, on the contrary, far from continuing fresh and green (Ps. 62:17) after his departure, becomes corrupt (רקב, from רָק, to be or to become thin, to dissolve in fine parts, tabescere), like a worm-eaten decayed tree (Isa. 40:20). The Talmud explains it thus, Joma 38b: foulness comes over their name, so that we call no one after their name. Also the idea suggests itself, that his name becomes corrupt, as it were, with his bones; the Mishnah, at least Olaloth ii. 1, uses רָקָב of the dust of corruption.

Proverbs 10:8. There follows now a series of proverbs in which reference to sins of the mouth and their contrary prevails: He that is wise in heart receives precepts; But he that is of a foolish mouth comes to ruin.
does not make his own knowledge the ne plus ultra, nor does he make his own will the noli me tangere; but he takes commands, i.e., instructions directing or prohibiting, to which he willingly subordinates himself as the outflow of a higher knowledge and will, and by which he sets bounds and limits to himself. But a fool of the lips, i.e., a braggart blunderer, one pleasing himself with vain talk (Prov. 14:23), falls prostrate, for he thinks that he knows all things better, and will take no pattern; but while he boasts himself from on high, suddenly all at once—for he offends against the fundamental principle of common life and of morality—he comes to lie low down on the ground. The Syr. and Targ. translate לֶכֶת by, he is caught (Bertheau, ensnared): Aquila, Vulgate, Luther, δαρήσεται, he is slain; Symmachus, βασανισθήσεται; but all without any support in the usage of the language known to us. Theodotion, φυρήσεται, he is confounded, is not tenable; Joseph Kimchi, who after David Kimchi, under Hos. 4:14, appeals in support of this meaning (אנה, similarly Parchon: ἤλτομαι) to the Arabic, seems to think on ʾiltibāʿ, confusion. The demonstrable meanings of the verb לֶכֶת are the following: 1. To occasion trouble. Thus Mechilta, under Ex. 17:14, אֲשֶׁר דְּרָכָיו עִקְׁשִים, one has imposed upon him trouble; Sifri, under Num. 11:1, אַלּוּ, we are tired, according to which Rashi: he fatigues himself, but which fits neither to the subj. nor to the contrast, which is to be supposed. The same may be said of the meaning of the Syr. ibṭ, to drive on, to press, which without doubt accords with the former meaning of the word in the language of the Midrash. 2. In Arab. labat (R. lab, vid., Wünsche’s Hos. p. 172), to throw any one down to the earth, so that he falls with his whole body his whole length; the passive מְלַכֶּם, to be thus thrown down by another, or to throw oneself thus down, figuratively of one who falls hopelessly into evil and destruction (Fl). The Arabic verb is also used of the springing run of the animal ridden on (to gallop), and of the being lame (to hop), according to which in the

Lex. the explanations, he hurries, or he wavers hither and thither, are offered by Kimchi (Graec. Venet. πλανηθήσεται). But the former of these explanations, corruit (= in calamitatem ruit), placed much nearer by the Arabic, is confirmed by the LXX ὑποσκέλεσθησαί, and by the Bereshith rabba, p. 52, where לֶכֶת is used in the sense to be ruined (= פָּדָה). Hitzig changes the passive into the active: “he throws the offered קֵתֶה scornfully to the ground,” but the contrast does not require this. The wanton, arrogant boasting lies already in the designation of the subj. אָוִיל שפּוֹתָה; and the sequel involves, as a consequence, the contrasted consequence of ready reception of the limitations and guidance of his own will by a higher.

Proverbs 10:9. The form of this verse is like the eighth, word for word: He that walketh in innocence walketh securely; but he that goeth in secret ways is known. The full form of בֵּט does not, as Hitzig supposes, stand in causal connection with the Dechi, for the consonant text lying before us is at least 500 years older than the accentuation. For הָלֵךְ תֹּם נִתְלֶכֶת, there is here perhaps בָּט חָלֵךְ תֹּם נִתְלֶכֶת, מְלַכֶּה so ἡμάς stands one אֱשֶׁר דְּרָכָיו עִקְׁשִים denotes, after 2:15, such an one ἡ ἡμῶν goes ἰδία ἐνῷ δραχμήνος. Expressed in the language of the N.T., ὕπατος is the property of the ἀπλοῦς or ἀκέραιος, for the fundamental idea of fulness is here referred to full submission, full integrity. Such an one goes Ἑλία (Aquila, ἀμερίμνως), for there is nothing designedly concealed by him, of which he has reason to fear that it will come to the light; whoever, on the contrary, makes his ways crooked, i.e., turns into crooked ways, is perceived, or, as we might also explain it (vid., under Gen. 4:15): if one (qui = si quis) makes his ways crooked, then it is known—nothing, however, stands opposed to the reference of מְלַכֶּה to the person: he is finally known, i.e., unmasked (LXX Jerome, γνωσθήσεται, manifestus fiet). Usually it is explained: he is knowing, clever, with the remark that is here the passive of (Gesen., Ewald, Hitzig); Hiph. to give to feel; Niph. to become to feel, properly to be made to know (Luth.: made wise); but the passive of the Hiph. is the Hoph. Such a Niph. in which the causative (not simply transitive) signification of the Hiph. would be applied passively is without example (vid., Ewald, § 133 a); the meaning of Jer. 31:19 also is: after I have become known, i.e., been made manifest, uncovered, drawn into the light.

Proverbs 10:10. This verse contains another proverb, similarly formed, parallel with the half of v. 8: He that winketh with the eye causeth trouble; And a foolish mouth comes to ruin. Regarding the winking or nipping, i.e., the repeated nipping of the eyes (cf. nictare, frequent. of nicère), as the conduct of the malicious or malignant, which aims at the derision or injury of him to whom it refers, vid., under 6:13; there ניב was connected with a of the means of the action; here, as Ps. 35:19, cf. Prov. 16:30, it is connected with the object accus. He who so does produces trouble (heart-sorrow, 15:13), whether it be that he who is the butt of this mockery marks it, or that he is the victim of secretly concerted injury; ניב is not here used impersonally, as 13:10, but as 29:15, cf. Lev. 19:28; 24:20, in the sense of the cause. 10b forms a striking contrast to 10a, according to the text of the LXX: ὁ δὲ ἐλέγχων μετὰ παρῆσιν εἰρηνοποιεῖ. The Targ., however, abides, contrary to the Syr., by the Hebrew text, which certainly is older than this its correction, which Ewald and Lagarde unsuccessfully attempt to translate into the Hebrew. The foolish mouth, here understood in conformity with 10a, is one who talks at random, without examination and deliberation, and thus suddenly stumbles and falls over, so that he comes to lie on the ground, to his own disgrace and injury.

Proverbs 10:11. Another proverb, similar to the half of v. 6: A fountain of life is the mouth of the righteous; But the mouth of the godless hideth violence. If we understand 11b wholly as 6b: os improborum obteget violentia, then the meaning of 11a would be, that that which the righteous speaks tends to his own welfare (Fl). But since the words spoken are the means of communication and of intercourse, one has to think of the water as welling up in one, and flowing forth to another; and the meaning of 11b has to accommodate itself to the preceding half proverb, whereby it cannot be mistaken that חמס (violence), which was 6b subj., bears here, by the contrast, the stamp of the obj.; for the possibility of manifold windings and turnings is a characteristic of the Mashal. In the Psalms and Prophets it is God who is called מְׁكور יִים, Ps. 36:10, Jer. 2:13; 17:13; the proverbial poetry plants the figure on ethical ground, and understands by it a living power, from which wholesome effects accrue to its possessor, 14:27, and go forth from him to others, 13:14. Thus the mouth of the righteous is here called a fountain of life, because that which he speaks, and as he speaks it, is morally strengthening, intellectually elevating, and inwardly quickening in its effect on the hearers; while, on the contrary, the mouth of the godless coveth wrong (violentiam), i.e., conceals with deceitful words the intention, directed not to that which is best, but to the disadvantage and ruin of his neighbours; so that words which in the one case bring to light a ground of life and of love, and make it effectual, in the other case serve for a covering to an immoral, malevolent background.

Proverbs 10:12. Another proverb of the different effects of hatred and of love: Hate stirreth up strife, And love covereth all transgressions. Regarding מְדָנִים, for which the Kerî elsewhere substitutes מִדְּלֵנִים, vid., under 6:14. Hatred of one’s neighbour, which is of itself an evil, has further this bad effect, that it calls forth hatred, and thus stirreth up strife, feuds, factions, for it incites man against man (cf. עֹרֵר, Job 3:8); on the contrary, love covers not merely little errors, but also greater sins of every kind (חמס), viz., by pardoning them, concealing them, excusing them, if possible, with mitigating circumstances, or restraining them before they are executed. All this lies in the covering. James, however, gives it, 5:20, another rendering: love covers them, viz., from the eyes of a holy God; for it forgives them to the erring brother, and turns him from the error of his way. The LXX improperly translate πάντας δὲ τοὺς μὴ φιλονεικοῦντας κελόπτει φιλία; but Peter (1 Pet. 4:8) as well as James, but none of the Greek versions; ἡ ἀγάπη καλύψει πλῆθος ἁμαρτιῶν. The Romish Church makes use of this passage as a proof for the introduction of the fides formata, viz., caritate, in justification, which is condemned in the Apology of the Augsburg Confession; and, indeed, the multitudo peccatorum is not meant of the sins of him who cherishes love, but of the sins of the neighbour. Sin stirs up hatred in men in their relation to one another; but love covers the already existing sins, and smooths the disturbances occasioned by them.

Proverbs 10:13. There follow now two other proverbs on the use and abuse of speech: On the lips of the man of understanding wisdom is found; and the rod for the back of the fool. With Löwenstein, Hitzig, and others, it is inadmissible to regard וְׁשֵבֶט as a second subject to תִמָצֵא. The mouth itself, or the word of the mouth, may be called a rod, viz., a rod of correction (Isa. 11:4); but such a rod are found on the lips of the wise would be a combination and a figure in bad taste. Thus 13b is a clause by itself, as Luther renders it: “but a rod belongs to the fool’s back;” and this will express a contrast to 13a, that while wisdom is to be sought for on the lips of the man of understanding (cf. Mal. 2:7), a man devoid of understanding, on the contrary, gives himself to such hollow and corrupt talk, that in order to educate him to something better, if possible, the rod must be applied to his back; for, according to the Talmudic proverb: that which a wise man gains by a hint, a fool only obtains by a club. The rod is called שֵבֶט from שָבֶט, to be smooth, to go straight down (as the hair of the head); and the back גֵו, from גָוָה, to be rounded, i.e., concave or convex.

Proverbs 10:14. Ewald, Bertheau, Hitzig, Oetinger: “The mouth of the fool blunders out, and is as the sudden falling in of a house which one cannot escape from.” But since מְׁחִיתָה is a favourite Mishle -word to denote the effect and issue of that which is dangerous and destructive, so the sense is perhaps further to be extended: the mouth of the fool is for himself (Prov. 13:3) and others a near, i.e., an always threatening and unexpectedly occurring calamity; unexpectedly, because suddenly he blunders out with his inconsiderate shame-bringing talk, so that such a fool’s mouth is to every one a praesens periculum. As to יִצְׁפָנוּ, it is worthy of remark that in the Beduin, Arab. ְׁנו, fut. i, signifies to be still, to be thoughtful, to be absorbed in oneself (vid., Wetstein on Job, p. 281). According to Codd. and editions, in this correct, יֵי אֲשֵׁר is to be written instead of יֵי אֲשֵׁר; vid., Baer’s Torath Emeth, p. 40. A pair of proverbs regarding possession and gain.

Proverbs 10:15. Regarding possession: The rich man’s wealth is his strong city; The destruction of the poor is their poverty.

Proverbs 10:15. The first line = 18:11. One may render the idea according to that which is internal, and according to that which is external; and the proverb remains in both cases true. As אֹז may mean, of itself alone, power, as קִרְיָת עֻז mean, as an object of self-confidence, and מְׁחִיתָה, on the contrary, as an object of terror (Jer. 48:39): the rich man, to whom his estate (vid., on הון, p. 44) affords a sure reserve and an abundant source of help, can appear confident and go forth energetically; on the contrary, the poor man is timid and bashful, and is easily dejected and discouraged. Thus e.g., Oetinger and Hitzig. But the objective interpretation is allowable, and lies also much nearer: the rich man stands thus independent, changes and adversities cannot so easily overthrow him, he is also raised above many hazards and temptations; on the contrary, the poor man is overthrown by little misfortunes, and his despairing endeavours to save himself, when they fail, ruin him completely, and perhaps make him at the same time a moral outlaw. It is quite an experienced fact which this proverb expresses, but one from which the double doctrine is easily derived: (1) That it is not only advised, but also commanded, that man make the firm establishing of his external life-position the aim of his endeavour; (2) That one ought to treat with forbearance the humble man; and if he always sinks deeper and deeper, one ought not to judge him with unmerciful harshness and in proud self-exaltation.

Proverbs 10:16. Regarding gain: The gain of the righteous tendeth to life; The income of the godless to sin.

Proverbs 10:16. Intentionally, that which the righteous received is called נַכְלָן (as Lev. 19:13), as a reward of his labour; that which the godless receives is called נַכְלָן, as income which does not need to be the reward of labour, and especially of his own immediate labour. And with נַכְלָן runs parallel, from the supposition that sin carries the germ of death in itself. The reward of his labour serves to the righteous to establish his life, i.e., to make sure his life-position, and to elevate his life-happiness. On the contrary, the income of the godless serves only to ruin his life; for, made thereby full and confident, he adds sin to sin, whose wages is death. Hitzig translates: for expiation, i.e., to lose it again as atonement for past sins; but if each and every are contrasted with each other, then אֹרֵחַ is death-bringing sin (Prov. 8:35f.).

The group of proverbs now following bring again to view the good and bad effects of human speech. The seventeenth verse introduces the transition:

17 There is a way to life when one gives heed to correction; And whoever disregards instruction runs into error.

Proverbs 10:17. Instead of אָרֹחַ [way, road] = אָרֹחַ [a wayfarer, part. of [way, road] would, as Lev. 11:7, Ps. 94:9, have the tone on the ultima. It is necessary neither to change the tone, nor, with Ewald, to interpret אָרֹחַ as abstr. pro concreto, like Lev. 11:7, Ps. 94:9, have the tone on the ultima.

The income of the righteous tendeth to life; for, made thereby full and confident, he adds sin to sin, whose wages is death. Hitzig translates: for expiation, i.e., to lose it again as atonement for past sins; but if each and every are contrasted with each other, then אֹרֵחַ is death-bringing sin (Prov. 8:35f.).

The group of proverbs now following bring again to view the good and bad effects of human speech. The seventeenth verse introduces the transition:
Proverbs 10:19. We do not, with Bertheau, understand 19a: by many words a transgression does not cease to be what it is; the contrast 19b requires a more general condemnation of the multitude of words, and not only means to cease from doing (to leave off), and to cease from being (to take away), but also not at all to do (to intermit, Ezek. 3:11; Zech. 11:12), and not at all to be (to fail, to be absent), thus: ubi verbum est abundanta non deest peccatum (Fl.). Michaelis suitably compares πολλὰ σφάλματα ἐχεῖν by Stobæus, and ὁμορράματα in the tractate Aboth i. 17, wherewith Rashi explains the proverb. מישש is not here, as elsewhere, e.g., Ps. 19:14, with special reference to the sin of falling away from favour, apostasy, but, like the post-biblical מערד, generally with reference to every kind of violation מִשְׁפַע (Arab. fsq dirumpere) of moral restraint; here, as Jansen remarks, peccatum sive mendacii, sive detractio nis, sive alterius indiscretae laesionis, sive vanitas, sive denique verbi otiosi. In 19b it is more appropriate to regard מישש as the present of the internal transitive intelligenter agit than to interpret it in the attributive sense (intelligens).

20 Choice silver is the tongue of the righteous; But the heart of the godless is little worth.

Proverbs 10:20. Choice silver is, as 8:19, cf. 10, pure, freed from all base mixtures. Like it, pure and noble, is whatever the righteous speaks; the heart, i.e., the manner of thought and feeling, of the godless is, on the contrary, like little instar nihili, i.e., of little or no worth, Arab. 10:19. Without the heart of the godless is ἔκλεισε, i.e., καταρασμένος, at first arrogant and full of lofty plans, it becomes always the more dejected, discouraged, empty. But 20a leads us to expect some designation of its worth. The Targ. (according to which the Peshito is to be corrected; vid., Levy’s Wörterbuch, ii. 26): the heart of the godless is ἔκλεισε (from ἔκλινον), refuse, dross. The other Greek versions accord with the text before us.
21. The lips of the righteous edify many; But fools die through want of understanding.

Proverbs 10:21. The LXX translate 21:1: the lips of the righteous ἐκπίστασαν, which would at least require the word Ἄνθρωπος, as like the post-bibl. frēr (vid., the Hebr. Römerbrief, p. 97), another figure for the N.T. οἰκοδομέω: to afford spiritual nourishment and strengthening, to which Fleischer compares the ecclesiastical expressions: pastor, ovile ecclesiae, les ouailles; of a meaning, Jer. 10:21, as well as teacher, Eccles. 12:11, for it contains partly the prevailing idea of leading, partly of feeding. פִרְׁנֵס is not here the connective form of פִּרְנֵס (Jewish interpreters: for that reason, that he is such an one), nor of פִּרְנֵס (Hitzig, Zöckler), which denotes, as a concluded idea, penuria, but like פִרְנֵס, פִּרְנֵס, פִּרְנֵס, 6:10, and פִּרְנֵס, 21:4; פִּרְנֵס is infin.; they die by want of understanding (cf. 5:23); this amenia is the cause of their death, for it leads fools to meet destruction without their observing it (Hos. 4:6).

Three proverbs which say that good comes from above, and is as a second nature to the man of understanding:

22. Jahve's blessing—it maketh rich; And labour addeth nothing thereto

Proverbs 10:22. Like 24a, אֱלֹהִים limits the predicate to this and no other subject: “all depends on God's blessing.” Here is the first half of the ora et labora. The proverb is a compendium of Ps. 127:1, 2. 22b is to be understood, according to v. 2 of this Solomonic psalm, not that God adds to His blessing no sorrow, much rather with the possession grants at the same time a joyful, peaceful mind (LXX, Targ., Syriac, Jerome, Aben-Ezra, Michaelis, and others), which would require the word פִּרְנֵס; but that trouble, labour, i.e., strenuous self-endeavours, add not (anything) to it, i.e., that it does not associate itself with the blessing (which, as the Jewish interpreters rightly remark, is, according to its nature, והפת, as the curse is, as the causa efficiens, or if we supply quidquam, as the complement to םִי [along with it]: nothing is added thereto, which goes along with that which the blessing of God grants, and completes it. Thus correctly Rashi, Luther, Ziegler, Ewald, Hitzig, Zöckler. the now current accentuation, שֶׁחָסֶר, אֶלָּא אוּפֶק, לְפִי שֶׁחָסֶר, is incorrect. Older editions, as Venice 1525, 1615, Basel 1618, have the words לְפִי שֶׁחָסֶר, לְפִי שֶׁחָסֶר, for that reason, he is such an one), nor of אֱלֹהִים, as the old interpreters render it here by בָּשָּׁר (vid., Kimchi’s Lex.), and is written, according to the Masora, in the first syllable plene, in the last defective.

23. Like sport to a fool is the commission of a crime; And wisdom to a man of understanding.

Proverbs 10:23. Otherwise Löwenstein: to a fool the carrying out of a plan is as sport; to the man of understanding, on the contrary, as wisdom. הֶבֶל, אֱלֹהִים, from הָבַל to press together, mentally to think, as Job 17:11, and according to Gesenius, also Prov. 21:27; 24:9. But הָבַל has the prevailing signification of an outrage against morality, a sin of unchastity; and especially the phrase וִיהִי בּוֹ הָבַל is in Judg. 20:6 and in Ezekiel not otherwise used, so that all the old interpreters render it here by patrare scelus; only the Targum has the equivocal עָבָה; the Syriac, however, bd bîstā. Sinful conduct appears to the fool, who places himself above the solemnity of the moral law, as sport; and wisdom, on the contrary, (appears as sport) to a man of understanding. We would not venture on this acceptance of שֶׁחָסֶר if יְשׁוּב אֵלָהִים were not attributed, 8:30f., to wisdom itself. This alternate relationship recommends itself by the indetermination of וִיהִי בּוֹ הָבַל, which is not favourable to the interpretation: sed sapientiam colit vir intelligens, or as Jerome has it: sapientia autem est viro prudentia. The subjects of the antithesis chiastically combine within the verse: חכמה, in contrast to wicked conduct, is acting in accordance with moral principles. This to the man of understanding is as easy as sporting, just as to the fool is shameless sinning; for he follows in this an inner impulse, it brings to him joy, it is the element in which he feels himself satisfied.

24 That of which the godless is afraid cometh upon him, And what the righteous desires is granted to him.

Proverbs 10:24. The formation of the clause 24a is like the similar proverb, 11:27b; the subject-idea has there its expression in the genitival annexum, of which Gen. 9:6 furnishes the first example; in this passage before us it stands at the beginning, and is, as in v. 22, emphatically repeated with המגרה, properly the turning oneself away, hence shrinking back in terror; here, as Isa. 66:4, of the object of fear, parallel to התאר, wishing, of the object of the wish. In 24b Ewald renders יתן as adj. from יתן (whence יהן), after the form יתן, and translates: yet to the righteous desire is always green. But whether יתן is probably formed from ית, and not from יתן, is a question in 12:12, but not here, where wishing and giving (fulfilling) are naturally correlata. Hitzig corrects יתן, and certainly the supplying of היה is as little appropriate here as at 13:21. Also a “one gives” is scarcely intended (according to which the Targ., Syr., and Jerome translate passively), in which case the Jewish interpreters are wont to explain יהי, scil. היהי, for if the poet thought of יהי with a personal subject, why did he not rescue it from the dimness of such vague generality? Thus, then, יהי is, with Böttcher, to be interpreted as impersonal, like 13:10, Job 37:10, and perhaps also Gen. 38:28 (Ewald, § 295a): what the righteous wish, that there is, i.e., it becomes actual, is fulfilled. In this we have not directly and exclusively to think of the destiny at which the godless are afraid (Heb. 10:27), and toward which the desire of the righteous goes forth; but the clause has also truth which is realized in this world: just that which they greatly fear, e.g., sickness, bankruptcy, the loss of reputation, comes upon the godless; on the contrary that which the righteous wish realizes itself, because their wish, in its intention, and kind, and content, stands in harmony with the order of the moral world.

There now follows a series of proverbs, broken by only one dissimilar proverb, on the immoveable continuance of the righteous:

25 When the storm sweeps past, it is no more with the wicked; But the righteous is a building firm for ever.

Proverbs 10:25. How v. 25 is connected with v. 24 is shown in the Book of Wisdom 5:15 (the hope of the wicked like chaff which the wind pursues). The Aram., Jerome, and Graec. Venet. interpret היה of comparison, so that the destruction of the godless is compared in suddenness and rapidity to the rushing past of a storm; but then应当 ought to have been used instead of יהי, and instead of ויהי רעש, with the 1 apodosis, a disturbing element in such a comparison, would have been used instead of יהי רעש, or at least יהי רעש. The thought is no other than that of Job 21:18: the storm, which is called סופה, from סוף, to rush forth, is meant, as sweeping forth, and היה the temporal, as Ex. 11:4 (LXX παραπορευομένης καταιγίδος), with 1 apod. following, like e.g., after a similar member of a temporal sentence, Isa. 10:25. סופה is a figure of God-decreed calamities, as war and pestilence, under which the godless sink, while the righteous endure them; cf. with 25a, 1:27, Isa. 28:18; and with 25b, 3:25, Hab. 2:4, Ps. 91. “An everlasting foundation,” since לעלם is understood as looking forwards, not as at Isa. 58:12, backwards, is a foundation capable of being shaken by nothing, and synecdochically generally a building. The proverb reminds us of the close of the Sermon on the Mount, and finds the final confirmation of its truth in this, that the death of the godless is a penal thrusting of them away, but the death of the righteous a lifting them up to their home. The righteous also often enough perish in times of war and of pestilence; but the proverb, as it is interpreted, verifies itself, even although not so as the poet, viewing it from his narrow O.T. standpoint, understood it; for the righteous, let him die when and how he may, is preserved, while the godless perishes.

Proverbs 10:26. This proverb stands out of connection with the series: As vinegar to the teeth, and as smoke to the eyes, So is the sluggard to them who gives him a commission. A parabolic proverb (vid., p. 8), priamel-like in its formation (p. 11). Here and there is found with Mugrash, but in correct texts it has Rebia-magnum; the verse is divided into two by Athnach, whose subordinate distributive is (Accentssystem, xi. § 1) Rebia-magnum. Smoke makes itself disagreeably perceptible to the sense of smell, and particularly to the eyes, which it causes to smart so that they overflow with tears; wherefore Virgil speaks of it as amarus, and Horace lacrimosus. (from ḥāmēth, to be sour, harsh) signifies properly that which is sour, as acetum, ḥōmez here, after the LXX ṭūmarā, the unripe grapes, but which are called חומץ (vid., under Job 15:33), by which the Syr., here following the LXX, translates, and which also in the Talmud, Demai i. 1, is named חומץ (Arab. ḥal; ḥal; ḥal, after a doubtful meaning (vid., Aruch, and on the other side Rashi), thus: vinegar, which the word commonly means, and which also accords with the object of the comparison, especially if one thinks of the sharp vinegar-wine of the south, which has an effect on the teeth denoted by the Hebr. verb קָצַר, as the effect of smoke is by קָצַר (Fl). The plur. לְשׁוֹנֵי is that of the category, like 22:21; 25:13; the parallel אֲדֹנָיו of the latter passage does not at least make it necessary to regard it, like this, as a plur. excellentiae (Bertheau, Hitzi, Ewald). They who send a sluggard, i.e., who make him their agent, do it to their own sorrow; his slothfulness is for them, and for that which they have in view, of dull, i.e., slow and restrained, of biting, i.e., sensibly injurious operation. From this point the proverbs fall into the series connecting themselves with v. 25:

27 The fear of Jahve multiplies the days of life; But the years of the godless are shortened.

Proverbs 10:27. This parable, like v. 25, also corresponds with the O.T. standpoint, having in view the present life. The present-life history confirms it, for vice destroys body and soul; and the fear of God, which makes men contented and satisfied in God, is truly the right principle of longevity. But otherwise also the pious often enough die early, for God carries them away [from the face of the evil], Isa. 57:1f.; or if they are martyrs for the truth (Ps. 44:23, cf. 60:6), the verification of the above proverb in such cases moves forward (Wisd. 4:7ff.) into eternity, in which the life of the pious continues for ever, while that of the godless loses itself with his death in the state of everlasting death. 9:11, cf. 3:2, resembles 27a. Instead of קְשַרְנָה, הָשָׂרָה, וְקְשַרְנָה, the plur. was to be expected; but the flexion does not distinguish the transitive קְשַר (Arab. kaṣara) and intransitive קְשַר (Arab. kaṣura) as it ought.

Proverbs 10:28. קְשַר as well as קְשַר proceed on the fundamental idea of a strained earnest looking back upon something, the same fundamental idea which in another view gives the meaning of strength (Arab. hayl; kuwwat, kawiyy, cf. בֹּא, Arab. jdl, plectere, and נְקֵדָה, strong and strength). The substantival clause 28a denotes nothing more than: it is gladness (cf. 3:17, all their steps are gladness), but which is equivalent to, it is that in its issue, in gaudium desinit. Hitzig’s remark that קלוחה is the chief idea for hope and fear, is not confirmed by the usage of the language; it always signifies joyful, not anxious, expectation; cf. the interchange of the same two synonyms.
13:7, and ἁγιάσας, Ps. 112:10, instead of ἁγιάζω (here and Job 8:13). While the expectation of the one terminates in the joy of the fulfilment, the hope of the other (דברא, R. דבר, to separate) perishes, i.e., comes to nothing.

Proverbs 10:29. Of the two meanings which לָמַּם [יִשָּׂע] has: a stronghold from יִשָּׂע, and asylum (= Arab. m’adz) from יִשָּׂע, the contrast here demands the former. יִשָּׂע and יִשָּׂע, understood objectively, are the two O.T. names of true religion. It means, then, the way which the God of revelation directs men to walk in (Ps. 143:8), the way of His precepts, Ps. 119:27, His way of salvation, Ps. 67:3 (4); in the N.T. ὡς ὁδὸς τοῦ Θεοῦ, Matt. 22:16, Acts 18:25f.; cf. ὡς ὁδὸς simply, Acts 9:2; 24:14. This way of Jahve is a fortress, bulwark, defence for innocence, or simply, Acts 9:2; 24:14. This way of Jahve is a bulwark to the righteous; but ruin to those that do evil.

Proverbs 10:30. Love of home is an impulse and emotion natural to man; but to no people was fatherland so greatly delighted in, to none was exile and banishment from fatherland so dreadful a thought, as it was to the people of Israel. Expatriation is the worst of all evils with which the prophets threatened individuals and the people, Amos 7:17, cf. Isa. 22:17f.; and the history of Israel in their exile, which was a punishment of their national apostasy, confirms this proverb and explains its form; cf. 2:21f., Ps. 37:29. בֵּית is, like 9:13, the emphatic No of the more elevated style; בֵּית, the opposite of בֵּית, the mouth of the righteous bringeth forth wisdom, and the tongue of falsehood shall be rooted up. 12:3; and signifies to dwell, both inchoative: to come to dwell, and consecutive: to continue to dwell (e.g., Isa. 57:15, of God who inhabiteth eternity). In general, the proverb means that the righteous fearlessly maintains the position he takes; while, on the contrary, all they who have no hold on God lose also their outward position. But often enough this saying is fulfilled in this, that they, in order that they may escape disgrace, became wanderers and fugitives, and are compelled to conceal themselves among strangers.

Proverbs 10:31. For the third time the favourite theme already handled in three appendixes is taken up: The mouth of the righteous shall the mouth of the righteous bring forth wisdom, and the tongue of falsehood shall be rooted up.

Regarding the biblical comparison of thoughts with branches, and of words with flowers and fruits, vid., my Psychol. p. 181; and regarding the root (with its weaker זָרָה) to swell up and to spring up (to well, grow, etc.), vid., what is said in the Comm. on Genesis on והב, and in Isaiah on הנב. We use the word נב of that which sprouts or grows, and נֹבֵב of that which causes that something sprout; but also נוב may, after the manner of verbs of being full (Prov. 3:10), of flowing (Gesen. § 138, 1, Ann. 2), take the object accus. of that from which anything sprouts (Prov. 24:31), or which sprouting, it raises up and brings forth (cf. Isa. 57:19). The mouth of the righteous sprouts, brings forth (in Ps. 37:30, without a figure, יֶהְּגֶה, i.e., utters) wisdom, which in all relations knows how to find out that which is truly good, and suitable for the end intended, and happily to unriddle difficult complications.

The conception of wisdom, in itself practical (from חכם, to be thick = solid, firm), here gains such contents by the contrast: the tongue—whose character and fruit is falsehood, which has its delight in intentional perversions of fact, and thus increaseth complications (vid., regarding ת הְׁפֻּכות, 2:12)—is rooted up, whence it follows as regards the mouth of the righteous, that it continues for ever with that its wholesome fruit.

32 The lips of the righteous know what is acceptable; But the mouth of the godless is mere falsehood.

Proverbs 10:32. Hitzig, instead of יֵדְׁעוּן, reads יֵבִעוּן, יֵבִעְשׁנָּא [they distil or send forth] of the LXX does not favour this, for it is probably only a corruption of εἰκότως, which is found in several MSS the Graec. Venet., which translates ποιμανόσι, makes use of a MS which it sometimes misreads. The text does not stand in need of any emendations, but rather of a corrected relation between the clauses, for the relation of 31a with 32b, and of 32a with 31b, strongly commends itself (Hitzig); in that case the explanation lies near: the lips of the righteous find what is acceptable, viz., to God. But this thought in the Mashal language is otherwise expressed (Prov. 12:2 and paral.); and also 32a and 32b fit each other as contrasts, if by רצון, as 11:27; 14:9, is to be understood that which is acceptable in its widest generality, equally then in relation to God and man. It is a question whether ידוע means that they have knowledge of it (as one e.g., says ידע ספר, to understand writing, i.e., the reading of it), or that they think thereupon (cf. 27:23). Fundamentally the two ideas, according to the Hebrew conception of the words, lie in each other; for the central conception, perceiving, is bibliically equivalent to a delighted searching into or going towards the object. Thus: the lips of the righteous think of that which is acceptable (ventus, cogn. to ἔνθωμα, gracefulness; χάρις Col. 4:6); while the mouth of the godless is mere falsehood, which God (the wisdom of God) hates, and from which discord on all sides arises. We might transfer ידוע to 32b; but this line, interpreted as a clause by itself, is stronger and more pointed (Fl.).

The next three proverbs treat of honesty, discretion, and innocence or dove-like simplicity:

1 Deceitful balances are an abomination to Jahve; But a full weight is His delight.

Proverbs 11:1. The very same proverb, with slightly varied expression, is found in 20:23; and other such like proverbs, in condemnation of false and in approbation of true balances, are found, 20:10; 16:11; similar predicates, but connected with other subjects, are found at 12:2 2; 15:8. "An abomination to Jahve" is an expression we have already twice met with in the introduction, 3:32; 6:16, cf. 8:7; תועֵבָה is, like תועָה, a participial noun, in which the active conception of abhorring is transferred to the action accomplished. רצון is in post-biblical Hebr. the designation of the arbitrium and the voluntas; but here רצון signifies not that which God wishes, but that which He delights in having. “quia (here for the first time in Proverbs), from the Piel of which means (Prov. 26:19) aliquem dolo et fraude petere. בֵּן, like the Pers. sanak, sanakh, Arab. sajat, a stone for weight; and finally, without any reference to its root signification, like Zech. 5:8, אָבִן הָעֶפֶרֶת, a leaden weight, as when we say: a horseshoe of gold, a chess-man of ivory."

Proverbs 11:2. Now follows the Solomonic "Pride goeth before a fall." There cometh arrogance, so also cometh shame; But with the humble is wisdom.

Interpreted according to the Hebr.: if the former has come, so immediately also comes the latter. The general truth as to the causal connection of the two is conceived of historically; the fact, confirmed by many events, is represented in the form of a single occurrence as a warning example; the preterites are like the Greek aoristi gnomici (vid., p. 32); and the perf., with the fut. consec. following, is the expression of the immediate and almost simultaneous consequence (vid., at Hab. 3:10): has haughtiness (זָジョン after the form לָצון, from זִיד, to boil, to run over) appeared, then immediately also disgrace appeared, in which the arrogant behaviour is overwhelmed. The harmony of the sound of the Hebr. זジョン and קָלון cannot be reproduced in German [nor in English]; Hitzig and Ewald try to do so, but such a quid pro quo as "Kommt Unglimpf kommt an ihn Schimpf" [there comes arrogance, there comes to him disgrace] is not a translation, but a distortion of the text. If, now, the antithesis says that with the humble is wisdom, wisdom is meant which avoids such disgrace as arrogance draws along with it; for the צָנוּע thinks not more highly of himself than he ought to think (R. צון, subsidere, demitti, Deutsch. Morgenl. Zeitsch. xxv. 185).

Proverbs 11:3. To the upright, יְשָרִים, who keep the line of rectitude without turning aside therefrom into devious paths (Ps. 125:4f), stand opposed (as at 2:21f.) the ungodly (faithless), בֹגְׁדִים, who conceal (from רֹב, to cover, whence רָב = נַס) malicious thoughts and plans. And the contrast of הָגָה, integrity = unreserved loving submission, is נָסָה, a word peculiar to the Solomonic Mashal, with its verb נָסָה (vid., p. 23). Hitzig explains it by the Arab. saraf, to step out, to tread over; and Ewald by lafat, to turn, to turn about ("treacherous, false step"), both of which are improbable. Schultens compares salaf in the meaning to smear (R. יָלֶדֶת, אוֹלֶף; cf. regarding such secondary formations with ש preceding, Hupfeld on Ps. 5:7), and translates here, lubricitas. But this rendering is scarcely admissible. It has against it lexical tradition (Menahem: וּסָתָם, wavering; Perchon: כֶּפֶן, falsifying; Kimchi: חפוך, misrepresentation, according to which the Graec. Venet. σκολιότης, as well as the methodical comparison of the words. The Syriac has not this verbal stem, but the Targum has סְלִף in the meaning to distort, to turn the wrong way (σκολιοῦν στρεβλοῦν), Prov. 10:10, and Esth. 6:10, where, in the second Targum, פוּמֵה אִסְׁתְּלִף means "his mouth was crooked."

With justice, therefore, Gesenius in his Thesaurus has decided in favour of the fundamental idea pervertere, from which also the Peshito and Saadia proceed; for in Ex. 23:8 they translate (Syr.) mahpêk (it, the gift of bribery, perverts) and (Arab.) tazyf (= תְז יֵף, it falsifies). Fl. also, who at 15:4 remarks, "נָסָה from נָסִים, to stir up, to turn over, so that the lowermost becomes the uppermost," gives the preference to this primary idea, in view of the Arab. salaf, invertere terram conserendi causa. It is moreover confirmed by salaf, praecedere, which is pervertere modified to praevertere. But how does נָסָה mean perversio (Theod. ὑποσκελισμός), in the sense of the overthrow prepared for thy neighbour? The parallels demand the sense of a condition peculiar to the word and conduct of the godless (treacherous), 22:12 (cf. Ex. 23:8), 19:3, thus perversitas, perversity; but this as contrary to truth and rectitude (opp. תֻּמָה), "perverseness," as we have translated it, for we understand by it want of rectitude (dishonesty) and untruthfulness. While the sincerity of the upright conducts them, and, so to say, forms their salus conductus, which guards them against the danger of erring and of hostile assault, the perverseness of the treacherous destroys them; for the disfiguring of truth avenges itself against them, and they experience the reverse of the proverb, “das Ehrlich währt am längsten” (honesty endures the longest). The Chethîb (שָדָם) is an error of transcription; the Kerî has the proper correction, יְׁשָדֵם, Jer. 5:6. Regarding שד (whence שדק), which, from its root-signification of making close and fast, denotes violence and destruction, vid., under Gen. 17.

4 Possessions are of no profit in the day of wrath; But righteousness delivereth from death.

Proverbs 11:4. That which is new here, is only that possessions and goods (vid., regarding הון, p. 44) are destitute of all value in the day of the μέλλουσα ὀργή; for it, the day of wrath breaking through the limits (of long-suffering), has the same meaning as in the prophets; and such prophetic words as Isa. 10:3, Zeph. 1:18, and, almost in the same words, Ezek. 7:19, are altogether similar to this proverb. The LXX, which translates ἐν ἡμέρᾳ ἐπαγωγῆς, harmonizes in expression with Sir. 5:8, cf. 2:2. Theodotion translates רַע, 27:10, by ἐπαγωγή (providence, fate).

5 The righteousness of the blameless smootheth his way, And by his own wickedness doth the wicked fall.

Proverbs 11:5. With the כָּשָׁם (cf. 1:12), formed after the passive, more than with כָּשָׁה, is connected the idea of the perfected, but more in the negative sense of moral spotlessness than of moral perfection. The rectitude of a man who seeks to keep his conscience and his character pure, maketh smooth (ישר, as 3:6, not of the straightness of the line, but of the surface, evenness) his life’s path, so that he can pursue his aim without stumbling and hindrance, and swerving from the direct way; while, on the contrary, the godless comes to ruin by his godlessness—that by which he seeks to forward his interests, and to make a way for himself, becomes his destruction.

6 The rectitude of the upright saveth them, And in their own covetousness are the faithless taken.

Proverbs 11:6. The integrity of those who go straight forward and straight through, without permitting themselves to turn aside on crooked ways, delivers them from the snares which are laid for them, the dangers they encounter; while, on the contrary, the faithless, though they mask their intentions ever so cunningly, are ensnared in their passionate covetousness: the mask is removed, they are convicted, and are caught and lost. Regarding חץ, abyss, overthrow, also stumbling against anything = covetousness, vid., at 10:3, and under Ps. 5:10. The form of the expression 6b follows the scheme, “in the image of God created He man,” Gen. 9:6. The subject is to be taken from the genitive, as is marked by the accentuation, for it gives Mugrash to the בִּבְלָה, as if it were the principal form, for בְּבִלָּה.

Three proverbs regarding destruction and salvation:

7 When a godless man dies, his hope cometh to nought, And the expectation of those who stand in fulness of strength is destroyed.

Proverbs 11:7. We have already remarked in the Introduction that אדם is a favourite word of the Chokma, and the terminological distinction of different classes and properties of men (vid, pp. 29, 30); we read, 6:12, אדם רָשָׁע, and here, as also Job 20:29; 27:13, cf. 21:29, איש, but generally only רָשָׁע, is used. A godless man, to whom earthly possessions and pleasure and honour are the highest good, and to whom no means are too base, in order that he may appease this his threefold passion, rocks himself in unbounded and measureless hopes; but with his death, his hope, i.e., all that he hoped for, comes to nought. The LXX translate τελευτήσαντος ἀνδρὸς δικαίου οὐκ ὄλλυται ἐλπίς, which is the converse of that which is here said, 7a: the hope of the righteous expects its fulfilment beyond the grave. The LXX further translate, τὸ δὲ καύχημα (τῆρα) τῶν ἁσεβῶν ὄλλυται; but the distich in the Hebr. text is not an antithetic one, and whether ὄλλυται or σφάσται, or as the plur. of an adj. ἄον, after the form בְּז (Elazar b. Jacob in Kimchi), or wickedness (Zöckler, with Hitzig, “the wicked expectation”), is very questionable. Yet more improbable is Malbim’s (with Rashi’s) rendering of this ἄον, after Gen. 49:3, Ps. 78:51, and the Targ. on Job 18:12, of the children of the deceased; children gignuntur ex robore virili, but are not themselves the robur virile. But while ὄλλυται is nowhere the plur. of ἄον in its ethical signification, it certainly means in Ps. 78:51, as the plur. of ἄον, manly strength, and in Isa. 40:26, 29 the fulness of strength generally, and once, in Hos. 9:4, as plur. of ἄον in its physical signification, derived from its root-meaning anheltitus (Gen. 35:18, cf. Hab. 3:7), deep sorrow (a heightening of the ἄον, Deut. 26:14). This latter signification has also been adopted: Jerome, expectatio solicitorum; Bertheau, “the expectation of the sorrowing;” Ewald, “continuance of sorrow;” but the meaning of this in this connection is so obscure, that one must question the translators what its import is. Therefore we adhere to the other rendering, “fulness of strength,” and interpret אונים as the opposite of אונים. Isa. 40:29, for it signifies, per metonymiam abstracti pro concr., those who are full of strength; and we gain the meaning that there is a sudden end to the expectation of those who are in full strength, and build their prospects thereon. The two synonymous lines complete themselves, in so far as אונים means the associated idea of self-confidence, and the second strengthens the thought of the first by the transition of the expression from the fut. to the preterite (Fl.). ἄον has, for the most part in recent impressions, the Mugrash; the correct accentuation, according to codices and old impressions, is מורות אונים (vid., Baer’s Torath Emeth, p. 10, § 4).

8 The righteous is delivered from trouble, And the godless comes in his stead.

Proverbs 11:8. The succession of the tenses gives the same meaning as when, periodizing, we say: while the one is delivered, the other, on the contrary, falls before the same danger. נדינווית (vid., under Isa. 58:11) followed by the historical tense, the expression of the principal fact, is the perfect. The statement here made clothes itself after the manner of a parable in the form of history. It is true there are not wanting experiences of an opposite kind (from that here stated), because divine justice manifests itself in this world only as a prelude, but not perfectly and finally; but the poet considers this, that as a rule destruction falls upon the godless, which the righteous with the help of God escapes; and this he realizes as a moral motive. In itself ויתחלה may also have only the meaning of the exchange of places, but the LXX translate ἄντ᾽ αὐτοῦ, and thus in the sense of representation the proverb appears to be understood in connection with 21:18 (cf. the prophetico-historical application, Is. 43:4). The idea of atonement has, however, no application here, for the essence of atonement consists in the offering up of an innocent one in the room of the guilty, and its force lies in the offering up of self; the meaning is only, that if the divinely-ordained linking together of cause and effect in the realms of nature and of history brings with it evil, this brings to the godless destruction, while it opens the way of deliverance for the righteous, so that the godless becomes for the righteous the פֶּסֶת, or, as we might say in a figure of similar import, the lightning conductor.
9 The wicked with his mouth prepareth destruction for his neighbour; But by knowledge the righteous are delivered from it.

Proverbs 11:9. The LXX translate, ἐν στόματι ἁσβετῶν παγὶς (παγῆ?) πολίταις αἴσθησις δὲ δικαίοις εὐοδας (יָשַׂך). There is no reason for changing (with Hitzig and Ewald) the text, which in the form in which it is here translated was before all other translators (Aq., Symmachus, Theodotion, Syr., Targ., Jerome). The accentuation, which separates the two instrumental statements by greater disjunctives from that which follows, is correct. The “three” Greek versions [viz. of Aquila, Theodotion, and Symmachus] translate מֵבִית by ὑποκριτῆς, which it means in the modern idiom; but in the ancient Hebr. it signifies, him who is resolved upon evil, as in Arab. ḫayf; him who is resolved upon that which is right: he who turns aside to evil enters on a path far removed from that which is right. In ישחת one is reminded (without any etymological reason) of שחת (pit), and so in וּיֵחָלְׁצ of מִשְׁחִיתותם (Ps. 107:20) or a similar word; but ישחת contains the reference, in this connection not easy to be mistaken, to the hostile purposes of the wicked masked by the words of the mouth, which are seen through by the righteous by virtue of knowledge which makes them acquainted with men. This penetrating look is their means of deliverance. Three proverbs follow relating to the nature of city and national life, and between them two against mockery and backbiting:

10 In the prosperity of the righteous the city rejoiceth; And if the wicked come to ruin, there is jubilation.

Proverbs 11:10. The ב of הבשׂ denotes the ground but not the object, as elsewhere, but the cause of the rejoicing, like the ב 10b, and in the similar proverb, 29:2, cf. 28:12. If it goes well with the righteous, the city has cause for joy, because it is for the advantage of the community; and if the wicked (godless) come to an end, then there is jubilation (substantival clause for חָרֶם), for although they are honoured in their lifetime, yet men breathe freer when the city is delivered from the tyranny and oppression which they exercised, and from the evil example which they gave. Such proverbs, in which the city (vicitas) represents the state, the πόλις the πολιτεία, may, as Ewald thinks, be of earlier date than the days of an Asa or Jehoshaphat; for “from the days of Moses and Joshua to the days of David and Solomon, Israel was a great nation, divided indeed into many branches and sections, but bound together by covenant, whose life did not at all revolve around one great city alone.” We value such critical judgments according to great historical points of view, but confess not to understand why יָשַׂך must just be the chief city and may not be any city, and how on the whole a language which had not as yet framed the conception of the state (post-bibl. מְדִינָה), when it would described the community individually and as a whole, could speak otherwise than of city and people.

Proverbs 11:11. This verse is related, in the way of confirming it, to v. 10. The LXX, which omits v. 4, here omits 10b and 11a, and combines 10a and 11b into one proverb (vid., Lagarde). The meaning is clear: “by the benedictions and pious prayers of the upright a city rises always to a higher eminence and prosperity; while, on the contrary, the deceitful, arrogant, blasphemous talk of the godless brings ruin to it” (Fl.). The nearest contrast to “by the blessing of the upright” would be “by the cursing of the wicked,” but not in the sense of the poet, who means to say that the city raises itself by the blessing of the upright, and on the contrary, when godless men are exalted, then by their words (whose blessing is no better than their curse) it comes to ruin. יָשַׂך = יָשַׁךְ, (= יָשַׁךְ) occurs only four times in Proverbs, and in Job 29:7.
Proverbs 11:12. There now follow two proverbs which refer to the intercourse of private life. He who mocketh his neighbour is devoid of understanding; but the intelligent man remaineth silent.

14:21 is a proverb similarly beginning with בז לְׁרֵעֵהוּ, 13:13 is another beginning with בז לְׁדָבָר. From this one sees that בָז ל (cf. בָזָה ל, Isa. 37:22) does not mean a speaking contemptuously in one’s presence; as also from 6:30, that contemptuous treatment, which expresses itself not in mockery but in insult, is thus named; so that we do not possess a German [nor an English] expression which completely covers it. Whoever in a derisive or insulting manner, whether it be publicly or privately, degrades his neighbour, is unwise (חֲש ר־לֵב as pred., like 6:32); an intelligent man, on the contrary, keeps silent, keeps his judgment to himself, abstains from arrogant criticisms, for he knows that he is not infallible, that he is not acquainted with the heart, and he possesses too much self-knowledge to raise himself above his neighbour as a judge, and thinks that contemptuous rejection, unamiable, reckless condemnation, does no good, but on the contrary does evil on all sides.

13 He who goeth about tattling revealeth secrets; but he who is of a faithful spirit concealeth a matter.

Proverbs 11:13. The tattler is called רכיל (intensive form of רכיל, from his going hither and thither. Ezek. 22:9, are men given to tattling, backbiters;ROL וִכִּיל (cf. Lev. 19:16), one of the tattlers or backbiters goes, a divulger of the matter, a tell-tale. It is of such an one that the proverb speaks, that he reveals the secret (edor, properly the being close together for the purpose of private intercourse, then that intercourse itself, vid., at Ps. 25:14); one has thus to be on his guard against confiding in him. On the contrary, a נאמן רוח, firmus (fidus) spiritu, properly one who is established, or reflexively one who proves himself firm and true (vid., at Gen. 15:6), conceals a matter, keeps it back from the knowledge and power of another. Zöckler rightly concludes, in opposition to Hitzig, from the parallelism that the הוֹלֵך רכִיל is subject; the arrangement going before also shows that this is the “ground-word” (Ewald); in 20:19a the relation is reversed: the revealer of secrets is rightly named (cf. Sir. 27:16, ὁ ἀποκαλύπτων μυστήρια κ. τ. λ.).

14 Where there is no direction a people fall; but where there is no want of counsellors there is safety.

Proverbs 11:14. Regarding תחְבֻּלוֹת, vid., at 1:5. There it means rules of self-government; here, rules for the government of the people, or, since the plural et denotes a multiplicity in unity, circumspect κυβέρνησις. With 14b, 24:6b (where direction in war, as here in peace, is spoken of, and the meaning of the word specializes itself accordingly) agrees; cf. also 15:22b. Hitzig criticises the proverb, remarking, “we who have the longest resorted to many counsellors, as a consequence of the superabundance have learned to say, ‘Too many cooks spoil the broth,’ and, ‘He who asks long, errs.’” But the truth of the clause 14b is in modern times more fully illustrated in the region of ecclesiastical and political affairs; and in general it is found to be true that it is better with a people when they are governed according to the laws and conclusions which have resulted from the careful deliberation of many competent and authorized men, than when their fate is entrusted unconditionally to one or to a few. The proverb, it must be acknowledge, refers not to counsellors such as in Isa. 3:3, but as in Isa. 1:26.

Proverbs 11:15. There follow now two proverbs regarding kindness which brings injury and which brings honour: It fares ill, nothing but ill, with one who is surety for another; but he who hateth suretyship remaineth in quietness.

More closely to the original: It goes ill with him; for the proverb is composed as if the writer had before his eyes a definite person, whom one assails when he for whom he became security has not kept within the limits of the performance that was due. Regarding which disfigures the household, makes the disgraceful vessel (that which is good, gentle) is a husband, gives him relief, while one who hates woman (for the sake of the added line, expanded is on b γυνὴ μισοῦσα δίκαια δόξαν for the sake of the added line, Olsh. § 265e). The added line has, like γυνὴ εὐχάριστος ἐγείρει ἀνδρὶ γνῶμα, Hab. 3:9, the same function as the infinit. absol. (intensivus); but as the infin. form γνῶμα could only be inf. constru. after the form ἐγείρει, Jer. 5:26, the infinitive absol. must be γνῶμα ἐγείρει. Thus γνῶμα is an accus., or what is the same, an adverbial adj.: he is badly treated (maltreated) in a bad way, for one holds him to his words and, when he cannot or will not accomplish that which is due in the room of him for whom he is bail, arrests him. He, on the contrary, who hates woman has good rest. The persons of such as become surety by striking the hands cannot be meant, but perhaps people thus becoming surety by a hand-stroke,—such sureties, and thus such suretyship, he cannot suffer; he approaches an abstract ["striking hands," instead of "those who strike hands"] in connection with this, שְׁכה אֵל, Zechar. 2:7, 14, means uniting together in the sense of combination.

Proverbs 11:16. The LXX had γυνὴ θύτη (not μητέρα) in view: γυνὴ εὐχάριστος ἐγείρει ἀνδρὶ δόξαν,—this ἀνδρὶ is an interpolation inserted for the sake of the added line, θύτη, ὁδόρις δὲ ἁμαρτίας γυνὴ μακσάσα δίκαια. The proverb thus expanded is on both sides true: an amiable woman (gratiosa) brings honour to her husband, gives him relief, while one who hates the right (that which is good, gentle) is a disgraceful vessel (opp. εὐσεβὴς, Isa. 22:23), which disfigures the household, makes the family unloved, and lowers it. But the commencing line, by which 16b is raised to an independent distich, is so much the more imperfect: πλοῦτον ὁκνηροὶ ἐνδεεῖς γίνονται; for that the negligent (idle) bring it not to riches, is, as they are wont in Swabia to call such truisms, a Binsenwahrheit. But it is important that the translation of 16b, οἱ δὲ ἀνδρεῖοι ἐρείδονται πλοῦτον (the Syr. has “knowledge” for riches), presupposes the phrase πλοῦτον (cf. 10:4, LXX), and along with it this, that πλοῦτον is so rendered as if the words were ἀκμῆς βενέστη, is to be regarded as unhistorical. If we now take the one proverb as it is found in the Heb. text, then the repetition of the second in the two lines excites a prejudice in favour of it. The meaning of this otherwise difficult όμορ χρήματι is missed by Löwenstein and Zöckler: a gracious woman retaineth honour (Symm. ἀνθέξεται δόξης); for (1) would better agree with this predicate, and (2) it is evident from 29:23 that πλοῦτον κυνεῖ is not to be understood in the sense of firmiter tenere, but in the inchoative sense of consequi honorem, whence also the ἑγεῖρε ἀνδρὶ of the LXX. It is true that 31:30 states that “grace (ἡ) is nothing,” and that all depends on the fear of God; but here the poet thinks on “grace” along with the fear of God, or he thinks on them as not separated from each other; and since it is boldly true, which is moreover besides this true, that a wife of gracious outward appearance and demeanour obtains honour, her company is sought, she finds her way into the best society, they praise her attractive, pleasant appearance, and that the husband also of such a wife participates to some extent in this honour. Experience also confirms it, that the υἱὸς, strong men, obtain riches (cf. Isa. 49:25); and this statement regarding the υἱὸς, children, diligent, for the υἱὴ (from πάτριος to place in terror, Ps. 10:18), whose power consists in terrorism or violence, is the most direct contrast of a wife, this σκέπασμα...
ἀσθενέστερον, who by heart-winning attraction makes yet better conquests: she thereby obtains a higher good, viz., honour, while the former gains only riches, for “a name” (viz., a good one) “is better than great riches,” 22:1. If we read חרוּצים, this thoughtful contrast is lost.

Three proverbs regarding benevolence:

17 The benevolent man doeth good to his own soul, and the violent man brings trouble on his own flesh.

Proverbs 11:17. Many interpreters reverse the relation of subject and predicate (Targ. only in 17b, after the phrase וּרְמוּ בָּדֶךָ, for which the Syr. has only וּרְמוּ בֵּיתוֹ: quia sibi ipsi benefacit, is quidem erga alios quoque benignus praesumitur, quum caritas ordinata a se ipsa incipiatur; qui vero carnum suam male habet, est crudelis erga alios (Michaelis). But this cannot be established; for certainly it occurs that whoever does good to himself does good also to others, and that whoever is hard against himself also judges and treats others harshly; but in by far the greatest number of cases the fact is this, that he who does not deny anything to himself is in relation to others an egoist, and this is not a “benevolent man;” and, on the contrary, that he who denies to himself lawful enjoyments is in relation to others capable of self-denial and self-sacrifice, and thus is the contrast of a “violent man.” The word of Sirach, 14:5, ὁ πονηρὸς ἑαυτῷ τίνα ἀγαθὸς ἔσται, to which Bertheau appeals, alludes to the niggard, and it is true indeed that his עֹכֵר שְׁאֵרו, but not every עֹכֵר שארו, is a niggard. Thus the “benevolent man” and the “violent man” will be the two subject conceptions, and as it is said of the benevolent (חסד as e.g., Hos. 6:6, of a more restricted sense, as Isa. 57:1) that he does good (טוב, viz., עשה, 31:12), so of the violent (unmerciful) (אכָר as 12:20, Jer. 6:23; 50:42) that he brings evil on his own flesh (LXX αὐτοῦ σῶμα); for עשה as a parallel word to עֹשֶה (cf. p. 141) signifies not blood-relations (Symm., Jerome, Luther, and Grotius), but it has here, as at Mic. 3:2, its nearest signification, from which it then comes to signify those who are of our flesh and blood.

But for that reason the meaning of the poet cannot be that given by Elster: “he who exercises benevolence toward others creates within himself a determination which penetrates his whole being with generous and fruitful warmth, as on the other hand the feeling of hatred deprives the heart of him who cherishes it of the true fountain of life.” If this were meant, then soul and spirit, not soul and flesh, would stand in parallelism. The weal and woe refers thus to the divine retribution which requires the conduct of a man toward his neighbours, according to its character, with reward or punishment (Hitzig, Zöckler).

Proverbs 11:18. Man consists of body and soul. In regard to both, benevolence brings its reward, and hatred its punishment. The godless acquires deceptive gain; but he that soweth righteousness, a true reward.

Jerome makes 18b an independent clause, for he translates it as if the word were written פְׁשִי, the Syr. and Targ. also, as if פְׁשִי אֲמִיתו (his fidelity is his reward). But according to the text as it stands, פְׁשִי extends its regimen to both parts of the verse; to make is here equivalent to, to work out, to acquire, περιποιεῖσθαι, as Gen. 31:1, Jer. 17:1, etc. The labour of the godless has selfishness as its motive, and what he acquires by his labour is therefore “delusive gain,” it is no blessing, it profits him not (Prov. 10:2), and it brings him no advantage (Prov. 10:16). He, on the contrary, acquires truth, i.e., a truly profitable and enduring reward, who sows right-doing, or better: good-doing, by which we also, as the biblical moral in צדקה, think principally of well-doing, unselfish activity and self-sacrificing love. Hos. 10:12 speaks of sowing which has only צדקה as the norm; and how צדקה is understood is seen from the parallel use of חסד [piety]. The “true reward” is just the harvest by which the sowing of the good seed of noble benevolent actions is rewarded.
19 Genuine righteousness reaches to life, And he who pursues evil does it to his death.

Proverbs 11:19. The LXX translate υἱὸς δίκαιος, and the Syrian follows this unwarrantable quid pro quo; the Bible uses the phrase בן עולה and the like, but not בן צדק. The Graec. Venet. (translating οὕτω) deprives the distich of its supposed independence. The Targ. renders כֵן with the following ו as correlates, sic ... uti; but כֵּן in comparative proverbs stands naturally in the second, and not in the first place (vid., p. 9). Without doubt כֵּן is here a noun. It appears to have a personal sense, according to the parallel וּמְׁר דֵף, on which account Elster explains it: he who is firm, stedfast in righteousness, and Zöckler: he who holds fast to righteousness; but כֵּן cannot mean “holding fast,” nor does מְׁכונֵן—“fast” does not at all agree with the meaning of the word, it means upright, and in the ethical sense genuine; thus Ewald better: “he who is of genuine righteousness,” but “genuine in (of) righteousness” is a tautological connection of ideas. Therefore we must regard כֵּן as a substantival neuter, but neither the rectum of Cocceius nor the firmum of Schultens furnishes a naturally expressed suitable thought. Or is כֵּן a substantive in the sense of 2 Kings 7:31? The word denotes the pedestal, the pillar, the standing-place; but what can the basis refer to here (Euchel)? Rather read “aim” (Oetinger) or “direction” (Löwenstein); but כֵּן does not take its meaning from the Hiph. כּב, to speak right (Num. 27:7), and כּב, שׂם כּב, to do right (Eccles. 8:10); in both cases כּב means standing = consisting, stedfast, right, recte. The contrast is לֹא כֵּן, 2 Kings 7:9, which is also once used as a substantive, Isa. 16:6: the unrighteousness of his words. So here כֵּן is used as a substantive connected in the genitive, but not so that it denotes the right holding, retaining of righteousness, but its right quality, אֲמִתָה של־צדקה, as Rashi explains it, i.e., as we understand it: genuineness, or genuine showing of righteousness, which is not mere appearance without reality. That כֵּן denotes such people as seek to appear not otherwise than what they truly are, is in favour of this interpretation. Such genuine righteousness as follows the impulse of the heart, and out of the fulness of the heart does good, has life as its result (Prov. 19:23), an inwardly happy and externally a prosperous life; on the other hand, he who wilfully pursues evil, and finds in it satisfaction, brings death upon himself: he does it to his death, or if we make (which is also possible) רְדֵף the subject: it tends to his death. Thus in other words: Love is life; hatred destroys life.

The following proverbs are especially directed, as connected with this כֵּן, against the contradiction of the external appearance and of the masked internal nature.

20 An abomination to Jahve are the crookedly dishonest of heart, And they who are of honest walk are his delight.

Proverbs 11:20. We read, 2:15; 8:8, עִקֵש (the form of the transgressions); but here, where the “crookedness” is transferred to the heart, we require another word, which renders the idea of falseness, the contrary of directness, lying in it, without any mixture of the fundamental conception flexuosus or tortuosus. כְּתַמִּים דָּרֶק are not only those whose walk is externally without offence and blameless, but, in conformity with the contrast, those whose manner of conduct proceeds from a disposition that is pure, free from deception and concealment. Jerome, et voluntas ejus in iis qui simpliciter ambulant. But the word is not another; they [the upright] are Bomarzo. Prov. 11:1) [delight]: He regards them, and only them, with satisfaction.

21 Assuredly [the hand to it] the wicked remaineth not unpunished. But the seed of the righteous is delivered.

Proverbs 11:21. The LXX render here, as 16:5, where the יָד בְּיָד repeats itself, χειρὶ χεῖρας ἐμβαλὼν ἀδίκως which is not to be understood, as Evagrius supposes, of one that can be bribed, but only of a violent person; the Syr. and Targ. have the same reference; but the subject is certainly עָרָה, and a governing word, as מִיָד (2 Sam. 20:21), is wanting, to say nothing of the fact that the phrase “one hand against the other” would require the words to be יָד בְּיָדִי. Jerome and the Graec. Venet., without our being able, however, to see their meaning. The translation of the other Greek versions is not given. The Jewish interpreters offer nothing that is worthy, as e.g., Immanuel and Me’iri explain it by “immediately,” which in the modern Hebr. would require נַעֲמָה, and besides is not here suitable. The Midrash connects with 21a the earnest warning that he who sins with the one hand and with the other does good, is nevertheless not free from punishment. Schultens has an explanation to give to the words which is worthy of examination: hand to hand, i.e., after the manner of an inheritance per posteros (Ex. 20:5), resting his opinion on this, that Arab. yad cf. יד, Isa. 56:5) is used among other significations in that of authorizing an inheritance. Gesenius follows him, but only urging the idea of the sequence of time (cf. Pres. dest bedest, hand to hand = continuing after one another), and interprets יָד בְּיָד as Fleischer does: ab aetate in aetatem non (i.e., nullo unquam tempore futuro) erit impunis scelestus, sed posteri justorum salvi erunt. According to Böttcher, “hand to hand” is equivalent to from one hand to another, and this corresponds to the thought expressed in Plutarch’s de sera numinis vindicta: if not immediately, yet at last.

We may refer in vindication of this to the fact that, as the Arab. lexicographers say, yad, used of the course of time, means the extension (madd) of time, and then a period of time. But for the idea expressed by nunquam, or neitquam, or tandem aliquando, the language supplied to the poet a multitude of forms, and we do not see why he should have selected just this expression with its primary meaning alternatim not properly agreeing with the connection. Therefore we prefer with EWald to regard yad אָלֶלֶל as a formula confirmation derived from the common speech of the people: hand to hand (חא as in יד, Job 17:3), i.e., the hand for it [I pledge it, guarantee it] (Bertheau, Hitzig, Elster, Zöckler). But if 21a assures by the pledge of the hand, and as it were lays a wager to it, that the wicked shall not go unpunished, then the genitive in רַוחַ חַיָי is not that of dependence by origin, but, as Isa. 65:23; 1:4, the genitive of apposition, for רַוחַ חַיָי here, as מִיָד, Ps. 24:6; 112:2, denotes a oneness of like origin and of like kind, but with a preponderance of the latter. יד בְּיָד is the 3rd pret., which by the preceding fut. retains the reference to the future: the merited punishment comes on the wicked, but the generation of the righteous escapes the judgment. יד has the ו dagheshed (Michlol 63d) according to the rule of the יד, according to which the consonant first sounded after the word terminating in an accented a or é is doubled, which is here, as at 15:1, done with the י.

22 A golden ring in a swine’s snout,—A fair woman and without delicacy.

Proverbs 11:22. This is the first instance of an emblematical proverb in which the first and second lines are related to each other as figure and its import, vid., p. 8. The LXX translates rhythmically, but by its δοσμεῖ π… ἀξονομεῖ it destroys the character of this picture-book proverbial form. The nose-ring, ἀξονομεῖ, generally attached to the right nostril and hanging down over the mouth (vid., Lane’s Manners, etc.) is a female ornament that has been in use since the time of the patriarchs (Gen. 24:47). If one supposes such a ring in a swine’s snout, then in such a thing he has the emblem of a wife in whom beauty and the want of culture are placed together in direct contrast. נין is taste carried over into the intellect and ethical region, the capability of forming a judgment, Job 12:20, and particularly the capability of discovering that which is right and adapted to the end in view, 1 Sam. 25:33 (of Abigail), here in accordance with the figure of a beast with which the ideas of uncleanness, shamelessness, and rudeness are associated, a mind for the noble, the fine, the fitting, that which in the higher and at the same time intellectual and ethical sense we call tact (fine feeling); מִיֹשֶר (alienata) denotes the want of this capacity, not without the accompanying idea of self-guilt.

Proverbs 11:23. This is usually explained with Fleischer: If the righteous wish for anything, their wish reaches to no other than a fortunate issue; but if the godless hope for anything, then there is to them in the end as their portion, not the good they hoped for, but wrath (Prov. 10:28, cf. 11:4). However, that מִיֹשֶר is at once to be understood thus, as in בְּשָׁם יִשְׂרָאֵל, and that the phrase is to be rendered: the hope of the godless is God’s wrath, is doubtful. But מִיֹשֶר denotes also want of moderation, and particularly in the form of presumption, 21:24, Isa. 16:6; and thus we gain the thought that the desire of the righteous is directed only to that which is good, and thus to an object that is attainable because well-pleasing to God, while on the contrary the hope of the godless consists only in the suggestions of their presumption, and thus is vain self-deceit. The punctuation תאות צדיקים is contrary to rule; correct texts have תאות צדיקים for Dechi stands before Athnach only if the Athnach-word has two syllables (Torath Emeth, p. 43; Accentssystem, xviii. § 4).

Three proverbs regarding giving which is not loss but gain.

24 There is one who giveth bounteously, and he increaseth still more; And (there is) one who withholdeth what is due, only to his loss.

Proverbs 11:24. The first of the proverbs with מִיֹשֶר (there is), which are peculiar to the first collection (vid., p. 24). The meaning is, that the possessions of the liberal giver do not decrease but increase, and that, on the contrary, the possessions of the niggardly do not increase but decrease. כּפֵר is not to be understood after Ps. 112:9. Instead of נון וּנְסָף the three Erfurt codd. have נון וּנְסָף (with retrogression of the tone?), which Hitzig approves of; but the traditional phrase which refers (et qui augetur insuper) נון וּנְסָף not to the possession of him who scattereth, but to himself, is finer in the expression. In the characteristic of the other, מִיֹשֶר is commonly interpreted comparatively: plus aeguo (Cocceius) or justo (Schelling). But מִיֹשֶר after מִיֹשֶר is to be regarded as governed by it, and מִיֹשֶר denotes not competence, riches, as Arab. yusr (Bertheau, Zöckler), also not uprightness = beneficence (Midrash, מְדַרְכָּה), but duty, uprightness, as Job 33:23, where it denotes that which is advantageous to man, as here that which befits him: he who holds back, namely himself, from that which is due to himself, and thus should permit to himself, such an one profits nothing at all by thisἀφειδία (17 b, Col. 2:23), but it tends only to loss to him, only to the lessening of that which he possesses. We shall meet with this (לְׁמָ חַי), and frequently again—it is a common Mashal formula (cf. καὶ τόσῳ μᾶλλον ὑστερεῖται, Sir. 11:11). The cause of the strange phenomenon that the liberal gains and the niggardly loses is not here expressed, but the following proverb gives the explanation of it:

25 A liberal soul [soul of blessing] is made fat, And he that watereth others is also watered.
Proverbs 11:25. A synonymous distich (vid., p. 7). A soul of blessing is one from whom blessings go out to others, who is even a blessing to all with whom he comes into fellowship; בְּרָכָה denotes also particularly the gifts of love, 1 Sam. 25:27, בָּרִךְ denotes, if the Arab. is right, which derives it from the Aramaic vocalization (cf. 1:10. אב, Isa. 21:12 בֵּרֵךְ). Perhaps the א makes it noticeable that here a different word from יֵרָה, morning rain, is used; however, Symm. translates προφινός, and the Graec. Venet. (Kimchi following it) ὕετος. As a rule, we do not derive אֲרָא from אֶרֶב, of which it would be the Hophal (= יְרָה, as Lev. 4:23, יָרָה) (Ewald, § 131f.); for the idea conspergitur, which the Ho. of the Hiph. יָרְּה, Hos. 6:3, expresses, is, as correlate to מְדַבֵּר, as a parallel word to מְדַבֵּר, one not of equal force. Jerome was guided by correct feeling, for he translates: et qui inebriat ipse quoque inebriabitur. The stem-word is certainly יָרְּה, whether it is with Hitzig to be punctuated אֲרָא = אֲרָא = אָרָא, or with Fleischer we are to regard אֲרָא as derived per metathesin from אֶרֶב, as for Arab. אֲרָי (to cause to see) is used the vulgar Arab. אֲרָעי (in the Syr. Arab.) and أَرْواي (in the Egypt. Arab.). We prefer the latter, for the passing of מְדַבֵּר (from מְדַבֵּר) into מְדַבֵּר is according to rule, vid., at 23:21.

26 Whoso withholdeth corn, him the people curse; But blessing is on the head of him that selleth it.

Proverbs 11:26. This proverb is directed against the corn-usurer, whose covetousness and deceitful conduct is described in Amos 8:4–8. But whilst it is there said that they cannot wait till the burdensome interruption of their usuurious conduct on account of the sacred days come to an end, the figure here is of a different aspect of their character: they hold back their stores of corn in the times of scarcity, for they speculate on receiving yet higher prices for it. יָרְּה (from יֵרָה, to purify, to be pure) is thrashed grain, cf. Arab. burr, wheat, and nakky of the cleaning of the grain by the separation from it of the tares, etc. (Fl.); the word has Kametz, according to the Masora, as always in pause and in the history of Joseph. פִּיְשֵׁר has Munach on the syllable preceding the last, on which the tone is thrown back, and Metheg with the Tsere as the sign of a pause, as 1:10 הָעֵצָה (vid., p. 47). מְשָׁבְרִים, which we would understand in the Proph. of nations, are here, as at 24:24, the individuals of the people. The יָרְּה which falls on the head of the charitable is the thanks of his fellow-citizens, along with all good wishes. That self-sacrificing endeavour after the good of others finds its regard in the thought encircling the following proverbs.

Proverbs 11:27. Here we have together three synonyms of seeking: בָּשָׂר (בָּשָּׂר, findere), which has the general meaning quaerere, from the root-idea of penetrating and pressing forwards; בָּשָׂר (בָּשָׂר, terere), which from the root-idea of trying (proving) corresponds to the Lat. studere; and בָּשָׂר (בָּשָׂר, פְּשָׁר instead of פָּשָׁר, מְשָׁבְרִים instead of מְשָׁבְרִים), which means mane, and thus sedulo quaere (vid., at 1:28). From 27b, where by יֵרֵה is meant evil which one prepares for another, there arises for וּלָה the idea of good thoughts and actions with reference to others. He who applies himself to such, seeks therewith that which is pleasing, i.e., that which pleases or does good to others. If that which is pleasing to God were meant, then this would have been said (cf. 12:2); the idea here is similar to 10:32, and the word יְׁבַקֵּשׁ is used, and not יִמְצָא, because reference is not made to a fact in the moral government of the world, but a description is given of one who is zealously intent upon good, and thus of a noble man. Such an one always asks himself (cf. Matt. 7:12): what will, in the given case, be well-pleasing to the neighbour, what will tend to his true satisfaction? Regarding the punctuation here, שֹחֵר, vid., at v. 26. The subject to וּתְכָוֶנ, which, 10:24, stands as the fundamental idea, here follows from the governed רָעָה, which may be the gen. (Ps. 38:13) as well as the accus. 28 He that trusteth in his riches shall fall, And the righteous shall flourish like the green leaf.

Proverbs 11:28. יִתְנָחֲלָה (plene after the Masora) as well as the figure יִתְנָחֲלָה (cf. for the punctuation יִתְנָחֲלָה, 10:26) are singular, but are understood if one observes that in 28a a withered tree, and in 28b a tree with leaves ever green, hovers before the imagination of the poet (cf. Ps. 1:4, Jer. 17:8). The proud rich man, who on the ground of his riches appears to himself to be free from danger, goes on to his ruin (ירוח as 11:5, and frequently in the Book of Proverbs), while on the contrary the righteous continues to flourish like the leaf—the thus resemble the trees which perennially continue to flourish anew. Regarding יִתְנָחֲלָה as originally collective (Symm. θάλλος), vid., at Isa. 1:30, and regarding פָרָח (R. מֶלֶךְ, to break), here of the continual breaking forth of fresh-growing leaf-buds, vid., at Isa. 11:1. The apostolic word names this continual growth the metamorphosis of believers, 2 Cor. 2:18. The LXX has read יִתְנָחֲלָה יִתְנָחֲלָה (approved by Hitzig): and he who raiseth up the righteous.

29 He that troubleth his own household shall inherit the wind, And a fool becomes servant to the wise in heart.

Proverbs 11:29. Jerome well translates: qui conturbat domum suam, for עֲרֵר closely corresponds to the Lat. turbare; but with what reference is the troubling or disturbing here meant? The Syr. translates 29a doubly, and refers it once to deceit, and the second time to the contrary of avarice; the LXX, by ο μὴ συμπεριφερόμενος τῷ ἑαυτοῦ οἴκῳ, understands one who acts towards his own not unsocially, or without affability, and thus not tyrannically. But עֲרֵר לְאָדָם 11:17, is he who does not grudge to his own body which is necessary; עֲרֵר is applied to Elijah, 1 Kings 18:17, on account of whose prayer there was a want of rain; and at 15:27 it is the covetous who is spoken of as עֲרֵר. The proverb has, accordingly, in the man who “troubles his own house” (Luth.), a niggard and sordid person (Hitzig) in view, one who does not give to his own, particularly to his own servants, a sufficiency of food and of necessary recreation. Far from raising himself by his household arrangements, he shall only inherit wind (יִנְחֵל), not as the Syr. translates, יִנְחֵל, in the general signification to inherit, to obtain, as 3:35; 28:10, etc.), i.e., he goes always farther and farther back (for he deprives his servants of all pleasure and love for their word in seeking the prosperity of his house), till in the end the reality of his possession dissolves into nothing. Such conduct is not only loveless, but also foolish; and a foolish person (vid., regarding אֱוִיל at 1:7) has no influence as the master of a house, and generally is unable to maintain his independence: “and the servant is a fool to him who is wise of heart.” Thus the LXX (cf. also the LXX of 10:5), Syr., Targ., Jerome, Graec. Venet., Luth. construe the sentence. The explanation, et servus stulti cordato (sc. addicitur), i.e., even the domestics of the covetous fool are at last partakers in the wise beneficence (Fl.), places 29b in an unnecessary connection with 29a, omits the verb, which is here scarcely superfluous, and is not demanded by the accentuation (cf. e.g., 19:22b).

30 The fruit of the righteous is a tree of life, And the wise winneth souls.

Proverbs 11:30. The LXX translate, ἐκ καρποῦ δικαιοσύνης φύεται δένδρον ζωῆς; Hitzig takes thence the word צֶדֶק; but this translation discredits itself by the unnatural reversal of the relation of fruit and tree. The fruit of the righteous is here not the good which his conduct brings to him, as Isa. 3:10, Jer. 32:19, but his activity itself proceeding from an internal impulse. This fruit is a tree of life. We need to supplement פְׁרִי [fruit] as little here as אֹר ח [a traveller] at 10:17; for the meaning of the proverb is, that the fruit of the righteous, i.e., his external influence, itself is a tree of life (vid., p. 23), namely for others, since his words and actions exert a quickening, refreshing, happy influence upon them. By this means the wise (righteousness and wisdom come together according to the saying of the Chokma, 1:7) becomes a winner of souls (לְחָא מִדֶּקֶט as 6:25, but taken in bonam partem), or, as expressed in the N.T. (Matt. 4:19), a fisher of men, for he gains them not only for himself, but also for the service of wisdom and righteousness.

Proverbs 11:31. The particles יָאִן signify properly, interrogatively: Shall it yet be said that ...; it corresponds to the German "geschweige denn" [nedum] (Fl.). יָאִן is already in bibl. Hebr. in the way of becoming a conditional particle; it opens, as here, the antecedent of a gradatio a minori ad majus introduced by יְשֻּלָם, Job 15:15f., 25:5f., cf. יְשֻּלָם (ם) with יְשֻּלָם following, Gen. 44:8, 2 Sam. 12:18. 13:13 presents itself as the nearest parallel to יְשֻּלָם, where it means, to be rewarded. It is a vocabulum anceps, and denotes full requital, i.e., according to the reference, either righteous reward or righteous punishment. If 30a is understood of reward, and 30b of punishment, then the force of the argument in the conclusion consists in this, that the righteous can put forth no claim to a recompense, because his well-doing is never so perfect as not to be mingled with win (Ecclus. 7:20; Ps. 143:2); while, on the contrary, the repression of the wicked, who, as שְׁבִי as to his intention, and שְׁבִי כֹּדֶשׁ as to his conduct, actually denies his dependence on God, is demanded by divine holiness. But the conclusion is not stringent, since in the relation of God to the righteous His dispensation of grace and faithfulness to promises also come into view, and thus in both cases יְשֻּלָם appears to require the same interpretation: if the righteous does not remain unrevenged, so much more shall not the godless and the sinner remain ..., or how much less shall the godless and the sinner remain so. Thus the Graec. Venet., Θεῷ ὁ δίκαιος ἐν τῇ γῆ ἀποτιθήσεται; thus also Luther, and among the moderns Löwenstein and Elster. Of the proverb so understood the LXX version, εἰ ὁ μὲν δίκαιος μόλις (μόγις) σώζεται ὁ ἀσεγής καὶ ἁμαρτωλὸς ποῦ φανεῖται (cf. 1 Pet. 4:18) may be a free translation, for in the יְשֻּלָם there certainty lies, according to the sense, a כִמְׁע ט יִוָּשֵע. Also יְשֻּלָם has the principal tone, not בארץ. The thought even on this side (on earth), lies beyond the sphere of the O.T. consciousness. The earth is here the world of man.

Proverbs 12

Three proverbs on knowledge, the favour of God, firmness and the means thereto.

1 He loveth correction who loveth knowledge, And he hateth instruction who is without reason.

Proverbs 12:1. It is difficult in such cases to say which is the relation of the ideas that is intended. The sequence of words which lies nearest in the Semitic substantival clause is that in which the predicate is placed first; but the subject may, if it is to be made prominent, stand at the head of the sentence. Here, 1b, the placing of the subject in advance recommends itself: one who hates instruction is devoid of reason. But since we have no reason in 1a to invert the order of the words as they lie together, we take the conceptions placed first in both cases as the predicates. Thus: he who loves knowledge shows and proves that he does so by this, that he willingly puts himself in the place of a learner; and devoid of reason is he who with aversion rejects reproach, which is designed to guard him from future mistakes and false steps. Regarding the punctuation ἂν ἐμπνευσθῇ, (with Mercha on the ante-penult. and the penult-sign on the penult.), vid., at 11:26f., 1:19.

In 1b the Munach in ἡ τελευταία is transformed from M ug r a s h (Accentssystem, xviii. § 2), as in 15:10b. בִּין (cf. 30:2) is a being who is stupid as the brute cattle (בְּעִיר, from בָּעֵר, to graze, cattle of all kinds; Arab. қўр, the beast κατ᾽ ἐξ ἐπιστημονίας, i.e., the camel); as a homo brutus is compared to a בָּעֵר (Ps. 49:21), 73:22), and is called Arab. behymt, from bahym, “shut up” (spec. dabb, a bear; thwr, an ox; ḥamār, an ass) (Fl.).

2 A good man obtaineth favour with Jahve, But the man of wicked devices He condemns.

Proverbs 12:2. He who is an איש קומתו (Prov. 14:17, cf. Ps. 37:7) is defined in 24:8 (cf. p. 28): he is a man of devices (vid., regarding the etymon, p. 39), namely, that are wicked, one who contrives evil against his neighbour. The meaning of the subject-conception is defined according to this, although in itself also it is clear, for רֵאָשׁ, used of God (e.g., Ps. 73:1; 86:5) and of men (Prov. 13:22; 14:14), denotes the good (bonus) in the sense of the benevolent (benignus); the Scripture truths, that God is love, that love is the essence of goodness and is the fulfilling of the law, are so conformed to reason, that they stamp themselves as immediate component parts of the human consciousness. A רֵאָשׁ is thus a man who acts according to the ruling motive of self-sacrificing love; such an one obtains (vid., on אֵין, educit = adipiscitur, at 3:13) the favour of God, He is and shows Himself kind to him, while on the contrary He condemns the wicked intriguer. Hitzig translates: the former of intrigues in punishable (as the Syr.: is condemned; Targ.: his contrivance is shattered to pieces); but to become a reus רֶשע does not denote, but either to practise as רֶשע = to condemn, Job 34:12, or to set forth as רֶשֶׁע = to condemn, Isa. 50:9. Taken in the former signification (Jerome, impie agit), a declaration is made which is not needed, since the moral badness already lies in the reference of the subject: thus רֶשֶׁע will be used also of Jahve. In proof that the poet did not need to say אַחֲרוֹנָא בַּשָּׁמַיִם, Zöckler rightly points to 10:6, Job 22:29.

Proverbs 12:3. In רֶשֶׁע there lies the idea of want of inward stay (vid., at Ps. 1:1); in a manner of thought and of conduct which has no stay in God and His law, there can be expected no external endurance, no solidity. The righteous, on the contrary, have their root in God; nothing can tear them from the ground in which they are rooted, they are as trees which no storm outroots. The very same thought is clothed in other words in 10:25, and another statement regarding the root of the righteous is found at 12:12.

We now place together vv. 4–12. One proverb concerning the house-wife forms the beginning of this group, and four regarding the management of the house and business form the conclusion.

4 A good [brave] wife is the crown of her husband, But as rottenness in his bones is one that causeth shame.

Proverbs 12:4. As 11:16 says of וְיהִי חֵן, the pleasant wife (חֵן = γάρις), that she obtaineth honour; so this proverb of וְיהִי חֵן, the good wife (חֵן = ύπετη, virtue), that she raises her husband to higher honour: she is for his self-consciousness στέφανος καυχήσεως (1 Thess. 2:19), and is also to him such a crown of honour.
before the world (cf. 31:23). On the contrary, a מְׁבִישָה, conducting herself shamefully (cf. regarding the double meaning of this Mishle word, which only here occurs in the fem., at 10:5), is to her husband instar cariei in ossibus. רָקָב (רָק ב, 10:7) denotes both the caries and the worm-hole (cf. Job 41:19, עֵץ רִקָבון, worm-eaten wood). Like as the caries slowly but continuously increases, till at last the part of the body which the bone bears and the whole life of the man falls to ruin; so an unhappy marriage gnaws at the marrow of life, it destroys the happiness of life, disturbs the pursuit, undermines the life of the husband.

5 The thoughts of the righteous are justice, The counsels of the godless are deceit. Proverbs 12:5. They are so, that is, in their contents and their aim. To the righteous are ascribed מ חֲשָבות, namely, simple and clear; to the godless, ת חְׁבֻּלות, carefully thought out, prudently thought through schemes and measures (regarding the word and the idea, vid., p. 40), but on that very account not simple, because with a tendency; for the righteous have an objective rule, namely, that which is right in the sight of God and of men, but the godless have only a selfish purpose, which they seek to attain by deceiving, and at the cost of, their neighbour.

6 The word of the godless is to lie in wait for the blood of others, But the mouth of the upright delivereth them. Proverbs 12:6. Our editions have דברי רשעים, but the right sequence of the accents (in Cod. 1294 and elsewhere) is דברי רָעָם; the logical relation in this transformation, which is only rhythmically conditioned, remains the same. The vocalization wavers between אֱרָב, which would be imper., and אֲרָב, which is infin., like עֲבָש, 25:7, יָבִשׁ, 21:11, יָכִעל, בֵּשׁ, 25:11. However one punctuates it, the infin. is intended in any case, in which the expression always remains sketchy enough: the words of the godless are lying in wait for blood, i.e., they are calculated to bring others to this, into the danger of their lives, e.g., before the tribunal by false charges and false witness. דָם is the accus. of the object; for instead of אֵיבָר לְׁדָם (Prov. 1:11), to lurk for blood, a shorter expression, אֵיבָר, is used (Ewald, § 282a). The suffix of י צִילֵם might appear, after 11:6א, to refer back to the יְשָרִים, but the thought that their mouth saves the upright, that they thus know to speak themselves out of the danger, is by far less appropriate (vid., on the contrary, דעת, 11:9) than the thought that the mouth of the upright delivereth from danger those whose lives are threatened by the godless, as is rightly explained by Ewald, Bertheau, Elster. The personal subject or object is in the Mashal style often to be evolved from the connection, e.g., 14:26; 19:23.

7 The godless are overturned and are no more, But the house of the righteous stands. Proverbs 12:7. Bertheau and Zöckler explain: The wicked turn about, then are they no more; i.e., as we say: it is over with them “in the turning of a hand.” The noun in the inf. absol. may certainly be the subject, like 17:12, as well as the object (Ewald, § 328c), and יָפָך may be used of the turning about of oneself, Ps. 78:9, 2 Kings 5:26, 2 Chron. 9:12. That explanation also may claim for itself that יָפָך nowhere occurs with a personal object, if we except one questionable passage, Isa. 1:7. But here the interpretation of the רשעים as the object lies near the contrast of בית, and moreover the interpretation of the יָפָך, not in the sense of στρέφεσθαι (LXX), but of καταστρέφειν (Syr., Targ., Jerome, Graec. Venet., Luther), lies near the contrast of י עֲמֹד. The inf. absol. thus leaves the power from which the catastrophe proceeds indefinite, as the pass. יָפָך would also leave it, and the act designedly presented in a vague manner to connect with the certain consequences therewith, as 25:4f., as if to say: there comes only from some quarter an unparalleled overthrow which overwhelms the godless; thus no rising up again is to be thought on, it is all over with them; while, on the contrary, the house of the righteous withstands the storm which sweeps away the godless.

8 According to the measure of his intelligence is a man praised, And whoever is of a perverse mind is despised.

Proverbs 12:8. Everywhere in the Mishle שֵכֶל has no other meaning than intellectus (vid., p. 62). The praise which is given to a man measures itself לפי שכלו (punctuate_leפִי־שִכְל), i.e., according to the measure (so לפי is used in the oldest form of the language) of his intelligence, or as we may also say, of his culture; for in these proverbs, which make the fear of God the highest principle, שכל means also understanding of moral excellence, not merely the intellectual superiority of natural gifts. שכל is here a relative conception of manifold gradations, but it does not mean renown in general, but good renown. Parallel with שכל, לב refers to the understanding (νοῦς); the rendering of Löwenstein, “who is of false heart,” is defective. נ עֲוֶה (synon. of נִפְתָל and עִקֵש, but nowhere else interchanging with it) means here a vero et recto detortus et aversus (Fl.). Such a man who has not a good understanding, nor any certain rule of judgment, falls under contempt (Græc. Venet. τῶ ὄντωτα εἰς μυσαγμόν, after the false reading of הרש instead of הרש), i.e., he defames himself by his crooked judgment of men, of things and their relations, and is on this account in no position rightly to make use of them.

9 Better is he who is lowly and has a servant, Than he that makes himself mighty and is without bread.

Proverbs 12:9. This proverb, like 15:17, commends the middle rank of life with its quiet excellences. נָקִי (like 1 Sam. 18:23), from נַקֵ+, cognate with נָקִי, Syr. ‘kly, to despise, properly levi pendere, levem habere (whence קלי, scorn, disgrace), here of a man who lives in a humble position and does not seek to raise himself up. Many of the ancients (LXX, Symmachus, Jerome, Syr., Rashi, Luther, Schultens) explain וַאֶלֶף by, and is a servant to himself, serves himself; but in that case the words would have been עֲבֵד (Syr. עֲבֵד נָשֵ+), or rather עֲבֵד עָבָד, so that would be more appropriate, as thus pointed by Ziegler, Ewald, and Hitzig. But if one adheres to the traditional reading, and interprets this, as it must be interpreted: et cui servus (Targ., Græc. Venet.), then that supplies a better contrast to זלָה־לָחֶם, for “the first necessity of an oriental in only moderate circumstances is a slave, just as was the case with the Greeks and Romans” (Fl.). A man of lowly rank, who is, however, not so poor that he cannot support a slave, is better than one who boasts himself and is yet a beggar (2 Sam. 3:29). The Hithpa. often expresses a striving to be, or to wish to appear to be, what the adj. corresponding to the verb states, e.g., דִ+כַּל, דִ+כָל; like the Greek middles, εζεσθαὶ αζεσθαι, cf. הִתְך כֵ+ and σοφίζεσθαι. So here, where with Fleischer we have translated: who makes himself mighty, for כָבֹד, gravem esse, is etymologically also the contrast of כָּל. The proverb, Sirach 10:26: κρείσσων ἐργαζόμενος καὶ περισσεύων ἐν πᾶσι ἄρτων ἀπορῶν ὄρτων (according to the text of Fritzsche), is a half remodelling, half translation of this before us.

Proverbs 12:10. The explanation: the righteous taketh care for the life of his beast (Fl.), fails, for 10a is to be taken with Ex. 23:9; יד signifieth also the state of one’s soul, the frame of mind, the state of feeling; but יד has, as in the related proverb, 27:23, the meaning of careful cognizance or investigation, in conformity with which one acts. If the Torâ includes in the law of the Sabbath (Ex. 20:10; 23:12) useful beasts and cattle, which are here especially meant, and secures to them the reward of their labour (Deut. 25:4); if it forbids the mutilation, and generally the giving of unnecessary pain, to beasts; if it enjoins those who take a bird's nest to let the dam escape (Deut. 22:6f.),—these are the prefigurations of that, ἐντέρα, and as the God of the Torâ thus appears at the close of the Book of Jonah, this wonderful apology (defensio) of the all-embracing compassion, the God also of the world-history in this sympathy for the beasts of the earth as the type of the righteous.

In 10b most interpreters find an oxymoron: the compassion of the godless is compassionless, the direct opposite of compassion; i.e., he possesses either altogether no compassion, or he shows such as in its principle, its expression, and in its effects is the opposite of what it ought to be (Fl.). Bertheau believes that in the sing. of the predicate ṣצָרִי he is justified in translating: the compassion of the wicked is a tyranny. And as one may speak of a loveless love, i.e., of a love which in its principle is nothing else than selfishness, so also of a compassionless compassion, such as consists only in gesture and speech without truth of feeling and of active results. But how such a compassionless compassion toward the cattle, and one which is really cruel, is possible, it may be difficult to show. Hitzig's conjecture, ṣצָרִים ṣצָרַים, sprang from this thought: the most merciful among sinners are cruel—the sinner is as such not ṣצָרִים. The LXX is right in the rendering, τὰ δὲ σπλάγχνα τῶν ἁσθεῶν ἄνελεήμονα. The noun σπλάγχνα means here not compassion, but, as in Gen. 43:30 (LXX ἐντερα or ἐγκατά) and 1 Kings 3:26 (LXX μήτρα), has the meaning the bowels (properly tender parts, cf. Arab. rakhuma, to be soft, tender, with ṣחַר), and thus the interior of the body, in which deep emotions, and especially strong sympathy, are wont to be reflected (cf. Hos. 10:8). The singular of the predicate ṣצָרִים arises here from the unity of the subject-conception: the inwards, as Jer. 50:12, from the reference of the expression to each individual of the many.

11 He that tilleth his own ground is satisfied with bread, and he that followeth after vain pursuits is devoid of understanding.

Proverbs 12:11. Yet more complete is the antithetic parallelism in the doublette, 28:19 (cf. also Sir. 20:27a). The proverb recommends the cultivation of the field as the surest means of supporting oneself honestly and abundantly, in contrast to the grasping after vain, i.e., unrighteous means of subsistence, windy speculations, and the like (Fl.). רִיקִים are here not persons (Bertheau), but things without solidity and value (LXX μάταια; Aquila, Theodotion, κενά), and, in conformity with the contrast, not real business. Elsewhere also the mas. plur. discharges the function of a neut. noun of multitude, vid., נְגִידִים, principalia, 8:6, and דְּרֵים, Ps. 19:14—one of the many examples of the imperfect use of the gender in Hebr.; the speaker has in אָנֶה, vana et inania, not אָנֵס, but וֹרֵים (Deut. 32:47) in view. The LXX erroneously at 28:19, and Symmachus and Jerome at both places understand רָכִּים of slothfulness.

Proverbs 12:12. This translation is at the same time an explanation, and agrees with Fleischer's "the godless strives by unrighteous gain like the wicked (Prov. 4:14) to enrich himself, namely, as must be understood from the antithetic members of the parallelism, in vain, without thereby making progress and gaining anything certain. The preterite, as 11:2, 8, etc., places the general true proposition as a separate historic principle derived from experience. In 12b עָשָׂה stands elliptically or pregnantly: edet, scil. quod radix edere solet, sobolem stirpis, ramorum, etc., as in the Arab. natan and ānatan are specially used without an obj. of the spontaneity of an odour." The noun מָצֵד (from הָצָר, to spy, to hunt) is elsewhere the instrument of the hunt (a net), here the object and end of it. If the words had been 메זיד רעים then we would explain after Ps. 78:49 (vid., comm. on), and אשת ורעים 6:24; but in the difference of number, שורש רעים will not be the qualitative but the subjective personal genitive: capturam qualem mali captant. Ewald, who understands רעים, 11b, of good-for-nothing-fellows, interprets שורש רעים here, on the contrary, as neuter (§ 172b): the desire of the wicked is an evil net, i.e., wherein he catches all manner of evil for himself. The LXX has here two proverbs, in which שורש רעים occurs in the plur. and in the sense of ὀχυρώματα; 12b of the Hebr. text is rendered: αἱ δὲ ρίζαι τῶν εἰσεφθέντων ἐν ὀχυρώμασι, which Schleusner explains immotae erunt. The Hebr. text can gain nothing from this variation. That the LXX reads והתרש срокים אלים is not probable, since they nowhere thus translate ותרש. But Reiske and Ziegler have, like Ewald and Hitzig, combined清 for the root ותרש from Arab. wâtin, firmum, perennem esse. Hitzig translates the distich, after emending the text of 12a by the help of the LXX and the Arab.: the refuge of the wicked is miry clay, but the root of the righteous endures (יתן from ותרש). Böttcher also reads instead of והתרש, ותרש כטמר ותרש, and translates (vid., p. 192, l. 11): the refuge of the wicked is miry clay, but the root of the righteous holdeth fast (יתן = Arab. wâtin). But this derivation of a verb ותרש is not necessary. The Graec. Venet. rightly, πίζα δὲ δικαίων δώσει. The obj. is self-evident. Rashi reads מה שעשה ראיה לי ליתן את אדמת. So also Schultens. The root giveth, is equivalent to, it is productive in bringing forth that which lies in its nature. That the root of the righteous endures (Targ. תקיס) is otherwise expressed, 12:3.

Proverbs regarding injurious and beneficial words, wise hearing and prudent silence. 13 In the transgression of the lips there lies a dangerous snare; The righteous escapeth from trouble.

Proverbs 12:13. The consecutive modus (דנ) is here of greater weight than e.g., at 11:8, where the connection follows without it (דנ) from the idea of the change of place. The translation: but the righteous ... restores שורש רעים (הנה), and ignores the syllogistic relation of the members of the proverb, which shows itself here (cf. the contrary, 11:9) to a certain degree by רעים. Ewald displaces this relation, for he paraphrases: “any one may easily come into great danger by means of inconsiderate words; yet it is to be hoped that the righteous may escape, for he will guard himself against evil from the beginning.” He is right here in interpreting מוקש ורעים as the designation of danger into which one is betrayed by the transgressions of his lips, but “inconsiderate words” are less than מוקש שורשים. One must not be misled into connecting with מוקש the idea of missing, or a false step, from the circumstance that מוקש means a step; both verbs have, it is true, the common R. מוקש with the fundamental idea of placing apart or separating, but has מוקש מוקש (step = placing apart of the legs), but denotes (as Arab. fusuwḳ fisḳ, from the primary meaning diruptio, diremtio) a sinning, breaking through and breaking off the relation to God (cf. e.g., 28:24), or even the restraints of morality (Prov. 10:19). Such a sinning, which fastens itself to, and runs even among the righteous, would not be called מוקש, but rather מוקש (Prov. 20:9). According to this the proverb will mean that sinful words bring into extreme danger every one who indulges in them—a danger which he can with difficulty escape; and that thus the righteous, who guards himself against sinful words, escapes from the distress (cf. with the expression, Eccles. 7:18) into which one is thereby betrayed. ורעים is the descriptive and expressive epithet to מוקש (cf. Eccles. 9:12): a bad false trap, a malicious snare, for מוקש is the snare which closes together and catches the bird by the feet. This proverb is repeated at 29:6, peculiarly remodelled. The LXX has after v. 13 another distich: He who is of mild countenance findeth mercy; He who is litigious oppresseth souls.

(נפשות, or rather, more in accordance with the Hebrew original: oppresseth himself, נפשו).

14 From the fruit which the mouth of the man bringeth forth is he satisfied with good, And what the hands of the man accomplish returns back to him.

Proverbs 12:14. The proverb finds its final verification in the last judgment (cf. Matt. 12:37), but it is also illustrated in the present life. If the mouth of a man bringeth forth fruit,—namely, the fruit of wholesome doctrine, of right guidance, of comforting exhortation, of peace-bringing consolation for others,—this fruit is also to his own advantage, he richly enjoys the good which flows out of his own mouth, the blessing he bestows is also a blessing for himself. The same also is the case with the actions of a man. That which is done, or the service which is rendered by his hands, comes back to him as a reward or as a punishment.

The first line is repeated, somewhat altered, at 13:2; 18:20. The whole proverb is prophetically echoed in Isa. 3:10f. The Kerî יָשִיב has Jahve as the subject, or rather the subject remains undefined, and “one requites him” is equivalent to: it is required to him. The Chethîb seems to us more expressive; but this use of the active with the undefined subject, instead of the passive, is certainly as much in the Mishle style (cf. 13:21) as the development of the subject of the clause from a foregoing genitive.

Proverbs 12:15. Other proverbs, like 16:2, say that generally the judgment of a man regarding his character does not go beyond a narrow subjectivity; but there are objective criteria according to which a man can prove whether the way in which he walks is right; but the fool knows not other standard than his own opinion, and however clearly and truly one may warn him that the way which he has chosen is the wrong way and leads to a false end, yet he obstinately persists; while a wise man is not so wise in his own eyes (Prov. 3:7) as not to be willing to listen to well-meant counsel, because, however careful he may be regarding his conduct, yet he does not regard his own judgment so unerring as not to be inclined ever anew to try it and let it stand the test. Ewald has falsely construed: yet whoever hears counsel is wise. In consequence of the contrast, אֱוִיל and חָכָם are the subject ideas, and with וְׁשֹמֵע לְעֵצָה is brought forward that which is in contrast to the self-complacency of the fool, the conduct of the wise man.

Proverbs 12:16. The relations of the subject and the predicate are the same as in the preceding verse. The fool makes known his vexation on the same day [at once]. On the contrary, the prudent man hideth the offence. Very frequently in these proverbs the first line is only defined by the adducing of the second, or the second holds itself in the light of the first. A post-bibl. proverb says that a man is known by three things: by his כוס (his behaviour in drinking), his כיס (his conduct in money transactions), and his כעס (his conduct under deep inward excitement). So here: he is a fool who, if some injury is done to him, immediately shows his vexation in a passionate manner; while, on the contrary the prudent man maintains silence as to the dishonour that is done to him, and represses his displeasure, so as not to increase his vexation to his own injury. Passionless retaliation may in certain cases be a duty of self-preservation, and may appear to be necessary for the protection of truth, but passionate self-defence is always of evil, whether the injury which is inflicted be justifiable or unjustifiable. Regarding callidus, vid., p. 40; Schultens' comparison of the Greek γεγομένον is only a conceit in want of better knowledge. Regarding 저лежа (only here and at v. 23) with מצהל, as statements of the contents of the utterances, so 저лежа (only 11:27) with מצהל, vid., Ewald, § 170a. 저лежа signifies on the self-same day = without delay, immediately, and is well translated by the LXX ἀπὸθημερον. With another object, 16b is repeated in 23a. Most of the remaining parables of this section refer to the right use and the abuse of the tongue.

17 He that breathes the love of truth, utters that which is right; But a lying tongue, deceit

Proverbs 12:17. This verse is similar in meaning to 14:5 (where 5b = 6:19a); the second line of the distich = 14:25b. Everywhere else יעם ימות stand together, only here יעם ימות is joined to אמת; vid., regarding this אמת forming an attributive clause, and then employed as an adjective, but with distinct verbal force, at 6:19. Viewed superficially, the proverb appears tautological; it is not so, however, but places in causal connection the internal character of men and their utterances: whoever breathes 아מת, truth or conscientiousness (the property of the幪аждך, or in the genitive, vid., at Ps. 12:2), i.e., lets the voice of this be heard in his utterances, such an one speaks אמת, i.e., uprightness, integrity, that which is correct, right (Isa. 45:19, cf. 41:26), in relation to truth in general, and to the present case in particular; but he who does not אמת, i.e., he who, against better knowledge and the consciousness of untruth, confirms by his testimony (from למד, revertere, to say again and again), therewith gives utterance to his impure character, his wicked intention, proceeding from delight in doing evil or from self-interest, and diverted towards the injury of his neighbour. As אמת and feminized אמת correspond as statements of the contents of the utterances, so בנט and feminized בנט as statements of their motive and aim. בנט is obj. accus. of the בנט (from בנה, to bring to light, cf. בנה, visibility) to be supplied, not the pred. nom. dolorum structor, as Fleischer poetically finds.

18 There is that babbleth like the thrusts of a sword, But the tongue of the wise is healing.

Proverbs 12:18. The second (cf. 11:24) of the proverbs beginning with בנט. The verb בנט, peculiar to the Hebr., which in the modern Hebr. generally means “to speak out” (מצהל in the grammar: the pronunciation) (according to which the LXX, Syr., and Targ. translate it by אומר), means in biblical Hebr., especially with reference to the binding of oneself by an oath (Lev. 5:4), and to solemn protestations (Num. 30:7, 9, according to which Jerome, promittit): to utter incautiously in words, to speak without thought and at random, referred erroneously by Gesenius to the R. בֵּית, to be hollow, probably a word imitative of the sound, like the Greek βατταρίζειν, to stammer, and βαττολογεῖν, to babble, which the lexicographers refer to a talkative person of the name of Βάττος, as our “salbadern” [= to talk foolishly] owes its origin to one Jenaer Bader on the Saal. Theod. and the Graec. Venet. give the false reading בֵּיתות (πεποιθώς). The second (cf. 11:24) of the proverbs beginning with בנט (אמה, as statements of their motive and aim) is, as the Arab. kindred word רפא, rafa, raf, rawf (רָפָה), peculiar to the Hebr., which in the modern Hebr. generally means “to speak out” (מצהל in the grammar: the pronunciation) (according to which the LXX, Syr., and Targ. translate it by אומר), means in biblical Hebr., especially with reference to the binding of oneself by an oath (Lev. 5:4), and to solemn protestations (Num. 30:7, 9, according to which Jerome, promittit): to utter incautiously in words, to speak without thought and at random, referred erroneously by Gesenius to the R. בֵּית, to be hollow, probably a word imitative of the sound, like the Greek βατταρίζειν, to stammer, and βαττολογεῖν, to babble, which the lexicographers refer to a talkative person of the name of Βάττος, as our “salbadern” [= to talk foolishly] owes its origin to one Jenaer Bader on the Saal. Theod. and the Graec. Venet. give the false reading בֵּיתות (πεποιθώς). The second (cf. 11:24) of the proverbs beginning with בנט (אמה, as statements of their motive and aim) is, as the Arab. kindred word רפא, rafa, raf, rawf (רָפָה), peculiar to the Hebr., which in the modern Hebr. generally means “to speak out” (מצהל in the grammar: the pronunciation) (according to which the LXX, Syr., and Targ. translate it by אומר), means in biblical Hebr., especially with reference to the binding of oneself by an oath (Lev. 5:4), and to solemn protestations (Num. 30:7, 9, according to which Jerome, promittit): to utter incautiously in words, to speak without thought and at random, referred erroneously by Gesenius to the R. בֵּית, to be hollow, probably a word imitative of the sound, like the Greek βατταρίζειν, to stammer, and βαττολογεῖν, to babble, which the lexicographers refer to a talkative person of the name of Βάττος, as our “salbadern” [= to talk foolishly] owes its origin to one Jenaer Bader on the Saal. Theod. and the Graec. Venet. give the false reading בֵּיתות (πεποιθώς).
The lip of truth endures for ever as does the tongue of malice.

Ewald takes אֲמֶת אַרְגִּיעָה (when I ...) in the same sense as אֲמֶת אַרְגִּיעָה here, which is more appropriate than the explanation of Hitzig, who regards as opening the principal clause, and attaches to the quite too pregnant signification “to need (for an action) only a moment.” The lip of truth, i.e., the lip which speaketh truth, endures for ever (for truth, אֲמֶת אַרְגִּיעָה is just the enduring); but the tongue of falsehood is only for a moment, or a wink of the eye, for it is soon convicted, and with disgrace brings to silence; for a post-bibl. Aram. proverb says: והפשע אַרְגִּיעָה לֹא אָכֵא, the truth endures, the lie endures not (Schabbath 104a), and a Hebrew proverb: הרשא אִמְרוּ לְרִאְלָה, the lie has no feet (on which it can stand).

That deceit is in the heart of him who deviseth evil (אֱדָךְ הָרֶגֶעַ, as is correctly punctuated e.g., by Norzil) appears to be a platitude, for the utterance of deceit is as such directed against a neighbour. But in the first place, 20a in itself says that the evil which a man hatches against another always issues in a fraudulent, malicious deception of the same; and in the second place, it says, when taken in connection with 20b, where שגיא is the parallel word to הרשא, that with the deception he always at the same time prepares for him sorrow. Hitzig and Zöckler give to shows, that of stilling, softening, soothing, whence arises the meaning of healing (for which the Arab. has табб and ‘а’лkh); the meaning to repair, to mend, which the Arab. рафa and раfa have, does not stand in a prior relation to healing, as might appear from Job 13:4, but is a specialization of the general idea of reficere lying in mitigare, just as the patcher is called ἅκεστρια = ἦπηρτρια, from ἦκεσμα, which means equally to still and to heal. Since thus in the sense of a twinkling of the eye (Schultens: ‘השֶּקֶר אֵין לו רֶגֶעַ), till I split (shatter) it (the tongue). Abulwalîd is nearer the correct rendering when he takes אֲמֶת אַרְגִּיעָה as a noun = רֶגֶע as opening the principal clause, and adds, after the quite too pregnant signification “to need (for an action) only a moment.” The lip of truth, i.e., the lip which speaketh truth, endures for ever (for truth, אֲמֶת אַרְגִּיעָה is just the enduring); but the tongue of falsehood is only for a moment, or a wink of the eye, for it is soon convicted, and with disgrace brings to silence; for a post-bibl. Hitzig and Zöckler give to the general idea of welfare (that which is salutary), and interpret the שמחה as the inner joy of the good conscience. Certainly שלום (ר. של, extrahere, in the sense of deliverance from trouble) means not only peace as to the external relationship of men with each other, but also both internal and external welfare. Thus it is here meant of external welfare; Hitzig rightly compares Jer. 29:11 with Nahum 1:11 to the contrast betweenשלום and רע. But as מƏרָמָה is not self-deception, but the deception of another, so also שמחה is not the joy of those who devise the device in their hearts for the deception of others, but the joy they procure for others. Thoughts of peace for one’s neighbour are always thoughts of procuring joy for him, as thoughts of evil are thoughts of deceit, and thus of procuring sorrow for him. Thus אָוֶן is an abbreviated expression for והלב יועצי.

Proverbs 12:21. Hitzig translates אָוֶן “sorrow,” and Zöckler “injury;” but the word signifies evil as ethical wickedness, and although it may be used of any misfortune in general (as in קריאה, opp. בכימת); thus it denotes especially such sorrow as is the harvest and product of sin, 22:8, Job 4:8, Isa. 59:4, or such as brings after it punishment, Hab. 3:7, Jer. 4:15. That it is also here thus meant the contrast makes evident. The godless are full of evil, for the moral evil which is their life-element brings out of itself all kinds of evil; on the contrary, no kind of evil, such as sin brings forth and produces, falls upon the righteous. God, as giving form to human fortune (Ex. 21:13), remains in the background (cf. Ps. 91:10 with 5:1f.); vid., regarding אָוֶן, the weaker power of עָבֶד, to go against, to meet, to march against, Fleischer, Levy’s Chald. Wörterbuch, 572.

22 Lying lips are an abhorrence to Jahve, And they that deal truly are His delight.

Proverbs 12:22. The frame of the distich is like 11:1, 20. אָוֶן is probity as the harmony between the words and the inward thoughts. The LXX, which translates ὀ δὲ ποιῶν πίστεις had in view ἐστόκεις אָוֶן (כָּפַח אָוֶן), cf. Isa. 26:2; the text of all other translations agrees with that commonly received.

23 A prudent man conceals knowledge, And a heart-fool proclaims imbecility.

Proverbs 12:23. In 23a v. 16b is repeated, only a little changed; also 16a corresponds with 23a, for, as is there said, the fool knows not how to keep his anger to himself, as here, that a heart-fool (cf. the lying mouth, 22a) proclaims (trumpets forth), or as 13:16 says, displays folly without referring to himself the si tacuisse. To this forward charlatan blustering, which intends to preach wisdom and yet proclaims in the world mere folly, i.e., nonsense and imbecility, and thereby makes itself troublesome, and only to be laughed at and despised, stands in contrast the relation of the אָדָם עָרוּם, homo callidus, who possesses knowledge, but keeps it to himself without bringing it forth till an occasion presents itself for setting it forth at the right place, at the right time, and to the right man. The right motive also regulates such silence as well as modesty. But this proverb places it under the point of view of prudence.

We take verses 24–28 together as a group. In these verses the subject is the means of rising (in the world), and the two ways, the one of which leads to error, and the other to life.

24 The land of the diligent attains to dominion, But slothfulness will become tributary.

Proverbs 12:24. In 10:4 כָּפַח was adj., but to כֹּפַח standing beside it; here it is to be regarded as adj. to ד (sluggish hand) supplied from 24a, but may be equally regarded as a subst. (slothfulness) (vid., at v. 27). Regarding רֵמי, vid., p. 153. כָּפַח signifies tribute and service, i.e., tributary service rendered to a master, in 11:29b עָבֶד stands for it. It is still the experience of to-day, as it was of Solomon’s time, that slothfulness (indolence) brings down to a state of servitude, if not even deeper, but that vigorous activity raises to dominion or to the position of a master, i.e., to independence, wealth, respect, and power.

25 Trouble in the heart of a man boweth it down, And a friendly word maketh it glad.

Proverbs 12:25. The twofold anomaly that לֵבָה יְּתֵרָה is construed as masc. and לֵב as fem. renders the text doubtful, but the LXX, Syr., Targum, which introduce another subject, שָח ח, do not improve it; Theodotion’s is preferable, who translates מִרְמִיָה enfermedוים וּלְׁבָ(Note: Text is cut off)

26 The righteous looketh after his pastures, And the way of the godless leadeth them into error.

Proverbs 12:26. In 26α no acceptable meaning is to be gained from the traditional mode of vocalization. Most of the ancients translate יָתֵר as part. to יָתֵר, as it occurs in post-bibl. Hebr., e.g., לֵבָה יְּתֵרָה, prevailing, altogether peculiar and the name, but this, that he is righteous, raises a man above others. In this sense we would approve of the praestantior altero justus, if only the two parts of the proverb were not by such a rendering wholly isolated from one another. Thus יָתֵר לְרֵעֵה is to be treated as the fut. of יָתֵר. The Syr. understands it of right counsel; and in like manner Schultens explains it, with Cocceius, of intelligent, skilful guidance, and the moderns (e.g., Gesenius) for the most part of guidance generally. Ewald rather seeks (because the proverb-style avoids the placing of a fut. verb at the commencement of the proverb [but cf. 17:10]) to interpret יָתֵר as a noun in the sense of director, but his justification of the fixed א is unfounded. And generally this sense of the word is exposed to many objections. The verb יָתֵר signifies, after its root, to go about, “to make to go about;” but is, however, not equivalent to, to lead (wherefore Böttcher too ingeniously derives יָתֵר from יָתֵר). and wherefore this strange word, since the Book of Proverbs is so rich in synonyms of leading and guiding! The Hiph. יָתֵר signifies to send to spy, Judg. 1:23, and in this sense the poet ought to have said יָתֵר; thus the righteous spies out (the way) for his neighbour, he serves him, as the Targum-Talmud would say, as יָתֵר. Thus connected with the obj. accus. the explanation would certainly be: the righteous searches out his neighbour (Löwenstein), he has intercourse with men, according to the

The slothful pursues not his prey. But, a precious possession of a man is diligence.

Proverbs 12:27. The LXX, Syr., Targ., and Jerome render a regret in the sense of obtaining or catching, but the verbal stem רְמִיָּה nowhere has this meaning. When Fleischer remarks, רְמִיָּה, אָֽסָֽי, properly like יָתִיר, properly to entangle in a noose, a net, he supports his opinion by reference to קֶרְכֵּים, which signifies lattice-windows, properly woven or knitted like a net. But יְתֵר, whence this קֶרְכֵּים, appears to be equivalent to the Arab. kharṣ, fissura, so that the plur. gives the idea of a manifoldly divided (lattice-like, trellis-formed) window. The Jewish lexicographers (Menahem, Abulwalid, Parchon, also Juda b. Koreish) all aim at that which is in accord with the meaning of the Aram. תַּרְדִּיר, to singe, to roast (= Arab. hark), the slothful roasteth not his prey, whether (as Fürst presents it) because he is too lazy to hunt for it (Berth.), or because when he has it he prepares it not for enjoyment (Ewald). But to roast is רְמִיָּה, not רְמִיָּה, which is used only of singeing, e.g., the hair, and roasting, e.g., ears of corn, but not of the roasting of flesh, for which reason Joseph Kimchi (vid., Kimchi’s Lex) understands רְמִיָּה of wild fowls, and of the singeing of the tips of the wings, so that they cannot fly away, according to which the Venet. translates οὐ μενεῖ … ἡ θήρα αὐτοῦ. Thus the Arab. must often help to a right interpretation of the אָֽסָֽי.

לֵאָג. Schultens is right: Verbum harak, רְמִיָּה, apud Arabes est movere, ciere, excitare, κινεῖν generatim, et speciatim excitare praedam e cubili, κινεῖν τὴν θήραν. The Lat. agitare, used of the frightening up and driving forth of wild beasts, corresponds with the idea here, as e.g., used by Ovid, Metam. x. 538, of Diana: Aut pronos lepores aue celsum in cornua cervum Aut agitat damas.

Thus together with רְמִיָּה gains the meaning of hunting, and generally of catching the prey. רְמִיָּה is here incarnate slothfulness, and thus without ellipse equivalent to את רְמִיָּה, a precious possession of an industrious man is precious, and hence, a precious possession is that (supply יָתֵר) of an industrious man. But the traditional arrangement of the words gives a better meaning than these modifications. It is not, however, to be explained, with Ewald and Bertheau: a precious treasure of a man is one who is industrious, for why should the industrious man be thought of as a worker for another and not for himself? Another explanation advanced by Kimchi: a valuable possession to men is industry, has the twofold advantage that it is according to the existing sequence of the words, and presents a more intelligible thought. But can חָרוּץ have the meaning of חֲרִיצוּת (the being industrious)? Hitzig reads חֲרֻץ, to make haste (to be industrious). This is unnecessary, for we have here a case similar to 10:17, where שְׁמֹר for שומֵר is to be expected: a precious possession of a man is it that, or when, he is industrious, חָרוּץ briefly for הֱיותו חָרוּץ.

The accentuation fluctuates between והון-אדם יקר (so e.g., Cod. 1294), according to which the Targum translates, and והון-אדם יקר, which, according to our explanation, is to be preferred. 28 In the path of righteousness is life, And the way of its path is immortality. Proverbs 12:28. All the old versions to the Venet. give אֶל instead of אָל, and are therefore under the necessity of extracting from כְּדֶרֶךְ a meaning corresponding to this, כִּזְכָּר תַּדְבִּרבוֹן, in which they are followed by Hitzig: “a devious way leadeth to death.” But נְדוֹר (אַבֵּר) signifies step, and generally way and street (vid., at 1:15), not “devious way,” which is expressed, Judg. 5:6, by ארחות עֹקֵלֶת and אַרְּחָת עֵקֶלֶת. And that אָל is anywhere punctuated thus in the sense of אַל is previously improbable, because the Babylonian system of punctuation distinguishes the negative אָל with a short Pathach, and the prepositional אָל (Arab. ilâ) with a short Chirek, from each other (vid., Pinsker, Einl. p. xxii.f.); the punctuation 2 Sam. 18:16, Jer. 51:3, gives no support to the opinion that here אָל is vocalized thus in the sense of אל, and it is not to be thus corrected. Nothing is more natural than that the Chokma in its constant contrast between life and death makes a beginning of expressing the idea of the ἀθανασία (vid., p. 30), which Aquila erroneously read from the Akedoth, Ps. 48:15. It has been objected that for the formation of such negative substantives and noun-adjectives אַל (לִאֵמִים, לַאֲלָיו) and not אָל is used; but that אָל also may be in close connection with a noun, 2 Sam. 1:13 shows. There אָל אֵיל is equivalent to אֲלֵי אִלֵּה, according to which it may also be explained in the passage before us, with Luther and all the older interpreters, who accepted אָל in its negative signification: and on (the governing) the way ... is no death. The negative אָל frequently stands as an intensifying of the objective אָל; but why should the Chokma, which has already shown itself bold in the coining of new words, not apply itself to the formation of the idea of immortality?: the idol name אֱלִיל is the result of a much greater linguistic boldness. It is certain that אָל is here not equivalent to אָל; the Masora is therefore right in affirming that נְדוֹר is written with He raphatum pro mappicato (vid., Kimchi, Michlol 31a, and in the Lex.), cf. 1 Sam. 20:20, vid., Böttcher, § 418. Thus: the way of their step is immortality, or much rather, since כְּדֶרֶך is not a fixed idea, but also denotes the going to a distance (i.e., the journey), the behaviour, the proceeding, the walk, etc.: the walking (the stepping over and passing through) of their way is immortality. Rich in synonyms of the way, the Hebrew style delights in connecting them with picturesque expressions; but כְּדֶרֶך always means the way in general, which divides into ארחות or אַרְּחָת (Job 6:18, Jer. 18:5), and consists of such (Isa. 3:16). The distich is synonymous: on the path of righteousness (accentuate בארח צדקה) is life meeting him who walks in it, and giving itself to him as a possession, and the walking in its path is immortality (cf. 3:17; 10:28); so that to go in it and to be immortal, i.e., to be delivered from death, to be exalted above it, is one and the same thing. If we compare with this, 14:32, it is obvious that the Chokma begins (vid., Psychol. p. 410) to break through the limits of this present life, and to announce a life beyond the reach of death.

Proverbs 13:1. The proverb 12:28 is so sublime, so weighty, that it manifestly forms a period and conclusion. This is confirmed from the following proverb, which begins like 10:1 (cf. 5), and anew stamps the collection as intended for youth:

1  A wise son is his father’s correction; But a scorner listens not to rebuke.

The LXX, which the Syr. follows, translate Υἱὸς πανουργὸς ὑπήκοος πατρί, whence it is not to be concluded with Lagarde that they read נזיר in the sense of a Ni. toleratium; they correctly understood the text according to the Jewish rule of interpretation, “that which is wanting is to be supplied from the context.” The Targ. had already supplied שָמ ע (1b), and is herein followed by Hitzig, as also by Glassius in the Philologia sacra. But such an ellipse is in the Hebr. style without an example, and would be comprehensible only in passionate, hasty discourse, but in a language in which the representation filius sapiens disciplinam patris audit numbers among the anomalies is not in general possible, and has not even its parallel in Tacitus, Ann. xii. 56: deesse nobis terra, in qua vivamus—in qua moriemur, non potest, because here the primary idea, which the one expression confirms, the other denies, and besides no particle, such as the ב of this passage before us, stands between them. Böttcher therefore maintains the falling out of the verb, and writes מבין פנים; but one says not מבin שמע מוסר, 1:8; 4:1; 19:27. Should not the clause, as it thus stands, give a sense complete in itself? But מוסר can hardly, with Schultens and Ewald, be taken as part. Hoph. of one brought up by his father, for the usage of the language knows מוסר only as part. Hoph. of מזר. Thus, as Jerome and the Venet. translate: a wise son is the correction of his father, i.e., the product of the same, as also Fleischer explains, “Attribution of the cause, the ground, as elsewhere of the effect.” But we call that which one has trained (vegetable or animal) his Zucht (= παιδεία in the sense of παιδευμα). To the wise son (Prov. 10:1) who is indebted to the מוסר אב (Prov. 4:1), stands opposed the לֶץ (vid., 1:22), the mocker at religion and virtue, who has no ear for מִשְׁמַר, strong and stern words which awaken in him a wholesome fear (cf. 17:10, Jude 23: ἐν φόβῳ).

2  From the fruit of the mouth of a man he himself enjoys good; But the delight of the godless is violence.

Proverbs 13:2. 2a = 12:14a, where יִשְׁב ע for יֹאכ ל. A man with a fruit-bringing mouth, himself enjoys also the blessing of his fruit-producing speech; his food (cf. βρῶμα, John 4:34) is the good action in words, which in themselves are deeds, and are followed by deeds; this good action affords enjoyment not merely to others, but also to himself. Ewald and Bertheau attract יאכלי to 2b; so also does Fleischer: “the violence which the 부드 wish to do to others turns back upon themselves; they must eat it also, i.e., bear its evil consequences.” The thought would then be like 10:6: os improborum obteget violentia, and “to eat violence” is parallel to “to drink (Prov. 26:6) violence (injury).” But wherefore then the naming of the soul, of which elsewhere it is said that it hungers or satiates itself, but never simply (but cf. Luke 12:19) that it eats? On the contrary, נשפ denotes also appetitus, 23:2, and particularly wicked desire, Ps. 27:12; here, as Ps. 35:25, the object of this desire (Psychol. p.
202). Regarding בגדים, vid., above, p. 61. There are such as do injury in a cunning deceitful manner to their neighbour to their own advantage. While the former (the righteous) distributes to his neighbour from the inner impulse without having such a result in view, yet according to God’s direction he derives enjoyment himself therefrom: the desire of the latter goes to חָמָס, ἁδίκημα, and thus to the enjoyment of good unrighteously and violently seized.

3 He that guardeth his mouth keepeth his soul; He that openeth his lips, to him it is destruction. Proverbs 13:3. 3a is extended in 21:23 to a distich. Mouth and soul stand in closest interchangeable relation, for speech is the most immediate and continuous expression of the soul; thus whoever guards his mouth keeps his soul (the Venet., with excellent rendering of the synonym, ο τηρῶν τὸ στόμα ἑαυτοῦ φυλάσσει τὴν ψυχὴν ἑαυτοῦ), for he watches that no sinful vain thoughts rise up in his soul and come forth in words, and because he thus keeps his soul, i.e., himself, safe from the destructive consequences of the sins of the tongue. On the contrary, he who opens wide his lips, i.e., cannot hold his mouth (LXX ὁ δὲ προπετὴς χείλεσιν), but expresses unexamined and unconsidered whatever comes into his mind and gives delight, he is destruction to himself (supply הוּא, or to him it is destruction (supply זֹאת; both interpretations are possible, the parallelism brings nearer the former, and the parallel 18:7 brings nearer the latter: סְפַך means to spread (Schultens diducere cum ruptura vel ad rupturam usque), here the lips, Pih. Ezek. 16:25, the legs, Arab. fashkh, farshkh; vid., regarding the R. 쉬, to extend, to spread out, Fleischer in the supplements to the A. L. Z. 1843, col. 116. Regarding the Mishle word מְׁחִיתָה, vid., under 10:14.

Proverbs 13:4. The three proverbs (1–3) which refer to hearing and speaking are now following by a fourth which, like vv. 2 and 3, speaks of the מְׁשֵׁש. The soul of the sluggard desires, yet has not: But the soul of the industrious is richly satisfied. The view that the o in ובגָּדָים is the cholem compaginis, Böttcher, § 835, meets with the right answer that this would be the only example of a vocal casus in the whole of gnomic poetry; but when on his own part (Neue Aehrenlese, § 1305) he regards נפש as the accus. of the nearer definition (= נפשו), he proceeds inadvertently on the view that the first word of the proverb is מְׁשֵׁש, while we read נפשו, and thus the nom. of the subject. נפש נפש means "his (the sluggard’s) soul" (for מְשֵׁש occurs as explanatory permutative briefly for נפש נפש, as מְשֵׁש פֶרֶחִים, מְשֵׁש נפש פֶרֶחִים means “its branches (i.e., of the fruitful tree),” Isa. 17:6. One might, it is true, add נפשו to the following word here, as at 14:13; but the similar expression appertaining to the syntax ornata occurs also 2 Sam. 22:33, Ps. 71:7, and elsewhere, where this is impracticable. Meiri appropriately compares the scheme Ex. 2:6, she saw him, viz., the boy. With reference to the וָא יִן here violently (cf. 28:1) introduced, Böttcher rightly remarks, that it is an adverb altogether like necquidquam, 14:6; 20:4, Ps. 68:21, etc., thus: appetite necquidquam anima ejus, scilicet pigri. 4b shows the meaning of the desire that has not, for there מְשֵׁש occurs, a favourite strong Mishle word (Prov. 11:25; 28:25, etc.) for abundant satisfaction (the LXX here, as at 28:25, ἐν ἑυμελείᾳ, sc. ἔσονται, instead of which, Montfaucon supposed πιμελείᾳ (which is, however, a word not authenticated). The slothful wishes and dreams of prosperity and abundance (cf. 21:25f., a parallel which the Syr. has here in view), but his desire remains unsatisfied, since the object is not gained but only lost by doing nothing; the industrious gain, and that richly, what the slothful wishes for, but in vain.

Proverbs 13:5. Two proverbs of the character of the righteous and of the effect of righteousness: A deceitful thing the righteous hateth; But the godless disgraceth and putteth to shame.

With the sphere of an intelligible generality (as here of falsehood, or Ps. 41:9 of worthlessness) a concrete event is in view, as with in the following plur. a general fact is separated into its individual instances and circumstances (vid., at Ps. 65:4); for means not only the word in which the soul reveals itself, but also any fact in which an inner principle or a general fact or a whole comes forth to view. The righteous hateth all that bears in it the character of a falsehood (punctuate with , but the godless ... Should we now, with Bertheau, Hitzig, and others, translate “acteth basely and shamefully”? It is true that both may be regarded as transitive, but this expression gives not right contrast to 5a, and is pointless. We have seen at 10:5 that, like , has also a causative signification: to put to shame, i.e., bring shame upon others, and that 19:26, where are connected, this causative signification lies nearer than the intrinsically transitive. Thus it will also here be meant, that while the righteous hateth all that is false or that is tainted by falsehood, the godless on the contrary loves to disgrace and to put to shame. But it is a question whether is to be derived from , and thus is of the same meaning as , Isa. 30:5, which there signifies , is pointed bein, and is thus derived from a , vid., 2 Sam. 19:6. But occurs also as Hiph. of and means transitively to make of an evil savour, Gen. 34:30, cf. Ex. 5:21, as well as intransitively to come into evil savour, 1 Sam. 27:12. In this sense of , bringing into evil savour, occurs here as at 19:26, suitably along with ; 19:26 is the by evil report (slander), into which the foolish son brings his parents, here by his own evil report, thus to be thought of as brought about by means of slander. The old translators here fall into error; Luther renders both reflexively; only the Venet. (after Kimchi) is right: (from an as trans. to) and , he makes to be of ill odour and dishonours.

6 Righteousness protecteth an upright walk, And godlessness bringeth sinners to destruction.

Proverbs 13:6. The double thought is closely like that of 11:5, but is peculiarly and almost enigmatically expressed. As there, and are meant of a twofold inner relation to God, which consists of a ruling influence over man’s conduct and a determination of his walk. But instead of naming the persons of the and as the objects of this influence, the proverb uses the abstract expression, but with personal reference, and designates in two words the connection of this twofold character with the principles of their conduct. What is meant by and proceeds from the contrasted relationship of the two (cf. 22:12). signifies observare, which is not suitable here, but also tueri (vid., at 11:3, and in Gesen. Thesaurus), not so much in the sense of “to turn upside down,” pervertere (as 11:3, Ex. 23:8), as in the sense of “to overthrow,” evertere (as e.g., 21:12), forms a fitting contrast. He who walks forth with an unfeigned and untroubled pure mind stands under the shield and the protection of righteousness (cf. with this prosopopoeia Ps. 25:21), from which such a walk proceeds, and at the same time under the protection of God, to whom righteousness appertains, is well-pleasing, but he who in his conduct permits himself to be determined by sin, godlessness (cf. Zech. 5:8) from which such a love for sin springs forth, brings to destruction; in other words: God, from whom the , those of a perverse disposition, tear themselves away, makes the sin their snare by virtue of the inner connection established by Him between the רשעה and the destruction (Isa. 9:17). In the LXX this 6th verse was originally wanting; the translation in the version of Aquila, in the Complut. and elsewhere, which the Syr. follows, falsely makes חטאת the subj.: τοὺς δὲ ἄσεβεῖς φαύλους ποιεῖ ἁμαρτία.

Proverbs 13:7. Two proverbs of riches and poverty: — There is one who maketh himself rich and hath nothing; there is another who representeth himself poor amid great riches. A sentence which includes in itself the judgment which 12:9 expresses. To the Hithpa. הִתְׁכּ בֵד (to make oneself of importance) there are associated here two others, in the meaning to make oneself something, without anything after it, thus to place oneself so or so, Ewald, § 124a. To the clauses with לו there is supplied a self-intelligible לו.

8 A ransom for a man’s life are his riches; But the poor heareth no threatening.

Proverbs 13:8. Bertheau falls into error when he understands גְּעָרָה of warning; the contrast points to threatening with the loss of life. The wealth of the rich before the judgment is not here to be thought of; for apart from this, that the Torâ only in a single case permits, or rather ordains (Ex. 21:29f.), ransom from the punishment of death, and declares it in all other cases inadmissible, Num. 35:31f. (one might indeed think of an administration of justice not strictly in accordance with the Mosaic law, or altogether accessible to bribery), 8b does not accord therewith, since the poor in such cases would fare ill, because one would lay hold on his person. But one may think e.g., on waylayers as those introduced as speaking 1:11–14. The poor has no room to fear that such will threateningly point their swords against his breast, for there is nothing to be got from him: he has nothing, one sees it in him and he is known as such. But the rich is a valuable prize for them, and he has to congratulate himself if he is permitted to escape with his life. Also in the times of war and commotion it may be seen that riches endanger the life of their possessor, and that in fortunate cases they are given as a ransom for his life, while his poverty places the poor man in safety. To לא שמע Hitzig fittingly compares Job 3:18; 39:7: he does not hear, he has no need to hear. Michaelis, Umbreit, Löwenstein (who calls to remembrance the state of things under despotic governments, especially in the East) also explain 8b correctly; and Fleischer remarks: pauper minas hostiles non audit, i.e., non minatur ei hostis. Ewald’s syntactic refinement: “Yet he became poor who never heard an accusation,” presents a thought not in harmony with 8a.

The three following proverbs in vv. 9–11 have at least this in common, that the two concluding words of each correspond with one another almost rhythmically.

9 The light of the righteous burneth joyously, And the lamp of the godless goeth out.

Proverbs 13:9. The second line = 24:20b, cf. 20:20. In the Book of Job 18:5f., אֹרְשֵׁעים יִשְׁמָח, נֵרוֹ עָלָיו יִדְעָךְ and נֵרוֹ עָלָיו יִדְעָךְ (cf. 21:17) stand together, and there is spoken of (Prov. 29:3) a divine נר as well as a divine נֵר which enlightens the righteous; however, one must say that the poet, as he, 6:3, deliberately calls the Torâ אָרָץ, and the commandment, as derived from it and separated, נר, so also here designedly calls the righteous אָרָץ, נֵר, viz., נר דּלוּק, — the former imparts the sunny daylight, the latter the light of tapers set in darkness. The authentic punctuation is אָרָץ, נֵר, Ben-Naphtali’s is אָרָץ without Makkeph. To Hitzig compares the “laughing tongue of the taper” of Meidâni, iii. 475; Kimchi also the “laughing, i.e., amply measured span,” of the Talmud; for the light laughs when it brightly shines, and increases rather than decreases; in Arab. samâţa has in it the idea of joy directly related to that of liberality. The LXX translates incorrectly by διασπαντός, and has a distich following v. 9, the first line of which is ψυχαι δόλαια (Daniel) πλανώνται ἐν ἀμερτίᾳ, and the second line is from Ps. 37:21b.

10 Nothing comes by pride but contention; But wisdom is with those who receive counsel.

Proverbs 13:10. The restrictive ἡμέρα (only) does not, according to the sense, belong to κρύον (by pride), but to πλῆθος, vid., under Ps. 32:6 and Job 2:10. Of ἀντίς = there is, vid., under 10:24.

Bertheau’s “one causes” is not exact, for “one” [man] is the most general personal subject, but ἀντίς is in such cases to be regarded as impersonal: by pride is always a something which causes nothing but quarrel and strife, for the root of pride is egoism. Line second is a variant to 11:2b. Bescheidenheit (modesty) is in our old [German] language exactly equivalent to Klugheit (prudence). But here the restrictor are more exactly designated as permitting themselves to be advised; the elsewhere reciprocal הָיָּד has here once a tolerative signification, although the reciprocal is also allowable: with such as reciprocally advise themselves, and thus without positiveness supplement each his own knowledge by means of that of another. Most interpreters regard 10b as a substantival clause, but why should not be carried forward? With such as permit themselves to be advised, or are not too proud to sustain with others the relation of giving and receiving, there is wisdom, since instead of hatred comes wisdom—the peaceful fruit resulting from an interchange of views.

11 Wealth by means of fraud always becomes less; But he that increaseth it by labour gains always more.

Proverbs 13:11. We punctuate הָיָּד with Makkeph, as in Ven. 1521, Antw. 1582, Frank- on-the-Oder 1595, Gen. 1618, Leyden 1662), not as other editions, and e.g., also Löwenstein; for the meaning is not that the wealth becomes less by הָיָּד (Targ., but not the Syr.), or that it is less than נְבֵל (Umbreit), but is one idea: wealth proceeding from ὑπερσπουδαζομένη μετὰ ἀνομίας (LXX), ἑπισπουδαζομένη (Symmachus, Quinta), festinata (Jerome), do not necessarily suppose the phrase μικρὸν = μικρόν, 20:21 Kerî, for wealth which comes μικρὸν is obtained in a windy (unsubstantial) manner and as if by storm, of which the proverb holds good: “so gewonnen so zerronnen” (= quickly come, quickly go). The need of it needs neither to be changed into that unhebraic מְׁבֹהָל (Hitzig) nor into the cognate מְׁבֹהָל (Ewald), but yet inferior to מְׁבֹהָל in the content of its idea. The contrast of one who by fraud and deception quickly arrives at wealth is one who brings it together in his hand, ἐπὶ χειρῶν (Venet.), i.e., always as often as he can bear it in his hand and bring it forth (Ewald, Bertheau, Elster, and Lagarde), or according to the measure of the hand, κατὰ χεῖρα (which means “according to external ability”), so that, ὅπως, which is applied to the formation of adverbs, e.g., Ps. 31:24 (Hitzig),—by both explanations ὅπως ὄλυμεν has the meaning of “gradually,”—is used as in the post-bibl. Hebr. מְׁבֹהָל (vid., Schabbath 156a (vid., Aruch under דיר = distinguish from בֵּית (distinguish from בֵּית (with thought, intentionally, Berachoth 52.b)). There is scarcely a word having more significations that מְׁבֹהָל. Connected with מְׁבֹהָל it means at one time side or place, at another mediation or direction; that which is characteristic here is the omission of the pronoun מְׁבֹהָל. The LXX translates מְׁבֹהָל with the unrestrained freedom which it allows to itself by μετ’ εἶσοδεῖας, and has following πληθυνθήσεται another line, δίκαιος οἰκτείρει καὶ κυρὰ (from Ps. 37:26).
The figures of paradise in vv. 12 and 14 require us to take along with them the intermediate verse (13).

12 Deferred waiting maketh the heart sick, and a tree of life is a wish accomplished.

Proverbs 13:12. Singularly the LXX Κρείσσον ἐναρχόμενος βοηθῶν καρδία, followed by the Syr. (which the Targ. transcribes): Better is he who begins to help than he who remains in hesitating expectation, by which חֲבוּלָה is doubled, and is derived once from חָלָה, to wait, and the second time from חָלָה, to begin. If the LXX, with its imitators, deteriorates to such a degree proverbs so clear, beautiful, and inviolable, what may one expect from it in the case of those not easily understood! הָבָא signifies also, Isa. 18:2, to be widely extended (cf. Arab. meshak), here in the sense of time, as אַחַלֶה, the course of time. Regarding חָלָה, vid., at 10:28, where as 11:27 תוחֶלֶת, here תוחֶלֶת, as also Ps. 78:29 of the object of the wish, and with בָּוָא in the sense of being fulfilled (cf. Josh. 21:43), as there with אַחַלֶה in the sense of accomplishing or performing. Extended waiting makes the heart sick, causes heart-woe (חָלָה, part. fem. Hiph. of חָלָה, to be slack, feeble, sick; R. לוּ, to loosen, to make loose); on the contrary, a wish that has been fulfilled is a tree of life (cf. p. 23), of a quickening and strengthening influence, like that tree of paradise which was destined to renew and extend the life of man.

13 Whoever despiseth the word is in bonds to it, and he who feareth the commandment is rewarded.

Proverbs 13:13. The word is thought of as ordering, and thus in the sense of the commandment, e.g., 1 Sam. 17:19, Dan. 9:23, 25. That which is here said is always true where the will of a man has subordinated itself to the authoritative will of a superior, but principally the proverb has in view the word of God, the מִנְשָׁה as the expression of the divine will, which (Prov. 6:3) appears as the secondary, with the והדר, the general record of the divine will. Regarding מַחֲבַל of contemptuous, despiteful opposition, vid., at 6:30, cf. 11:12. Joël (vid., p. 136, note) records the prevailing tradition, for he translates: “Whoever despises advice rushes into destruction; whoever holds the commandment in honour is perfect.” But that יְחֲבֵל is to be understood neither of perfection nor of peace (LXX and Jerome), but means compensabitur (here not in the sense of punishment, but of reward), we know from 11:31. The translation also of Κρείσσον by “he rushes into destruction” (LXX καταφθαρήσεται, which the Syr.-Hexap. repeats; Luther, “he destroys himself;” the Venet. оιχησται οί, periet sibi) fails, for one does not see what should have determined the poet to choose just this word, and, instead of the ambiguous dat. ethicus, not rather to say יְחֲבֵל דִּבְשָׁה. So also this יְחֲבֵל is not with Gesenius to be connected with חֲבֹלָה = Arab. khabl, corrumpere, but with חֲבָלָה = Arab. habl, ligare, obligare. Whoever places himself contemptuously against a word which binds him to obedience will nevertheless not be free from that word, but is under pledge until he redeem the pledge by the performance of the obedience refused, or till that higher will enforce payment of the debt withheld by visiting with punishment. Jerome came near the right interpretation: ipse se in futurum obligat; Abulwalid refers to Ex. 22:25; and Parchon, Rashi, and others paraphrase: מַשְׁכֶּן יִתְּמֶשֶן עַל, he is confiscated as by mortgage. Schultens has, with the correct reference of the יֶל to the contemner, but to the word, well established and illustrated this explanation: he is pledged by the word, Arab. marhwan (rahyn), viz., pigneratus paenae (Livius, xxix. 36). Ewald translates correctly: he is pledged to it; and Hitzig gives the right explanation: “A חלָה [a pledge, cf. 20:16] is handed over to the offended law with the יֶל [the bad conduct] by the despiser himself, which lapses when he... has exhausted the forbearance, so that the punishment is inflicted.” The LXX has another proverb following v. 13 regarding ὑιὸς δόλιος and ὁικέτης σοφός; the Syr. has adopted it; Jerome has here the proverb of the animae dolosae (vid., at v. 9).

14 The doctrine of the wise man is a fountain of life, To escape the snares of death.

Proverbs 13:14. An integral distich, vid., p. 7 of the Introduction. Essentially like 14a, 10:11 says, “a fountain of life is the mouth of the righteous.” The figure of the fountain of life with the teleological לسور וגו׳ (the ל of the end and consequence of the action) is repeated 14:27. The common non-biblical figure of the laquei mortis leads also to the idea of death as קָשֶׁה [a fowler]. Ps. 91:3. If it is not here a mere formula for the dangers of death (Hitzig), then the proverb is designed to state that the life which springs from the doctrine of the wise man as from a fountain of health, for the disciple who will receive it, communicates to him knowledge and strength, to know where the snares of destruction lie, and to hasten with vigorous steps away when they threaten to entangle him.

Four proverbs follow, whose connection appears to have been occasioned by the sound of their words (רְשֵׁי בְרֹעָה בָּרֹעָה יִשְׁמָע ... כִּי) (רְשֵׁי).

15 Fine prudence produceth favour; But the way of the malicious is uncultivated.

Proverbs 13:15. Regarding שְׁכָל טוב (thus to be punctuated, without Makkeph with Munach, after Codd. and old editions), vid., p. 60; for the most part it corresponds with that which in a deep ethical sense we call fine culture.

Regarding יִשָּׁה, vid., at 10:10: it is not used here, as there, impersonally, but a personal subject: he brings forth, causes. Fine culture, which shows men how to take the right side and in all circumstances to strike the right key, exercises a kindly heart-winning influence, not merely, as would be expressed by יִשָּׁה, יִשָּׁה, to the benefit of its possessor, but, as is expressed by יִשָּׁה, יִשָּׁה, such as removes generally a partition wall and brings men closer to one another. The אֵיתָן [perennis ], touching it both for the eye and the ear, forms the contrast to יִשָּׁה. This word, an elative formation from יִשָּׁה = Arab. wtn, denotes that which stretches itself far, and that with reference to time: that which remains the same during the course of time. “That which does not change in time, continuing the same, according to its nature, strong, firm, and thus אֵיתָן becomes the designation of the enduring and the solid, whose quality remains always the same.” Thus Orelli, Die hebr. Synonyme der Zeit u. Ewigkeit, 1871. But that in the passage before us it denotes the way of the בגדים as “endlessly going forward,” the explanation of Orelli, after Böttcher (Collectanea, p. 135), is withdrawn by the latter in the new Aehrenlese (where he reads רַבָּא אֵיתָן, “constant strife”). And הנחל אֵיתָן (Deut. 21:4) does not mean “a brook, the existence of which is not dependent on the weather and the season of the year,” at least not in accordance with the traditional meaning which is given Sota ix. 5 (cf. the Gemara), but a stony valley; for the Mishna says: אֵיתָן כְּמַשֶּׁשׁ, i.e., אֵיתָן is here, according to its verbal meaning, equivalent to קָשֶׁה (hard). We are of the opinion that here, in the midst of the discussion of the law of the עגלה ערופה (the ritual for the atonement of a murder perpetrated by an unknown hand), the same meaning of the אֵיתָן is certified which is to be adopted in the passage before us. Maimuni (in Sota and Hilchoth Rozeach ix. 2) indeed, with the Mishna and Gemara, thinks the meaning of a “strong rushing wâdy” to be compatible; but קָשֶׁה is a word which more naturally denotes the property of the ground than of a river, and the description, Deut. 21:4: in a נחל אֵיתָן, in which there is no tillage and sowing, demands for here the idea of the valley, and not primarily that of the valley-brook. According to this tradition, the Targum places a אֵיתָן in the Peshito translation of 15b, and the Venet. translates, after Kimchi, δὲ ἀνταργής (of ἀνταργής from ἀνταρίσταν) ἵσχυρα. The fundamental idea of remaining like itself, continuing, passes over into the idea of the firm, the hard, so that אהיון is a word that interchanges with סלע, Num. 24:21, and serves as a figurative designation of the rocky mountains, Jer. 49:19, and the rocky framework of the earth, Mic. 6:2. Thus the meaning of hardness (πετροδέξ, Matt. 13:5) connects itself with the word, and at the same time, according to Deut. 21:4, of the uncultivable and the uncultivated. The way of the בדעי, the treacherous (vid., p. 60), i.e., the manner in which they transact with men, is stiff, as hard as stone, and repulsive; they follow selfish views, never placing themselves in sympathy with the condition of their neighbour; they are without the tenderness which is connected with fine culture; they remain destitute of feeling in things which, as we say, would soften a stone. It is unnecessary to give a catalogue of the things which, as we say, would soften a stone. It has between 15a and 15b the interpolation: τὸ δὲ γνωσμὸν διανοίας ἐστὶν ἀνυγήθης.

16 Every prudent man acteth with understanding; But a fool spreadeth abroad folly.

Proverbs 13:16. Hitzig reads, with the Syr. (but not the Targ.) and Jerome, מַלְאַך, לִז (omnia agit), but contrary to the Hebr. syntax. The מַלְאַך is not feeble and useless, but means that he always actsすこと, mit Bedacht [with judgment] (opp. יבונך, Deut. 4:42; 19:4), while on the contrary the fool displays folly. 12:23 and 15:2 serve to explain both members of the verse. Bedächtigkeit [judgment] is just knowledge directed to a definite practical end, a clear thought concentrated on a definite point. אהיים, he calls out, and ב ‫ב ו , he sputters out, are parallels to רע, expandit (opp. Arab. тавъ, intra animum cohibuit), as a cloth or paper folded or rolled together, cf. Schiller’s — “He spreads out brightly and splendidly The enveloped life.”

There lies in the word something derisive: as the merchant unrolls and spreads out his wares in order to commend them, so the fool does with his folly, which he had enveloped, i.e., had the greatest interest to keep concealed within himself—he is puffed up therewith.

17 A godless messenger falls into trouble; But a faithful messenger is a cordial.

Proverbs 13:17. The traditional text, which the translations also give (except Jerome, nuntius impii, and leaving out of view the LXX, which makes of v. 17 a history of a foolhardy king and a wise messenger), has not יבונך, but יבונך, the Masora places the word along with יבונך, Gen. 48:16. And יבונך is likewise testified to by all translators; they all read it as קלו, as the traditional text punctuates it; Luther alone departs from this and translates the Hiph.: “a godless messenger bringeth misfortune.” Indeed, this conj. יבונך presses itself forward; and even though one read יבונך, the sense intended by virtue of the parallelism could be no other than that a godless messenger, because no blessing rests on his godlessness, stumbles into disaster, and draws him who gave the commission along with him. The connection אספ ו is like אספ ו רע, 11:7 (cf. the fem. of this adj., Ezek. 3:18). Instead of יבונך is רע, 17:20; 28:14, parallels (cf. also 11:5) which the punctuators may have had in view in giving the preference to קלו.

With מולה, R. כ, to make to go = to send, is interchanged מולה, from כ, to turn, whence to journey (cf. Arab. 셰, to become, to be, as the vulg. “to be to Dresden = to journey” is used). The connection מולה אספ ו (cf. the more simple מולה אספ ו, 25:13) is like 14:15, 25:13; the pluralот, means faithfulness in the full extent of the idea. Regarding מְשֹרָה, the means of healing, here to strength, refreshment, vid., 4:22; 12:18.

18 Poverty and shame (to him) who rejecteth correction; But he who regardeth reproof is honoured.

Proverbs 13:18. We are neither to supply איש before רֵיש וְׁקָלון (or more correctly, abstr. pro concr., as רְׁפֵא, 1:27), nor let before פְּרוּע, as Gesenius (Lehrgeb. § 227 a) does; nor has the part. פְּרוּע the value of a hypothetical clause like 18:13, Job 41:18, although it may certainly be changed into such without destroying the meaning (Ewald, Hitzig); but “poverty and shame is he who is without correction,” is equivalent to, poverty and shame is the conclusion or lot of him who is without correction; it is left to the hearer to find out the reference of the predicate to the subject in the sense of the quality, the consequence, or the lot (cf. e.g., 10:17; 13:1; 14:35). Regarding פְּרוּע, vid., p. 52. The Latin expression corresponding is: qui detrectat disciplinam. He who rejects the admonition and correction of his parents, his pastor, or his friend, and refuses every counsel to duty as a burdensome moralizing, such an one must at last gather wisdom by means of injury if he is at all wise: he grows poorer in consequence of missing the right rule of life, and has in addition thereto to be subject to disgrace through his own fault. On the contrary, to him who has the disgrace to deserve reproof, but who willingly receives it, and gives it effect, the disgrace becomes an honour, for not to reject reproof shows self-knowledge, humility, and good-will; and these properties in the judgment of others bring men to honour, and have the effect of raising them in their position in life and in their calling.

Two pairs of proverbs regarding fools and wise men, ranged together by catchwords.

19 Quickened desire is sweet to the soul, And it is an abomination to fools to avoid evil.

Proverbs 13:19. A synthetic distich (vid., p. 7), the first line of which, viewed by itself, is only a feebler expression of that which is said in 12b, for וָאֵלָה is essentially of the same meaning as מָאתָא, not the desire that has just arisen and is not yet appeased (Umbreit, Hitzig, Zöckler), which when expressed by a part. of the same verb would be מָאתָא נִהְׁיָה (= נָאוָה נִהְׁיָה), but the desire that is appeased (Jerome, Luther, also Venet. ἐφέσις γενομένη, i.e., after Kimchi: in the fulfilling of past desire; on the contrary, the Syr., Targ. render the phrase נָאוָה נִהְׁיָה of becoming desire). The Niph. נִהְׁיָה denotes not the passing into a state of being, but the being carried out into historical reality, e.g., Ezek. 21:12; 39:8, where it is connected with נָאוָה, as in the expression of the completed fact to which there is a looking back, e.g., Judg. 20:3; and this sense of the Niph. stands so fast, that it even means to be done, finished (brought to an end), to be out, to be done with anything, e.g., Dan. 2:1. The sentence, that fulfilled desire does good to the soul, appears commonplace (Hitzig); but it is comprehensive enough on the ground of Heb. 11 to cheer even a dying person, and conceals the ethically significant truth that the blessedness of vision is measured by the degree of the longing of faith. But the application of the clause in its pairing with 19 b acquires another aspect. On this account, because the desire of the soul is pleasant in its fulfilment, fools abhor the renouncing of evil, for their desire is directed to that which is morally worthless and blameworthy, and the endeavour, which they closely and constantly adhere to, is to reach the attainment of this desire. This subordinate proposition of the conclusion is unexpressed. The pairing of the two lines of the proverb may have been occasioned by the resemblance in sound of תועֲב ת and ת אֲוָה.سوּר is n. actionis, like 16:17, cf. 6. Besides, it in to be observed that the proverb speaks of fools and not of the godless. Folly is that which causes that men do not break free from evil, for it is the deceit of sinful lust which binds them fast thereto.

Proverbs 13:20. Regarding the significance of this proverb in the history of the religion and worship of Israel, vid., p. 28. We have translated 20a after the Kerî; the translation according to the Chethîb is: “go with wise men and become wise” (cf. 8:33), not חֲלֹלָה, for the connection of the (meant imperatively) infin. absol. with an imper. (meant conclusively) is not tenable; but חֲלֹלָה is an imper. form established by וַיַּכְפְּרוּ, Jer. 51:50 (cf. חֲלֹלָה = לֶכֶת, Num. 22:14), and appears to have been used with such shades of conception as here as intercourse and companionship for יֵר. Regarding יֵר, vid., at 11:15; there it meant malo afficietur, here it means malus (pejor) fiet. The Venet. (contrary to Kimchi, who explains by frangetur) rightly has κακουθήσεται. There is here a play upon words; רָעָה means to tend (a flock), also in general to be considerate about anything (Prov. 15:14, Isa. 44:20), to take care of anything with the accusative of the person (Prov. 28:7; 29:3), to hold intercourse with any one: he who by preference seeks the society of fools, himself becomes such (Jerome, similis efficietur), or rather, as heInterstitial expresses, he comes always morally lower down. “A wicked companion leads his associate into hell.”

21 Evil pursueth sinners, And the righteous is repaid with good.

Proverbs 13:21. To תַּכְפּוּר of the punishment which follows after sinners at their heels, cf. Nah. 1:8. Greek art gives wings to Nemesis in this sense. To translate 21b, with Löwenstein, “The pious, the good rewards them,” is untenable, for יִשְׁמַע, the good (e.g., 11:27), never appears personified, only שָׁמַע, goodness, Ps. 23:6, according to which the LXX τοὺς δὲ δικάιους καταληψεις ((cf. Proverbs 13:25), αὐγάθα. Still less is meant personally, as the Venet. τὰ δὲ δίκαια ὁποδόθησε χρήστος, which probably means: righteous conduct will a good one, viz., God, reward. תָּב is an attribute of God, but never the name of God. So the verb נָשָׁל, after the manner of verbs of educating and leading (אִשֵּׂה, נֶמְצָא, נָרָב), is connected with a double accusative. The Syr., Targum, and Jerome translate passively, and so also do we; for while we must think of God in the retribuet, yet the proverb does not name Him any more than at 12:14, cf. 10:24; it is designedly constructed, placing Him in the background, with vague generality: the righteous will one, will they, reward with good—this expression, with the most general personal subject, almost coincides with one altogether passive.

22 The good man leaveth behind him for his children’s children, And the wealth of the sinner is laid up for the just.

Proverbs 13:22. As a commencing word, טוב signifies in the Mishle for the most part bonus (prae); but here, as at 12:2, cf. 22:9; 14:4, it signifies bonum. As the expression that God is good (Ps 25:8, etc.) of the O.T. is equivalent to the N.T. that He is ἀγάπης, so that man who in his relation to others is determined by unselfish love is טוב for the good man [der Gütige], i.e., the man who is willing to communicate all good is truly good, because the essence of righteousness of life, is love. Such an one suffers no loss by his liberality, but, according to the law, 11:25, by which a dispenser of blessings is at the same time also a recipient of blessings, he has only gain, so that he makes his children’s children to inherit, i.e., leaves behind him an inheritance extending even to his grandchildren (vid., regarding חֲלֹנֵה, p. 132; here trans. as containing its object in itself, as at Deut. 32:8: to make to inherit, to place in possession of an inheritance). The sinner, on the contrary (תַּכְפּוּר), loses his wealth, it is already destined to pass over to the righteous who is worthy of it, and makes use (cf. Job 27:17) of that which he possesses in accordance with the will and appointment of God—a revelation of justice appertaining to time, the exceptions to which the old limited doctrine of requital takes no notice of. But משִׁים and וְיִשֵׁר at the beginning of a proverb, or of a line of a proverb, in every case means est qui. That a wealthy person is meant, the contrast shows. וְיַפְּקָד, which denotes anything taken away or gathered up, has the same meaning here as at 1 Sam. 27:1: est qui (Fl. quod, but the parallel does not demand this) abripiatur, i.e., quasi turbine auferetur et perdatur; the word reminds us of סימה, whirlwind, but in itself it means only something smooth and altogether carried off. The ב is here as at Gen. 19:15; elsewhere בּלא מְשָׁפֶט means with injustice (properly, not-right), 16:8, Jer. 22:13, Ezek. 22:29; here it is not the ב of the means, but of the mediate cause. While the (industrious and God-fearing) poor man is richly nourished from the piece of ground which he cultivates, many a one who has incomparably more than he comes by his unrighteousness down to a state of beggary, or even lower: he is not only in poverty, but along with this his honour, his freedom, and the very life of his person perish.

24 He that spareth his rod hateth his son, And he who loveth him visits him early with correction.

Proverbs 13:24. The paedagogic rule of God, 3:12, avails also for men, 23:13f., 29:15. The rod represents here the means of punishment, the patria potestas. He who spareth or avoideth this, and who does this even from love, has yet no true right love for his son; he who loveth him correcteth him early. With ἐπιμελῶς παιδεύει of the LXX (cf. Sir. 30:1, ἐνδελεχήσει μάστιγας) the thought is in general indicated, but the expression is not explained. Many erroneously regard the suffix of בּלא כֹּל as referring to the object immediately following (de Dieu, Ewald, Bertheau, Zöckler); Hitzig, on the contrary, rightly remarks, that in this case we should expect the words to be, after 5:22 (cf. Ex. 2:6), אֵדְרִים. He himself, without any necessity, takes וְיַפְּקָד in the sense of the Arab. skhar, compescere. Hofmann (Schriftbew. ii. 2.
402) is right in saying that “שִׁיחָר is connected with a double accusative as elsewhere occurs; and the meaning is, that one ought much more to anticipate correction than restrain it where it is necessary.” שִׁיחָר means to go out early to anything (vid., p. 52), according to which a Greek rendering is ὀρθρίζει (Venet. ὀρθριεῖ, also in the Targ.) Venet. ὀρθριεῖ αὐτῷ παιδείαν: maturat ei castigationem = mature eum castigat (Fl.). שִׁיחָר does not denote the early morning of the day (as Rashi, לבקרים,) but the morning of life (as Euchel, בחר). “The earlier the fruit, the better the training.” A father who truly wishes well to his son keeps him betimes under strict discipline, to give him while he is yet capable of being influenced the right direction, and to allow no errors to root themselves in him; but he who is indulgent toward his child when he ought to be strict, acts as if he really wished his ruin. 25 The righteous has to eat to the satisfying of his soul; But the body of the godless must suffer want. Proverbs 13:25. Jerome translates חכמה פנימית, after Judg. 5:29, cf. Isa. 19:11, then the meaning would be: the wise among women, each of them buildeth her house. But why then not just אשה חכמה, as 2 Sam. 14:2, cf. Ex. 35:25? The Syr., Targum, and Jerome write sapiens mulier. And if the whole class must be spoken of, why again immediately the individualizing in בנה? The LXX obliterates that by its ἀκοδόμησαν. And does not אול in the contrasted proverb (1b) lead us to conclude on a similar abstract in 1a? The translators conceal this, for they translate אולת personally. Thus also, says Kimchi, an adj. like ע וֶּרֶת, caeca. But the linguistic usage does not point with אול to any אול. It is true that a fem. of אול does not occur; there is, however, also no place in which אול may certainly present itself as such. Thus also חכמות must be an abstr.; we have shown at 1:20 how חכמה, as neut. plur., might have an abstr. meaning. But since it is not to be perceived why the poet should express himself so singularly, the punctuation חכמה is to be understood as proceeding from a false supposition, and is to be read חכמה, as at 9:1 (especially since this passage rests on the one before us). Fleischer says: “to build the house is...
figuratively equivalent to, to regulate well the affairs of a house, and to keep them in a good condition; the contrary, to tear down the house, is the same contrast as the Arab. 'āmārat āلب and kharab āلب. Thus e.g., in Burckhardt's Sprüchw. 217, harrt šabrt byṭā 'āmārat, 'a good woman (ein braves Weib) has patience (with her husband), and thereby she builds up her house (at the same time an example of the use of the preterite in like general sentences for individualizing); also No. 430 of the same work: 'āmārat āلب wla kharābāt, it is becoming to build the house, not to destroy it; cf. in the Thousand and One Nights, where a woman who had compelled her husband to separate from her says: ānā āltī 'amalt hadhā barwhy wākhnt byṭy bnfsy. Burckhardt there makes the remark: 'āmārat āلب denotes the family placed in good circumstances—father, mother, and children all living together happily and peacefully." This conditional relation of the wife to the house expresses itself in her being named as housewife (cf. Hausehre [= honour of a house] used by Luther, Ps. 68:13), to which the Talmudic דְׁבֵית in vi 9 (uxor mea) answers; the wife is noted for this, and hence is called רֵמֶשׁ, the root and foundation of the house; vid., Buxtorf’s Lex. col. 301. In truth, the oneness of the house is more dependent on the mother than on the father. A wise mother can, if her husband be dead or neglectful of his duty, always keep the house together; but if the house-wife has neither understanding nor good-will for her calling, then the best will of the house-father cannot hinder the dissolution of the house, prudence and patience only conceal and mitigate the process of dissolution—folly, viz., of the house-wife, always becomes more and more, according to the degree in which this is a caricature of her calling, the ruin of the house.

2 He walketh in his uprightness which feareth Jahve, And perverse in his ways is he that despiseth Him.

Proverbs 14:2. That which syntactically lies nearest is also that which is intended; the ideas standing in the first place are the predicates. Wherein it shows itself, and whereby it is recognised, that a man fears God, or stands in a relation to Him of indifference instead of one of fear and reverence, shall be declared: the former walketh in his uprightness, i.e., so far as the consciousness of duty which animates him prescribes; the latter in his conduct follows no higher rule than his own lust, which drives him sometimes hither and sometimes thither.

According to Luther, Ps. 68:13), to which the Talmudic יִשָּׁר הָולֵךְ and Mic. 2:7 is of kindred meaning with יִשָּׁר הָולֵךְ. The connection of יִשָּׁר הָולֵךְ follows the scheme of 2 Kings 18:37, and not 2 Sam. 15:32, Ewald, § 288c. If the second word, which particularizes the idea of the first, has the reflexive suff. as here, then the accusative connection, or, as 2:15, the prepositional connection, is more usual than the genitive. Regarding הבחרה, flectere, inclinare (a word common to the author of 1–9), vid., at 2:15. With הבחרה, cf. 1 Sam. 2:30; the suffix without doubt refers to God, for הבחרה is the word that stands in parallel contrast to יִשָּׁר הָולֵךְ.

3 In the mouth of the fool is a switch of pride; But the lips of the wise preserve them.

Proverbs 14:3. The noun חוטר (Aram.χατήρ, Arab. khitr), which besides here occurs only at Isa. 11:1, meaning properly a brandishing (from חטר = Arab. khatr; to brandish, to move up and down or hither and thither, whence ḥākhṭār, the brandisher, poet. the spear), concretely, the young elastic twig, the switch, i.e., the slender flexible shoot. Luther translates, "fools speak tyrannically," which is the briefer rendering of his earlier translation, "in the mouth of the fool is the sceptre of pride;" but although the Targum uses חוטר and of the king’s sceptre and also of the prince’s staff, yet here for this the usual Hebr. שֵׁשָׁבב were to be expected. In view of Isa. 11:1, the nearest idea is, that pride which has its roots in the heart of the fool, grows up to his mouth. But yet it is not thus explained why the representation of this proceeding from within stops with יִשָּׁר הָולֵךְ cf. 11:30). The βακτηρία interprets the verb as jussive: the lips = words of the wise mayest thou keep i.e., take to heart. And the Venet. translates: χείλη δὲ σοφῶν φυλάσσεις αὐτά, which perhaps means: the lips of the wise mayest thou consider, and that not as a prayer, which is foreign to the gnome, but as an address to the hearer, which e.g., 20:19 shows to be admissible. but although in a certain degree of similar contents, yet 3a and 3b clash. Therefore it appears to us more probable that the subject of 3b is the Containment of the body; in 6:22 wisdom is also the subject to which perhaps means: the lips of the wise mayest thou keep i.e., take to heart. Thus: while hurtful pride grows up to the throat of the fool, that, viz., wisdom, keeps the lips of the wise, so that no word of self-reflection, especially none that can wound a neighbour, escapes from them.

The form τεθηκείνεται is much more peculiar than τεθηκείνεται of the moderns, Bertheau and Abulwalîd, Zöckler) or as chastisement for others (Syr., and, a Grace Notes study useful knowledge, but as an admonition to the treatment in a careful, gentle manner, and with thankful recompense of the ox (Prov. 12:10), which God has subjected to man to help him in his labour, and more generally, in so far as one seeks to gain an object, to the considerate adoption of the right means for gaining it. אֲלַפִּים (from אלהי, to cling to) are the cattle giving themselves willingly to the service of men (poet equivalent to בַּהֲרָה, Ved. thwr), Ved. sthûras, is the Aryan-Semitic name of the plough-ox. The noun אֲבָס (similar in look to אֲבָס, אֱבוּס) denotes the fodder-trough, from אֲבָס to feed, and thus perhaps as to its root-meaning related to פָּנָה פָּנָה, and may thus also designate the receptacle for grain where the corn for the provender or feeding of the cattle is preserved—מאָבּוס. Jer. 50:26, at least has this wider signification of the granary; but there exists no reason to depart here from the nearest signification of the word: if a husbandman is not thoughtful about the care and support of the cattle by which he is assisted in his labour, then the crib is empty—he has nothing to heap up; he needs not only fodder, but has also nothing. בַּר (in pause בַּר), clean (synon. נוקי, cf. at 11:26), corresponds with our baar [bare] = blossom [nudus]. Its derivation is obscure. The ב, 4b, is that of the mediating cause: by the strength of the plough-ox there is a fulness of grain gathered into the barn (בָּרָה, from בָּרָה, to gather in, anything gathered in). אֲבָס is the inverted אֲבָס. Striking if also accidental is the frequency of the א and ב in v. 4. This is continued in v. 5, where the collector gives two proverbs, the first of which commences with a word beginning with א, and the second with one beginning with ב.

5 A faithful witness does not speak untruth; But a lying witness breathes out falsehoods.

Proverbs 14:5. The right vocalization and sequence of the accents is √בּשׁ רָבִּים הָאֵמוּן with Tsere and the servile Mahpach, because the following Athnach-word has not two syllables before the tone). As in 5a Mosaic, so in 5b אָלָף דְּשֶׁךְ רָעָם is the subject. Different is the relation of subject and predicate in the second line of the parallel proverbs, v. 25, 19:5. With 5a cf. יֵאָדוּת יָפִיח, 13:17; and regarding אֹמְנִי (one who breathes out), vid., at 6:19; 12:17.

6 In vain the scorner seeketh wisdom; But to the man of understanding knowledge is easy.

Proverbs 14:6. The general sentence is concrete, composed in the common historical form. Regarding יָפִיח, necquidquam, vid., at 13:4. The participle יָפִיח is here neut. for יָפִיח, something which makes itself easy or light. The frivolous man, to whom truth is not a matter of conscience, and who recognises no authority, not even the Supreme, never reaches to truth notwithstanding all his searching, it remains veiled to him and far remote; but to the man of understanding, who knows that the fear of God and not estrangement from God leads to truth, knowledge is an easy matter—he enters on the right way to this end, he brings the right receptivity, brings to bear on it the clear eye, and there is fulfilled to him the saying, “To him that hath it is given.”

Three proverbs regarding fools:

7 Go from the presence of a foolish man, And surely thou hast not known lips of knowledge; Proverbs 14:7. i.e., surely hast not brought into experience that he possesses lips which express experimental knowledge, or: surely thou must confess on reflection that no prudent word has come forth from his mouth. If 7b were intended to assign a motive, then the expression would be בּוֹלַד תֵּה יְבֵל תִּתֶּה (Isa. 44:9), according to which Aquila and Theodotion translate, καὶ οὐ καταλύει καταλύει μὴ καταλύει μὴ καταλύει is the sphere of vision, and מִת הַתֵּה denotes either away from the sphere of vision, as e.g., Isa. 1:16, or, inasmuch as מִת is used as in מִת הַתֵּה, כִּי בָּלַד עַבְּלַד עַבְּלַד, and the like: at a certain distance from the sphere of vision, but so that one keeps the object in sight, Gen. 21:16. נֶגֶד ל denotes, as the inverted expression Deut. 28:66 shows, over against any one, so that he has the object visibly before him, and מִנֶגֶד ל, Judg. 20:34, from the neighbourhood of a place where one has it in view. So also here: go away from the vis-à-vis (vis = visûs) of the foolish man, if thou hast to do with such an one; whence, 7b, follows what he who has gone away must on looking back say to himself. בל (with the pret. as e.g., Isa. 33:23) expresses a negative with emphasis. Nolde and others, also Fleischer, interpret 7b relatively: et in quo non cognoveris labia scientiae. If וּב ל־יָד ע were the expression used, then it would be explained after 9:13, for the idea of the foolish man is extended: and of such an one as absolutely knows not how to speak anything prudent. But in וּב ל־יָד ע the relative clause intended must be indicated by the added ב: and of such an one in whom ... Besides, in this case אָשָם (vid., Ps. 35:15) would have been nearer than בַּל. The LXX has modified this proverb, and yet has brought out nothing that is correct; not only the Syr., but also Hitzig follows it, when he translates, “The foolish man hath everything before him, but lips of knowledge are a receptacle of knowledge” (ᾼφρονας χλευάζει πλημμέλεια). It racks one’s brains to find out the meaning of the first part here, and, as Böttcher rightly says, who can be satisfied with the “lips of knowledge” as the “receptacle of knowledge”? 8 The wisdom of the prudent is to observe his way, And the folly of fools is deceit.

Proverbs 14:8. The nearest idea is that of self-deceit, according to which the LXX, Syr., and Jerome render the word error (“Irresal”). But מִרְׁמָה is nowhere else used of self-deception, and moreover is not the suitable word for such an idea, since the conception of the dolus malus is constantly associated with it. Thus the contrast will be this: the wisdom of the prudent shows itself in this, that he considers his conduct (יֵבָע as 7:7, cf. Ps. 5:2), i.e., regulates it carefully, examining and considering (Prov. 13:16) it according to right and duty; and that on the contrary the folly of fools shows itself in this, that they aim at the malevolent deception of their neighbour, and try all kinds of secret ways for the gaining of this end. The former is wisdom, because from the good only good comes; the latter is folly or madness, because deception, however long it may sneak in darkness, yet at last comes to light, and recoils in its destructive effects upon him from whom it proceeds.

9 The sacrificial offering of fools mocketh; But between upright men there is good understanding.

Proverbs 14:9. We may not give to the Hiph. זלwig הליל any meaning which it nowhere has, as, to excuse (Kimchi), or to come to an agreement by mediation (Schultens). So we may not make איוֹלָים the subject (Targ., Symmachus, Jerome, Luther, “fools make sport with sin”), for one is persuaded that כל 아דום ש is equivalent to כל ואוֹלָים (Immanuel, Meïri, and others), which would be more admissible if we had מִליץ (vid., 3:35), or if לא ני did not immediately follow (vid., 28:1). Aquila and Theodotion rightly interpret the relation of the component parts of the sentence: ᾼφρονας χλευάζει πλημμέλεια; and this translation of אָשָם also is correct; we take πλημμέλεια in the sense of a θυσία περί πλημμελείας (Sir. 7:31), in which the Judeo-Hellenic actually uses it (vid., Schleusner’s Lex.). The idea of sacrificial offering is that of expiation: it is a penitential work, it falls under the prevailing point of view of an ecclesiastical punishment, a satisfactio in a church-disciplinary sense; the forgiveness of sins is conditioned by this, (1) that the sinner either abundantly makes good by restitution the injury inflicted on another, or in some other way bears temporal punishment for it, and (2) that he willingly presents the sacrifices of rams or of sheep, the value of which the priest has to determine in its relation to the offence (by a tax-scale from 2 shekels upwards). The Torâ gives accurately the offences which are thus to be atoned for. Here, with reference to 9b, there particularly comes into view the offence against property (Lev. 5:20ff.), and against female honour (Lev. 19:20–22). Fools fall from one offence into another, which they have to atone for by the presentation of sacrificial offerings; the sacrificial offering mocked them (ל됨, with accus.-object, as 19:28, Ps. 119:51), for it equally derides them on account of the self-inflicted loss, and on account of the efforts with which they must make good the effects of their frivolity and madness; while on the contrary, among men of upright character, ידיע, a relation of mutual favour, prevails, which does not permit that the one give to the other an indemnity, and apply the Asham- [אשים = trespass-offering] Torâ. Symmachus rightly: καὶ ἄναμέσον εὐθέων εὐδοκία. But the LXX confuses this proverb also. Hitzig, with the Syr., follows it and translates: The tents of the foolish are in tents, and this [house] formed out of אולים, and this [house] extracted from [tents] are nothing but an aimless and tasteless flourish.

Four proverbs of joy and sorrow in the present and the future:

10 The heart knoweth the trouble of its soul, and no stranger can intermeddle with its joy.

Psalms 14:10. The accentuation לֹא-יוֹדוּ יַרְדֶּנֶּךָ seems to point out יַרְדֶּנֶּךָ as an adjective (Löwenstein: a feeling heart), after 1 Kings 3:9, or genit. (of a feeling heart); but Cod. 1294 and the Jemen Cod., and others, as well as the editions of Jablonsky and Michaelis, have לֹא instead of לֹא with Rebia, so that this is by itself to be taken as the subject (cf. the accentuation 15:5a and under at 16a). The ר with Dagesh, and consequently the short Kametz (Michl 63b), like שָרֶּךָ, Judges 6:28, and on the contrary כֹּרָה, Ezek. 16:4; it is the fem. of mōr = morr, from בָּר, adstringere, amarum esse.

Regarding בָּר, in contradistinction to וּפש, vid., Psychol. p. 251. “All that is meant by the Hellenic and Hellenistic νοσός λόγος συνείδησις θυμός is comprehended in καρδία, and all by which the mind and soul are affected comes into the light of consciousness.”

The first half of the proverb is clear: the heart, and only it, i.e., the man in the centre of his individuality, knows what brings bitterness to his soul, i.e., what troubles him in the sphere of his natural life and of the nearest life-circle surrounding him. It thus treats of life experiences which are of too complex a nature to be capable of being fully represented to others, and, as we are wont to say, of so delicate a nature that we shrink from uncovering them and making them known to others, and which on this account must be kept shut up in our own hearts, because no man is so near to us, or has so fully gained our confidence, that we have the desire and the courage to pour out our hearts to him from their very depths. Yet the saying, “Every one knows where the shoe pinches him” (1 Kings 8:38), stands nearer to this proverb; here this expression receives a psychological, yet a sharper and a deeper expression, for the knowledge of that which grieves the soul is attributed to the heart, in which, as the innermost of the soul- corporeal life, it reflects itself and becomes the matter-of-fact of the reflex consciousness in which it must shut itself up, but also for the most part without external expression. If we now interpret מָרְקָה as prohibitive, then this would stand (with this exception, that in this case מָרְקָה instead of מָר is to be expected) in opposition, certainly not intended, to the exhortation, Rom. 12:15, “Rejoice with them that do rejoice,” and to the saying, “Distributed joy is doubled joy, distributed sorrow is half sorrow;” and an admonition to leave man alone with his joy, instead of urging him to distribute it, does not run parallel with 10a. Therefore we interpret לֹא-יוֹדוּ יַרְדֶּנֶּךָ.
the fut. as potentialis. As there is a soul-sorrow of the man whose experience is merely a matter of the heart, so there is also a soul-joy with which no other (vid., regarding ר, p. 98, and cf. here particularly Job 19:27) intermeddled (יָתֶרַב, like Ps. 106:35), in which no other can intermeddle, because his experience, as e.g., of blessed spiritual affection or of benevolent feeling, is purely of a personal nature, and admits of no participation (cf. on ἐκρύψε, Matt. 13:44), and thus of no communication to others. Elster well observes: “By this thought, that the innermost feelings of a man are never fully imparted to another man, never perfectly cover themselves with the feelings of another, yea, cannot at all be fully understood by another, the worth and the significance of each separate human personality is made conspicuous, not one of which is the example of a species, but each has it sown peculiarity, which no one of countless individuals possesses. At the same time the proverb has the significance, that it shows the impossibility of a perfect fellowship among men, because one never wholly understands another. Thereby it is indicated that no human fellowship can give true salvation, but only the fellowship with God, whose love and wisdom are capable of shining through the most secret sanctuary of human personality.” Thus also Dächsel (but he interprets 10b admonitorily): “Each man is a little world in himself, which God only fully sees through and understands. His sorrow appertaining to his innermost life, and his joy, another is never able fully to transfer to himself. yea, the most sorrowful of all experiences, the most inward of all joys, we possess altogether alone, without any to participate with us.”

11 The house of the wicked is overthrown; But the tent of the upright flourishes.

Proverbs 14:11. In the cogn. proverb, 12:7, line 2 begins with בּ, but here the apparently firmly-founded house is assigned to the godless, and on the contrary the tent, easily destroyed, and not set up under the delusion of lasting for ever, is assigned to the righteous. While the former is swept away without leaving a trace behind (Isa. 14:23), the latter has blossoms and shoots (מַפְרִי as inwardly transitive, like Job 14:9, Ps. 92:14); the household of such remains not only preserved in the same state, but in a prosperous, happy manner it goes forward and upward.

12 There is a way that seemeth right to one, But the end thereof are the ways of death. Proverbs 14:12. This is literally repeated in 16:25. The rightness is present only as a phantom, for it arises wholly from a terrible self-deception; the man judges falsely and goes astray when, without regard to God and His word, he follows only his own opinions. It is the way of estrangement from God, of fleshly security; the way of vice, in which the blinded thinks to spend his life, to set himself to fulfil his purposes; but the end thereof (א חֲרִיתָ with neut. fem.: the end of this intention, that in which it issues) are the ways of death. He who thus deceives himself regarding his course of life, sees himself at last arrived at a point from which every way which now further remains to him leads only down to death. The self-delusion of one ends in death by the sentence of the judge, that of another in self-murder; of one in loathsome disease, of another in a slow decay under the agony of conscience, or in sorrow over a henceforth dishonoured and distracted life.

13 Even in the midst of laughter the heart experiences sadness; And to it, joy, the end is sorrow. Proverbs 14:13. Every human heart carries the feeling of disquiet and of separation from its true home, and of the nothingness, the transitoriness of all that is earthly; and in addition to this, there is many a secret sorrow in every one which grows out of his own corporeal and spiritual life, and from his relation to other men; and this sorrow, which is from infancy onward the lot of the human heart, and which more and more depends and diversifies itself in the course of life, makes itself perceptible even in the midst of laughter, in spite of the mirth and merriment, without being able to be suppressed or expelled from the soul, returning always the more intensely, the more violently we may have for a time kept it under and sunk it in unconsciousness. Euchel cites here the words of the poet, according to which 13a is literally true: "No, man is not made for joy; Why weep his eyes when in heart he laughs?"

From the fact that sorrow is the fundamental condition of humanity, and forms the background of laughter, it follows, 13b, that in general it is not good for man to give himself up to joy, viz., sensual (worldly), for to it, joy, the end (the issue) is sorrow. That is true also of the final end, which according to that saying, מִיֹּסֵג לֵב, changes laughter into weeping, and weeping into laughter. The correction אֲחֲרִיתָהּ (Hitzig) presses upon the Mishle style an article in such cases rejected, and removes a form of expression of the Hebr. syntaxis ornata, which here, as at Isa. 17:6, is easily obviated, but which is warranted by a multitude of other examples, vid., at 13:4 (also 5:22), and cf. Philippi's Status Const. p. 14f., who regards the second word, as here שמחה, after the Arab., as accus. But in cases like שָׁמַע לְשׁוֹנָהּ, although not in cases such as Ezra 2:62, the accus. rendering is tenable, and the Arab. does not at all demand it. In the old Hebr. this solutio of the st. constr. belongs to the elegances of the language; it is the precursor of the vulgar post-bibl. אֲחֲרִיתָה וּשׁטִים. That the Hebr. may also retain a gen. where more or fewer parts of a sentence intervene between it and its governing word, is shown by such examples as Isa. 48:9; 49:7; 61:7.

There follows a series of proverbs which treat of the wicked and the good, and of the relation between the foolish and the wise:

14 He that is of a perverse heart is satisfied with his own ways; And a good man from himself.

Proverbs 14:14. We first determine the subject conception. שָׁמַע לְשׁוֹנָהּ (one turning aside וְלִשֵּׁנָהּ) is one whose heart is perverted, וְלִשֵּׁנָהּ, turned away, viz., from God, Ps. 44:19. The Book of Proverbs contains besides of this verb only the name of dross (recedanea) derived from it; and, separated, drawn away, is such a half passive as וְלִשֵּׁנָהּ. Isa. 49:21, 59:16, Mic. 2:8, etc. (Olsh. § 245a). Regarding at 12:2, cf. 13:22: a man is so called whose manner of thought and of action has as its impulse and motive self-sacrificing love. When it is said of the former that he is satisfied with his own ways, viz., those which with heart turned away from God he enters upon, the meaning is not that they give him peace or bring satisfaction to him (Löwenstein), but we see from 1:31; 18:20, that this is meant recompensatively: he gets, enjoys the reward of his wandering in estrangement from God. It is now without doubt seen that 14b expresses that wherein the benevolent man finds his reward. We will therefore not explain (after 4:15, cf. Num. 16:26, 2 Sam. 19:10): the good man turns himself away from him, or the good man stands over him (as Jerome, Venet, after Eccles. 5:7);—this rendering gives no contrast, or at least a halting one. The קָרָדֵי of מִשְׁאָלִי must be parallel with that of נָשָׁר. From the LXX, ἀπὸ δὲ τῶν διανοημάτων αὐτοῦ, the Syr. rightly: from the fruit (religiousness) of his soul; the Targ.: from his fruit. Buxtorf, against Cappellus, has already perceived that here no other phrase but the explanation of μέτεχεν by ex eo quod penses est lies at the foundation. We could, after 7:14, also explain: from that which he perceives as his obligation (duty); yet that other explanation lies proportionally nearer, but yet no so that we refer the suffix to the backslider of 14a: in it (his fate) the good man is satisfied, for this contrast also halts, the thought is not in the spirit of the Book of Proverbs (for 29:16b does not justify it); and in how totally different a connection of thought מֵעָלָיו is used in the Book of Proverbs, is shown by 24:17b; but generally the Scripture does not use מֵעָלָיו of such satisfaction, it has, as in 14a, also in 14b, the...
recompensative sense, according to the fundamental principle, ὃ ἐὰν σπείρῃ ἄνθρωπος τοῦτο καὶ θερίσει (Gal. 6:7). The suffix refers back to the subject, as we say: רוחִי עָל י, וְפְשִי עָל י (Psychol. p. 152). But considerations of an opposite kind also suggest themselves. Everywhere else מעל refers not to that which a man has within himself, but that which he carries without; and also that מֵעָלָיו can be used in the sense of מִשֶעָלָיו, no evidence can be adduced: it must be admitted to be possible, since the writer of the Chronicles (2 Chron. 1:4) ventures to use ב הֵכִין. Is מעלי thus used substantively: by his leaves (Aben Ezra and others)? If one compares 11:28 with Ps. 1:3, this explanation is not absurd; but why then did not the poet rather use מִפִּרְׁיו? We come finally to the result, that וּמֵעָלָיו, although it admits a connected interpretation, is an error of transcription. But the correction is not וּמֶעֲלָיו (Elster) nor וּמֶעָלָיו (Cappellus), for מעלי and מֵעֲלָיו, deeds, are words which do not exist; nor is it מִמִּשֶעָלָיו (Bertheau) nor מִפְּרִיו (Ewald), but מִמִּשֶעָלָיו (which Cappellus regarded, but erroneously, as the LXX phrase); for (1) throughout almost the whole O.T., from Judg. 2:19 to Zech. 1:18, מעלי and מִפְּרִיו are interchangeable words, and indeed almost an inseparable pair, cf. particularly Jer. 17:10; and (2) when Isaiah (Is. 3:10) says, נְסֵךְ מִפְּרִי תּוֹעֲלָתוֹ, this almost sounds like a prophetic paraphrase of the second line of the proverb, which besides by this emendation gains a more rhythmical sound and a more suitable compass.

15 The simple believeth every word; But the prudent takes heed to his step. Proverbs 14:15. We do not translate, “every thing,” for “word” and faith are correlates, Ps. 106:24, and כי פִּי is the non-self-dependent who lets himself be easily persuaded by the talk of another (vid., p. 39f.): he believes every word without proving it, whether it is well-meant, whether it is true, whether it is salutary and useful, so that he is thus, without having any firm principle, and without any judgment of his own, driven about hither and thither; the prudent, on the other hand, considers and marks his step, that he may not take a false step or go astray, he proves his way (8a), he takes no step without thought and consideration (בּין or וְלָבָד, to consider or reflect upon anything, Ps. 73:17, cf. 33:15)—he makes sure steps with his feet (Heb. 12:13), without permitting himself to waver and sway by every wind of doctrine (Eph. 4:14).

16 The wise feareth and departeth from evil; But the fool loseth his wits and is regardless. Proverbs 14:16. Our editions have את רַק with Munach, as if היה תִּקְנָה וְיָרֵא וּבֶרְו וְפְשִי, and thus it must be: הבָדֶם is the subject, and what follows is its complex predicate. Most interpreters translate 16b: the fool is over-confident (Zöckler), or the fool rushes on (Hitzig), as also Luther: but a fool rushes wildly through, i.e., in a daring, presumptuous manner. But מַחְזֶר denotes everywhere nothing else than to fall into extreme anger, to become heated beyond measure, 26:17 (cf. 20:2), Deut. 3:26, etc. Thus 16a and 16b are fully contrasted. What is said of the wise will be judged after Job 1:1, cf. Ps. 34:15; 37:27: the wise man has fear, viz., fear of God, or rather, since דַעַל is not directly to be supplied, that careful, thoughtful, self-mistrusting reserve which flows from the reverential awe of God; the fool, on the contrary, can neither rule nor bridle his affections, and without any just occasion falls into passionate excitement. But on the other side he is self-confident, regardless, secure; while the wise man avoids the evil, i.e., carefully goes out of its way, and in N.T. phraseology “works out his own salvation with fear and trembling.” Proverbs 14:17. This verse, as if explanatory of 14:16, connects itself with this interpretation of the contrasts, corresponding to the general usus loquendi, and particularly to the Mishle style. One who is quick to anger worketh folly, and a man of intrigues is hated. Ewald finds here no right contrast. He understands איש מזמה in a good sense, and accordingly corrects the text, substituting for יָשָׁב (μετὰ καθῆται), for he translates: but the man of consideration bears (properly smooths, viz., his soul). On the other hand it is also to be remarked, that איש מקדש, when it occurs, is not to be understood necessarily in a good sense, since מקדש is used just like זָמָה, at one time in a good and at another in a bad sense, and that we willingly miss the “most complete sense” thus arising, since the proverb, as it stands in the Masoretic text, is good Hebrew, and needs only to be rightly understood to let nothing be missed in completeness. The contrast, as Ewald seeks here to represent it (also Hitzig, who proposes איש משומש: the man of consideration remains quiet; Syr. ramys, circumspect), we have in v. 29, where the μακρόθυμος stands over against the ὀξύθυμος (or ἀεὶ δριμεῖα χολὰ ποτὶ ῥινὶ), for he translates: but if in his folly he injures or disgraces himself, or is derided, or if he even does injury to the body and the life of another, and afterwards with terror sees the evil done in its true light, then he is an object of compassion. Theodotion rightly: (ἄνὴρ ὑπὲρ διαβουλιῶν μεσηθήσεται, and Jerome: vir versutus odiosus est (not the Venet. ἀνὴρ βοδελυγμῶν, for this signification has only ἁμαρτήματα, and that in the sing.), on thee contrary, the LXX, Syr., Targum, and Symmachus incorrectly understand in bonam partem. 18 The simple have obtained folly as an inheritance; But the prudent put on knowledge as a crown.

Proverbs 14:18. As a parallel word to איש מזמות (after the Masora defective), also in the sense of Arab. âkther, multiplicare, abundare (from Arab. kathura, to be much, perhaps properly comprehensive, encompassing), would be appropriate, but it is a word properly Arabic. On the other hand, inappropriate is the meaning of the Heb.-Aram. כדר, to wait (properly waiting to surround, to go round any one, cf. manere aliquem or aliquod), according to which Aquila, ἀναμενοῦσιν, and Jerome, expectabunt. Also כדר, to encompass in the sense of to embrace (LXX κρατήσουσιν), does not suffice, since in the relation to וַחֲלֵף one expects an idea surpassing this. Certainly there is a heightening of the idea in this, that the Hiph. in contradistinction to וַחֲלֵף, which the LXX, Targ., Jerome, Luther (but not the Syr., which translates כדר by חבירו, "to inherit," but the Syr. by הבוחר, which the LXX has for הבוחר). The bibl. language has also (Ps. 142:8) in the denom. signification of to place a crown, and that on oneself; the non-bibl. has כדר (like the bibl. כדר), in the sense of distributor of crowns, and is fond of the metaphor הבוחר, crown of knowledge. With those not self-dependent (vid., regarding the plur. form of תני, p. 39), who are swayed by the first influence, the issue is, without their willing it, that they become habitual fools: folly is their possession, i.e., their property. The prudent, on the contrary, as v. 15 designates them, have thoughtfully to ponder their step to gain knowledge as a crown (cf. חכמים, to gain riches, הגדיר, 11b, to gain flowers, Gesen. § 53, 2). Knowledge is to them not merely an inheritance, but a possession won, and as such remains with them a high and as it were a kingly ornament.

19 The wicked must bow before the good, And the godless stand at the doors of the righteous.

Proverbs 14:19. The good, viz., that which is truly good, which has love as its principle, always at last holds the supremacy. The good men who manifest love to en which flows from love to God, come finally forward, so that the wicked, who for a long time played the part of lords, bow themselves willingly or unwillingly before them, and often enough it comes about that godless men fall down from their prosperity and their places of honour so low, that they post themselves at the entrance of the stately dwelling of the righteous (Prov. 13:22), waiting for his going out and in, or seeking an occasion of presenting to him a supplication, or also as expecting gifts to be bestowed (Ps. 37:25). The poor man Lazarus πρὸς τὸν πυλῶνα of the rich man, Luke 16:20, shows, indeed, that this is not always the case on this side of the grave.

Kimchi’s Wörterbuch under חשה, the ultima accented; the accentuation of the form סכנה wavers between the ult. and penult. Olsh. p. 482f., cf. Gesen. 68, Anm. 10. The substantival clause 19b is easily changed into a verbal clause: they come (Syr.), appear, stand (incorrectly the Targ.: they are judged in the gates of the righteous).

Three proverbs on the hatred of men:

20 The poor is hated even by his neighbour; But of those who love the rich there are many.

Proverbs 14:20. This is the old history daily repeating itself. Among all people is the saying and the complaint: Donec eris felix multos numerabis amicos, Tempora si fuerint nubilia solus eris.

The Book of Proverbs also speaks of this lamentable phenomenon. It is a part of the dark side of human nature, and one should take notice of it, so that when it goes well with him, he may not regard his many friends as all genuine, and when he becomes poor, he may not be surprised by the dissolution of earlier friendship, but may value so much the higher exceptions to the rule. The connection of the passive with י of the subject (cf. 13:13), as in the Greek with the dative, as pure Semitic; sometimes it stands with מין, but in the sense of ἀπό, Cant. 3:10, before the influence of the West led to its being used in the sense ofὑπό (Ges. § 143, 2); וּשָחָה, is hated (Cod. 1294: וּשָחָה, connects with the hatred which is directed against the poor also the indifference which makes him without sympathy, for one feels himself troubled by him and ashamed.

21 Whoever despiseth his neighbour committeth sin; But whoever hath compassion on the suffering—blessings on him!

Proverbs 14:21. One should regard every human being, especially such as God has placed near to him, as a being having the same origin, as created in the image of God, and of the same lofty destination, and should consider himself as under obligation to love him. He who despiseth his neighbour (write בז־ with Metheg, and vid., regarding the constr. with dat. object. 6:30, cf. 11:12; 13:13) sins in this respect, that he raises himself proudly and unwarrantably above him; that the honour and love he shows to him he measures not by the rule of duty and of necessity, but according to that which is pleasing to himself; and in that he refuses to him that which according to the ordinance of God he owes him. In v. 21b the Chethîb עֲנִי and the Keri עֲנָוִים (vid., at Ps. 9:13) interchange in an inexplicable way; וּשָחָה is the bowed down (cf.
Arab. ma’nuww, particularly of the prisoner, from ‘ana, fut. ya’nw to bow, bend), שָׁנָה (Arab. ‘aniya, to be bowed down) the patient bearer who in the school of suffering has learned humility and meekness. One does not see why the Keri here exchanges that passive idea for this ethical one, especially since, in proving himself to be מְׁחֻנֵן (compassionate) (for which elsewhere the part. Kal יִחַונֵן, 14:31; 19:17; 28:8), one must be determined only by the needy condition of his neighbour, and not by his (the neighbour’s) moral worthiness, the want of which ought to make him twofold more an object of our compassion. All the old translators, from the LXX to the Venet. and Luther, on this account adopt the Chethib.

Proverbs 14:22. The proverb terminating (v. 21) with א שְׁרָיו (cf. 16:20) is now followed by one not less singularly formed, commencing with הֲלֹא (cf. 8:1). Will they not go astray who devise evil, And are not mercy and truth to those who devise good?

The part. חרש signifies both the plougher and the artisan; but on this account to read with Hitzig both times *חרש*י, i.e., machinatores, is nothing less than advisable, since there is connected with this metaphorical חרש, as we have shown at 3:29, not only the idea of fabricating, but also that of ploughing. Just so little is there any reason for changing with Hitzig, against all old translators, יִתְעו, will it not go ill with them ...; the fut. יתעו (cf. Isa. 63:17) is not to be touched; the perf. תעו (e.g., Ps. 58:4) would de note that those who contrive evil are in the way of error, the fut. on the contrary that they will fall into error (cf. 12:26 with Job 12:24). But if יתע is the expression of the result which shall certainly come to such, then 22b stands as a contrast adapted thereto: and are not, on the contrary, mercy and truth those who contrive that which is good, i.e., (for that which befalls them, as 13:18a, cf. 14:35b, is made their attribute) are they not an object of mercy and truth, viz., on the part of God and of men, for the effort which proceeds from love and is directed to the showing forth of good is rewarded by this, that God and men are merciful to such and maintain truth to them, stand in truth to them; for here is to be understood here, as at 3:3, neither of God nor of men exclusively, but of both together: the wicked who contrive evil lose themselves on the way to destruction, but grace and truth are the lot of those who aim at what is good, guarded and guided by which, they reach by a blessed way a glorious end.

There now follows a considerable series of proverbs (vv. 23–31) which, with a single exception (v. 24), have all this in common, that one or two key-words in them begin with ב. 23 In all labour there is gain, But idle talk leadeth only to loss.

Proverbs 14:23. Here the key-words are פָּרָה (parallel 21:5, cf. with 11:24), which begin with ב. עֶצֶב is labour, and that earnest and unwearied, as at 10:22. If one toils on honestly, then there always results from it something which stands forth above the endeavour as its result and product, vid., at Job 30:11, where it is shown how *יתרו, from the primary meaning to be stretched out long, acquires the meaning of that which hangs over, shoots over, copiousness, and gain. By the word of the lips, on the contrary, i.e., purposeless and inoperative talk (as Isa. 36:5, cf. Job 11:2), nothing is gained, but on the contrary there is only loss, for by it one only robs both himself and others of time, and wastes strength, which might have been turned to better purpose, to say nothing of the injury that is thereby done to his soul; perhaps also he morally injures, or at least discomposes and wearies others.

24 It is a crown to the wise when they are rich; But the folly of fools remains folly.
riches of the wise of which it is said that they are a crown or an ornament to them. More than this is said, if with Hitzig we read, after the LXX, עָרְׁמָם, their prudence, instead of עָשְׁרָם. For then the meaning would be, that the wise need no other crown than that which they have in their prudence. But yet far more appropriately "riches" are called the crown of a wise man when they come to his wisdom; for it is truly thus that riches, when they are possessed along with wisdom, contribute not a little to heighten its influence and power, and not merely because they adorn in their appearance like a crown, or, as we say, surround as with a golden frame, but because they afford a variety of means and occasions for self-manifestation which are denied to the poor. By this interpretation of 24a, 24b comes out also into the light, without our requiring to correct the first אִוֶּלֶת, or to render it in an unusual sense. The LXX and Syr. translate the first אִוֶּלֶת by διατριβή (by a circumlocution), the Targ. by gloria, fame— we know not how they reach this. Schultens in his Com. renders: crassa opulentia elumbium crassities, but in his Animadversiones he combines the first אִוֶּלֶת with the Arab. awwale, precedence, which Gesen. approves of. But although the meaning to be thick (properly coalescere) appertains to the verbal stem אִוָל as well as the meaning to be before (Arab. ʿāl, ʿāwila, wāl), yet the Hebr. אִוָל always and everywhere means only folly, from the fundamental idea crassities (thickness). Hitzig's אִוָל (which denotes the consequence with which the fool invests himself) we do not accept, because this word is Hitzig's own invention. Rather אִוָל is to be expected: the crown with which fools adorn themselves is folly. But the sentence: the folly of fools is (and remains) folly (Symmachus, Jerome, Venet., Luther), needs the emendation as little as 16:22b, for, interpreted in connection with 24a, it denotes that while wisdom is adorned and raised up by riches, folly on the other hand remains, even when connected with riches, always the same, without being either thereby veiled or removed,—on the contrary, the fool, when he is rich, exhibits his follies always more and more. C. B. Michaelis compares Lucian's simia est simia etiamsi aurea gestet insignia.

25 A witness of truth delivereth souls; But he who breathes out lies is nothing but deception.

Proverbs 14:25. When men, in consequence of false suspicions or of false accusations, fall into danger of their lives (דָּרֵי נַעֲשָׂה is the designation in the later language of the law of a criminal process), then a tongue which, pressed by conscientiousness and not deterred by cowardice, will utter the truth, saves them. But a false tongue, which as such (vid., 5b) is a יָפִיח כזבים (after the Masora at this place דָּרֵי נַעֲשָׂה defective), i.e., is one who breathes out lies (vid., regarding יָפִיח at 6:19), is mere deception (LXX, without reading מְׁר מֶה [as Hitzig does]: δόλιος).

In 12:17 מִרְמָה is to be interpreted as the object. accus. of ני יגיד (carried forward, but here to carry forward מ צִיל (Arama, Löwenstein) is impracticable—for to deliver deceit = the deceiver is not expressed in the Hebr.—מִרְמָה is, as possibly also 12:16 (LXX δόλιος), without or ḫשָׂע being supplied, the pred. of the substantival clause: such an one is deception (in bad Latin, dolositas), for he who utters forth lies against better knowledge must have a malevolent, deceitful purpose.

26 In the fear of Jahve lies a strong ground of confidence, And the children of such an one have a refuge.

Proverbs 14:26. The so-called ἐσθεναι essentialia stands here, as at Ps. 68:5; 55:19, Isa. 26:4, before the subject idea; the clause: in the fear of God exists, i.e., it is and proves itself, as a strong ground of confidence, does not mean that the fear of God is something in which one can rely (Hitzig), but that it has (Prov. 22:19, Jer. 17:7, and here) an inheritance which is enduring, unwavering, and not disappointing in God, who is the object of fear; for it is not faith, nor anything else subjective, which is the rock that bears us, but this Rock is the object which faith lays hold of (cf. Isa. 28:16). Is now the אפֵס to be referred, with Ewald and Zöckler, to נ? It is possible, as we have discussed at Gen. 6:1f.; but in view of parallels such as 20:7, it is not probable. He who fears God entails in the Abrahamic way (Gen. 18:19) the fear of God on his children, and in this precious paternal inheritance they have a מְחִיתָה (not מְחִיתָה, and therefore to be written with Masoretic exactness מְחִיתָה), a fortress or place of protection, a refuge in every time of need (cf. Ps. 71:5–7). Accordingly, מְחִיתָה refers back to the מְחִיתָה, to be understood from בְּרָאשָׁה דָּוִד (LXX, Luther, and all the Jewish interpreters), which we find not so doubtful as to regard on this account the explanation after Ps. 73:15, cf. Deut. 14:1, as necessary, although we grant that such an introduction of the N.T. generalization and deepening of the idea of sonship is to be expected from the Chokma. 27 The fear of Jahve is a fountain of life, To escape the snares of death.

Proverbs 14:27. There springs up a life which makes him who carries in himself (cf. John 4:14, ἐν αὐτῷ this welling life, penetrating and strong of will to escape the snares (write after the Masorah מְחִיתָה defective) which death lays, and which bring to an end in death—a repetition of 13:4 with changed subject. 28 In the multitude of the people lies the king’s honour; And when the population diminishes, it is the downfall of his glory.

Proverbs 14:28. The honour or the ornament (vid., regarding רָזִּים אָפֶס, the root-word of רָזִּים at Isa. 63:1) of a king consists in this, that he rules over a great people, and that they increase and prosper; on the other hand, it is the ruin of princely greatness when the people decline in number and in wealth. Regarding רָזִּים, vid., at 10:14. אפֵס signifies prepositionally “without” (properly, by non-existence), e.g., 26:20, or adverbially “groundless” (properly, for nothing), Isa. 52:4; here it is to be understood after its contrast אֱלֹלם: in the non-existence, but which is here equivalent to in the ruin (cf. אפֵס, the form of which in conjunction is אפֵס, Gen. 47:15), lies the misfortune, decay, ruin of the princedom. The LXX ἐν δὲ ἐκλείψει λαοῦ signifies prepositionally “without,” cf. Deut. 14:1, as necessary, although we grant that such a repetition of 13:4 with changed subject. 29 He that is slow to anger is rich in understanding; But he that is easily excited carries off folly.

Proverbs 14:29. אפֵס (constr. of אפֵס) is he who puts off anger long, viz., the outbreak of anger, ὀξύθυμος, 19:11, i.e., lets it not come in, but shuts it out long (μακρόθυμος = βραδὺς εἰς ὀργήν, Jas. 1:19); and ὀξυθυμικός, he who in his spirit and temper, viz., as regards anger (for ὀξύς denotes also the breathing out and snorting, Isa. 25:4; 33:11), is short, i.e., (since shortness of time is meant) is rash and suddenly (cf. quick to anger, praeceps in iram, 17a) breaks out with it, not ὀλιγόψυχος (but here ὀξύθυμος), as the LXX translate 17a. The former, who knows how to control his affections, shows himself herein as “great in understanding” (cf. 2 Sam. 23:20), or as a “man of great understanding” (Lat. multus prudentiâ); the contrary is he who suffers himself to be impelled by his affections into hasty, inconsiderate action, which is here expressed more actively by מַרְכַּר אֲפֵרִים. Does this mean that he bears folly to the view (Luther, Umbreit, Bertheau, Elster, and others)? But for that idea the Mishle style has other expressions, 12:23; 13:16; 15:2, cf. 14:17. Or does it mean that he makes folly high, i.e., shows himself highly foolish (LXX, Syr., Targum, Fleischer, and others)? But that would be expressed rather by הִגְׁדִיל or תִּאְמֶר. Or is it he heightens folly (Löwenstein, Hitzig)? But the remark that the angry ebullition is itself a gradual heightening of the foolish nature of such an one is not suitable, for the choleric man, who lets the evenness of his disposition be interrupted by a breaking forth of anger, is by no means also in himself a fool. Rashi is right when he says, מפרישה לחלקו (to which also Fleischer gives the preference) aufert pro portione sua stultitiam. The only appropriate parallel according to which it is to be explained, is 3:35. But not as Ewald: he lifts up folly, which lies as it were before his feet on his life’s path; but: he takes off folly, in the sense of Lev. 6:8, i.e., he carries off folly, receives a portion of folly; for as to others, so also to himself, when he returns to calm blood, that which he did in his rage must appear as folly and madness. 30 A quiet heart is the life of the body, But covetousness is roteness in the bones.

Proverbs 14:30. Heart, soul, flesh, is the O.T. trichotomy, Ps. 84:3; 16:9; the heart is the innermost region of the life, where all the rays of the bodily and the soul-life concentrate, and whence they again unfold themselves. The state of the heart, i.e., of the central, spiritual, soul-inwardness of the man, exerts therefore on all sides a constraining influence on the bodily life, in the relation to the heart the surrounding life. Regarding מְּכַּבֵּב צְרֵף vid., at 12:18, p. 189. Thus is styled the quiet heart, which in its symmetrical harmony is like a calm and clear water-mirror, neither interrupted by the affections, nor broken through or secretly stirred by passion. By the close connection in which the corporeal life of man stands to the moral-religious determination of his intellectual and mediately his soul-life—this threefold life is as that of one personality, essentially one—the body has in such quiet of spirit the best means of preserving the life which furthers the well-being, and co-operates to the calming of all its disquietude; on the contrary, passion, whether it rage or move itself in stillness, is like the disease in the bones (Prov. 12:4), which works onward till it breaks asunder the framework of the body, and with it the life of the body. The plur. בְּשָרִים occurs only here; Böttcher, § 695, says that it denotes the whole body; but בְּשָר does not also denote the half, but is the surrogate of an abstr.: the body, i.e., the bodily life in the totality of its functions, and in the entire manifoldness of its relations. Ewald translates bodies, but signifies not the body, but its material, the animated matter; rather cf. the Arab. âbshâr, “corporeal, human nature,” but which (leaving out of view that this plur. belongs to a later period of the language) has the parallelism against it. Regarding עֹשֵק (jealousy, zeal, envy, anger) Schultens is right: affectus inflammans aestuque indignationis fervidus, from אֹסֵק, Arab. kanâ, to be high red.

Proverbs 14:31. Line first is repeated in 17:5a somewhat varied, and the relation of the idea in 31b is as 19:17a, according to which is the predicate and הִגְׁדִיל the subject (Symmachus, Targ., Jerome, Venet., Luther), not the reverse (Syr.); but: he lifts up folly, is thus not the 3 per. Po. (LXX), but the part. Kal (for which 21b has the part. Po. The predicates follow one another after the scheme of the Chiasmus. Has Munach on the first syllable, on which the tone is thrown back, and on the second the sign (vid., Torath Emeth, p. 21), as e.g., 17:14, and אֹסֵק, 17:19. The showing of forbearance and kindness to the poor arising from a common relation to one Creator, and from respect towards a personality bearing the image of God, is a conception quite in the spirit of the Chokma, which, as in the Jahve religion it becomes the universal religion, so in the national law it becomes the human (vid., p. 29). Thus also Job 31:15, cf. ch. 3:9 of the Epistle of James, which in many respects has its roots in the Book of Proverbs. Matt. 25:40 is a New Testament side-piece to 31b.

Proverbs 14:32. This verse also contains a key-word beginning with ב, but pairs acrostically with the proverb following: When misfortune befalls him, the godless is overthrown; But the righteous remains hopeful in his death.

When the subject is רעָה (the godless), then it may be understood of evil thought and action (Eccles. 7:15) as well as of the experience of evil (e.g., 13:21). The LXX (and also the Syr., Targ., Jerome, and Venet.) prefers the former, but for the sake of producing an exact parallelism changes בְׁמותו [in his death] into בְׁטֻּמו [in his uprightness], reversing also the relation of the subject and the predicate: ὁ δὲ πεποιθὼς τ ἑαυτοῦ ὁσιότητι (the Syr.: in this, that he has no sin; Targ.: when he dies) δίκαιος. But no Scripture word commends in so contradictory a manner self-righteousness, for the verb חסה never denotes self-confidence, and with the exception of two passages (Judg. 9:15, Isa. 30:2), where it is connected with בְׁצֵל, is everywhere the exclusive (vid., Ps. 118:8f.) designation of confidence resting itself in God, even without the בְׁ, as here at Ps. 17:7. The parallelism leads us to translate בְׁמותו, not on account of his wickedness, but with Luther, in conformity with בְׁצֵל, in his misfortune, i.e., if it befall him. Thus Jeremiah (Jer. 23:12) says of the sins of his people: והוֹאָמִר בְּדַרְעָה רָעָה (Niph. of דָּרָעָה = דַרְעָה), and 24:16 contains an exactly parallel thought: the godless stumble בְׁרָעָה, into calamity. Ewald incorrectly: in his calamity the wicked is overthrown—for what purpose then the pronoun? The verb דחה frequently means, without any addition, “to stumble over heaps,” e.g., Ps. 35:5; 36:13. The godless in his calamity is overthrown, or he fears in the evils which befall him the intimations of the final ruin; on the contrary, the righteous in his death, even in the midst of extremity, is comforted, viz., in God in whom he confides. Thus understood, Hitzig thinks that the proverb is not suitable for a time in which, as yet, men had not faith in immortality and in the resurrection. Yet though there was no such revelation then, still the pious in death put their confidence in Jahve, the God of life and of salvation—for in Jahve there was for ancient Israel the beginning, middle, and end of the work of salvation—and believing that they were going home to Him, committing their spirit into His hands (Ps. 31:6), they fell asleep, though without any explicit knowledge, yet not without the hope of eternal life. Job also knew that (Job 27:8ff.) between the death of those estranged from God and of those who feared God there was not only an external, but a deep essential distinction; and now the Chokma opens up a glimpse into the eternity heavenwards, 15:24, and has formed, 12:28, the expressive and distinctive word א ל־מָוֶת, for immortality, which breaks like a ray from the morning sun through the night of the Sheol.

Wisdom rests in the heart of the man of understanding; But the heart of fools it maketh itself known.

Proverbs 14:33. Most interpreters know not what to make of the second line here. The LXX (and after it the Syr.), and as it appears, also Aquila and Theodotion, insert οὐ; the Targ. improves the Peshito, for it inserts אִוֶּלֶת (so that 12:23; 13:16, and 15:2 are related). And Abulwalîd explains: in the heart of fools it is lost; Euchel: it reels about; but these are imaginary interpretations resting on a misunderstanding of the passages, in which ידע means to come to feel, and הודיע to give to feel (to punish, correct). Kimchi rightly adheres to the one ascertained meaning of the words, according to which the Venet. μέσον δὲ ᾧ ἐφόνων γνωσθῆσαι. So also the translation of Jerome: et indoctos quoque (quoque) erudiet, is formed, for he understands the “and is manifest among fools” (Luther) not merely, as C. B. Michaelis, after the saying: opposita juxta se posita magis elucent, but of a becoming manifest, which is salutary to these. Certainly בין יְבָרוֹךְ can mean among = in the circle, of 15:31; but if, as here and e.g., Jer. 31:31, יְבָרוֹךְ is interchanged with יְבָלָם, and if יְבָלוּם is the subject spoken of, as 1 Kings 3:28, then יְבָרוֹךְ does not mean among (in the midst of), but in the heart of the fool. According to this, the Talmud rightly, by comparison with the current proverb (Mezia 85b): אــــך־לֶא נְמֹנָה יִשָּׁש כְּרַי מ׳ a stater in a flaggon cries Kish, Kish, i.e., makes much clatter. In the heart of the understanding wisdom rests, i.e., remains silent and still, for the understanding feels himself personally happy in its possession; endeavours always the more to deepen it, and lets it operate within; on the contrary, wisdom in the heart of fools makes itself manifest: they are not able to keep to themselves the wisdom which they imagine they possess, or the portion of wisdom which is in reality theirs; but they think, as it is said in Persius: Scire tuum nihil est nisi scire hoc te sciat alter. They discredit and waste their little portion of wisdom (instead of thinking on its increase) by obtrusive ostentatious babbling.

Two proverbs follow regarding the state and its ruler:

34 Righteousness exalteth a nation, And sin is a disgrace to the people. Proverbs 14:34. The Hebr. language is richer in synonyms of “the people” than the German. יָם (formed like the non-bibl. מים, מים, מים, water, and מים) corporealness, from יָם, to extend itself from within outward; cf. 9:3, 15:13, יָם is, according to the usus loci, like natio the people, as a mass swollen up from a common origin, and יָם, 28a (from יָם, to bind), the people as a confederation held together by a common law; יָם (from יָם, to unite, bind together) is the mass (multitude) of the people, and is interchanged sometimes with יָם, Gen. 25:23, and sometimes with יָם, v. 28. In this proverb, יָם stands indeed intentionally in the plur., but not יָם, with the plur. of which יָם, the idea of the non-Israelish nations, too easily connects itself. The proverb means all nations without distinction, even Israel (cf. under Isa. 1:4) not excluded. History everywhere confirms the principle, that not the numerical, nor the warlike, nor the political, nor yet the intellectual and the so-called civilized greatness, is the true greatness of a nation, and determines the condition of its future as one of progress; but this is its true greatness, that in its private, public, and international life, יָם כְּרדֶשׁ, i.e., conduct directed by the will of God, according to the norm of moral rectitude, rules and prevails. Righteousness, good manners, and piety are the things which secure to a nation a place of honour, while, on the contrary, יָם, sin, viz., prevailing, and more favoured and fostered than contended against in the consciousness of the moral problem of the state, is a disgrace to the people, i.e., it lowers them before God, and also before men who do not judge superficially or perversely, and also actually brings them down. יָם כְּרדֶשׁ, to raise up, is to be understood after Isa. 1:2, cf. 23:4, and is to be punctuated יָם כְּרדֶשׁ, with Munach of the penult., and the יָם כְּרָדֶשׁ-sign with the Tsere of the last syllable. Ben-Naphtali punctuates thus: יָם כְּרָדֶשׁ. In 34b all the artifices of interpretation (from Nachmani to Schultens) are to be rejected, which interpret יָם כְּרָדֶשׁ as the Venet. (έλεος δὲ λαῶν ἁμαρτία) in its predominant Hebrew signification. It has here, as at Lev. 20:17 (but not Job 6:14), the signification of the Syr. cheso, opprobrium; the Targ. יָמִים, or more frequently יָמִים, as among Jewish interpreters, is recognised by Chanan’el and Rashbam. That this יָם כְּרָדֶשׁ is not foreign to the Mishle style, is seen from the fact that יָם כְּרָדֶשׁ, 25:10, is used in the sense of the Syr. chasedh. The synon. Syr. chasam, invidere, obrectare, shows that these verbal stems are formed from the R. לשון, stringere, to strike. Already it is in some measure perceived how רֵּשִׁי, Syr. chasadh, Arab. hasada, may acquire the meaning of violent love, and by the mediation of the jealousy which is connected with violent love, the signification of grudging, and thus of reproach and of envy; for this is more manifest if one thinks of the root-signification stringere, in the meaning of loving, as referred to the subject, in the meanings of disgrace and envy, as from the subject directed to others. Ewald (§ 51c) compares חָסַּר and חָסַד, Ethiop. chasra, in the sense of carpare, and on the other side חָסָה in the sense of “to join;” but this does not mean to join (vid., Ps. 2:12) and instead of carpare, the idea more closely connected with the root is that of stringere, cf. stringere folia ex arboribus (Caesar), and stringere (to diminish, to squander, strip) rem ingluvie (Horace, Sat. i. 2. 8). The LXX has here read רַס (Prov. 28:22), diminution, decay, instead of רַס (shame); the quid pro quo is not bad, the Syr. accepts it, and the miseros facit of Jerome, and Luther’s verderben (destruction) corresponds with this phrase better than with the common traditional reading which Symmachus rightly renders by והס.

35 The king’s favour is towards a prudent servant, And his wrath visits the base.

Proverbs 14:35. Regarding the contrasts מְשַׁבְּלֵי and שְׁבָבֵי, vid., at 10:5; cf. 12:4. The substantival clause 35a may mean: the king’s favour has (possesses) ... , as well as: it is imparted to, an intelligent servant; the arrangement of the words is more favourable to the latter rendering. In 35b the gender of the verb is determined by attraction after the pred., as is the case also at Gen. 31:8, Job 15:31, Ewald, § 317c. And "his wrath" is equivalent to is the object of it, cf. 22b, 13:18, and in general, p. 204. The syntactical character of the clause does not permit the supplying of ל from 35a. Luther’s translation proceeds only apparently from this erroneous supposition.

Proverbs 15

Proverbs 15:1–6. We take these verses together as forming a group which beings with a proverb regarding the good and evil which flows from the tongue, and closes with a proverb regarding the treasure in which blessing is found, and that in which no blessing is found.

1 A soft answer turneth away wrath, And a bitter word stirreth up anger.

Proverbs 15:1. In the second line, the common word for anger (השון, from the breathing with the nostrils, 14:17) is purposely place, but in the first, that which denotes anger in the highest degree (חסנה from חס, כנין, Arab. hamiya, to glow, like הַסָּרָה from סָרָה): a mild, gentle word turns away the heat of anger (excanantientiam), puts it back, cf. 25:15. The Dagesh in דב is to be compared with the Dagesh in דבב in opposing the rule of the Dagesh, i.e., of the close connection of a word terminating with the accented ב and בב- with the following word (Michlol 63b). The same is the meaning of the Latin proverb: Frangitur ira gravis Quando est responsio suavis.

The חסנה produces the contrary effect. This expression does not mean an angry word (Ewald), for חס is not to be compared with the Arab. ghadab, anger (Umbreit), but with Arab. ‘adab, cutting, wounding, paining (Hitzig), so that חס is meant in the sense of Ps. 78:40: a word which causes pain (LXX λυπηρός, Theod. πονηρός), not after the meaning, a word provoking to anger (Gesenius), but certainly after its effect, for a wounding word “makes anger arise.” As one says of anger יֵשָׁב, "it turns itself" (e.g., Isa. 9:11), so, on the other hand, יֵשָׁב, "it rises up," Eccles. 10:4. The LXX has a third line, ὁ γὰρ ἀπόλλυσι καὶ φρονίμους, which the Proverbs 15:2. The προφήτης σοφίας (Jas. 3:13) commended in v. 1 is here continued: The tongue of the wise showeth great knowledge, and the mouth of fools poureth forth folly. As הֵיטִיב נְגֵן, Isa. 23:16, means to strike the harp well, and היטיב לֶכֶת, 30:29, to go along merrily, so היטיב דִּיִּתֶּר, to know in a masterly manner, and here, where the subject is the tongue, which has only an instrumental reference to knowledge: to bring to light great knowledge (cf. 7a). In 2b the LXX translate στόμα δὲ ἀφρόνων ἀναγγέλει κακά. From this Hitzig concludes that they read רעות as 28b, and prefers this phrase; but they also translated in 13:16; 14:28; 26:11, אִוֶּלֶת by κακία, for they interpreted the unintelligible word by combination with ע וְׁל ת, and in 12:23 by ἀραῖς, for they thought they had before them אלות (from אלה).

3 The eyes of Jahve are in every place, observing the evil and the good.

Proverbs 15:3. The connection of the dual with the plur. of the adjective, which does not admit of a dual, is like 6:17, cf. 18. But the first line is a sentence by itself, to which the second line gives a closer determination, as showing how the eyes of God are everywhere (cf. 2 Chron. 16:9, after Zech. 4:10) abroad over the whole earth, viz., beholding with penetrating look the evil and the good (הֵיטִיב, to hold to, to observe, cf. ἐπιθέτοντες, Sir. 23:19), i.e., examining men whether they are good or evil, and keeping them closely before His eyes, so that nothing escapes him. This universal inspection, this omniscience of God, has an alarming but also a comforting side. The proverb seeks first to warn, therefore it speaks first of the evil.

4 Gentleness of the tongue is a tree of life; but falseness in it is a wounding to the spirit.

Proverbs 15:4. Regarding מְרַפֵּא, vid., at 12:18, and regarding שֶבֶר, at 11:3; this latter word we derive with Fleischer from שֶבֶר, to subvert, overthrow, but not in the sense of “violence, asperitas, in as far as violent speech is like a stormy sea,” but of perversity, perversitas (Venet. λοξότης), as the contrast to truthfulness, rectitude, kindness. Gentleness characterizes the tongue when all that it says to a neighbour, whether it be instruction or correction, or warning or consolation, it says in a manner without rudeness, violence, or obtrusiveness, by which it finds the easiest and surest acceptance, because he feels the goodwill, the hearty sympathy, the humility of him who is conscious of his own imperfection. Such gentleness is a tree of life, whose fruits preserve life, heal the sick, and raise up the bowed down. Accordingly, שֶבֶר בְׁרוּח is to be understood of the effect which goes forth from perversity or falseness of the tongue upon others. Fleischer translates: asperitas autem in ea animum vulnerat, and remarks, “שֶבֶר בְׁרוּח, abstr. pro concreto. The verb שֶבֶר, and the n. verbale שֶבֶר derived from it, may, in order to render the meaning tropical, govern the prep. ב, as the Arab. kaser baklby, he has broken my heart (opp. Arab. jabar baklby), cf. 21:29, vid., De Glossis Habichtianis, p. 18; yet it also occurs with the accus., Ps. 69:21, and the corresponding gen. שֶבֶר בְׁפניו, Isa. 65:14.” In any case, the breaking (deep wounding) is not meant in regard to his own spirit, but to that of the neighbour. Rightly Luther: but a lying tongue makes heart-sorrow (elsewhere, a false one troubles the cheerful); Euchel: a false tongue is soul-wounding; and the translation of the year 1844: falsehood is a breach into the heart. Only for curiosity’s sake are two other interpretations of 4a and 4b mentioned: the means of safety to the tongue is the tree of life, i.e., The Torâ (Erachin 15b); and: perversity suffers destruction by a breath of wind, after the proverb, כָּל שֶבֶר בְׁרוּחַ רֶזֶח וּרְדָה קְמֻנָה.

A breath of wind breaks a man who is puffed up (which Meirî presents for choice, vid., also Rashi, who understands ḥsn, or ḥśn, as the storm of judgment). The LXX translates, in 4b, a different text: ὁ δὲ συντηρῶν αὐτὴν πλησάνηται πνεῦματος: but the ḥsn here supposed cannot mean “to be full of spirit,” but rather “to eat full of wind.” Otherwise the Syr. and Targ.: and he who eateth of his own fruit is satisfied (Heb. ḥasuna, ḥasūna, an attempt to give to the phrase a thought correct in point of language, but one against which we do not give up the Masoretic text.

5 A fool despiseth his father’s correction; But he that regardeth reproof is prudent.

Proverbs 15:5. We may with equal correctness translate: he acts prudently (after 1 Sam. 23:22); and, he is prudent (after 19:25). We prefer, with Jerome, Venet., and Luther, the latter, against the LXX, Syr., and Targ., because, without a doubt, the ξυρίζει is so thought of at 19:25: the contrast is more favourable to the former. It is true that he who regardeth reproof is not only prudent, but also that he is prudent by means of observing it. With line first cf. 1:7 and 1:30, and with line second, 12:1. Luther translates: the fool calumniates ... but of the meanings of abuse (properly pungere) and scorn, the second is perhaps here to be preferred.

6 The house of the righteous is a great treasure-chamber; But through the gain of the wicked comes trouble.

Proverbs 15:6. The contrast shows that ḥsn does not here mean force or might (LXX, Syr., Targ., Jerome, and Venet.), which generally this derivative of the verb ḥšn never means, but store, fulness of possession, prosperity (Luther: in the house of the righteous are goods enough), in this sense (cf. 27:24) placing itself, not with the Arab. hasuna, to be firm, fastened (Aram. ḥṣn, ḥṣr), but with Arab. ḥazan, to deposit, to lay up in granaries, whence our “Magazin.” ḥsn may indeed, like ḥṣ, have the meaning of riches, and ḥsn does actually mean, in the Jewish-Aram., to possess, and the Aphel ḥṣan, to take into possession (κρατεῖν); but the constant use of the noun ḥsn in the sense of store, with the kindred idea of laying up, e.g., Jer. 20:5, and of the Niph. ḥṣan, which means, Isa. 23:18, with ṱn, “to be magazined,” gives countenance to the idea that ḥsn goes back to the primary conception, recondere, and is to be distinguished from ḥṣ, ḥṣ, ḥṣ, ḥṣ, ḥṣ, and other derivatives after the fundamental conception. We may not interpret it, with Fleischer, Bertheau, and Zöckler, as accus.: in the house (cf. ḫב, 8:2), nor prepositionally as chezd = casa; but: “the house of the righteous is a great store,” equivalent to, the place of such. On the contrary, destruction comes by the gain of the wicked. It is impossible that ḥṣan can have the house as the subject (Löwenstein), for the ḥsn is everywhere mas. Therefore Abulwalîd, followed by Kimchi and the Venet. (ὄλεθρος), interprets ξοικία as subst., after the form of the Mishnic נגרה, נגרה, a pool, cf. θαλάσσαι, peremptorily decided, decreed; and if we do not extinguish the ḫ of נָהוֹרָה (the LXX according to the second translation of this doubly-translated distich, Syr., and Targ.), there remains then nothing further than to regard it जसू as either as subst. neut. overturned = overthrow (cf. such part. nouns as מושב, מושב, מושב, but particularly מושב, 2 Chron. 10:15), or as impers. neut. pass.: it is overthrown = there is an overthrow, like נצפת = a storm rages. The gain of the wicked has overthrown as its consequence, for the greed of gain, which does not shrink from unrighteous, deceitful gain, destroys his house, ḫכ, ḫכ, v. 27 (vid., regarding concerning, 11:29). Far from enriching the house, such gain is the cause of nothing but ruin. The LXX, in its first version of this distich, reads, in 6a, βραχών ρωπικ (ἐν πλεοναζούσῳ.) δικαιοσύνῃ), and in 6b, וּבִתְׁבוּאֹת רָשָע (together with the fruit the godless is rooted out, ὡλὸρριζοὶ εἰς γῆς ὑπολοῦνται); for, as Lagarde has observed, it confounds עקר with עכר (to root, privativ: to root up).

Proverbs 15:7–17. A second series which begins with a proverb of the power of human speech, and closes with proverbs of the advantages and disadvantages of wealth.

7 The lips of the wise spread knowledge; but the direction is wanting to the heart of fools.

Proverbs 15:7. It is impossible that לאמין can be a second object. accus. dependent on וְיָשָׂר (dispergunt, not וְיָשָׁר, 20:28; φυλάσσουσι, as Symmachus translates): but the heart of fools is unrighteous (error or falsehood) (Hitzig after Isa. 16:6); for then why were the lips of the wise and the heart of the fools mentioned? לאמין also does not mean οὐχ οὕτως (an old Greek anonymous translation, Jerome, Targ., Venet., Luther): the heart of the fool is quite different from the heart of the wise man, which spreads abroad knowledge (Zöckler), for it is not heart and heart, but lip and heart, that are placed opposite to each other. Better the LXX οὐκ ἀσφαλεῖς, and yet better the Syr. lo kinîn (not right, sure). We have seen, at 11:19, that כֵי as a participial adj. means standing = being, continuing, or also standing erect = right, i.e., rightly directed, or having the right direction; כֵי means there conducting oneself rightly, and thus genuine rectitude. What, after 7a, is more appropriate than to say of the heart of the fool, that it wants the receptivity for knowledge which the lips of the wise scatter abroad? The heart of the fool is not right, it has not the right direction, is crooked and perverse, has no mind for wisdom; and that which proceeds from the wise, therefore, finds with him neither estimation nor acceptance.

Proverbs 15:8. Although the same is true of the prayer of the godless that is here said of their sacrifice, and of the sacrifice of the righteous that is here said of their prayer (vid., 28:9, and cf. Ps. 4:6 with Ps. 27:6), yet it is not by accident that here (line first = 21:27) the sacrifice is ascribed to the godless and the prayer to the upright. The sacrifice, as a material and legally-required performance, is much more related to dead works than prayer freely completing itself in the word, the most direct expression of the personality, which, although not commanded by the law, because natural to men, as such is yet the soul of all sacrifices; and the Chokma, like the Psalms and Prophets, in view of the ceremonial service which had become formal and dead in the opus operatum, is to such a degree penetrated by the knowledge of the incongruity of the offering up of animals and of plants, with the object in view, that a proverb like “the sacrifice of the righteous is pleasing to God” never anywhere occurs; and if it did occur without being expressly and unavoidably referred to the legal sacrifice, it would have to be understood rather after Ps. 51:18f. than Ps. 51:20f., rather after 1 Sam. 15:22 than after Ps. 66:13–15. וְרָשְׁע, which, when it is distinguished from עולָה, Lev. 1:3, used in the Tôra of sacrifices, is here, as at Ps. 19:15, transferred to prayer. The fundamental idea of the proverb is, that sacrifices well-pleasing to God, prayers acceptable to God (that are heard, 15:29), depend on the relations in which the heart and life of the man stand to God.

Proverbs 15:9. Another proverb with the key-word מְרַעָמִים An abomination to Jahve is the way of the godless; but He loveth him who searcheth after righteousness.

The manner and rule of life is called the way.

טְזֵרַם is the heightening of>:</pre>

10 Sharp correction is for him who forsaketh the way; Whoever hateth instruction shall die.

Proverbs 15:10. The way, thus absolute, is the God-pleasing right way (Prov. 2:13), the forsaking of which is visited with the punishment of death, because it is that which leadeth unto life (Prov. 10:17). And that which comes upon them who leave it is called מּוּס רֶעֶר, castigatio dura, as much as to say that whoever does not welcome instruction, whoever rejects it, must at last receive it against his will in the form of peremptory punishment. The sharp correction (cf. Isa. 28:28, 19 b) is just the death under which he falls who accepts of no instruction (Prov. 5:23), temporal death, but that as a token of wrath which it is not for the righteous (Prov. 14:32).

Proverbs 15:11. A syllogism, a minori ad majus, with אֶל כִּי (LXX πῶς οὐχὶ καὶ, Venet. μᾶλλον οὖν, like 12:32 אַבְדָּן has a meaning analogous to that of τάρταρος (cf. ταρταροῦν, 2 Pet. 2:4, to throw down into the τάρταρος), which denotes the lowest region of Hades (שאול) or שְׁאול, and also in general, Hades. If אֶל and תָּכִין are connected, Job 37:22, and if אֶל is the parallel word to כֵּרֵס, Ps. 88:12, or also to שָׁאָל, as in the passage similar to this proverb, Job 26:6 (cf. 38:17): “Sheol is naked before Him, and Abaddon has no covering;” since אֶל is the general name of the underworld, including the grave, i.e., the inner place of the earth which receives the body of the dead, as the kingdom of the dead, lying deeper, does the soul. But where, as here and at 27:10, שָׁאָל and אַבְדָּן stand together, they are related to each other, as בֵּית and מַהְרָו or אָבְדָּן, Rev. 9:11: אַבְדָּן is the lowest hell, the place of deepest descent, of uttermost destruction. The conclusion which is drawn in the proverb proceeds from the supposition that in the region of creation there is nothing more separated, and by a wide distance, from God, than the depth, and especially the utmost depth, of the realm of the dead. If now God has this region in its whole compass wide open before Him, if it is visible and thoroughly cognisable by Him (דָּא, acc. adv.: in conspectu, from דָּא, eminere, conspicuum esse),—for He is also present in the underworld, Ps. 139:8,—then much more will the hearts of the children of men be open, the inward thoughts of men living and acting on the earth being known already from their expressions. Man sees through man, and also himself, never perfectly; but the Lord can try the heart and prove the reins, Jer. 17:10. What that means this proverb gives us to understand, for it places over against the hearts of men nothing less than the depths of the underworld in eternity.

12 The scorners liketh not that one reprove him, To wise men he will not go.

Proverbs 15:12. The inf. absol., abruptly denoting the action, may take the place of the object, as here (cf. Job 9:18, Isa. 42:24), as well as of the subject (Prov. 25:27, Job 6:25). Thus הוכיח is (Prov. 9:7) construed with the dat. obj. Regarding the probable conclusion which presents itself from passages such as 15:12 and 13:20, as to the study of wisdom in Israel, vid., p. 28. Instead of אֶל, we read, 13:20 (cf. 22:24), לֶכֶת אֶת; for לֶכֶת אֶת means to have intercourse with one, to go a journey with one (Mal. 2:6, cf. Gen. 5:24, but not 2 Sam. 15:22, where we are to translate with Keil), according to which the LXX has here μετὰ δὲ σοφῶν οὐχ ὀμιλήσει. The mocker of religion and of virtue shuns the circle of the wise, for he loves not to have his treatment of that which is holy reproved, nor to be convicted of his sin against truth; he prefers the society where his frivolity finds approbation and a response.
13 A joyful heart maketh the countenance cheerful; But in sorrow of the heart the spirit is broken.

Proverbs 15:13. The expression of the countenance, as well as the spiritual habitus of a man, is conditioned by the state of the heart. A joyful heart maketh the countenance יפה, which means friendly, but here happy-looking = cheerful (for שמח is the most general designation of that which makes an impression which is pleasant to the senses or to the mind); on the contrary, with sorrow of heart (יֶשָּׁבָת, constr. of יֶשָּׁבָת הַחֵטֵא, יָשֵׁבָת, יֵשָּׁבָת, as e.g., also 10:10, as from $הַחֵטֵא$, $יָשֵׁבָת$, $יֵשָּׁבָת$) there is connected a stricken, broken, downcast heart; the spiritual functions of the man are paralyzed; self-confidence, without which energetic action is impossible, is shattered; he appears discouraged, whereby he is thought of as the power of self-consciousness and of self-determination, but כְּלָל, as our “Gemüt” [animus], as the oneness of thinking and willing, and thus as the seat of determination, which decides the intellectual-corporeal life-expression of the man, or without being able to be wholly restrained, communicates itself to them. The בּ of יֵשָּׁבָת is, as 15:16f., 16:8; 17:1, meant in the force of being together or along with, so that כְּלָל do not need to be taken separate from each other as subject and predicate: the sense of the noun-clause is in the ב, as e.g., also 7:23 (it is about his life, i.e., it concerns his life). Elsewhere the crushed spirit, like the broken heart, is equivalent to the heart despairing in itself and prepared for grace. The heart with a more clouded mien may be well, for sorrow has in it a healing power (Eccles. 7:3). But here the matter is the general psychological truth, that the corporeal and spiritual life of man has its regulator in the heart, and that the condition of the heart leaves its stamp on the appearance and on the activity of the man. The translation of the יֵשָּׁבָת by “oppressed breath” (Umbreit, Hitzig) is impossible; the breath cannot be spoken of as broken.

14 The heart of the understanding seeketh after knowledge, And the mouth of fools practiseth folly.

Proverbs 15:14. Luther interprets הרעה as metaphor. for to govern, but with such ethical conceptions it is metaphor. for to be urgently circumspect about anything (vid., 13:20), like Arab. ra’y and r’ayt, intentional, careful, concern about anything. No right translation can be made of the Chethib, יֵשָּׁבָת, which Schultens, Hitzig, Ewald, and Zöckler prefer; the predicate can go before the פִּי, after the Semitic rule in the fem. of the sing., 2 Sam. 10:9, cf. Job 16:16, Chethib, but cannot follow in the masc. of the sing.; besides, the operations of his look and aspect are ascribed to his face, but not spiritual functions as here, much more to the mouth, i.e., to the spirit speaking through it. The heart is within a man, and the mouth without; and while the former gives and takes, the latter is always only giving out. In 18:15, where a synonymous distich is formed from the antithetic distich, the ear, as hearing, is mentioned along with the heart as appropriating, יֵשָּׁבָת is not an adj., but is gen., like יִרְאוּ (opp. יִסְרָא, 28a (opps. יִסְרָא, 16:23. The φιλοσοφία of the understanding is placed over against the μωρολογία of the fools. The LXX translates καρδία ὀρθὴ ζητεῖ αἴσθησιν, καρδία ἀνάφορος αἰσθητική (cf. 14:10, καρδία ἀνάφορος αἰσθητική); it uses this word after the Hellenistic usus log. for יֵשָּׁבָת, of experimental knowledge.

15 All the days of the afflicted are evil; But he who is of a joyful heart hath a perpetual feast.

Proverbs 15:15. Regarding עני (the afflicted), vid., 21b. They are so called on whom a misfortune, or several of them, press externally or internally. If such an one is surrounded by ever so many blessings, yet is his life day by day a sad one, because with each new day the feeling of his woe which oppresses him renews itself; whoever, on the contrary, is of joyful heart (gen. connection as 11:13; 12:8), such an one (his life) is always a feast, a banquet (not מִשְׁתֵּה, as it may be also pointed, but מִשְׁתֵּה and is a punctuation varies, if the first of the two words פְּטַרֵד, for it is never adj.; the post-bib. usage is פְּטַרֵד for פְּטַרָד. Hitzig (and also Zöckler) renders 15:6: And (the days) of one who is of a joyful heart are ... Others supply ול (cf. 27:7b), but our rendering does not need that. We have here again an example of that attribution (Arab. isnâd) in which that which is attributed (musnad) is a condition (hal) of a logical subject (the musnad ilêhi), and thus he who speaks has this, not in itself, but in the sense of the condition; the inwardly cheerful is feasts evermore, i.e., the condition of such an one is like a continual festival. The true and real happiness of a man is thus defined, not by external things, but by the state of the heart, in which, in spite of the apparently prosperous condition, a secret sorrow may gnaw, and which, in spite of an externally sorrowful state, may be at peace, and be joyfully confident in God.

16 Better is little with the fear of Jahve, Than great store and trouble therewith.

Proverbs 15:16. The ב in both cases the LXX rightly renders by μετά. How computer elsewhere of wild, confused disorder, extreme discord) is meant of store and treasure, Ps. 39:7 shows: it is restless, covetous care and trouble, as the contrast of the quietness and contentment proceeding from the fear of God, the noisy, wild, stormy running and hunting about of the slave of mammon. Theodotion translates the word here, as Aquila and Symmachus elsewhere, by words which correspond (φαγέδαινα = φάγανα or ἀρχοταισία) with the Syr. אֲרוּחָה, greed or insatiability.

17 Better a dish of cabbage, and love with it, Than a fatted ox together with hatred.

Proverbs 15:17. With ב is here interchanged שֵׁש, which, used both of things and of persons, means to be there along with something. Both have the Dag. forte conj., cf. to the contrary, Deut. 30:20, Mic. 1:11, Deut. 11:22; the punctuation varies, if the first of the two words is a n. actionis ending in ב-. The dish (portion) is called אַרְעֵה, which the LXX and other Greek versions render by ξενισμός entertainment, and thus understand it of that which is set before a guest, perhaps rightly so, for the Arab. ārrakh (to date, to determine), to which it is compared by Gesenius and Dietrich, is equivalent to warrh, a denom. of the name of the moon. Love and hatred are, according to circumstances, the disposition of the host, or of the participant, the spirit of the family: Cum dat olusula mensa minuscula pace quietà, Ne pete grandia lautaque prandia lite repleta.

Two proverbs of two different classes of men, each second line of which terminates with a catchword having a similar sound (אָרָדוֹת אָרָדוֹת).

18 A passionate man stirreth up strife, And one who is slow to anger allayeth contention.

Proverbs 15:18. 28:25a and 29:22a are variations of the first line of this proverb. The פִּה. אָרֶךְ אֵפֶּר occurs only these three times in the phrase פִּה פֶּרֶךְ פֶּרֶךְ פֶּרֶךְ. ר. ה. to grind, thus to strike, to irritate, cogn. to (but of a different root from) the verb וֹרֵר, to excite, 10:12, and וֹרַר, to set on fire, 26:21, cf. נִיְט גֹּאֵל, 6:14. Regarding נִיְט, vid., 15:1; we call such a man a “hot-head;” but the biblical conception nowhere (except in the Book of Daniel) places the head in connection with spiritual-psychical events (Psychologie, p. 254). Regarding נִיְט נֵיְט נֵיְט נֵיְט, vid., 14:29; the LXX (which contains a translation of this proverb, and after it of a variation) translates μακρόθυμος δὲ καὶ τὴν μέλλουσαν καταπρᾳύνει, i.e., (as the Syr. render it) he suppresses the strife in its origin, so that it does not break out. But both are true: that he who is slow to anger, who does not thus easily permit himself to become angry, allayeth the strife which one enters into with him, or into which he is drawn, and that he prevents the strife, for he places over against provoking, injurious conduct, patient gentleness (מְרָאֵה, Eccles. 10:4).

19 The way of the slothful is as hedged with thorns; But the path of the righteous is paved.
Proverbs 15:19. Hitzig misses the contrast between עָצֵל (slothful) and יְׁשָרִים (upright), and instead of the slothful reads עָרִיץ, the tyrannical. But is then the slothful ישרוים? The contrast is indeed not that of contradiction, but the slothful is one who does not act uprightly, a man who fails to fulfil the duty of labour common to man, and of his own special calling. The way of such an one is כִּמְׁשֻּכ ת חָדֶק, like a fencing with thorns (from חדק, R. חדק, to be pointed, sharp, distinguished from Arab. hadḳ, to surround, and in the meaning to fix with the look, denom. of khadaḳt, the apple of the eye), so that he goes not forwards, and sees hindrances and difficulties everywhere, which frighten him back, excusing his shunning his work, his remissness of will, and his doing nothing; on the contrary, the path of those who wait truly and honestly on their calling, and prosecute their aim, is raised up like a skilfully made street, so that unhindered and quickly they go forward (סְׁלוּלָה, R. סל, aggerare, cf. Jer. 18:15 with Isa. 49:11, and 4:8, סִלְׁסֵל, which was still in use in the common language of Palestine in the second cent., Rosch haschana, 26b). This collection of Solomonic proverbs began, 10:1, with a proverb having reference to the observance of the fourth commandment, and a second chief section, 13:1, began in the same way. Here a proverb of the same kind designates the beginning of a third chief section. That the editor was aware of this is shown by the homogeneity of the proverbs, 15:19; 12:28, which form the conclusion of the first and second sections. We place together first in this new section, vv. 20–23, in which (with the exception of v. 25) thelishא (maketh glad) of the first (Prov. 10:1) is continued.

Proverbs 15:20. Line first = 10:1. The gen. connection of עָרִיץ (here and at 21:20) is not superlative [the most foolish of men], but like בֵּאָר אָרֶץ, Gen. 16:12; the latter: a man of the wild ass kind; the former: a man of the fool kind, who is the exemplar of such a sort among men. Piety acting in willing subordination is wisdom, and the contrary exceeding folly.

21 Folly is joy to him that is devoid of understanding; But a man of understanding goeth straight forward.

Proverbs 15:21. Regarding וְאֵין לוֹ לֵב, vid., at 6:32 (cf. libib, which in the Samaritan means "dearly beloved," in Syr. "courageous," in Arab. and Aethiop. cordatus); ישעיהו, 10:23, and with the accus. of the way, here of the going, 3:6 (but not 11:5, where the going itself is not the subject). In consequence of the contrast, the meaning of 21a is different from that of 10:23, according to which sin is to the fool as the sport of a child. Here עָלָה is folly and buffoonery, drawing aside in every kind of way from the direct path of that which is good, and especially from the path of one’s duty. This gives joy to the fool; he is thereby drawn away from the earnest and faithful performance of the duties of his calling, and thus wastes time and strength; while, on the contrary, a man of understanding, who perceives and rejects the vanity and unworthiness of such trifling and such nonsense, keeps the straight direction of his going, i.e., without being drawn aside or kept back, goes straight forward, i.e., true to duty, prosecutes the end of his calling. לָכֶת is accus., like 30:29, Mic. 6:8.

22 A breaking of plans where no counsel is; But where many counsellors are they come to pass.

Proverbs 15:22. On the other side it is also true according to the proverbs, "so viel Köpfe so viel Sinne" [quot homines, tot sententiae], and "viel Rath ist Unrath" [ne quid nimis], and the like. But it cannot become a rule of morals not to accept of counsel that we may not go astray; on the contrary, it is and remains a rule of morals: not stubbornly to follow one’s own heart (head), and not obstinately to carry out one’s own will, and not in the darkness of wisdom to regard one’s own plans as unimproveable, and not needing to be examined; but to listen to the counsel of intelligent and honest friends, and, especially where weighty matters are in hand, not affecting one’s own person, but the common good, not to listen merely to one counsellor, but to many. Not merely the organism of the modern state, but also of old the Mosaic arrangement of the Israelitish community, with its representative organization, its courts and councils, rested on the acknowledged justice and importance of the saying uttered in 11:14, and here generalized. הָפֵר, infin. abs. Hiph. of פָרָה, to break, with the accus. following, stands here, like כְּהָפוּל, 12:7, instead of the finite: the thoughts come to a fracture (failure), irrita fiunt consilia. סוד = (יְׁסוד, cf.נוס ד) Ps. 2:2) means properly the being brought close together for the purpose of secret communication and counsel (cf. Arab. sâwada, to press close together = to walk with one privately). The LXX: οἱ μὴ τιμῶντες συνέδρια, literally Symmachus, δἰασκεδάζονται λογισμοὶ μὴ ὄντος συμβουλίου. תָקוּם has, after Jer. 4:14; 51:29, כָּלָם as subject. The LXX (besides perverting ברב [by a multitude] into בל [ἐν καρδίαις]), the Syr. and Targ. introduce עֵצָה (Prov. 19:21) as subject.

23 A man has joy by the right answer of his mouth; And a word in its season, how fair is it! Proverbs 15:23. If we translate מענה only by “answer,” then 23a sounds as a praise of self-complaisance; but it is used of true correspondence (Prov. 29:19), of fit reply (Job 32:3, 5), of appropriate answer (cf. 28a, 16:1). It has happened to one in his reply to hit the nail on its head, and he has joy from that (שִמְׁחָה בְּ, e.g., 23:24), and with right; for the reply does not always succeed. A reply like this, which, according to circumstances, stops the mouth of bringeth a kiss (Prov. 24:26), is a fortunate throw, is a gift from above. The synonymous parallel line measures that which is appropriate, not to that which is to be answered, but from a general point of view as to its seasonableness; וָשָׁה is here “the ethically right, becoming time, determined by the laws of wisdom (moral)” (vid., Orelli, Synonyma der Zeit u. Ewigkeit, p. 48), cf. שָׁפָּה (translated by Luther ‘in its time’), 25:11. With מְדִינָה, cf. 16:16; both ideas lie in it: that such a word is in itself well-conditioned and successful, and also that it is welcome, agreeable, and of beneficial influence. Four proverbs of fundamentally different doctrines:

24 The man of understanding goeth upwards on a way of life, To depart from hell beneath.

Proverbs 15:24. The way of life is one, 5:6, Ps. 16:11 (where, notwithstanding the want of the article, the idea is logically determined), although in itself forming a plurality of אָדָרְתָה, 2:19. “A way of life,” in the translation, is equivalent to a way which is a way of life. יִלְעָל, upwards (as Eccles. 3:21, where, in the doubtful question whether the spirit of a man at his death goes upwards, there yet lies the knowledge of the alternative), belongs, as the parallel מִשְׁאול מָטָה shows, to אֹרֵחֵים as virtual adj.: a way of life which leads upwards. And the לְׁמַעַל of לְׁמַעַל is that of possession, but not as of quiet possession (such belongs to him), but as personal activity, as in מִשְׁמַע, 13:14; 14:27, the expression of the end and consequence, but of the subjective object, i.e., the intention, and thus supposes an activity corresponding to this intention. The O.T. reveals heaven, i.e., the state of the revelation of God in glory, yet not as the abode of saved men; the way of the dying leads, according to the O.T. representation, downwards into Sheôl; but the translations of Enoch and Elijah are facts which, establishing the possibility of an exception, break through the dark monotony of that representation, and, as among the Greeks the mysteries encouraged ἡμοστέρας ἐλπίδας, so in Israel the Chokma appears pointing the possessor of wisdom upwards, and begins to shed light on the darkness of Sheôl by the new great thoughts of a life of immortality, thus of a ζωὴ αἰώνιος (Prov. 12:28) (Psychologie, p. 407ff.), now for the first time becoming prominent, but only as a foreboding and an enigma. The idea of the Sheôl opens the way for a change: the gathering place of all the living on this side begins to be the place of punishment for the godless (Prov. 7:27; 9:18); the way leading upwards, εἰς τὴν ζωὴν, and that leading downwards, εἰς τὴν ἀπώλειαν (Matt. 7:13f.), come into direct contrast.

25 The house of the proud Jahve rooteth out, And He establisheth the landmark of the widow.

Proverbs 15:25. The power unnamed in וּיִסְׁח, 2:22 (cf. 14:11a), is here named יְׁהוָה|יִס ח (thus to be pointed with Mercha and Pasek following).

יְצֵב is the abbreviated fut. form which the elevated style, e.g., Deut. 32:8, uses also as indic.,—a syntactical circumstance which renders Hitzig’s correction ו יצֵב superfluous. It is the border of the land-possession of the widows, removed by the גֵאִים (LXX ὑβριστῶν), that is here meant. The possession of land in Israel was secured by severe punishment inflicted in him who removed the “landmark” (Deut. 19:14; 27:17), and the Chokma (Prov. 22:28; Job 24:2) as well as the prophets (e.g., Hos. 5:10) inculcate the inviolability of the borders of the possession, as the guardian of which Jahve here Himself appears.

26 An abomination to Jahve are evil thoughts; But gracious words are to Him pure.

Proverbs 15:26. Not personally (Luther: the plans of the wicked) but neutrally is יר מ here meant as at 2:14, and in יר מ, 6:24 (cf. Pers. merdi niku, man of good = good man), vid., Friedr. Philippi’s Status Constr. p. 121. Thoughts which are of a bad kind and of a bad tendency, particularly (what the parallel member brings near) of a bad disposition and design against others, are an abomination to God; but, on the contrary, pure, viz., in His eyes, which cannot look upon iniquity (Hab. 1:13), are the words of compassion and of friendship toward men, which are (after 26a) the expression of such thoughts, thus sincere, benevolent words, the influence of which on the soul and body of him to whom they refer is described, 16:24. The Syr., Targ., Symmachus, Theodotion, and the Venet. recognise in נַחֲוָר יִשְׂרָאֵל the pred., while, on the contrary, the LXX, Jerome, and Luther (who finally decided for the translation, “but the pure speak comfortably”) regard it as subject. But that would be an attribution which exceeds the measure of possibility, and for which must be used; also the parallelism requires that must correspond with נַחֲוָר יִשְׂרָאֵל. Hence also the reference of נַחֲוָר יִשְׂרָאֵל to the judgment of God, which is determined after the motive of pure untainted law; that which proceeds from such, that and that only, is pure, pure in His sight, and thus also pure in itself.

27 Whoever does service to [servit] avarice troubleth his own house; But he that hateth gifts shall live.

Proverbs 15:27. Regarding בֹצֵע בֶצ ע, vid., at 1:19, and regarding עֹכֵר בֵיתו, 11:29, where it is subject, but here object.; 28:16b is a variation of 27b. מַתָנות are here gifts in the sense of Eccles. 7:7, which pervert judgment, and cause respect of persons. The LXX from this point mingles together a series of proverbs with those of the following chapter.

Two proverbs regarding the righteous and the wicked:

28 The heart of the righteous considereth how to answer right, And the mouth of the godless poureth forth evil.

Proverbs 15:28. Instead of ל עֲנות, the LXX (Syr. and Targ.) imagines אֹמְׁרִים πίστεις; Jerome translates, but falsely, obedientiam (from עָנָה, to bend oneself); Meîri thinks on ל עֲנָה, wormwood, for the heart of the righteous revolves in itself the misery and the vanity of this present life; Hitzig corrects this verse as he does the three
The heart of the righteous thinks on נאונות, a plur. of verb נאנה, which, except in this correction, does not exist. The proverb, as it stands, is, in fineness of expression and sharpness of the contrast, raised above such manglings. Instead of the righteous, the wise might be named, and instead of the godless, fools (cf. 2b); but the poet places the proverb here under the point of view of duty to neighbours. It is the characteristic of the righteous that he does not give the reins to his tongue; but as Luther has translated: the heart of the righteous considers [tichtet from dictare, frequently to speak, here carefully to think over] what is to be answered, or rather, since מנהלעת is not used, he thinks thereupon to answer rightly, for that the word רעי is used in this pregnant sense is seen from 23a. The godless, on the contrary, are just as rash with their mouth as the righteous are of a thoughtful heart: their mouth sputters forth (effutit) evil, for they do not first lay to heart the question what may be right and just in the case that has arisen.

29 Jahve is far from the godless; But the prayer of the righteous He heareth.

Proverbs 15:29. Line second is a variation of 8b. God is far from the godless, viz., as Polychronius remarks, non spatii intercapedine, sed sententiae diversitate; more correctly: as to His gracious presence—שירים מברא, He has withdrawn Himself from them, Hos. 10:6, so that if they pray, their prayer reaches not to Him. The prayer of the righteous, on the contrary, He hears, He is graciously near to them, they have access to Him, He listens to their petitions; and if they are not always fulfilled according to their word, yet they are not without an answer (Ps. 145:18).

Two proverbs regarding the eye and the ear:

30 The light of the eye rejoiceth the heart, And a good message maketh the bones fat.

Proverbs 15:30. Hitzig corrects also here: מראה עינך, that which is seen with the eyes, viz., after long desire; and certainly מראה עינך can mean not only that which the eyes see (Isa. 11:3), but also this, that the eyes do see. But is it true what Hitzig says in justification of his correction, that עם never means light, or ray, or brightness, but lamp (φωστήρ)? It is true, indeed, that עם cannot mean a cheerful sight (Luther) in an objective sense (LXX θεωρῶν φθοράμος καλά), as a verdant garden or a stream flowing through a landscape (Rashi), for that would be מרא עינך, and “brightness which the eyes see” (Bertheau); the genitive connection certainly does not mean: the light is not the light from without presenting itself to the eyes, but, like פָּה (Ps. 38:11) and similar expressions, the light of the eye itself [bright or joyous eyes]. But עם does not mean alone the body of light, but also the illumination, Ex. 35:14 and elsewhere, not only that which (ὁ τι) gives light, but also this, that (ὁτι) light arises and is present, so that we might translate it here as at Ps. 90:8, either the brightness, or that which gives light. But the clear brightness of one’s own eye cannot be meant, for then that were as much as to say that it is the effect, not that it is the cause, of a happy heart, but the brightness of the eyes of others that meet us. That this gladdens the heart of him who has a sight of it is evident, without any interchanging relation of the joy-beaming countenance, for it is indeed heart-gladdening to a man, to whom selfishness has not made the χαίρεται μετὰ χαίροντων impossible, to see a countenance right joyful in truth. But in connection with 16:15, it lies nearer to think on a love-beaming countenance, a countenance on which joyful love to us mirrors itself, and which reflects itself in our heart, communicating this sense of gladness. The ancient Jewish interpreters understand מרא עינך of the enlightening of the eye of the mind, according to which Euchel translates: “clear intelligence;” but Rashi has remarked that that is not the explanation of the words, but the Midrash. That, in line second of this synonymous distich, שמשתעת סטרה does not mean alloquium humanum render in the fut., bringing nearer the idea of prediction (Midrash: זוכה לישב בישיבת חכמים) than of description of character.

Two proverbs with the catchword מוסר:

32 He that refuseth correction lightly values his soul; But he that heareth reproof getteth understanding.

Proverbs 15:32. Regarding מוסר מוסר, vid., 13:18, cf. 1:25, and מואס נפש, 8:36. מוש, מוסר נפש contains more than the later expression מואה נפש; it is equivalent to דִּשֶּן (Job 9:21), for the notion is the bond of union between the intellectual and the corporeal life. The despising of the soul is then the neglecting, endangering, exposing of the life; in a word, it is suicide (10:19). 19:8a is a variation derived from this distich: “He who gains understanding loves his soul,” according to which the LXX translate here ἀγαπᾷ ψυχὴν αὐτοῦ. לֵב the Midrash explains by חכמה נתונה בלֵב; but the correct view is, that לֵב is not thought of as a formal power, but as operative and carried into effect in conformity with its destination.

33 The fear of Jahve is a discipline to wisdom, And before honour is humility.

Proverbs 15:33. We may regard יראתה (the fear of Jahve) also as pred. here. The fear of Jahve is an educational maxim, and the end of education of the Chokma; but the phrase may also be the subject, and by such a rendering Luther’s parallelism lies nearer: “The fear of the Lord is discipline to wisdom;” the fear of God, viz., continually exercised and tried, is the right school of wisdom, and humility is the right way to honour. Similar is the connection מוסר הָשָּׁכָל, discipline binds understanding to itself as its consequence, 1:3. Line second repeats itself, 18:12, “Pride comes before the fall.” Luther’s “And ere one comes to honour, he must previously suffer,” renders עֹנִי rather than עֲנָוָה. But the Syr. reverses the idea: the honour of the humble goeth before him, as also one of the anonymous Greek versions: προπορεύεται δὲ...
Proverbs 16

Four proverbs of God, the disposer of all things: 1 Man’s are the counsels of the heart; But the answer of the tongue cometh from Jahve.

Proverbs 16:1. Gesen., Ewald, and Bertheau incorrectly understand 1b of hearing, i.e., of a favourable response to what the tongue wishes; 1a speaks not of wishes, and the gen. after מענה (answer) is, as at 15:23, Mic. 3:7, and also here, by virtue of the parallelism, the gen. subjecti 15:23 leads to the right sense, according to which a good answer is joy to him to whom it refers: it does not always happen to one to find the fitting and effective expression for that which he has in his mind; it is, as this cog. proverb expresses it, a gift from above (דְּרוֹחַ֣סְתּ֑ו, Matt. 10:19). But now, since מענה, neither means answering, nor yet in general an expression (Euchel) or report (Löwenstein), and the meaning of the word at 4a is not here in question, one has to think of him whom the proverb has in view as one who has to give a reason, to give information, or generally—since מענה, like עָרְכֵי לֵב, is not confined to the interchange of words—to solve a problem, and that such an one as requires reflection. The scheme (project, premeditation) which he in his heart contrives, is here described as מְתַקֵּן, from תָּכְן, to arrange, to place together, metaphorically of the reflection, i.e., the consideration analyzing and putting a matter in order. These reflections, seeking at one time in one direction, and at another in another, the solution of the question, the unfolding of the problem, are the business of men; but the answer which finally the tongue gives, and which here, in conformity with the pregnant sense of מענה (vid., at 15:23, 28), will be regarded as right, appropriate, effective, thus generally the satisfying reply to the demand placed before him, is from God. It is a matter of experience which the preacher, the public speaker, the author, and every man to whom his calling or circumstances present a weighty, difficult theme, can attest. As the thoughts pursue one another in the mind, attempts are made, and again abandoned; the state of the heart is somewhat like that of chaos before the creation. But when, finally, the right thought and the right utterance for it are found, that which is found appears to us, not as if self-discovered, but as a gift; we regard it with the feeling that a higher power has influenced our thoughts and imaginings; the confession by us, כְּאָנָא שֶׁיִּהְמֹנֶהָ עַלְּתָו תְּוָאָד (2 Cor. 3:5), in so far as we believe in a living God, is inevitable.

Proverbs 16:2. Variations of this verse are 21:2, where יִישָר, יִישֵׁר, יִישָּר (according to the root-meaning: pricking in the eyes, i.e., shining clear, then: without spot, pure, vid., Fleischer in Levy’s Chald. Wörterbuch, i. 424), יִישָּר בְּעֵינֵי לְבַשָּׂר, יִישָּר בְּעֵינֵי לְבַשָּׂר, whereupon here without synallage (for יִישָּר means the totality), the singular of the pred. follows, as Isa. 64:10, Ezek. 31:15. For the rest, cf. with 2a, 14:12, where, instead of the subj. כָּל, כָּל, יִישָּר, is used כִּפְרוֹן, and with 2b, 24:12, where God is described by יִישָּר לְזָרֵא. The verb יִישָּר is a secondary formation from יָשָר (vid., Hupfeld on Ps. 5:7), like יִישָּר יִישָּר from Arab. żyakn (to be fast, sure), the former through the medium of the reflex. Arab. ā’tkn; יִישָּר means to regulate (from regula, a rule), to measure off, to weigh, here not to bring into a condition right according to rule (Theodotion, ἐδράζον stabilium, Syr. Targ. κυνήγης, Venet. καταράζειν; Luther, “but the Lord maketh the heart sure”), but to measure or weigh, and therefore to estimate rightly, to know accurately (Jerome, spiritum ponderator est Dominus). The judgment of a man regarding the cause of life, which it is good for him to enter upon, lies exposed to great and subtle self-deception; but God has the measure and weight, i.e., the means of proving, so as to value the spirits according to their true moral worth; his investigation goes to the root (cf. κριτικός, Heb. 4:12), his judgment rests on the knowledge of the true state of the matter, and excludes all deception, so that thus a man can escape the danger of delusion by no other means than by placing his way, i.e., his external and internal life, in the light of the word of God, and desiring for himself the all-penetrating test of the Searcher of hearts (Ps. 139:23f.), and the self-knowledge corresponding to the result of this test.

3 Roll on Jahve thy works, So thy thoughts shall prosper.

Proverbs 16:3. The proverbs vv. 1–3 are wanting in the LXX; their absence is compensated for three others, but only externally, not according to their worth. Instead of גֹל, the Syr., Targ., and Jerome read גָל, revela, with which the עֲנֶה, Ps. 37:5, cf. 55:23, interchanging with גָל (here and at Ps. 22:9), does not agree; rightly Theodotion, κύλισον ἐπὶ κύριον, and Luther, “commend to the Lord thy works.” The works are here, not those that are executed, Ex. 23:16, but those to be executed, as Ps. 90:17, where מְעַן, here the active to מְעַן, which at 4:26 as jussive meant to be placed right, here with כֹל of the consequence in the apodosis imperativi: to be brought about, and to have continuance, or briefly: to stand (cf. 12:3) as the contrast of disappointment or ruin. We should roll on God all matters which, as obligations, burden us, and on account of their weight and difficulty cause us great anxiety, for nothing is too heavy or too hard for Him who can overcome all difficulties and dissolve all perplexities; then will our thoughts, viz., those about the future of our duty and our life-course, be happy, nothing will remain entangled and be a failure, but will be accomplished, and the end aim be realized.

Proverbs 16:4. Everywhere else עֲנֶה means answer (Venet. πρὸς ἀπόκρισιν αὐτοῦ), which is not suitable here, especially with the absoluteness of the כֹל; the Syr. and Targ. translate, obedientibus ei, which the words do not warrant; but also propter semet ipsum (Jerome, Theodotion, Luther) give to 4b no right parallelism, and, besides, would demand לְׁמ עֲנֵה or לְׁמ עֲנֶהוּ. The punctuation לְׁמ עֲנֶה, which is an anomaly (cf. הּכ גְׁבִרְׁתָ, Isa. 24:2, and בֵעָרֵינ, Ezra 10:14), shows (Ewald) that here we have, not the prepositional לְׁמ עֶה, but ל with the subst. מ עֲנֶה, which in derivation and meaning is one with the form מ עַן abbreviated from it (cf. מ ע ל, מ ע ר), similar in meaning to the Arab. ma’anyn, aim, intention, object, and end, and mind, from ‘atay, to place opposite to oneself a matter, to make it the object of effort. Hitzig prefers מ ע ל, but why not rather מ ע ל, for the proverb is not intended to express that all that God has made serve a purpose (by which one is reminded of the arguments for the existence of God from final causes, which are often prosecuted too far), but that all is made by God for its purpose, i.e., a purpose premeditated by Him, that the world of things and of events stands under the law of a plan, which has in God its ground and its end, and that also the wickedness of free agents is comprehended in this plan, and made subordinate to it. God has not indeed made the wicked as such, but He has made the being which is capable of wickedness, and which has decided for it, viz., in view of the “day of adversity” (Eccles. 7:14), which God will cause to come upon him, thus making His holiness manifest in the merited punishment, and thus also making wickedness the means of manifesting His glory. It is the same thought which is expressed in Ex. 9:16 with reference to Pharaoh. A praedestinatio ad malum, and that in the supralapsarian sense, cannot be here taught, for this horrible dogma (horribile quidem decretrum, fatae; says Calvin himself) makes God the author of evil, and a ruler according to His sovereign caprice, and thus destroys all pure conceptions of God. What Paul, Rom. 9, with reference to Ex. 9:16, wishes to say is this, that it was not Pharaoh’s conduct that determined the will of God, but that the will of God is always the antecedens: nothing happens to God through the obstinacy and rebellion of man which determines Him to an action not already embraced in the eternal plan, but also such an one must against his will be subservient to the display of God’s glory. The apostle adds v. 22, and shows that he recognised the factor of human self-determination, but also a one comprehended in God’s plan. The free actions of men create no situation by which God would be surprised and compelled to something which was not originally intended by Himself. That is what the above proverb says: the wicked also has his place in God’s order of the world. Whoever frustrates the designs of grace must serve God in this, ἐνδείξασθαι τὴν ὀργὴν καὶ γνωρίσαι τὸ δυνατὸν αὐτοῦ (Rom. 9:22).

Here follow three proverbs of divine punishment, expiatio [Vorsühnung] and reconciliatio [Vorsöhnung].

5 An abomination to Jahve is every one who is haughty; The hand for it [assuredly] he remains not unpunished.

Proverbs 16:5. Proverbs thus commencing we already had at 15:9, 26. הָנָב is a metaplastic connecting form of הָנַב on the contrary, גִּבּוֹת, 1 Sam. 16:7, Ps. 103:11, means being high, as גָּבֹה, height; the form underlying גָּבֹה is not גִּבּוֹת (as Gesen. and Olshausen write it), but גָּבֹה. In 5b, 11:21a is repeated. The translators are perplexed in their rendering of יָד לְיָד, Fleischer: ab aetate in aetatem non (i.e., nullo unquam tempore futuro) impunis erit.

6 By love and truth is iniquity expiated, And through the fear of Jahve one escapes from evil—

Proverbs 16:6. literally, there comes (as the effect of it) the escaping of evil (.Raise, n. actionis, as 13:19), or rather, since the evil here comes into view as to its consequences (Prov. 14:27; 15:24), this, that one escapes evil. By גָּאֲרָא are here meant, not the γὰρ καὶ ἀλήθεια of God (Bertheau), but, like 20:28, Isa. 39:8, love and faithfulness in the relation of men to one another. The ב is both times that of the mediating cause. Or is it said neither by what means one may attain the expiation of his sins, nor how he may attain to the escaping from evil, but much rather wherein the true reverence for Jahve, and wherein the right expiation of sin, consist? Thus von Hofmann, Schriftbew. i. 595. But the ב of בחסד is not different from that of בחסד, Isa. 27:9. It is true that the article of justification is falsified if good works enter as causa meritoria into the act of justification, but we of the evangelical school teach that the fides quâ justificat is indeed inoperative, but not the fides quae justificat, and we cannot expect of the O.T. that it should everywhere distinguish with Pauline precision what even James will not or cannot distinguish.

As the law of sacrifice designates the victim united with the blood in the most definite manner, but sometimes also the whole transaction in the offering of sacrifice even to the priestly feast as serving לְכַפָּר, Lev. 10:17, so it also happens in the general region of ethics: the objective ground of reconciliation is the decree of God, to which the blood in the typical offering points, and man is a partaker of this reconciliation, when he accepts, in penitence and in faith, the offered mercy of God; but this acceptance would be a self-deception, if it meant that the blotting out of the guilt of sin could be obtained in the way of imputation without the immediate following thereupon of a blotting of it out in the way of sanctification; and therefore the Scriptures also ascribe to good works a share in the expiation of sin in a wider sense—namely, as the proofs of thankful (Luke 7:47) and compassionate love (vid., at 10:2), as this proverb of love and truth, herein according with the words of the prophets, as Hos. 6:6, Mic. 6:6–8. He who is conscious of this, that he is a sinner, deeply guilty before God, who cannot stand before Him if He did not deal with him in mercy instead of justice, according to the purpose of His grace, cannot trust to this mercy if he is not zealous, in his relations to his fellow-men, to practise love and truth; and in view of the fifth petition of the Lord’s Prayer, and of the parable of the unmerciful steward rightly understood, it may be said that the love which covers the sins, 10:12, of a neighbour, has, in regard to our own sins, a covering or atoning influence, of "blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy." That "love and truth" are meant of virtues practised from religious motives, 6b shows; for, according to this line, by the fear of Jahve one escapes evil. The fear of Jahve is subjection to the God of revelation, and a falling in with the revealed plan of salvation.

7 If Jahve has pleasure in the ways of a man, He reconciles even his enemies to him —

Proverbs 16:7. properly (for is here the causative of the transitive, Josh. 10:1): He brings it about that they conclude peace with him. If God has pleasure in the ways of a man, i.e., in the designs which he prosecutes, and in the means which he employs, he shows, by the great consequences which flow from his endeavours, that, even as his enemies also acknowledge, God is with him (e.g., Gen. 26:27f.), so that they, vanquished in heart (e.g., 2 Sam. 19:9f.), abandon their hostile position, and become his friends. For if it is manifest that God makes Himself known, bestowing blessings on a man, there lies in this a power of conviction which disarms his most bitter opponents, excepting only those who have in selfishness hardened themselves.

Five proverbs of the king, together with three of righteousness in action and conduct:

8 Better is a little with righteousness, Than rich revenues with unrighteousness.

Proverbs 16:8. The cogn. proverb 15:16 commences similarly. Of or greatness of income, vid., 14:4: "unrighteous wealth profits not." The possessor of it is not truly happy, for sin cleaves to it, which troubles the heart (conscience), and because the enjoyment which it affords is troubled by the curses of those who are injured, and by the sighs of the oppressed. Above all other gains rises ἡ εὐσέβεια μετ’ αὐταρκείας (1 Tim. 6:6).

9 The heart of man deviseth his way; But Jahve directeth his steps.

Proverbs 16:9. Similar to this is the German proverb: "Der Mensch denkt, Gott lenkt" [= our "man proposes, God disposes"], and the Arabic el-ʻabd (אֵל = man) judebbir wallah jukaddir; Latin, homo proponit, Deus disponit; for, as Hitzig rightly remarks, 9b means, not that God maketh his steps firm (Venet., Luther, Umbreit, Bertheau, Elster), but that He gives direction to him (Jerome, dirigere). Man deliberates here and there (חִשֵּׁב, intens. of חָשֵׁב, to calculate, reflect) how he will begin and carry on this or that; but his short-sightedness leaves much out of view which God sees; his calculation does not comprehend many contingencies which God disposes of and man cannot foresee. The result and issue are thus of God, and the best is, that in all his deliberations one should give himself up without self-confidence and arrogance to the guidance of God, that one should do his duty and leave the rest, with humility and confidence, to God.

Proverbs 16:10. The first line is a noun clause: מָסָר, as subject, thus needs a distinctive accent, and that is here, after the rule of the sequence of accents, and manuscript authority (vid., Torath Emeth, p. 49), not Mehuppach legarme, as in our printed copies, but Dechi (כָּרָה). Jerome’s translation: Divinatio in labiis regis, in judicio non errabit os ejus, and yet more Luther’s: “his mouth fails not in judgment,” makes it appear as if the proverb meant that the king, in his official duties, was infallible; and Hitzig (Zöckler agreeing), indeed, finds here expressed the infallibility of the theocratic king, and that as an actual testimony to be believed, not only is a mere political fiction, like the phrase, "the king can do no wrong." But while this political fiction is not strange even to the Israelitish law, according to which the king could not be brought before the judgment, that testimony is only a pure imagination. For as little as the N.T. teaches that the Pope, as the legitimate vicarius of Christ, is infallible, cum ex cathedra docet, so little does the O.T. that the theocratic king, who indeed was the legitimate vicarius Dei, was infallible in judicio ferendo. Yet Ewald maintains that the proverb teaches that the word of the king, when on the seat of justice, is an infallible oracle; but it dates from the first bright period of the strong uncorrupted kingdom in Israel. One may not forget, says Dachsel also, with von Gerlach, that these proverbs belong to the time of Solomon, before it had given to the throne sons of David who did evil before the Lord. Then it would fare ill for the truth of the proverb—the course of history would falsify it. But in fact this was never maintained in Israel. Of the idolizing flattering language in which, at the present day, rulers in the East are addressed, not a trace is found in the O.T. The kings were restrained by objective law and the recognised rights of the people. David showed, not merely to those who were about him, but also to the people at large, so many human weaknesses, that he certainly appeared by no means infallible; and Solomon distinguished himself, it is true, by rare kingly wisdom, but when he surrounded himself with the glory of an oriental potentate, and when Rehoboam began to assume the tone of a despot, there arose an unhallowed breach between the theocratic kingdom and the greatest portion of the people. The proverb, as Hitzig translates and expounds it: "a divine utterance rests on the lips of the king; in giving judgment his mouth deceives not," is both historically and dogmatically impossible. The choice of the word קסם (from כשם, R. כשם, to make fast, to take an oath, to confirm by an oath, incantare, vid., at Isa. 3:2), which does not mean prediction (Luther), but speaking the truth, shows that 10a expresses, not what falls from the lips of the king in itself, but according to the judgment of the people: the people are wont to regard the utterances of the king as oracular, as they shouted in the circus at Caesarea of King Agrippa, designating his words as θεοὶ θωνὴ καὶ οὐκ ἀνθρώπων (Acts 12:22). Hence 10b supplies an earnest warning to the king, viz., that his mouth should not offend against righteousness, nor withhold it. קס קס is meant as warning (Umbreit, Bertheau), like Kb Kb, 22:24, and ב in Kb Kb is here, as always, that of the object; at least this is more probable than that Kb Kb stands without object, which is possible, and that ב designates the situation.

11 The scale and balances of a right kind are Jahve’s; His work are the weights of the bag. Proverbs 16:11. Regarding סולם, statera, a level or steelyard (from קס, to make even), vid., 4:26; מזיקה, (from קס, to weigh), libra, is another form of the balance: the shop-balance furnished with two scales. אב are here the stones that serve for weights, and הב, which at 1:14 properly means the money-bag, moneypurse (cf. 7:20), is here, as at Mic. 6:11, the bag in which the merchant carries the weights. The genit. הב is rightly accented in Cod. 1294 (vid., Torath Emeth, p. 50) with the conjunctive Mehupach. הב, as 11b shows, is not like הב, the word with the principal tone; 11a says that the balance thus, or thus constructed, which weighs accurately and justly, is Jahve’s, or His arrangement, and the object of His inspection, and 11b, that all the weight-stones of the bag, and generally the means of weighing and measuring, rest upon divine ordinance, that in the transaction and conduct of men honesty and certainty might rule. This is the declared will of God, the lawgiver; for among the few direct determinations of His law with reference to trade this stands prominent, that just weights and just measures shall be used, Lev. 19:36, Deut. 25:13–16. The expression of the poet here frames itself after this law; yet יִכְנָה is not exclusively the God of positive revelation, but, as agriculture in Isa. 28:29, cf. Sirach 7:15, so here the invention of normative and normal means of commercial intercourse is referred to the direction and institution of God.

12 It is an abomination to kings to commit wickedness, For by righteousness the throne is established. Proverbs 16:12. As 10b uttered a warning to the king, grounded on the fact of 10a, so 12a indirectly contains a warning, which is confirmed by the fact 12b. It is a fact that the throne is established by righteousness (יִכְנָה as expressive of a rule, like הַיָּדֵי, Isa. 16:5, as expressive of an event); on this account it is an abomination to kings immediately or mediatelly to commit wickedness, i.e., to place themselves in despotic self-will above the law. Such wicked conduct shall be, and ought to be, an abhorrence to them, because they know that they thereby endanger the stability of their throne. This is generally the case, but especially was it so in Israel, where the royal power was never absolutistic; where the king as well as the people were placed under God’s law; where the existence of the community was based on the understood equality of right; and the word of the people, as well as the word of the prophets, was free. Another condition of the stability of the throne is, after 25:5, the removal of godless men from nearness to the king. Rehoboam lost the greater part of his kingdom by this, that he listened to the counsel of the young men who were hated by the people.

Proverbs 16:13. History is full of such warning examples, and therefore this proverb continues to hold up the mirror to princes. Well-pleasing to kings are righteous lips, And whoever speaketh uprightly is loved. Rightly the LXX ἀγαπᾶ, individ. plur., instead of the plur. of genus, מְלָכִים; on the contrary, Jerome and Luther give to the sing. the most general subject (one lives), in which case it must be distinctly said, that that preference of the king for the people who speak out the truth, and just what they think, is shared in by every one. רָצוֹן, as the property of the שפתי, accords with the Arab. sidk, truth as the property of the lasàn (the tongue or speech). יֶשֶׂר, from יָשָר, means recta, as principalia, 8:6, and inania, 12:11. יְשָרִים, Ps. 111:8; but is rather, with Hitzig and Riehm, to be read יְשָרִים. What the proverb ways cannot be meant of all kings, for even the house of David had murderers of prophets, like Manasseh and Joakim; but in general it is nevertheless true that noble candour, united with true loyalty and pure love to the king and the people, is with kings more highly prized than mean flattery, seeking only its own advantage, and that, though this (flattery) may for a time prevail, yet, at last, fidelity to duty, and respect for truth, gain the victory.

14 The wrath of the king is like messengers of death; But a wise man appeaseth him. Proverbs 16:14. The clause: the wrath of the king is many messengers of death, can be regarded as the attribution of the effect, but it falls under the point of view of likeness, instead of comparison: if the king is angry, it is as if a troop of messengers or angels of death went forth to visit with death him against whom the anger is kindled; the plur. serves for the strengthening of the figure: not one messenger of death, but at the same time several, the wrinkled brow, the flaming eye, the threatening voice of the king sends forth (Fleischer). But if he against whom the wrath of the king has thus broken forth is a wise man, or one near the king who knows that ὁργή ἀνδρὸς δικαιοσύνην Θεοῦ οὐ κατεργάζεται (Jas. 1:20), he will seek to discover the means (and not without success) to cover or to propitiate, i.e., to mitigate and appease, the king’s anger. The Scripture never uses כִפֶר, so that God is the object (expiare Deum), because, as is shown in the Comm. zum Hebräerbrief, that were to say, contrary to the decorum divinum, that God’s holiness or wrath is covered, or its energy bound, by the offering up of sacrifices or of things in which there is no inherent virtue of atonement, and which are made the means of reconciliation only by the accommodative arrangement of God. On the contrary, כפר is used here and at Gen. 32:21 of covering = reconciling (propitiating) the wrath of a man.

15 In the light on the king’s countenance there is life, And his favour is as a cloud of the latter rains.

Proverbs 16:15. Hitzig regards אור as the inf. (cf. 4:18), but one says substantively אור פְׁנֵי, Job 29:24, etc., and in a similar sense אֲרֹרֶה חַיִים, 15:30; light is the condition of life, and the exhilaration of life, wherefore אור הָאָרֶץ, Ps. 56:14, Job 33:30, is equivalent to a fresh, joyous life; in the light of the king’s countenance is life, means that life goes forth from the cheerful approbation of the king, which shows itself in his face, viz., in the showing of favour, which cheers the heart and beautifies the life. To speak of liberality as a shower is so common to the Semitic, that it has in Arab. the general name of nadnâ, rain. 15b conforms itself to this.

מְּלֹא (cf. Job 29:23) is the latter rain, which, falling about the spring equinox, brings to maturity the barley-harvest; on the contrary, מְרֹד (or מְרֹד) is the early rain, which comes at the time of ploughing and sowing; the former is thus the harvest rain, and the latter the spring rain. Like a cloud which discharges the rain that mollifies the earth and refreshes the growing corn, is the king’s favour. The noun Prescott, thus in the st. constr., retains its Kametz. Michlhol 191b. This proverb is the contrast to v. 14. 20:2 has also the anger of the king as its theme. In 19:12 the figures of the darkness and the light stand together as parts of one proverb. The proverbs relating to the king are now at an end. V. 10 contains a direct warning for the king; v. 13 an indirect warning, as a conclusion arising from 12b (cf. 20:28, where וַיֹּאמֶר is not to be translated tueantur; the proverb has, however, the value of a nota bene). V. 13 in like manner presents an indirect warning, less to the king than to those who have intercourse with him (cf. 25:5), and vv. 14 and 15 show what power of good and evil, of wrath and of blessing, is given to a king, whence so much the greater responsibility arises to him, but, at the same time also, the duty of all to repress the lust to evil that may be in him, and to awaken and foster in him the desire for good.

Five proverbs regarding wisdom, righteousness, humility, and trust in God, forming, as it were, a succession of steps, for humility is the virtue of virtues, and trust in God the condition of all salvation. Three of these proverbs have the word道教 יד in common.

16 To gain wisdom, how much better is it than gold; And to attain understanding to be preferred to silver.

Proverbs 16:16. Commendation of the striving after wisdom (understanding) with which all wisdom begins, for one gains an intellectual possession not by inheritance, but by acquisition, 4:7. A similar “parallel-comparative clause” (Fl.), with the interchange of טוב and נבחר, is 22:1, but yet more so is 21:3, where נבחר, as here, is neut. pred. (not, as at 8:10 and elsewhere, adj.), andעשה, such an anomalous form of the inf. constr. as here קנה, Gesen. § § 75, Anm. 2; in both instances it could also be regarded as the inf. absol. (cf. 25:27) (Lehrgebäude, § 109, Anm. 2); yet the language uses, as in the case before us, the form פְׁנֵי only with the force of an abl. of the gerund, as נִשָּׂא, which occurs Gen. 31:38; the inf. of verbs חָרוּץ as nom. (as here), genit. (Ge. 50:20), and accus. (Ps. 101:3), is always either פְׁנֵי or פְׁנֵי. The meaning is not that to gain wisdom is more valuable than gold, but that the gaining of wisdom exceeds the gaining of gold and silver, the common comparatio decurtata (cf. Job 28:18). Regarding וַיְרַדֶּה, vid., at 3:14.
17 The path of the righteous is the avoiding of evil, And he preserveth his soul who giveth heed to his way.

Proverbs 16:17. The meaning of מְסִלָה, occurring only here in the Proverbs, is to be learned from 15:19. The attribution denotes that wherein the way they take consists, or by which it is formed; it is one, a straight and an open way, i.e., unimpeded, leading them on, because they avoid the evil which entices them aside to the right and the left. Whoever then gives heed to his way, preserveth his soul (שֹמֵר נֶפֶשׁ, as 13:3, on the contrary 25:5, subj.), that it suffer not injury and fall under death, for سور מreon and سور ממוקשי מות, 14:27, are essentially the same. Instead of this distich, the LXX has three distichs; the thoughts presented in the four superfluous lines are all already expressed in one distich. Ewald and Hitzig find in this addition of the LXX a component part of the original text.

Proverbs 16:18. The contrast is לפני כבוד ענוה, 15:33, according to which the “haughtiness comes before a fall” in 18:22 is expanded into the antithetic distich. שֶבֶר means the fracture of the limbs, destruction of the person. A Latin proverb says, “Magna cadunt, inflata crepant, tumefacta premuntur.” Here being dashed in pieces and overthrown correspond. שֶבֶר means neither bursting (Hitzig) nor shipwreck (Ewald). כִשָלון (like בטחון, זכרון, etc.), from כָשָל or כִכָל, to totter, and hence, as a consequence, to come to ruin, is a ἀπαξιαία, λεγ. This proverb, which stands in the very centre of the Book of Proverbs, is followed by another in praise of humility.

Proverbs 16:19. The form שֶפֶל is here not adj. as 29:23 (from שָפֵל, שפֶל, 6:32, from בָשַׂל), but inf. (like Eccles. 12:14, and כָשָל, defectio, 10:21). There existed here also no proper reason for changing שפֶל (Chethib) into שפֶל (Qal). Hitzig is right in saying that 우 may also be taken in the sense of וע [the idea “sufferer” is that which mediates], and that here the inward fact of humility and the outward of dividing spoil, stand opposed to one another. It is better to live lowly, i.e., with a mind devoid of earthly pride (Demut [humility] comes from δεό with the deep e, diu, servant), among men who have experience of the vanity of earthly joys, than, intoxicated with pride, to enjoy oneself amid worldly wealth and greatness (cf. Isa. 9:2).

20 He that giveth heed to the word will find prosperity; And he that trusteth in Jahve, blessed is he!

Proverbs 16:20. The “word” here is the word כַּלַע, the divine word, for מְשַכֵּל עֲלֵי דָבָר is the contrast of בז לְדָבָר, 13:13a, cf. Neh. 8:13. טוב is meant, as in 17:20, cf. 13:21, Ps. 23:6; to give heed to God’s word is the way to true prosperity. But at last all depends on this, that one stand in personal fellowship with God by means of faith, which here, as at 28:25; 29:25, is designated after its specific mark as fiducia. The Mashal conclusion א שְׁרָיו occurs, besides here, only at 14:21; 29:18.

Four proverbs of wisdom with eloquence:

21 The wise in heart is called prudent, And grace of the lips increaseth learning.

Proverbs 16:21. Elsewhere (Prov. 1:5; 9:9) וה Canadiens לֵב means more than to gain learning, i.e., erudition in the ethico-practical sense, for sweetness of the lips (dulcedo orationis of Cicero) is, as to learning, without significance, but of so much the greater value for reaching; for grace of expression, and of exposition, particularly if it be not merely rhetorical, but, according to the saying pectus disertos facit, coming out of the heart, is full of mind, it imparts force to the instruction, and makes it acceptable. Whoever is wise of heart, i.e., of mind or spirit (בָל = the N.T. νοῦς or πνεῦμα), is called, and is truly, נבון [learned, intelligent]

a Grace Notes study

(Fleischer compares to this the expression frequent in Isaiah, “to be named” = to be and appear to be, the Arab. du’ay lah); but there is a gift which highly increases the worth of this understanding or intelligence, for it makes it fruitful of good to others, and that is grace of the lips. On the lips (Prov. 10:13) of the intelligent wisdom is found; but the form also, and the whole manner and way in which he gives expression to this wisdom, is pleasing, proceeding from a deep and tender feeling for the suitable and the beneficial, and thus he produces effects so much the more surely, and beneficiently, and richly.

22 A fountain of life is understanding to its possessor; But the correction of fools is folly. Proverbs 16:22. Oetinger, Bertheau, and others erroneously understand מוסר of the education which fools bestow upon others; when fools is the subject spoken of, מוסר is always the education which is bestowed on them, 7:22; 1:7; cf. 5:23; 15:5. Also does not here mean education, disciplina, in the moral sense (Symmachus, ἐννοια; Jerome, doctrina): that which fools gain from education, from training, is folly, for מוסר is the contrast to מְׁקור חַיִים, and has thus the meaning of correction or chastisement, 15:10, Jer. 30:14. And that the fruits of understanding (Prov. 12:8, cf. 1:13, fine culture, 13:15) represented by מָכָר חַיִים (vid., 10:11) will accrue to the intelligent themselves, is shown not only by the contrast, but also by the expression: Scaturigo vitae est intellectus praeditorum eo, of those (= to those) who are endowed therewith (The LXX well, τοῖς κεκτημένοις). The man of understanding has in this intellectual possession a fountain of strength, a source of guidance, and a counsel which make his life secure, deepen, and adorn it; while, on the contrary, folly punishes itself by folly (cf. to the form, 14:24), for the fool, when he does not come to himself (Ps. 107:17–22), recklessly destroys his own prosperity.

23 The heat of the wise maketh his mouth wise, And learning mounteth up to his lips. Proverbs 16:23. Regarding הִשְׁכִיל as causative: to put into the possession of intelligence, vid., at Gen. 3:6. Wisdom in the heart produceth intelligent discourse, and, as the parallel member expresses it, learning mounteth up to the lips, i.e., the learning which the man taketh into his lips (Prov. 22:18; cf. Ps. 16:4) to communicate it to others, for the contents of the learning, and the ability to communicate it, are measured by the wisdom of the heart of him who possesses it. One can also interpret הִשְׁכִיל as extens. increasing: the heart of the wise increaseth, i.e., spreads abroad learning, but then דֶּשֶׁת (Ps. 119:13) would have been more suitable; יִעֱלָה calls up the idea of learning as hovering on the lips, and thus brings so much nearer, for מוסר, the meaning of the exaltation of its worth and impression.

24 A honeycomb are pleasant words, Sweet to the soul, and healing to the bones. Proverbs 16:24. Honeycomb, i.e., honey flowing from the צופה, the comb or cell (favus), is otherwise designated, Ps. 19:11. מָתְוָא, מְרָפֵא are, according to 15:26, words which love suggests, and which breathe love. Such words are sweet to the soul of the hearer, and bring strength and healing to his bones (Prov. 15:30); for מְרָפֵא is not only that which restores soundness, but also that which preserves and advances it (cf. θεραπεία, Rev. 22:2).

A group of six proverbs follows, four of which begin with איש, and five relate to the utterances of the mouth.

25 There is a way which appears as right to a man; But the end thereof are the ways of death. Proverbs 16:25. This verse = 14:12.

26 The hunger of the labourer laboureth for him, For he is urged on by his mouth. Proverbs 16:26. The Syr. translates: the soul of him who inflicts woe itself suffers it, and from his mouth destruction comes to him; the Targ. brings this translation nearer the original text (אבדנא, humiliation, instead of פשע, destruction); Luther translates thus also, violently abbreviating, however. But פשע (from פשע, Arab. 'amila, to exert oneself, laborare) means, like laboriosus, labouring as well as enduring difficulty, but not, as פשע תיו, causing difficulty, or (Euchel) occupied with difficulty. And labour and the mouth stand together, denoting that man labours that the mouth may have somewhat to eat (cf. 2 Thess. 3:10; and regarding אבדנא, however, gains in this connection the meaning of ψυχὴ ὀρεκτικὴ, and that of desire after nourishment, vid., at 6:30; 10:3). אבדנא also joins itself to this circle of ideas, for it means to urge (Jerome, compulit), properly (related to עקף, incurvare, to constrain, necessitate), to bow down by means of a burden. The Aramaeo-Arab. signification, to saddle (Schultens: citellae imposuit ei os suum), is a secondary denom. (vid., at Job 33:7). The Venet. well renders it after Kimchi: ἐπί τὸ στόμα αὐτοῦ. Thus: the need of nourishment on the part of the labourer works for him (dat. commodi like Isa. 40:20), i.e., helps him to labour, for (not: if, ἐὰν, as Rashi and others) it presses upon him; his mouth, which will have something to eat, urges him. It is God who has in this way connected together working and eating. The curse in sudore vultus tui comedes panem conceals a blessing. The proverb has in view this reverse side of the blessing in the arrangement of God.

27 A worthless man diggeth evil; And on his lips is, as it were, scorching fire.

Proverbs 16:27. Regarding בלאים, vid., 6:12, and regarding נר, to dig round, or to bore out, vid., at Gen. 49:5; 50:5; here the figure, “to dig for others a pit,” 26:27, Ps. 7:16, etc.: to dig evil is equivalent to, to seek to prepare such for others. נר Kimchi rightly explains as a form similar to נר; as a subst. it means, Lev. 13:23, the mark of fire (the healed mark of a carbuncle), here as an adj. of a fire, although not flaming (אש לֶהָבָה, Isa. 4:5, etc.); yet so much the hotter, and scorching everything that comes near to it (from נר, to be scorched, cogn. שְׁרֵב, to which also נר is perhaps related as a stronger power, like comburere to adurere). The meaning is clear: a worthless man, i.e., a man whose disposition and conduct are the direct contrast of usefulness and piety, uses words which, like an iron glowing hot, scorches and burns; his tongue is φλογιζομένη ὑπὸ τῆς γεέννης (Jas. 3:6).

Proverbs 16:28. Regarding מברך (הברך), vid., 2:12, and קימר, 6:14; the thought of 28b is found at 6:19. נר (with 1 minusculum, which occurs thrice with the terminal Nun) is a Niphal formation from נר to murmur (cf. Nun, from רע), and denotes the whisperer, viz., the backbiter, ψιθυριστής Sir. 5:14, ψιθυριστής, susuro; the Arab. nyraj is abbreviated from it, a verbal stem of נר (cf. Aram. norgo, an axe, Arab. naurag, a threshing-sledge = דריך) cannot be proved. Aquila is right in translating by τονθροφορεῖ, and Theodotion by γωγωύσας, from מברך, Hiph. בָּרָך, γוגγווע. Regarding מברך, confidential friend, vid., p. 59; the sing., as 18:9, is used in view of the mutual relationship, and proceeds on the separation of the one, and, at the same time, of the other from it. Luther, in translating by “a slanderer makes princes disagree,” is in error, for מברך, φυλαρχος is not a generic word for prince.

29 A man of violence enticeth his neighbour, And leadeth him in a way which is not good.

Proverbs 16:29. Cf. Gen. 4:8. The subject is not moral enticement, but enticement to some place or situation which facilitates to the violent man the carrying out of his violent purpose (misdemeanour, robbery, extortion, murder). שְׁוָא (here with שֶא at 3:31) is the injustice of club-law, the conduct of him who puts his superior power in godless rudeness in the place of God, Hab. 1:11, cf. Job 12:6. “A way not good” (cf. Ps. 36:5) is the contradictory contrast of the good way: one altogether evil and destructive.

30 He who shutteth his eyes to devise falsehood; He who biteth his lips bringeth evil to pass.

Proverbs 16:30. A physiognomical Caveto. The ἁπ. λεγ. ἀνεστή is connected with ἀναίρεσις, Isa. 33:15 (Arab. transp. ghamḍ), comprimere, formed from it. Regarding פָּקֵד of lips or eyes, vid., p. 104; the biting of the lips is the action of the deceitful, and denotes scorn, malice, knavery. The perf. denotes that he who is seen doing this has some evil as good as accomplished, for he is inwardly ready for it; Hitzig suitably compares 1 Sam. 20:7, 33. Our editions (also Löwenstein) have כִלָה, but the Masora (vid., Mas. finalis, p. 1) numbers the word among those which terminate in א, and always writes כִלָא.

We now take together a series of proverbs, 16:31–17:5, beginning with עֲטֶרֶת.

31 A bright diadem is a hoary head, In the way of righteousness it is found—

Proverbs 16:31. namely, this bright diadem, this beautiful crown (Prov. 4:8), which silver hair is to him who has it as the result of his advanced age (Prov. 20:29), for “thou shalt rise up before the hoary head,” Lev. 19:32; and the contrast of an early death is to die in a good old age, Gen. 15:15, etc., but a long life is on one side a self-consequence, and on another the promised reward of a course of conduct regulated by God’s will, God’s law, and by the rule of love to God and love to one’s neighbour. From the N.T. standpoint that is also so far true, as in all the world there is no better established means of prolonging life than the avoidance of evil; but the clause corresponding to the O.T. standpoint, that evil punishes itself by a premature death, and that good is rewarded by long life, has indeed many exceptions arising from the facts of experience against it, for we see even the godless in their life of sin attaining to an advanced old age, and in view of the veiled future it appears only as a one-sided truth, so that the words, Wisd. 4:9, “discretion is to man the right grey hairs, and an unstained life is the right old age,” which is mediated by life experiences, such as Isa. 57:1f., stand opposed to the above proverb as its reversed side. That old Solomonic proverb is, however, true, for it is not subverted; and, in contrast to self-destroying vice and wickedness; calling forth the judgment of God, it is and remains true, that whoever would reach an honoured old age, attains to it in the way of a righteous life and conduct.

32 Better one slow to anger than a hero in war; And whoever is master of his spirit, than he who taketh a city.

Proverbs 16:32. Regarding אֶרֶךְ א פִים, vid., 14:29, where קְצֵר רוּח was the parallel of the contrast. The comparison is true as regards persons, with reference to the performances expressed, and (since warlike courage and moral self-control may be united in one person) they are properly those in which the טוב determines the moral estimate. In Pirke Aboth iv. 1, the question, “Who is the hero?” is answered by, “he who overcomes his desire,” with reference to this proverb, for that which is here said of the ruling over the passion of anger is true of all affections and passions. “Yet he who reigns within himself, and rules Passions, desires, and fears, is more a king; Which every wise and virtuous man attains.” On the other side, the comparison is suggested: Break your head, not so sore; Break your will—that is more.

Proverbs 16:33. The Tôra knows only in one instance an ordeal (a judgment of God) as a right means of proof, Num. 5:12–31. The lot is nowhere ordained by it, but its use is supported by a custom running parallel with the Mosaic law; it was used not only in private life, but also in manifold ways within the domain of public justice, as well as for the detection of the guilty, Josh. 7:14f., 1 Sam. 14:40–42. So that the proverb 18:18 says the same thing of the lot that is said in the Epistle to the Hebrews, 6:16, of the oath. The above proverb also explains the lot for an ordeal, for it is God who directs and orders it that it fall out thus and not otherwise. A particular sanction of the use of the lot does not lie in this, but it is only said, that where the lot is cast, all the decision that results from it is determined by God. That is in all cases true; but whether the challenging of the divine decision in such a way be right in this or that case is a question, and in no case would one, on the contrary, venture to make the person of the transgressor discoverable by lot, and let it decide regarding human life. But antiquity judged this matter differently, as e.g., the Book of Jonah (Jonah 1) shows; it was a practice, animated by faith, in God’s government of the world, which, if it did not observe the boundary between faith and superstition, yet stood high above the unbelief of the “Enlightenment.” Like the Greek κόλπος (from חֵיק, Arab. ḥaḳ, ḥaḳ, to encompass, to stretch out) means, as it is commonly taken, gremium as well as sinus, but the latter meaning is the more sure; and thus also here it is not the lap as the middle of the body, so that one ought to think on him who casts the lot as seated, but also not the lap of the garment, but, like 6:27, cf. Isa. 40:11, the swelling, loose, external part of the clothing covering the bosom (the breast), where the lot covered by it is thrown by means of shaking and changing, and whence it is drawn out. The construction of the passive הוּט ל( from טול = Arab. tail, to throw along) with the object accus. follows the old scheme, Gen. 4:18, and has its reason in this, that the Semitic passive, formed by the change of vowels, has not wholly given up the governing force of the active. מָלֵא signifies here decision as by the Urim and Thummim, Num. 27:21, but which was no lot-apparatus.

Proverbs 17:1. A comparative proverb with טוב, pairing with 16:32:

Better a dry piece of bread, and quietness therewith,

Than a house full of slain beasts with unquietness.

Similar to this in form and contents are 15:16f. and 16:8. פַת חֲרֵבָה is a piece of bread (ְתַפַּת, fem., as 23:8) without savoury drink (Theodotion, καθ᾽ ἑαυτόν, i.e., nothing with it), cf. Lev. 7:10, a meat-offering without the pouring out of oil. זְבָחִים are not sacrificial gifts (Hitzig), but, as always, slain animals, i.e., either offerings or banquets of slain beasts; it is the old name of the שֶׁלֶם (cf. Ex. 18:12; 24:5; Prov. 7:14), part of which only were offered on the altar, and part presented as a banquet; and זֶבָח (in contradist. to טֶבָח, 9:2, Gen. 43:16) denotes generally any kind of consecrated festival in connection with the worship of God, 1 Sam. 20:29; cf. Gen. 31:54. “Festivals of hatred” are festivals with hatred. אֵלָה is part. with object.- accus.; in general אֵלָה forms a constructive, מְלֵא occurs only once (Jer. 6:11), and מְלֵא not at all. We have already, 7:14, remarked on the degenerating of the shelamîm feasts; from this proverb it is to be concluded that the merriment and the excitement bordering on intoxication (cf. with Hitzig, 1 Sam. 1:13 and 3), such as frequently at the Kirmsen merry-makings (vid., p. 119), brought quarrels and strife, so that the poor who ate his dry bread in quiet peace could look on all this noise and tumult without envy.

2 A prudent servant shall rule over the degenerate son; And he divides the inheritance among the brethren.

Proverbs 17:2. Regarding the contrasts of מְשִׁיב and מְשִׁיב, vid., at 10:5; 14:35. The printed editions present בָּכָר מְשִׁיב in genit. connection: a son of the scandalous class, which is admissible (vid., p. 56 and p. 237); but Cod. 1294 and Cod.
Jaman, Erf. No. 2, 3, write הבן ובנה (with Tsere and Munach), and that is perhaps right, after 10:5; 17:25. The futures have here also a fut. signification: they say to what it will come. Grotius remarks, with reference to this: manumissus tutor filii reliqueuerit; tutorio officio. But if he is a conscientious, unselfish tutor, he will not enrich himself by property which belongs to another; and thus, though not without provision, he is yet without an inheritance. And yet the supplanting of the degenerate is brought about by this, that he loses his inheritance, and the intelligent servant steps into his place. Has one then to suppose that the master of the house makes his servant a co-heir with his own children, and at the same time names him as his executor? That were a bad anachronism. The idea of the διαθήκη was, at the time when this proverb was coined, one unknown—Israelitish iniquity knows only the intestate right of inheritance, regulated by lineal and gradual succession. Then, if one thinks of the degenerate son, that he is disowned by the father, but that the intelligent servant is not rewarded during the life of his master for his true services, and that, after the death of the master, to such a degree he possesses the esteem and confidence of the family, that he it is who divides the inheritance among the brethren, i.e., occupies the place amongst them of distributor of the inheritance, not: takes a portion of the inheritance, for עליך has not the double meaning of the Lat. participare; it means to divide, and may, with ذلك, mean “to give a part of anything” (Job 39:17); but, with the accus., nothing else than to distribute, e.g., Josh. 18:2, where it is to be translated: “whose inheritance had not yet been distributed (not yet given to them).” Jerome, haereditatem dividet; and thus all translators, from the LXX to Luther.

Proverbs 17:3. An emblematical proverb (vid., p. 8), which means that Jahve is for the heart what the smelting-pot (from קרן, to change, particularly to melt, to refine) is for silver, and what the smelting furnace (from נָאָב, רכComposite text property of the lips and the tongue (labium nequam, lingua perniciosa), on the side of that which it instrumentally aims at (cf. Ps. 36:4; 52:4): practising mischief, destructive plans. Beginning the second line is generally regarded as the subj. parallel with, as Luther, after Jerome, “A wicked man gives heed to wicked mouths, and a false man listens willingly to scandalous tongues.” It is possible that שקר denotes incarnate falsehood, as 12:27, incarnate slothfulness, cf. 14:25, and perhaps also 12:17; זיון, Ps. 58:2, Hosea, Mic. 6:9; Isa. 26:13, etc., where, without supplying איש (אשׁ), the property stands instead of the person possession that property. The clause, that falsehood listeneth to a deceitful tongue, means that he who listens to it characterizes himself thereby, according to the proverb, simile simili gaudet, as a liar. But only as a liar? The punctuation before us, which represents מ אֲזִין by Dechi as subj., or also pred., takes מ אֲזִין with מֵר as its governing word, and why should not that be the view intended? The representation of the obj. is an inversion less bold than Isa. 22:2; 8:22, and that here should not be so closely connected with the verb of hearing, as 4a lies near by this, that מ אֲזִין is elsewhere found, but not מ אֲזִין מֵזִין. Jewish interpreters, taking מ אֲזִין as obj., try some other meaning of מֵזִין than auscultans; but neither מ אֲזִין, to approach, nor מ אֲזִין, to arm (Venet. ψαλλεσται), gives a meaning suitable to this place. מ אֲזִין is equivalent to מ אֲזִין מ אֲזִין. As מ אֲזִין, Job 32:11, is contracted into מ אֲזִין, so must מ אֲזִין, if the character of the part. shall be preserved, become מ אֲזִין, mediated by מ אֲזִין.

5 He that mocketh the poor reproacheth his Maker; He that rejoiceth over calamity remains not unpunished.

Proverbs 17:5. Line first is a variation of 14:31a. God is, according to 22:2, the creator of the poor as well as of the rich. The poor, as a man, and as poor, is the work of God, the creator and governor of all things; thus, he who mocketh the poor, mocketh Him who called him into existence, and appointed him his lowly place. But in general, compassion and pity, and not joy (ἕνα ὄνομα, commonly with ἑαυτόν, of the person, e.g., Obad. v. 12, the usual formula for εἰπαρεκακία), is appropriate in the presence of misfortune (διενεκής, from δια, to be heavily burdened), for such joy, even if he on whom the misfortune fell were our enemy, is a peccatum mortale, Job 31:29f. There is indeed a hallowed joy at the actual revelation in history of the divine righteousness; but this would not be a hallowed joy if it were not united with deep sorrow over those who, accessible to no warning, have despised grace, and, by adding sin to sin, have provoked God’s anger.

Proverbs 17:6. With this verse this series of proverbs closes as it began: A diadem of the old are children’s children, And the glory of children are their parents. Children are a blessing from God (Ps. 127, 128); thus, a family circle consisting of children and grandchildren (including great-grandchildren) is as a crown of glory surrounding the grey-haired patriarch; and again, children have glory and honour in their parents, for to have a man of an honoured name, or of a blessed memory, as a father, is the most effective commendation, and has for the son, even though he is unlike his father, always important and beneficial consequences. In 6b a fact of experience is expressed, from which has proceeded the rank of inherited nobility recognised among men—one may abnegate his social rights, but yet he himself is and remains a part of the moral order of the world. The LXX has a distich after v. 4 [the Vatican text places it after v. 6]: “The whole world of wealth belongs to the faithful, but to the unfaithful not even an obolus.” Lagarde supposes that ἐκλεξεν ὁ κόσμος τῶν χρημάτων is a translation of שְׁפַיִת יָרָד, instead of שֵׁפַיִת יָרָד, 7a. But this ingenious conjecture does not amount to the regarding of this distich as a variation of v. 7.
The proverbs following, 7–10, appear to be united acrostically by the succession of the letters ש (ש, ש) and ת.

7 It does not become a fool to speak loftily, How much less do lying lips a noble!

Proverbs 17:7. As at Isa. 32:5f., נבָל and נדִיב are placed opposite to one another; the latter is the nobly magnanimous man, the former the man who thinks foolishly and acts profligately, whom it does not become to use lofty words, who thereby makes the impression of his vulgarity so much the more repulsive (cf. Job 2:10). שְׁפְּתִיֶּר (not יָתֶר, for the word belongs to those which retain their Pathach or Segol, in pausa) is neither elevated (soaring) (Ewald) nor diffuse (Jo. Ernst Jungius in Oetinger: lingua dicax ac sermonem ultra quam decorum verbis extendere solita), rather imperative (Bertheau), better presumptuous (Hitzig) words, properly words of superfluity, i.e., of superabundant self-consciousness and high pretension (cf. the transitive bearing of the Arab. watr with ὑβρίζειν, from ὑπέρ, Aryan upar, Job, p. 363). Rightly Meîri. שפת גאות ושררה. It produces a disagreeable impression, when a man of vulgar mind and of rude conduct, instead of keeping himself in retirement, makes himself of importance, and weighty in a shameless, impudent manner (cf. Ps. 12:9, where זֵלוּת, vilitas, in a moral sense); but yet more repulsive is the contrast, when a man in whom one is justified in expecting nobility of mind, in accordance with his life-position and calling, degrades himself by uttering deceitful words.

Regarding the א מ כ י, concluding a minori ad majus, we have already spoken at 11:31; 15:11. R. Ismael, in Bereschith Rabba, at 44:8, reckons ten such conclusions a minori ad majus in the Scriptures, but there are just as many quanto magis. The right accentuation (e.g., in Cod. 1294) is here א מיילא, transformed from א מיילא, according to Accentuationssystem, xviii. 2.

8 The gift of bribery appears a jewel to its receiver; Whitherso'er he turneth himself he acteth prudently.

Proverbs 17:8. How 8b is to be understood is shown by 1 Sam. 14:47, cf. josh. 1:7; the quoque se vertit, prudenter rem agit, has accordingly in both sentences the person meant by בְּעָלָיו as subject, not the gift (Hitzig), of which יָשְׁכוּל, “it maketh prosperous,” is not said, for means, used only of persons, prudent, and therefore successful, fortunate conduct. Such is said of him who has to give (Luther): he presses through with it whithersoever he turns. But the making of בְּעָלָיו the subj. does not accord with this: this means [gift] to one who has to give, appears to open doors and hearts, not merely as a golden key, it is truly such to him. Thus בשקל, as at 3:27, will be meant of him to whom the present is brought, or to whom a claim thereto is given. But שָׁשֶׁר means here not the gift of seasonable liberality (Zöckler), but, as always, the gift of bribery, i.e., a gift by which one seeks to purchase for himself (Prov. 17:23) preference on the part of a judge, or to mitigate the displeasure of a high lord (Prov. 21:14); here (for one does not let it depend merely on the faithfulness of another to his duty) it is that by which one seeks to secure an advantage to himself. The proverb expresses a fact of experience. The gift of bribery, to which, as to a well-known approved means, הרשד, refers, appears to him who receives and accepts it (Targ.) as a stone of pleasantness, a charming, precious stone, a jewel (Juwel from joie = gaudium); it determines and impels him to apply all his understanding, in order that he may reach the goal for which it shall be his reward. What he at first regarded as difficult, yea, impossible, that he now prudently carries out, and brings to a successful conclusion, wherever he turns himself, overcoming the seemingly insurmountable hindrances; for the enticement of the gift lifts him, as with a charm, above himself, for covetousness is a characteristic feature of human nature—pecuniae obediunt omnia (Eccles. 10:19, Vulg.).
9 He covereth transgressions who seeketh after love, And he who always brings back a matter separateth friends.

Proverbs 17:9. The pred. stands first in the simple clause with the order of the words not inverted. That מכסה פשע is also to be interpreted here as pred. (cf. 19a) is shown by 10:12, according to which love covereth all transgressions. We write מכסה פשע with Dag. forte conjunctivum of ב (as of ב in Ezek. 18:6), and Gaja with the Sheva, according to the Meth.-Setzung, § 37; the punctuation מכסה פשע also occurs. What the expression "to seek love" here means, is to be judged, with Hitzig, after Zeph. 2:3, 1 Cor. 14:1. It is in no case equivalent to seek to gain the love of another, rather to seek to preserve the love of men towards one another, but it is to be understood not after 9b, but after 10:12: he seeks to prove love who does not strike on the great bell when his neighbour has sinned however grievously against him, does not in a scandal-loving manner make much ado about it, and takes care not thereby to widen the breach between men who stand near to one another, but endeavours by a reconciling, soothing, rectifying influence, to mitigate the evil, instead of making it worse. He, on the contrary, who repeats the matter (שָנָה with ב of the obj., to come back with something, as 26:11), i.e., turns always back again to the unpleasant occurrence (Theodotion, δευτερῶν λόγοι; Symmachus, δευτερῶν λόγου, as Sir. 7:14; 19:7), divides friends (vid., 16:28), for he purposely fosters the strife, the disharmony, ill-will, and estrangement which the offence produced; while the noble man, who has love for his motive and his aim, by prudent silence contributes to bring the offence and the division which it occasioned into forgetfulness.
10 One reproof maketh more impression on a wise man Than if one reckoned a hundred to the fool

Proverbs 17:10. One of the few proverbs which begin with a future, vid., 12:26, p. 192. It expresses what influence there is in one reproof with a wise man (אֲבִיר, 8:9); is the reproof expressed by the post-bibl. admonitio, connected with warning. The verbal form δευτερῶν λόγῳ is the reading of the LXX and Syr. (סונראם נפער יעדנ פשע for they read נח תח תח תח, derived from Hiph. נחת; thus Luther: reproof alarms more the intelligent, but נח תח תח with ב of the obj. is not Hebr.; on the contrary, the reading of the LXX is in accordance with the usage of the language, and, besides, is suitable. It is, however, first to be seen whether the traditional text stands in need of this correction. As fut. Niph. נחת, apart from the ult. accent. to be expected, gives no meaning. Also if one derives it from נחת, to snatch away, to take away, it gives no appropriate thought; besides, נחת is construed with the object. accus., and the fut. Apoc., in itself strange here, must be pointed either נחת or נחת (after בִּתַּה, Lehrb. ii. p. 413). Thus נחת, as at Job 21:13, Jer. 21:13, will be fut. Kal of נחת = נחת, Ps. 38:3 (Theodotion, Targ., Kimchi). With this derivation, also, נחת is to be expected; the reference in the Handwörterbuch to Gesen. Lehrgebäude, § 51, 1, Anm. 1, where, in an extremely inadequate way, the retrogression of the tone (נסוג אחור) is spoken of, is altogether inappropriate to this place; and Böttcher’s explanation of the ult. tone from an intended expressiveness is ungrammatical; but why should not נחת, from נחת, with its first syllable originating from contraction, and thus having the tone be Milel as well as Milra, especially here, where it stands at the head of the sentence? With ב connected with it, נחת means: to descend into anything, to penetrate; Hitzig appropriately compares altius in pectus descendit of Sallust, Jug. 11. Jerome rightly, according to the sense: plus proficit, and the Venet. övéi (read övéi) övéi, το θύμωνα. In 10b מְׁשֻּלָח (cf. Deut. 25:3; 2 Cor. 11:24) is to be supplied to מַרְאֶה, not מַרְאֶה (an hundred times, which may be denoted correctly by מַרְאֶה, Eccles. 8:12). With the wise (says a Talmudic proverb) a sign does as much as with the fool a stick does. Zehner, in his Adagia sacra (1601), cites Curtius (vii. 4): Nobilis equus umbra quaque virgae regitur, ignavus ne calcari quidem concitari potest.

Five proverbs of dangerous men against whom one has to be on his guard:

11. The rebellious seeketh only after evil, And a cruel messenger is sent out against him.

Proverbs 17:11. It is a question what is subj. and what obj. in 11a. It lies nearest to look on מְׁרִי as subj., and this word (from מָרָה, stringere, to make oneself exacting against any, to oppose, □ נָרָה) is appropriate thereto; it occurs also at Ezek. 2:7 as abstr. pro concreto. That it is truly subj. appears from this, that מְׁרִי is, to seek after evil (cf. 29:10; 1 Kings 20:7, etc.), is a connection of idea much more natural than מְׁשֻּלָח [to seek after rebellion].

Thus מְׁשֻּלָח will be logically connected with מְׁרִי, and the reading מְׁשֻּלָח is to be preferred to the reading מְׁרִי (corresponding to the Arab. âinnama) belongs to those particles which are placed before the clause, without referring to the immediately following part of the sentence, for they are much more regarded as affecting the whole sentence (vid., 13:10): the rebellious strives after nothing but only evil. Thus, as neut. obj. מְׁשֻּלָח is rendered by the Syr., Targ., Venet., and Luther; on the contrary, the older Greek translators and Jerome regard מְׁשֻּלָח as the personal subject. If now, in reference to rebellion, the discourse is of a מְׁשֻּלָח אכזרי, we are not, with Hitzig, to think of the demon of wild passions unfettered in the person of the rebellious, for that is a style of thought and of expression that is modern, not biblical; but the old unpoetic yet simply true remark remains: Loquendi formula inde petita quod regis aut summi magistratus minister rebellii supplicium nunciat infiglatique. is n. officii, not naturae.

Man as a messenger, and the spiritual being as messenger, are both called מְׁשֻּלָח. Therefore one may not understand מְׁשֻּלָח אכזרי, with the LXX, Jerome, and Luther, directly and exclusively of an angel of punishment. If one thinks of Jahve as the Person against whom the rebellion is made, then the idea of a heavenly messenger lies near, according to Ps. 35:5f., 78:49; but the proverb is so meant, that it is not the less true if an earthly king sends out against a rebellious multitude a messenger with an unlimited commission, or an officer against a single man dangerous to the state, with strict directions to arrest him at all hazards. We had already at 12:10; the root מְשֻּלָח means, to be dry, hard, without feeling. The fut. does not denote what may be done (Bertheau, Zöckler), which is contrary to the parallelism, the order of the words, and the style of the proverb, but what is done. And the relation of the clause is not, as Ewald interprets it, “scarcely does the sedition seek out evil when an inexorable messenger is sent.” Although this explanation is held by Ewald as “unimprovable,” yet it is incorrect, because מְשֻּלָח in this sense demands, e.g., Gen. 27:3, the perf. (strengthened by the infin. intensivus). The relation of the clause is, also, not such as Böttcher has interpreted it: a wicked man tries only scorn though a stern messenger is sent against him, but not because such a messenger is called מְשֻּלָח אכזרי, against whom this “trying of scorn” helps nothing, so that it is not worth being spoken of; besides, מְשֻּלָח אכזרי would have been used if this relation had been intended. We have in 11a and 11b, as also e.g., at 26:24; 28:1, two clauses standing in internal reciprocal relation, but syntactically simply co-ordinated; the force lies in this, that a messenger who recognises no mitigating circumstances, and offers no pardon, is sent out against such an one.
12. Meet a bear robbed of one of her whelps, only not a fool in his folly.

Proverbs 17:12. The name of the bear, as that of the cow, Job 21:10, Ps. 144:14, preserves its masculine form, even when used in reference to sexual relationship (Ewald, § 174b); the ursa catulis orbata is proverbially a raging beast.
How the abstract expression of the action has on the last syllable of Mehuppach, and Zinnorith on the preceding open syllable (according to the rule, Accentssystem, vi. § 5d). Indeed, in the state of his folly, i.e., when he is in a paroxysm of his ger, corresponds with the conditional nounadjetive ἀφιεῖς, for folly morbidly heightened is transitively, like Arab.

is certain: it means to break forth; and proverb says: thus conditioned is the beginning of a strife.
Then follows the warning to let go such strife (with the article used in the more elevated style, not without emphasis), to break from it, to separate it from oneself ere it reach a dangerous height. This is expressed by פָט רֵאשִית מָדון, a verb occurring only here and at 18:1; 20:3, always in the Hithpa. The Targum (misunderstood by Gesenius after Buxtorf; vid., to the contrary, Levy, under the word ἐπονείδιστος ἔσται) translates it at 18:1; 20:3, as the Syr., by “to mock,” also Aquila, who has at 20:3, ὑπονείδησον ἔσται, and the LXX at 18:1, ἐπονείδησον ἔσται, and Jerome, who has this in all the three passages, render the Hithpa. in this sense, passively. In this passage before us, the Targ., as Hitzig gives it, translates, “before it heat itself,” but that is an error occasioned by Buxtorf; vid., on the contrary, Levy, under the word ἐπονείδιστος κύριος (κύριος); this translation, however, has a representative in Haja Gaon, who appeals for a Grace Notes study to the free use of the p

If ingratitude appertains to the sinful manifestations of ignoble selfishness, how much more sinful still is black ingratitude, Proverbs 17:13. If ingratitude appertains to the sinful manifestations of ignoble selfishness, which recompenses evil for good! (Ps. 17:5, with the subj. following, must sound as finite (occurrat, may always meet), follows from = (non autem occurrat), thus conditioned is the beginning of a strife.

one who tears away the dam from the waters.
And if one sows,
proverb says: thus conditioned is the beginning of a strife, viz., unfetters); but the part is used as at 10:17: one who unfetters the water is the beginning of strife, i.e., he is thus related to it as when one ... This is an addition to the free use of the part. in the language of the Mishna, where one would expect the infin. e.g., בְׁזָדון (בְׁזָדון), if one sows, of wantonness. It is thus unnecessary, with Ewald, to interpret as neut., which lets water go = a water-outbreak; פוטר is meant personally; it represents one who breaks through a water-dam, draws the restraint of the water, then opens a sluice, and then emblematically the proverb says: thus conditioned is the beginning of a strife.

14. As one letteth out water is the beginning of a strife; But cease thou from such strife ere it comes to showing teeth.

Proverbs 17:14. The meaning of this verb פָט רֵאשִית מָדון is certain: it means to break forth; and transitively, like Arab.

fear, to bring forth from a cleft, to make to break forth, to let go free Theodotion, ἀποκλών; Jerome, dimittit; Venet.
וסֶפֶת. The LXX, since it translates by έξοικεῖαν diōsos, thinks on the juristic signification, which occurring in the Chronicles: to make free, or to declare so; but here (vid., regarding the Metheg at 14:31, p. 225) is, as Luther translates,
“before thou art mingled therein.” But all these explanations of the word: insultare, excandescere, and commisceri, are etymologically inadmissible. Bertheau’s and Zöckler’s “roll itself forth” is connected at least with a meaning rightly belonging to the R. גל. But the Arab. shows, that not the meaning volvere, but that of retegere is to be adopted. Aruch for Nidda viii. 2 refers to the Arab., where a wound is designated as יָכְלוּ לְׁהִגָּלֵע  ולהוציא דם, i.e., as breaking up, as it were, when the crust of that which is nearly healed is broken off (Maimuni glosses the word by להתקלף, were uncrusted), and blood again comes forth. The meaning retegere requires here, however, another distinction. The explanation mentioned there by Aruch: before the strife becomes public to thee, i.e., approaches thee, is not sufficient. The verbal stem גלע is the stronger גלה, and means laying bare; but here, not as there, in the Mishna of a wound covered with a crust. The Arab. גל, means to quarrel with another, properly to show him the teeth, the Poël or the tendency -stem from גל, to have the mouth standing open, so that one shows his teeth; and the Syr. glas, with its offshoots and derivatives, has also this meaning of ringi, opening the mouth to show, i.e., to make bare the teeth. Schultens has established this explanation of the words, and Gesenius further establishes it in the Thesaurus, according to which Fleischer also remarks, “גלע, of showing the teeth, the exposing of the teeth by the wide opening of the mouth, as happens in bitter quarrels.” But Hitzig does not agree with this. Hitzig’s translation, “before the strife shows its teeth,” is as modern as in v. 11 is the passion of the unfettered demon, and Fleischer’s prius vero quam exacerbetur rixa renders the Hithpa. in a sense unnecessarily generalized for 18:1 and 20:3. The accentuation, which separates הריב נטוש from ריב נטוש, is correct. One may translate, as Schultens, antequam dentes stringantur, or, since the Hithpa. has sometimes a reciprocal signification, e.g., Gen. 42:1, Ps. 41:8: ere one reciprocally shows his teeth, Hitzig unjustly takes exception to the inversion הריב נטוש. Why should not the object precede, as at Hos. 12:15, the胄, placed with emphasis at the end? The same inversion for a like reason occurs at Eccles. 5:6.

15 He that acquitteth the guilty and condemneth the righteous— An abomination to Jahve are they both. Proverbs 17:15. The proverb is against the partisan judge who is open to bribery, like 24:24, cf. Isa. 5:23, where, with reference to such, the announcement of punishment is emphatically made. רע and לפש, in a forensic sense, are equivalent to sons (reus) and insons. גל, (cf. the Arab. jmy’na, altogether, but particularly the Pers. ham and the Turkish dkhy standing wholly thus in the numeral) is here, as at Gen. 27:45, equivalent to י חְׁדָיו, Jer. 46:12 (in its unions = united). Whoever pronounces sentence of justification on the guilty, appears as if he must be judged more mildly than he who condemns the guiltless, but both the one and the other alike are an abhorrence to God.

We take vv. 16–21 together. This group beings with a proverb of the heartless, and ends with one of the perverse-hearted; and between these there are not wanting noticeable points of contact between the proverbs that follow one another.

16 Why the ready money in the hand of the fool; To get wisdom when he has yet no heart? Proverbs 17:16. The question is made pointed by הז, thus not: why the ready money when ...? Is it to obtain wisdom?—the whole is but one question, the reason of which is founded in הריב נטוש (thus to be accented with Mugrash going before). The fool, perhaps, even makes some endeavours, for he goes to the school of the wise, to follow out their admonitions, קְנֵה חָכָה (Prov. 4:5, etc.), and it costs him something (Prov. 4:7), but all to no purpose, for he has no heart. By this it is not meant that knowledge, for which he pays his honorarium, remains, it may be, in his head, but goes not to his heart, and thus becomes an unfruitful theory; but the heart is equivalent to the understanding (vid., p. 127), in the sense in which the heart appears as the previous condition to the attainment of wisdom (Prov. 18:15), and as something to be gained before all (Prov. 15:32), viz., understanding, as the fitting intellectual and practical habitus to the reception, the appropriation, and realization of wisdom, the ability rightly to comprehend the fulness of the communicated knowledge, and to adopt it as an independent possession, that which the Greek called νοῦς, as in that "golden proverb" of Democrats: πολλοὶ πολυμαθέες νοῦν οὐκ ἔχουσι, or as in Luke 24:25, where it is said that the Lord opened τὸν νοῦν of His disciples to understand the Scriptures. In the LXX a distich follows v. 16, which is made up of 19b and 20b, and contains a varied translation of these two lines.

17 At all times the right friend shows himself loving; And as a brother is he born for adversity.

Proverbs 17:17. Brother is more than friend, he stands to one nearer than a friend does, Ps. 35:14; but the relation of a friend may deepen itself into a spiritual, moral brotherhood, 18:24, and there is no name of friend that sounds dearer than אָחִי, 2 Sam. 1:26. 17a and 17b are, according to this, related to each other climactically. The friend meant in 17a is a true friend. Of no other is it said that he loves בְׁכָל־עֵת, i.e., makes his love manifest; and also the article in בְׁצָרָה not only here gives to the word more body, but stamps it as an ideal-word: the friend who corresponds to the idea of such an one. The inf. of the Hiph., in the sense "to associate" (Ewald), cannot therefore be בָּרֵעָה, but from רָעָה. Thus there exists no contrast between 17a and 17b, so that the love of a friend is thought of, in contradistinction to that of a brother, as without permanency (Fl); but 17b means that the true friend shows himself in the time of need, and that thus the friendship becomes closer, like that between brothers. The statements do not refer to two kinds of friends; this is seen from the circumstance that הָרֵעָה has not the article, as רָעָה has. It is not the subj. but pred., as בָּרֵעָה, Job 11:12: sooner is a wild ass born or born again as a man. The meaning of מְלֶדֶנּ is not equivalent to מְלַדְהַד (cf. Ps. 9:10; 10:1), for the interchange of the prep. in 17a and 17b would then be without any apparent reason. But Hitzig’s translation also: as a brother he is born of adversity, is impossible, for הַנָּלָד always designates that for which the birth is an advantage, not that from which it proceeds. Thus הַנָּלָד will be that of the purpose: for the purpose of the need,—not indeed to suffer (Job 5:7) on account of it, but to bear it in sympathy, and to help to bear it. Rightly Fleischer: frater autem ad aerumnam (sc. levandam et removendam) nascitur. The LXX gives this sense to the הַנָּלָד, ἀδελφοὶ δὲ ἐν ἀνάγκαις ἄνευχαις χρήσιμοι ἐστοσαν τοῦτο γὰρ χάριν γεννώντας. 18 A man void of understanding is he who striketh hands, Who becometh surety with his neighbour.

Proverbs 17:18. Cf. 6:1–5, where the warning against suretyship is given at large, and the reasons for it are adduced. It is incorrect to translate (Gesen., Hitzig, and others) מְלָדֵנּ לְרָעָה, with the LXX, Jerome, the Syr., Targ., and Luther, “for his neighbour;” to become surety for any one is רָעָה, 6:1, or, with the object. accus. 11:15, another suitable prep. is בְׁעֵד, but never means pro (inœp), for at 1 Sam. 1:16 it means “to the person,” and 2 Sam. 3:31, “before Abner’s corpse (bier).” רָעָה is thus here the person with whom the suretyship is entered into; he can be called the רָעָה of him who gives bail, so much the more as the reception of the bail supposes that both are well known to each other. Here also Fleischer rightly translates: apud alterum (sc. creditor pro debitore).

19 He loveth sin who loveth strife; He who maketh high his doors seeketh destruction.

Proverbs 17:19. A synthetic distich (vid., p. 9). Böttcher finds the reason of the pairing of these two lines in the relationship between a mouth and a door (cf. Mic. 7:6, פִתְׁחֵי פִי). Hitzig goes further, and supposes that 19b figuratively expresses what boastfulness brings upon itself. Against Geier, Schultens, and others, who understand פִתְׁחו directly of the mouth, he rightly remarks that הִגְׁבִיה פֶה is not heard of, and that הִגְדוּל פֶה would be used instead. But the two lines harmonize, without this interchangeable reference of os and ostium.

Zanksucht [quarrelsomeness] and Prunksucht [ostentation] are related as the symptoms of selfishness. But both bear their sentence in themselves. He who has pleasure in quarrelling has pleasure in evil, for he commits himself to the way of great sinning, and draws others along with him; and he who cannot have the door of his house high enough and splendid enough, prepares thereby for himself, against his will, the destruction of his house. An old Hebrew proverb says, הָלָה וּלְּתוּגָה לו, as at Isa. 66:3, מָעָל, (Fl: in maerorem sibi genuit h. e. ideo videtur genuisse ut sibi maerorem crearet); but not less admissible is it to interpret הָלָה וּלְּתוּגָה לו as a noun-clause corresponding to the הָלָה וּלְּתוּגָה לו (thus to be written with Makkeph): it brings grief to him. According as one understands this as an expectation, or as a consequence, נָבָל, as at 23:24, is rendered either qui gignit or qui genuit. With נָבָל, seldom occurring in the Book of Proverbs (only here and at v. 7), as at 23:24, is rendered either qui gignit or qui genuit. With נָבָל, seldom occurring in the Book of Proverbs (only here and at v. 7), as at 23:24, is rendered either qui gignit or qui genuit. Schultens rightly defines the latter a broken spirit drieth the bones.

Proverbs 17:22. The heart is the centre of the individual life, and the condition and the tone of the heart communicates itself to this life, even to its outermost circumsphere; the spirit is the power of self-consciousness which, according as it is lifted up or broken, also lifts up or breaks down the condition of the body (Psychol.
p. 199), vid., the similar contrasted phrases לָבַח, מְזוֹר, רָעָה, חֵקָה, 15:13. The ἀπ. λευ. (here and there in Codd. incorrectly written גְּוָה) has nothing to do with the Arab. jihat, which does not mean sight, but direction, and is formed מִכֶּם מָזור; and heale בַּרְנַחְנוֹת, from בַּרְנָחַנָה, 8:22; it means the removing of the bandage and itself; and closing up the ulcer, then also the ulcer wound.

אְלֶפֶתִּיוֹתָה, מֵחֵק, מַעֲבֶרֶד, and healed not for you her ulcerous wound. מַעֲבֶרֶד is the compress, i.e., the bandage closing up the ulcer, then also the ulcer-wound itself; and מַעֲבֶרֶד is the contrary of מַעֲבֶרֶד, e.g., Jer.
8:22; it means the removing of the bandage and the healing of the wound. This is confirmed by the Syr. gho, which in like manner is construed with min, and means to be delivered from something (vid., Bernstein’s Lex. Syr. to Kirsch’s Chrestomathie). The Aethiop. quadriliteral gâghêh, to hinder, to cause to cease, corresponds to the causative Syr. agahish.
Accordingly מַעֲבֶרֶד, מְזוֹר means to be in the condition of abatement, mitigation, healing; and מַעֲבֶרֶד (as synonym of מַעֲבֶרֶד, Neh. 3:19, with which Parchon combines it), levamen, levatio, in the sense of bodily healing (LXX ἀγαθύνει θεραπείαν; Venet., after Kimchi, ἀγαθύνει θεραπείαν); and מֵחֵק (cf.
15:2) denotes, to bring good improvement, to advance powerfully the recovery. Schultens compares the Arab. jahy, nitesere, disserenari, as Menahem has done מֵחֵק, but this word is one of the few words which are explained exclusively from the Syriac (and Aethiop.). מֵחֵק here and at 25:15 is the word interchanging לָבַח, 15:30; 16:24.

23 Bribery from the bosom the godless receiveth, To pervert the ways of justice.

Proverbs 17:23. Regarding שֹחֵד, vid., 17:8. The idea of this word, as well as the clause containing the purpose, demand for the כָּלָה a high judicial or administrative post. The bosom, כָּלָה, is, as 16:23, that of the clothing. From the bosom, מִכְלָס, where it was kept concealed, the gift is brought forth, and is given into the bosom, כָּלָה, 21:14, of him whose favour is to be obtained—an event taking place under four eyes, which purposely withdraws itself from the observation of any third person. Since this is done to give to the course of justice a direction contrary to rectitude, the giver of the bride has not right on his side; and, under the circumstances, the favourable decision which he purchases may be at once the unrighteous sentence of a רִשׁוּא, accusing him, or accused by him, 18:5.

24 The understanding has his attention toward wisdom; But the eyes of a fool are on the end of the earth.

Proverbs 17:24. Many interpreters explain, as Euchel: “The understanding finds wisdom everywhere; The eyes of the fool seek it at the end of the world.”

Ewald refers to Deut. 30:11–14 as an unfolding of the same thought. But although it may be said of the fool (vid., on the contrary, 15:14) that he seeks wisdom, only not at the right place, as at 14:6, of the mocker that he seeks wisdom but in vain, yet here the order of the words, as well as the expression, lead us to another thought: before the eyes of the understanding (אַשָּׁר אֵדֶת יָדָּו, e.g., 1 Sam. 1:22) wisdom lies as his aim, his object, the end after which he strives; on the contrary, the eyes of the fool, without keeping that one necessary thing in view, wander in alia omnia, and roam about what is far off, without having any fixed object. The fool is everywhere with his thoughts, except where he ought to be. Leaving out of view that which lies nearest, he loses himself in aliens. The understanding has an ever present theme of wisdom, which arrests his attention, and on which he concentrates himself; but the fool flutters about fantastically from one thing to another, and that which is to him precisely of least importance interests him the most.

The series of proverbs, v. 25–18:2, begins and closes in the same way as the preceding, and only v. 26 stands by itself without apparent connection.

Proverbs 17:25. This verse begins connecting itself with v. 21: A grief to his father is a foolish son, and a bitter woe for her that bare him.

The אַלֹֽקְהַּ is formed from פָּרִי (to be bitter, properly harsh), as כָּסָּס from כָּס (μετάκτω μετάκτω). The Syr. and Targ. change the subst. into participles; some codd. also have כָּסָּס (μετάκτω μετάκτω), but as may be expected in 25a, כָּסָּס. The dat. obj. instead of the accus. may be possible; the verse immediately following furnishes a sufficient example of this.

This verse begins connecting itself with the preceding, and only v. 26 stands by itself without apparent connection.

Proverbs 17:26. Does the בֵּן [also] refer to a connection from which the proverb is separated? or is it tacitly supposed that there are many kinds of worthless men in the world, and that one from among them is brought forward? or is it meant, that to lay upon the righteous a pecuniary punishment is also not good? None of all these. The proverb must have a meaning complete in itself; and if pecuniary punishment and corporeal punishment were regarded as opposed to one another, 26b would then have begun with אֱבֹד יֹשֶר (quanto magis percutere ingenuos). Here it is with בֵּן as at 20:11, and as with בֵּן at 11a, and בֵּן at 13:10: according to the sense, it belongs not to the word next following, but to אֶת פְּנֵי, and (whence inf. בֵּן, as 21:11, with the בֵּן in, cf. also אֲבֹד, 11:10, for בֵּן) means here not specially to inflict a pecuniary fine, but generally to punish, for, as in mulctare, the meaning is generalized, elsewhere with the accus., Deut. 22:19, here to give to any one to undergo punishment. The ruler is the servant of God, who has to preserve rectitude, εἰς θρόνον τοῦ κακοῦ πράσσουντι (Rom. 13:14). It is not good when he makes his power to punish to be felt by the innocent as well as by the guilty.

26 Also to inflict punishment on the righteous is not good; This, that one overthrows the noble on account of his rectitude.

Proverbs 17:25. does not mean κατά προστάγματος (Symmachus), but εἰπε προστάγματι (LXX and Theod.), on the ground of right = praetextu juris (Vatabl.). Thus עליך does not mean here neither against nor beyond what is due, but: on the ground of honourable conduct, making this (of course mistakenly) a lawful title to punishment; Aquila, ἐπί εὐθύτητα, cf. Matt. 5:10, ἔνεκαν δικαίωσίνς. Besides, for יְקָר רָרוּח, the causal signification lies nearest Num. 22:32, cf. Isa. 1:5 (עלפיים, on account of anything). If the power of punishment is abused to the punishing of the righteous, yea, even to the corporeal chastisement of the noble, and their straight, i.e., conscientious, firm, open conduct, is made a crime against them, that is not good—it is perversion of the idea of justice, and an iniquity which challenges the penal rectitude of the Most High (Eccles. 5:7 [8]).

Proverbs 17:27. He that keepeth his words to himself hath knowledge, And the cool of temper is a man of understanding.

Proverbs 17:28. Ver. 28 continues the same theme, the value of silence: Even a fool, when he keeps silence, is counted wise; When he shutteth his mouth, discreet.

Proverbs 18:1. This series of proverbs now turns from the fool to the separatist: The separatist seeketh after his own pleasure; Against all that is beneficial he showeth his teeth.

The reflexive יֵפִּר דִּמְנְעָה has here the same meaning as the Rabbinical וַיִּפֶר מִן־הַצִּבּוּר, to separate oneself from the congregation, Aboth ii. 5; יִפֶר דּוֹכִּ ל depicts a man who separates himself, for he follows his own counsel, Arab. mnfrd (mtfrd brâyh, or jhys almhlh seorsum ab aliis secedens). Instead of יִפֶר דּוֹכִּ ל, Hitzig, after Jerome, adopts the emendation יָד ע דו ת, “after an occasion” (a pretext), and by נפרד thinks of one pushed aside, who, thrown into opposition, seeks to avenge himself. But his translation of 1b, “against all that is fortunate he gnasheth his teeth,” shows how much the proverb is opposed to this interpretation. נִפְרָד denotes one who willingly (Judg. 4:11), and, indeed, obstinately withdraws himself. The construction of יְׁבַקֵשׁ with ל (also Job 10:6) is explained by this, that the poet, giving prominence to the object, would set it forward: a pleasure (תאוה, as Arab. havan, unstable and causeless direction of the mind to something, pleasure, freak, caprice), and nothing else, he goes after who has separated himself (Fl); the effort of the separatist goes out after a pleasure, i.e., the enjoyment and realization of such; instead of seeking to conform himself to the law and ordinance of the community, he seeks to carry out a separate view, and to accomplish some darling plan: libidinem sectatur sui cerebri homo. With this 1b accords. וָשָׂה (vid., at 2:7) is concretely that which furthers and profits. Regarding וָשָׂה, vid., at 17:14. Thus putting his subjectivity in the room of the common weal, he shows his teeth, places himself in fanatical opposition against all that is useful and profitable in the principles and aims, the praxis of the community from which he separates himself. The figure is true to nature: the polemic of the schismatic and the sectary against the existing state of things, is for the most part measureless and hostile.

3 If a godless man cometh, then cometh also contempt; And together with disgrace, shame.

Proverbs 18:3. J. D. Michaelis, and the most of modern critics, read רעש; then, contempt etc., are to be thought of as the consequences that follow godlessness; for that קלון means (Hitzig) disgracefulness, i.e., disgraceful conduct, is destitute of proof; קלון always means disgrace as an experience. But not only does the Masoretic text punctuate רעש, but also all the old translators, the Greek, Aramaic, and Latin, have done so. And is it on this account, because a coming naturally seems to be spoken of a person? The “pride cometh, then cometh shame,” 11:2, was in their recollection not less firmly, perhaps, than in ours. They read רעש, because והボー does not fittingly designate the first of that which godlessness effects, but perhaps the first of that which proceeds from it. Therefore we adhere to the opinion, that the proverb names the fiends which appear in the company of the godless wherever he goes, viz., first והボー, contempt (Ps. 31:19), which places itself haughtily above all due subordination, and reverence, and forbearance; and then, with the disgrace [turpitude], קלון, which attaches itself to those who meddle with him (Isa. 22:18), there is united the shame, הרפה (Ps. 39:9), which he has to suffer from him who has only always expected something better from him. Fleischer understands all the three words intelligence, but (בראשית; according to Ben-Naphtali, רעיון) only that his heart, i.e., the understanding which he thinks that he already possesses, may reveal itself, show itself publicly. He thinks thereby to show himself in his true greatness, and to render a weighty service to the world. This loquacity of the fool, proceeding from self-satisfaction, without self-knowledge, has already, 12:23, and often, been reprimanded. The group beginning with v. 3 terminates in two proverbs (vv. 6 and 7), related to the concluding verse of the foregoing:

2 The fool hath no delight in understanding; But only that his heart may reveal itself therein.

Proverbs 18:2. The verb חפץ forms the fut. יֶחְפַץ as well as יָחְפֹץ; first the latter from חָפֵץ, with the primary meaning, to bow, to bend down; then both forms as intransitive, to bend oneself to something, to be inclined to something, Arab. 'if' (Fl.). וּבִיאָהוּ is here the intelligence which consists in the understanding of one’s own deficiency, and of that which is necessary to meet it. The inclination of the fool goes not out after such in the passive sense, and remarks, “עם קלון, a more artificial expression for קלון וחרפה, in the Turkish quite common for the copula wâw, e.g., swylh tbrâḳ, earth and water, ḥwrtlyh ār, the man and the woman.” But then the expression would be tautological; we understand בוז and חרפָה of that which the godless does to others by his words, and קלון of that which he does to them by his conduct. By this interpretation, עם is more than the representative of the copula.

4 Deep waters are the words from a man’s mouth. A bubbling brook, a fountain of wisdom. Proverbs 18:4. Earlier, we added to hominis the supplement sc. sapientis, but then an unnecessary word would be used, and that which is necessary omitted. Rather it might be said that איש is meant in an ideal sense; but thus meant, איש, like גֶבֶר, denotes the valiant man, but not man as he ought to be, or the man of honour; and besides, a man may be a man of honour without there being said of him what this proverb expresses. Ewald comes nearer the case when he translates, “deep waters are the heart-words of many.” Heart-words—what an unbiblical expression! The LXX, which translates λόγος ἐν καρδίᾳ, has not read דברי לב (as 20:5, עֵצָה־בְּלֶב). But that “of many” is certainly not a right translation, yet right in so far as איש is thought of as made prominent; the proverb expresses, in accordance with the form of narrative proverbs which present an example, what occurs in actual life, and is observed. Three different things are said of the words from a man’s mouth: they are deep waters, for their meaning does not lie on the surface, but can be perceived only by penetrating into the secret motives and aims of him who speaks; they are a bubbling brook, which freshly and powerfully gushes forth to him who feels this flow of words, for in this brook there never fails an always new gush of living water; it is a fountain or well of wisdom, from which wisdom flows forth, and whence wisdom is to be drawn. Hitzig supposes that the distich is antithetic; בוז and חרפָה, or rather יִם עֲמֻקִים, “waters of the deep,” are cistern waters; on the contrary, “a welling brook is a fountain of wisdom.” But ים means deep, not deepened, and deep water is the contrast of shallow water; a cistern also may be deep (cf. 22:14), but deep water is such as is deep, whether it be in the ocean or in a dit.

5 To favour the person of the godless is not good, And to oppress the righteous in judgment. Proverbs 18:5. As v. 4 has one subject, so v. 5 has one predicate. The form is the same as 17:26.Israeli (cf. 24:23), προσωποληψία, acceptio personae, is this, that one accepts the פני, i.e. the personal appearance of any one (πρόσωπον λαμβάνει), i.e., regards it as acceptable, respectable, agreeable, which is a thing in itself not wrong; but in a judge who ought to determine according to the facts of the case and the law, it becomes sinful partiality. The וָטֹת, in a forensic sense, with the accus. of the person, may be regarded in a twofold way: either as a turning aside, מִדִinning, Isa. 10:2, from following and attaining unto the right, or as an oppression, for the phrase הִטָה מִשְׁפָט [to pervert justice] (cf. 17:23) is transferred to the person who experiences the oppression = perversion of the law; and this idea perhaps always underlies the expression, wherever, as e.g., Mal. 3:5, no addition brings with it the other. Under 17:15 is a fuller explanation of לֹא־טוֹב.

6 The lips of the fool engage in strife, And his mouth calleth for stripes.

Proverbs 18:6. We may translate: the lips of the fool cause strife, for וְּהֵם יֹרְדוּ אֶל הַרְעָם—deglutire. But Böttcher’s explanation also: “as swallowed down, because spoken with reserve,” proceeds, like those others, from the supposed syntactically fine yet false supposition, that 8b is an antithetic “dennoch” [tamen]. In that case the poet would have written לָהּם (cf. אָהָנ, as the beginning of a conditional clause, 3:29; 23:3). But with the finite following, introduces neither here nor at Deut. 33:3, Judg. 20:34, Ps. 95:10, cf. Gen. 43:23, a conditional clause. Thus 8b continues the clause 8a by one standing on the same line; and thus we do not need to invent a meaning for לָהּם, which forms a contrast to the penetrating into the innermost parts. The relation of the parts of the proverb is rightly given by Luther: The words of the slanderer are stripes, And they go through the heart of one.

Proverbs 18:7. As v. 6 corresponds to 17:27 of the foregoing group, so this v. 7 corresponds to 17:28. Regarding מְחִתָה—iatorum, vid., 13:3. Instead of מְחִתָה מְסִיל, according to Torath Emeth, p. 40, Cod. 1294, and old editions.

A pair of proverbs regarding the flatterer and the slothful:

8 The words of the flatter are as dainty morsels, And they glide down into the innermost parts.

Proverbs 18:8. An “analogy, with an epexegetis in the second member” (Fl.), which is repeated in 26:22. Ewald, Bertheau, Hitzig, and others, are constrained to interpret רִפה as introducing a contrast, and in this sense they give to מְתַלְמוּת all kinds of unwarrantable meanings. Ewald translates: a burning (לָהּם, cogn.), and offers next: as whispering (לָהּם, cogn. רַפְאָה; Ch. B. Michaelis, Bertheau, and others: as sporting (לָהּם, cogn. Arab. hillam, flaccus, laxus). All these interpretations are without support. The word לָהּם has none of all these significations; it means, as the Arab. lahima warrants, deglutire. But Böttcher’s explanation also: “as swallowed down, because spoken with reserve,” proceeds, like those others, from the supposed syntactically fine yet false supposition, that 8b is an antithetic “dennoch” [tamen]. In that case the poet would have written לָהּם (cf. אָהָנ, as the beginning of a conditional clause, 3:29; 23:3). But with the finite following, introduces neither here nor at Deut. 33:3, Judg. 20:34, Ps. 95:10, cf. Gen. 43:23, a conditional clause. Thus 8b continues the clause 8a by one standing on the same line; and thus we do not need to invent a meaning for לָהֵם, which forms a contrast to the penetrating into the innermost parts. The relation of the parts of the proverb is rightly given by Luther: The words of the slanderer are stripes, And they go through the heart of one.

Proverbs 18:8. He interprets אתִית וִיה as transposed from אתִית (Rashi and others); but stripes cannot be called מְתַלְמוּת—they are called, 6b, מְתַלְמוּת. This interpretation of the word has always more support than that of Symmachus: ὡς ἀκέραιοι; Jerome: quasi simplicia; Aquila, xxvi. 22: γοητκιοί; which last, as also that of Capellus, Clericus, and Schultens: quasi numine quodam afflata, seems to support itself on the Arab. āhn iv. inspirare. But in reality āhn does not mean afflare; it means deglutire, and nothing else. The Jewish lexicographers offer nothing worth considering;
Kimchi’s, according to which the Venet. translates μαλθακιζόμενων, is fanciful; for the Talm. הלך, striking = hitting, suitable, standing well, furnishes no transition to “smooth” and “soft.” Immanuel compares ἁθμ = בָּלִית; and Schultens, who is followed by Gesenius and others, has already, with perfect correctness, explained: tanquam quae avidissime inglutiantur. Thus also Fleischer: things which offer themselves to be eagerly gulped down, or which let themselves be thus swallowed. But in this way can one be truly just to the Hithpa.? The Arab. àltm (stronger form, àltkm, according to which van Dyk translates ῦκθλ ὑκάμ ἥλωτ, like sweet morsels) means to swallow into oneself, which is not here appropriate. The Hithpa. will thus have here a passive signification: things which are greedily swallowed. Regarding לִירָגְּנ from רָגְּנ, vid., at 16:28. הבינ is the obj. accus. (cf. 1:12) instead of with הלא, 7:27. penetralia, we had already at 7:27; the root-word is (Arab.) ḥdr, to seclude, to conceal, different from ḥdr, demittere, and ḥkhr (cogn. ḥוֹר), to finish, circumire. בֶּטֶן is the inner part of the body with reference to the organs lying there, which mediate not only the life of the body, but also that of the mind,—in general, the internal part of the personality. The LXX does not translate this proverb, but has in its stead 19:15, in a different version, however, from that it gives there; the Syr. and the Targ. have thereby been drawn away from the Hebr. text.

9 He also who showeth himself slothful in his business, is a brother to him who proceedeth to destroy.

The Hithpa. התרפה signifies here, as at 24:10, to show oneself slack, lazy, negligent. מְלָאכָה is properly a commission for another, as a king has a messenger, ambassador, commissioner to execute it; here, any business, whether an undertaking in commission from another, or a matter one engages in for himself. He who shows himself slack therein, produces in is way, viz., by negligence, destruction, as truly as the בָּלַע מִשְׁחִית, who does it directly by his conduct. Thus one is named, who is called, or who has his own delight in it, to destroy or overthrow. Jerome, incorrectly limiting: sua opera dissipant. Hitzig well compares Matt. 12:30. In the variation, 28:24b, the destroyer is called אִישׁ מִשְׁחִית, the connection of the words being adjct.; on the contrary, the connection of הבָּלע מִשְׁחִית is genit. (cf. 22:24; 23:2, etc.), for מִשְׁחִית as frequently means that which destroys = destruction. Von Hofmann (Schriftbew. ii. 2, 403) understands איש מ is the name of the street robber, of the captain of robbers; but the designation for the latter must be שָׁן מ, though at 1 Kings 11:24 he is called by the name שֶׁר מ. The form of the word in the proverb here is more original than at 38:24. There [companion] is used, here אָח [brother], a general Semitic name of him who, or of that which, is in any way related to another, cf. Job 30:29. Fleischer compares the Arab. proverb: ḥšbht ḥkt ḥkhtyât, scepticism is the sister of sin.

Two proverbs, of the fortress of faith, and of the fortress of presumption:

10 A strong tower is the name of Jahve; The righteous runneth into it, and is high.

Proverbs 18:10. The name of Jahve is the Revelation of God, and the God of Revelation Himself, the creative and historical Revelation, and who is always continually revealing Himself; His name is His nature representing itself, and therefore capable of being described and named, before all the Tetragramm, as the Anagramm of the overruling and inworking historical being of God, as the Chiffre of His free and all-powerful government in grace and truth, as the self-naming of God the Saviour. This name, which is afterwards interwoven in the name Jesus, is חִסְדָּאָה (Ps. 61:4), a strong high tower bidding defiance to every hostile assault. Into this the righteous runneth, to hide himself behind its walls, and is thus lifted (perf. consec.) high above all danger (cf. כָּל מַעֵץ, śebāb, 29:25). אֲשֶׁר לָיָרֹת means, Job 15:26, to run against anything, יֶאָרֹת seq. acc., to invest, blockade anything, יָרֹת, to hasten within; Hitzig’s conjecture, ירֹת, high tower bids defiance to every hostile assault. Into this the righteous runneth, to hide himself behind its walls, and is thus lifted (perf. consec.) high above all danger (cf. כָּל מַעֵץ, śebāb, 29:25). אֲשֶׁר לָיָרֹת means, Job 15:26, to run against anything, יֶאָרֹת seq. acc., to invest, blockade anything, יָרֹת, to hasten within; Hitzig’s conjecture, ירֹת, high tower bids defiance to every hostile assault. Into this the righteous runneth, to hide himself behind its walls, and is thus lifted (perf. consec.) high above all danger (cf. כָּל מַעֵץ, śebāb, 29:25). אֲשֶׁר לָיָרֹת means, Job 15:26, to run against anything, יֶאָרֹת seq. acc., to invest, blockade anything, יָרֹת, to hasten within; Hitzig’s conjecture, ירֹת, high tower bids defiance to every hostile assault. Into this the righteous runneth, to hide himself behind its walls, and is thus lifted (perf. consec.) high above all danger (cf. כָּל מַעֵץ, śebāb, 29:25). אֲשֶׁר לָיָרֹת means, Job 15:26, to run against anything, יֶאָרֹת seq. acc., to invest, blockade anything, יָרֹת, to hasten within; Hitzig’s conjecture, ירֹת, high tower bids defiance to every hostile assault. Into this the righteous runneth, to hide himself behind its walls, and is thus lifted (perf. consec.) high above all danger (cf. כָּל מַעֵץ, śebāb, 29:25).

Proverbs 18:13. The part. stands here differently from what it does at 13:18, where it is subj., and at 17:14, where it is pred. of a simple sentence; it is also here, along with what appertains to it in accordance with the Semitic idiom, subj. to 13b (one who answers ... is one to whom this ...); but, in accordance with our idiom, it becomes a hypothetical antecedent (cf. בָּשִּׂית Esto, p. 204). For “to answer” one also uses without addition; but the original full expression is כָּל מַעֵץ readere verbum, referre dictum (cf. כָּל מַעֵץ, śebāb, Jer. 44:20, absol. in the cogn., 15:28a); one may not understand of the word to which, but of the word with which, the reply is made. But that would require the word to be כְּלִמָּה, pudefet; the idea the same as Ps. 27:5; 31:21.

11 The possession of the righteous is his strong fort, And is like a high wall in his imagination.

Proverbs 18:11. Line first = 10:15a. מַעֵץ from שְׁכִי, Chald. סְכָא (whence after Megilla 14a, סכין, she who looks), R. כָא, cogn. כ, to pierce, to fix, means the image as a medal, and thus also intellectually: image (conception, and particularly the imagination) of the heart (Ps. 73:7), here the fancy, conceit; Fleischer compares (Arab.) tṣwrr, to imagine something to oneself, French se figurer. Translators from the LXX to Luther incorrectly think on כָּל מַעֵץ (סכין), to entertain; only the Venet. is correct in the rendering: בִּזְבִּית פָּיָתַא אֱבוֹת; better than Kimchi, who, after Ezra 8:12, thinks on the chamber where the riches delighted in are treasured, and where he fancies himself in the midst of his treasures as if surrounded by an inaccessible wall.

We place together vv. 12–19, in which the figure of a secure fortress returns:

Proverbs 18:12. This proverb is connected with the preceding of the rich man who trusts in his mammon. Before destruction the heat of man is haughty; And humility goeth before honour.

Line first is a variation of 16:18a, and line second is similar to 15:33b. 13 If one giveth an answer before he heareth, It is to him as folly and shame.
26:15) instead of אדם, 16a: the courageous spirit of a man which sustains or endures (כִלְׁכֵל R. comprehendere, prehendere; Luther, “who knows how to contain himself in his sufferings;” cf. Ps. 51:12, “may the free Spirit hold me”) the sickness [Siechthum] (we understand here “siech” in the old meaning = sick) with self-control, is generis masculini; while, on the contrary, the רוח נְׁכֵאָה (as 15:13; 17:22), brought down from its manliness and superiority to disheartened passivity, is genere feminino (cf. Ps. 51:12 with v. 19). Fleischer compares the Arab. proverb, thbât âlnfs bâlghdhâ thbât alrwh balghnâ, the soul has firmness by nourishment, the spirit by music. The question מִי יִשָאֶנָה is like Mark 9:50: if the salt becomes tasteless, wherewith shall one season it? There is no seasoning for the spice that has become insipid. And for the spirit which is destined to bear the life and fortune of the person, if it is cast down by sufferings, there is no one to lift it up and sustain it. But is not God the Most High the lifter up and the bearer of the human spirit that has been crushed and broken? The answer is, that the manly spirit, 14a, is represented as strong in God; the discouraged, 14b, as not drawing from God the strength and support he ought to do. But passages such as Isa. 66:2 do not bring it near that we think of the רוח נְׁכֵאָה as alienated from God. The spirit is נשא, the bearer of the personal and natural life with its functions, activities, and experiences. If the spirit is borne down to powerless and helpless passivity, then within the sphere of the human personality there is no other sustaining power that can supply its place.

15 The heart of a man of understanding gaineth knowledge, And the ear of the wise seeketh after knowledge. Proverbs 18:15. נבון may be also interpreted as an adj., but we translate it here as at 14:33, because thus it corresponds with the parallelism; cf. פָּתָח, בְּלִי תָּחֵיר, 15:28, and פָּתָח, בְּלִי תָּחֵיר, 16:23, where the adj. interpretation is excluded. The gaining of wisdom is, after 17:16, referred to the heart: a heart vigorous in embracing and receiving it is above all necessary, and just such an one possesses the הבור, which knows how to value the worth and usefulness of such knowledge. The wise, who are already in possession of such knowledge, are yet at the same time constantly striving to increase this knowledge: their ear seeks knowledge, eagerly asking where it is to be found, and attentively listening when the opportunity is given of ראת, obtaining it.

16 The gift of a man maketh room for him, And bringeth him before the great. Proverbs 18:16. That מתן may signify intellectual endowments, Hitzig supposes, but without any proof for such an opinion. Intellectual ability as the means of advancement is otherwise designated, 22:29. But Hitzig is right in this, that one mistakes the meaning of the proverb if he interprets מתן in the sense of שֹח ד (vid., at 17:8): מתן is an indifferent idea, and the proverb means that a man makes free space, a free path for himself, by a gift, i.e., by this, that he shows himself to be agreeable, pleasing where it avails, not niggardly but liberal. As a proverb expresses it: Mit dem Hut in der Hand Kommt man durchs ganze Land [with hat in hand one goes through the whole land], so it is said here that such liberality brings before the great, i.e., not: furnishes with introductions to them; but helps to a place of honour near the great, i.e., those in a lofty position (cf. פָּתָח, 22:29; פָּתָח, Ps. 113:8). It is an important part of practical wisdom, that by right liberality, i.e., by liberal giving where duty demands it, and prudence commends it, one does not lose but gains, does not descend but rises; it helps a man over the difficulties of limited, narrow circumstances, gains for him affection, and helps him up from step to step. The ה of יִשָאֶנָה is, in a singular way (cf. מָלַת, מְתָנָה), treated as unchangeable.
17 He that is first in his controversy is right; But there cometh another and searcheth him thoroughly—

Proverbs 18:17. an exhortation to be cautious in a lawsuit, and not to justify without more ado him who first brings forward his cause, and supports it by reasons, since, if the second party afterwards search into the reasons of the first, they show themselves untenable. The lot allayeth contentions, i.e., ereum ad judicem defert (Fl). by the hearing of the accus. of the person: to examine or lay bare any one thoroughly; here, so that the misrepresentations of the state of the matter might come out to view along with the reasons assigned by the accuser.

18 The lot allayeth contentions, And separateth between the mighty,

Proverbs 18:18. i.e., erects a partition wall between them—those contending (罴יה ובר, as at 2 Kings 2:11, cf. Arab. frk byn) who are not opponents who maintain their cause with weighty arguments (נושע, Isa. 41:21), qui argumentis pollent (vid., Rashi), for then must the truth appear in the pro et contra; but mighty opponents, who, if the lot did not afford a seasonable means of reconciliation, would make good their demands by blows and by the sword (Fl). Here it is the lot which, as the judgment of God, brings about peace, instead of the ultima ratio of physical force. The proverb refers to the lot what the Epistle to the Hebrews, 6:16, refers to the oath, vid., at 16:33. Regarding Merrim and its altered forms, vid., p. 105.

And contentions are like the bar of a palace. Luther rightly regarded the word נפשע, according to which the LXX, Vulg., and Syr. translated frater qui adjuvatur a fratre, as an incorrect reading; one would rather expect אזא, “a brother who stands by,” as Luther earlier translated; and besides, נפשע does not properly mean adjuvari, but salvari. His translation—Ein verletzt Bruder helt herter denn eine feste Stadt, Und Zanck helt herter, denn rigel am Palast [a brother wounded resisteth more than a strong city, and strife resisteth more than bolts in the palace], is one of his most happy renderings. The noun-adjective (cf. Isa. 10:10) to be supplied is to be understood to mean justus qui prior venit in causa sua (esse videtur). The accentuation rightly leaves the relation undecided. Instead of the Kerî has אשא, as it elsewhere, at one time, changes the fut. into the perf. with (e.g., 20:4, Jer. 6:21); and, at another time, the perf. with (e.g., Ps. 10:10, Isa. 5:29). But here, where the perf. consec. is not so admissible, as 6:11; 20:4, the fut. ought to remain unchanged. The other part, synon. with בם, Sanhedrin 7b, where the noun-adjective (admonition for the court of justice) is derived from Deut. 1:16, to hear the accused at the same time with the accuser, that nothing of the latter may be adopted beforehand. This proverb is just such an audiatur et altera pars. The status controversiae is only brought fairly into the light by the hearing of the altera pars: then comes the other and examines him (the first) to the very bottom.־ת, elsewhere with the accus. of the thing, e.g., בר, thoroughly to search into a strife, Job 29:16, is here, as at 28:11, connected with the accus. of the person: to examine or lay bare any one thoroughly; here, so that the misrepresentations of the state of the matter might come out to view along with the reasons assigned by the accuser.
have פשע, which, as we have above translated, gives an impersonal attributive clause; the former: frater perfidiose tractatus (Fl.: mala fide officius); the latter: perfide actum est, scil. in eum = in quem perfide actum. היא is, after 17:17, a friend in the highest sense of the word; means to break off, to break free, with whom the action terminates. That the פשע is to be thought of as היא of the action is obvious; the translation, "brothers who break with one another" (Gesen.), is incorrect: היא is not collective, and still less is היא a reciprocum. The relation of היא is the same as that of אח, 16:28. The Targum (improving the Peshito) translates אח נפשע, which does not mean: a brother who renounces (Hitzig), but who is treated wickedly on the part of his brother. That is correct; on the contrary, Ewald’s "a brother resists more than ..." proceeds from a meaning of פשע which it has not; and Bertheau gives, with Schultens, an untenable reflexive meaning to the Niph. (which as dem. might mean “covered with crime,” Venet. πλημμεληθείς), and, moreover, one that is too weak, for he translates, “a brother is more obstinate then ...” Hitzig corrects פשע, to shut up sin = to hold it fettered; but that is not correct Heb. It ought to be רדית, or: רדית: In 19a the force of the substantival clause lies in theapist (more than, i.e., harder = more difficult to be gained), and in 19b in the נפשע, cf. Mic. 7:4, where they are interchanged. The parallelism is synonymous: strifes and lawsuits between those who had been friends form as insurmountable a hindrance to their reconciliation, are as difficult to be raised, as the great bars at the gate of a castle (Fl.). The point of comparison is not only the weight of the cross-beam (from ברך, crosswise, across, to go across the field), but also the shutting up of the access. Strife forms a partition wall between such as once stood near each other, and so much thicker the closer they once stood.

With v. 19, the series of proverbs which began with that of the flatterer closes. The catchword אח, which occurred at its commencement, 9b, is repeated at its close, and serves also as a landmark of the group following 20–24. The proverb of the breach of friendship and of contentions is followed by one of the reaction of the use of the tongue on the man himself.

Proverbs 18:20. He will taste in rich measure of the consequences not merely of the good (Prov. 12:14, cf. 13:2), but of whatever he has spoken. This is an oxymoron like Matt. 15:11, that not that which goeth into the mouth, but that which cometh out of it, defileth a man. As at John 4:34 the conduct of a man, so here his words are called his βρομα. Not merely the conduct (Prov. 1:31, Isa. 3:10), but also the words are fruit-bringing; and not only do others taste of the fruit of the words as of the actions of a man, whether they be good or bad, but above all he himself does so, both in this life and in that which is to come.

21 Death and life are in the power of the tongue; And whoever loveth it shall eat its fruit.

Proverbs 18:21. The hand, י, is so common a metaphor for power, that as here a hand is attributed to the tongue, so e.g., Isa. 47:14 to the flame, and Ps. 49:16 to Hades. Death and life is the great alternative which is placed, Deut. 30:15, before man. According as he uses his tongue, he falls under the power of death or attains to life. All interpreters attribute, 21b, א妗 to the tongue: qui eam (linguam) amant vescentur (qui), distrib. sing., as 3:18, 35, etc.) fructu ejus. But “to love the tongue” is a strange and obscure expression. He loves the tongue, says Hitzig, who loves to babble. Euchel: he who guards it carefully, or: he who takes care of it, i.e., who applies himself to right discourse. Combining both, Zöckler: who uses it much, as εἰλογών or κοικολογών. The LXX translates, οι δὲ κρατοῦντες αὐτής, i.e., κρατοῦσι; but אח meansprehendere and tenere, not cohibere, and the tongue kept in restraint brings forth indeed no bad fruit, but it brings no fruit at all. Why thus? Does the suffix of אָוֶ֣בָה, perhaps like 8:17, Chethîb, refer to wisdom, which, it is true, is not named, but which lies everywhere before the poet’s mind? At 14:3 we ventured to make the subject of 3b. Then 21b would be as a miniature of 8:17–21. Or is it a mutilation of אָוֶ֣בָה, Jeremiah has the half of that distich, and Jerome the LXX has been guided by אָוֶ֣בָה. Sir. 28:15, is the translation of 8:17 (cf. 12:2). A wife is such as she ought to be, as v. 14, יְ֥שֵׁר אִ֥ישׁ, a man is such as he ought to be; the LXX, Syr., Targ., and Vulgate supply bonam, but “gnomic brevity and force disdain such enervating adjectives, and cautious limitations of the idea” (Fl.). Besides, אָוֶ֣בָה in old Hebr. would mean a well-favoured rather than a good-dispositioned wife, which later idea is otherwise expressed, 19:14; 31:10. The Venet. rightly has γυναῖκα, and Luther ein Ehefraw, for it is a married woman that is meant. The first לֹ֥א is perfect.

Proverbs 18:22. As also 21b, reminds us of 8:17, so here not only 22b, but also 22a harmonizes with 8:35 (cf. 12:2). A wife is such as she ought to be, as v. 14, יְ֥שֵׁר אִ֥ישׁ, a man is such as he ought to be; the LXX, Syr., Targ., and Vulgate supply bonam, but “gnomic brevity and force disdain such enervating adjectives, and cautious limitations of the idea” (Fl.). Besides, אָוֶ֣בָה in old Hebr. would mean a well-favoured rather than a good-dispositioned wife, which later idea is otherwise expressed, 19:14; 31:10. The Venet. rightly has γυναῖκα, and Luther ein Ehefraw, for it is a married woman that is meant. The first לֹ֥א is perfect.

hypotheticum, Gesen. § 126, Anm. 1. On the other hand, Eccles. 7:26, “I found, more bitter than death the woman,” etc.; wherefore, when in Palestine one married a wife, the question was wont to be asked: מֵאִ֥י או מֵאִ֥י מַמַּ֥שׂ אֲנִי, has he married happily (after the book of Proverbs) or unhappily (after Ecclesiastes) (Jebamoth 63b)? The LXX adds a distich to v. 22, “He that putteth away a good wife putteth away happiness; and he that keepeth an adulteress, is foolish and ungodly.” He who constructed this proverb [added by the LXX] has been guided by מַמַּ֥שׂ אֲנִי (Ezra 10:3); elsewhere לֹ֥א אֲנִי (Gal. 4:30, Sir. 28:15, is the translation of מָצָא. The Syr. has adopted the half of that distich, and Jerome the whole of it. On the other hand, vv. 23, 24, and 19:1, 2, are wanting in the LXX. The translation which is found in some Codd. is that of Theodotion (vid., Lagarde).

23 The poor uttereth supplicant entreaties; And the rich answereth rudenesses.

Proverbs 18:23. The oriental proverbial poetry furnishes many parallels to this. It delights in the description of the contrast between a suppliant poor man and the proud and avaricious rich man; vid., e.g., Samachschari’s Goldene Halsbänder, No. 58. The LXX, according to its meaning, refers to the Hithpa. יֵהָב, misericordiam alicujus pro se imploravit; cf. the old vulgar “barmen,” i.e., to seek to move others to Erbarmen [compassion] (חֲנוּנִים, dura, from יִצְוֹל, hard, fast, of bodies, and figuratively of an unbending, hard, haughty disposition, and thence of words of such a nature (Fl.). Both nouns are accus. of the object, as Job 40:27, וְתֵבִ֥ין חֲנוּנִים, with the parallel רַחֲמוֹת. The proverb expresses a fact of experience as a consolation to the poor to whom, if a rich man insults him, nothing unusual occurs, and as a warning to the rich that he may not permit himself to be divested of humanity by mammon. A hard wedge to a hard clod; but whoever, as the Scripture saith, grindeth his bashful face (Isa. 3:15), challenges unmerciful judgment against himself; for the merciful, only they shall obtain mercy, αὐτοὶ ἐλεηθήσονται (Matt. 5:7).

24 A man of many friends cometh off a loser; But there is a friend more faithful than a brother.

Proverbs 18:24. Jerome translates the commencing word by vir, but the Syr., Targ. by רָשָׁע, which is adopted by Hitzig, Böttcher, and others. But will a German poet use in one line “itzt” [same as jetzt = now], and in the next ‘izt’? and could the Hebrew poet prefer to גֵרֵשׁ its rarer, and her especially not altogether unambiguous form גֵרֵשׁ (cf. to the contrary, Eccles. 7:15)? We write אִישׁ, because the Masora comprehends this passage, with 2 Sam. 14:19, Mic. 6:10, as the three, where one ought to expect ש, and is thus exposed to the danger of falling into error in writing and reading; but erroneously י is found in all these three places in the Masora magna of the Venetian Bible of 1526; elsewhere the Masora has the defectiva scriptio with like meaning only in those two other passages. While י is ש, or properly ש, with equal possibility of ש and י, it makes no material difference in the meaning of 24a whether we explain: there are friends who serve to bring one to loss: or a man of many friends comes to loss,—the inf. with י is used in substantival clauses as the expression of the most manifold relations, Gesen. § 132, Anm. 1 (cf. at Hab. 1:17), here in both cases it denotes the end, as e.g., Ps. 92:8, to which it hastens with many friends, or with the man of many friends. It is true that כִּי (like be) is almost always connected only with genitives of things; but as one says: איש אלוהים a man belongs to God, so may one also say: איש רעים a man belongs to many friends; the common language of the people may thus have named a man, to whom, because he has no definite and decided character, the rule that one knows a man by his friends is not applicable, a so-called every-man’s-friend, or all-the-world’s-friend. Theodotion translates οὐκ ἐκκαίρωσην τὸν ἐκκαίρωσησόμεθα; and thus also the Syr., Targ., and Jerome render (and among the moderns, Hitzig) as reflexive in the sense of to cherish social intercourse; but this reflexive is κατά τὴν ἡμέραν, 22:24. That the expression is either Hithpa. of וֹרֵעִים, to exult, Ps. 60:10; 65:14, according to which the Venet. translates (contrary to Kimchi) ὡστε ὀλαλάξειν: such an one can exult, but which is not true, since, according to 24b, a true friend outweighs the many; or it is Hithpa. of רַעִים, to be wicked, sinful (Fl.: sibi perniciem paraturus est); or, which we prefer, warranted by Isa. 24:19, of רעים, to become brittle (Böttcher and others)—which not only gives a good sense, but also a similar alliteration with רעִים, as 3:29; 13:20. In contradistinction to רעים, which is a general, and, according to the usage of the language (e.g., 17b), a familiar idea, the true friend is called, in the antithetical parallel member, אִיש (Prov. 27:6); and after 17:17, רָעִים, one who remains true in misfortune. To have such an one is better than to have many of the so-called friends; and, as appears from the contrast, to him who is so fortunate as to have one such friend, there comes a blessing and safety. Immanuel has given the right explanation: “A man who sets himself to gain many friends comes finally to be a loser (ספם לְּמַלְאָה), for he squanders his means, and is impoverish in favour of others.” And Schultens: At est amicus agglutinatus prae fratre. Rarum et carum esse genus insinuatur, ac proinde intimam illam amicitiam, quae conglutinet compingatque corda, non per multos spargendum, sed circum specte et ferme cum uno tantum ineundam. Thus closes this group of proverbs with the praise of friendship deepened into spiritual brotherhood, as the preceding, v. 19, with a warning against the destruction of such a relation by a breach of trust not to be made good again.

Proverbs 19:1. The plur. רעים, 18:24, is emphatic and equivalent to רעים רבים. The group 1–4 closes with a proverb which contains this catchword. The first proverb of the group comes by国王 into contact with 18:20, the first proverb of the preceding group.

1 Better a poor man walking in his innocence, Than one with perverse lips, and so a fool. The contrast, 28:6, is much clearer. But to correct this proverb in conformity with that, as Hitzig does, is unwarrantable. The Syr., indeed, translates here as there; but the Chald. assimilates this translation to the Heb. text, which Theodotion, and after him the Syro-Hexap., renders by ὑπὲρ στρεβλόχειλον ἄφρονα. But does 1a form a contrast to 1b? Fleischer remarks: “From the contrast it appears that he who is designated in 1b must be thought of as ἄφρον [fool]; and Ewald, “Thus early the ideas of a rich man and of a fool, or a despiser of God, are connected together.” Saadia understands כסיל [a fool], after Job 31:24, of one who makes riches his כֶסֶל [confidence]. Euchel accordingly translates: the false man, although he builds himself greatly up, viz., on his riches. But כסיל designates the intellectually slothful, in whom the flesh overweighs the mind. And the representation of the rich, which, for 1b certainly arises out of 1a, does not amalgamate with כסיל, but with עִקֵש שְׁפָתָיו. Arama is on the right track, for he translates: the rich who distorts his mouth (cf. p. 104), for he gives to the poor suppliant a rude refusal. Better Zöckler: a proud man of perverse lips and haughty demeanour. If one with haughty, scornful lips is opposed to the poor, then it is manifestly one not poor who thinks to raise himself above the poor, and haughtily looks down on him. And if it is said that, in spite of this proud demeanour, he is a fool, then this presents the figure of one proud of his wealth, who, in spite of his emptiness and nequitia, imagines that he possesses a greatness of knowledge, culture, and worth corresponding to the greatness of his riches. How much better is a poor man than such an one who walketh (vid., on וה, p. 56) in his innocence and simplicity, with his pure mind wholly devoted to God and to that which is good!—his poverty keeps him in humility which is capable of no malicious conduct; and this pious blameless life is of more worth than the pride of wisdom of the distinguished fool. There is in contrast to עמשה a simplicity, ἀσκητότης, of high moral worth; but, on the other side, there is also a simplicity which is worthless. This is the connecting thought which introduces the next verse.

2 The not-knowing of the soul is also not good, And he who hasteneth with the legs after it goeth astray.

Proverbs 19:2. Fleischer renders נפש as the subj. and לא טוב as neut. pred.: in and of itself sensual desire is not good, but yet more so if it is without foresight and reflection. With this explanation the words must be otherwise accentuated. Hitzig, in conformity with the accentuation, before us: if desire is without reflection, it is also without success. But where נפש denotes desire or sensuality, it is always shown by the connection, as e.g., 23:2; here דוות, referring to the soul as knowing (cf. Ps. 139:14), excludes this meaning. But נפש is certainly gen. subjecti; Luzzatto’s “self-knowledge” is untenable, for this would require דוות נפש; דוות נפש is a virtual noun in the sense of the not-knowing of the soul; for to say לא טוב is always pred., not a substantival clause. Thus the proverb states that לא טוב is not good, and that is equivalent to הָיוּת בלא דעת נפש (for the subject to לא טוב is frequently, e.g., 17:26; 18:5, an infinitive); or also: לא טוב is a virtual noun in the sense of the not-knowing of the soul; for to say לא טוב was syntactically inadmissible, but the expression is בלא דעת, not בלא דעת נפש, because this is used in the sense unintentionally or unexpectedly. The which begins the proverb is difficult. If we lay the principal accent in the translation given above on "not good," then the placing of also first is a hyperbaton similar to that in 17:26; 20:11; cf. 17:11; 13:10, as if the words were: if the soul is without knowledge, then also (eo ipso) it is destitute of anything good. But if we lay the principal accent on the "also," then the meaning of the poet is, that ignorance of the soul is, like... many other things, not good; or (which we prefer without on that account maintaining the original connection of v. 1 and v. 2), that as on the one side the pride of wisdom, so on the other ignorance is not good. In this case devoted belongs more to the subject than to the predicate, but in reality to the whole sentence at the beginning of which it stands. To hasten with the legs (πηχυ, as 28:20) means now in this connection to set the body in violent agitation, without direction and guidance proceeding from the knowledge possessed by the soul. He who thus hastens after it without being intellectually or morally clear as to the goal and the way, makes a false step, goes astray, fails (vid., 8:36, where the contrast to the subject stands).

Proverbs 19:3. Regarding סלפ, vid., at 11:3; also the Arab. signification “to go before” proceeds from the root conception pervertere, for first a letting precede, or preceding (e.g., of the paying before the delivery of that which is paid for: salar, a pre-numbering, and then also: advanced money), consisting in the reversal of the natural order, is meant. The way is here the way of life, the walking: the folly of a man overturns, i.e., destroys, his life’s-course; but although he is himself the fabricator of his own ruin, yet the ill-humour (אסטҮאַר, aestuare, vid., at Ps. 11:6) of his heart turns itself against God, and he blames (LXX essentially correct: αἰτιᾶται) God instead of himself, viz., his own madness, whereby he has turned the grace of God into lasciviousness, cast to the winds the natural order, is meant. The way is here the road of wisdom, so on the other ignorance is not good. In this case devoted belongs more to the subject than to the predicate, but in reality to the whole sentence at the beginning of which it stands. To hasten with the legs (πηχυ, as 28:20) means now in this connection to set the body in violent agitation, without direction and guidance proceeding from the knowledge possessed by the soul. He who thus hastens after it without being intellectually or morally clear as to the goal and the way, makes a false step, goes astray, fails (vid., 8:36, where the contrast to the subject stands).

Proverbs 19:4. The very same contrast, though otherwise expressed, we had at 14:20.

Regarding מַחַד is the tottering, or he who has fallen into a tottering condition, who has no resources, possesses no means. The accentuation gives Mugrash to the word (according to which the Targ. translates), for it is not the subject of מַחַד: the reduced is separated (pass. Niph.) by his misfortunes, or must separate himself (reflex. Niph.) from his friend (מרעה, as Eccles. 4:4, prae socio suo); but subject of the virtual pred. מַחַד—his friend (מרעה, as v. 7) separates himself, i.e., (according to the nature of the Semitic substantival clause) he is such (of such a fate) that his friend sets himself free, whereby may be omitted as self-obvious; נֵפְרֵד means one who separates himself, 18:1. If we make יָפִיח the subject of the separatur; then the initiative of the separation from the friend is not expressed.

In vv. 5 and 9 we have the introductory proverb of two groups, the former of which, in its close as well as its beginning, cannot be mistaken.

5 A lying witness remaineth not unpunished; And he who breathes out lies escapeth not.

Proverbs 19:5. Regarding יָטַב, vid., p. 107: as here we read it of false witness at 6:19; 14:5, 25. יָטַב occurs four times before, the last of which is at 17:5. The LXX elsewhere translates by ἐκκαίειν ψευδῆ to kindle lies; but here by ὁ δὲ ἐγκαλῶν ἀδίκως, and at v. 9 by ὃς δ᾽ ἐν ἐκκαίεις κακίας, both times changing only because ψευδῆς goes before, and instead of ψευδῆς, the choice of a different rendering commended itself.

6 Many stroke the cheeks of the noble; And the mass of friends belongeth to him who gives.

Proverbs 19:6. The phrase גָּלַקְתָּר פָּנֵי פַּלְעָם signifies to stroke the face of any one, from the fundamental meaning of the verb to rub, to stroke, Arab. khala, with which the Heb., meaning to be sick, weak (viribus attritum esse), and the Arabic: to be sweet (properly laeavem et politum, glabrum esse, or palatum demulcere, leniter stringere, contrast asperum esse ad gustum), are connected (Fl.). The object of such insinuating, humble suing for favour is the רָחֲק (from רָחָק, instigare), the noble, he who is easily incited to noble actions, particularly to noble-mindedness in bestowing gifts and in doing good, or who feels himself naturally impelled thereto, and spontaneously practises those things; cf. the Arab. krym, nobilis and liberalis (F1), and at Job 21:28; parall. אִישׁ מֵרֵעֵה, a man who gives willingly, as יָדַע חֵמוּ, 15:18, one who is easily kindled into anger. Many (רָבָּם, as Job 11:19) stroke the face of the liberal (Lat. caput mulcent or demulcent); and to him who gives willingly and richly belongs כלֹּה, the mass (the totality) of good friends, cf. 15:17; there the art. of 같이, according to the manner of expression of the Arab. grammarians, stood for "the exhaustion of the characteristic properties of the genus": the friend who corresponds to "the exhaustion of the characteristic properties of the genus;" all that is only always friend. It lies near with Ewald and Hitzig to read כלֹּה instead (and every one is friend ... ) (and as Jer. 8:10, etc.); but why could not כלֹּה be used as well as כלֹּה, perhaps with the sarcastic appearance which the above translation seeks to express? The LXX also had כלֹּה instead in view, which it incorrectly translates πᾶς δὲ ὁ κακός, whereby the Syr. and the Targ. are led into error; but this suffix is not one and the same with пл. שֹח, vid., 16:6. On the contrary, there certainly lies before us in v. 7 a mutilated text. The tristich is, as we have shown, p. 12, open to suspicion; and the violence which its interpretation needs in order to comprehend it, as a formal part of 7ab, places it beyond a doubt, and the LXX confirms it that 7c is the remainder of a distich, the half of which is lost.

Proverbs 19:7ab. We thus first confine our attention to these two lines,— All the brethren of the poor hate him; How much more do his friends withdraw themselves from him?

Regarding אִישׁ כִּי, quanto magis, vid., at 11:31; 15:11; 17:7. In a similar connection 14:20 spake of hatred, i.e., the cooling of love, and the manifesting of this coldness. The brethren who thus show themselves here, unlike the friend who has become a brother, according to 17:17, are brothers-german, including kindred by blood relation. כלֹּה has Mercha, and is thus without the Makkeph, as at Ps. 35:10 (vid., the Masora in Baer's Liber Psalmorum, 1861, p. 133). Kimchi (Michlol 205a), Norzi, and others think that כָּל (with קֶמֶץ הרְבָּה) is to be read as at Isa. 40:12, where קֶמֶץ is a verb. But that is incorrect. The case is the same as with רָחֲק. 3:12; Ps. 47:5; 60:2. As here is with Mercha remains, so כָּל with Mercha in that twice occurring כָּל, that which is exceptional is this, that the accentuated כָּל is written thus twice, not as the usual, but as כָּל כָּל with the Makkeph. The ground of the exception lies, as with other peculiarities, in the special character of metrical accentuation; the Mercha represents the place of the Makkeph, and כָּל thus remains in the unchanged force of a Kametz-Chatuph. The plur. does not stamp לְכָּל as the defectively written plur.; the suffix ĕhu is always sing., and the sing. is thus, like כָּל כָּל, 6b, meant collectively, or better: generally (in the sense of kind), which is the linguistic usage of these two words, 1 Sam. 30:26; Job 42:10. But it is worthy of notice that the Masoretic form here is not כָּל כָּל, but כָּל כָּל, with Sheva. The Masora adds to it the remark כְּלָל, and accordingly the word is thus written with Sheva by Kimchi (Michlol 202a and Lex. under the word נָדָב), in Codd., and older editions. The Venet., translating by ἀπό τοῦ φύλου αὐτοῦ, has not noticed that. But how? Does the punctuation make it mean that the word is here to be derived from נָדָב, maleficus? Thus understood, it does not harmonize with the line of thought. From this it is much more seen that the punctuation of the inflected כָּל כָּל, amicus, fluctuates. This word is a formation so difficult of comprehension, that one might almost, with Olshausen, § 210; Böttcher, § 794; and Lagarde, regard the ἐν as the partitive ἐν, like the French des amis (cf. Eurip. Med. 560: πέντε αἷς φεύγει πάντα τις ἐκποδὸν φίλος), or: something of friend, a piece of friend, while Ewald and others regard it as possible that ἐν is abbreviated from ἐνρήσει. The punctuation, since it treats the Tserē in matters, 4b and elsewhere, as unchangeable, and here in μερήσυ as changeable, affords proof that in it also the manner of the formation of the word was incomprehensible. Seeking after words which are vain.

Proverbs 19:7c. If now this line belongs to this proverb, then must be used of the poor, and something of friend, a piece of friend (vid., regarding the 15 Kerīs, ἐν for ἐν, at Ps. 100:3), must be the attributively nearer designation of the ἐδίδειν. The meaning of the Kerī would be: he (the poor man) hunts after mere words, which—but no actions corresponding to them—are for a portion to him. This is doubtful, for the principal matter, that which is not a portion to him, remains unexpressed, and the ἐνρήσις [to him they belong] affords only the service of guarding one against understanding by the mere words of the poor. This service is not in the same way afforded by λόγοι [they are not]; but this expression characterizes the words as vain, so that it is to be interpreted according to such parallels as Hos. 12:2: words which are not, i.e., which have nothing in reality corresponding to them, verba nihili, i.e., the empty assurances and promises of his brethren and friends (Pl.). The old translators all read לֹא, and the Syr. and Targ. translate not badly: λόγοι σφήνασται; Symmachus, ρήσεων ἀναστάρκταις. The expression is not to be rejected: לֹא אֲמָרִים sometimes means to come to לֹא, i.e., to nothing, Job 6:21, Ezek. 21:32, cf. Isa. 15:6; and λόγοι לֹא־הֵמָה, he is not = has no reality, Jer. 5:12, ἐνρήσεις λογίας, may thus mean words which are nothing (vain). But how can it be said of the poor whom everything forsakes, that one dismisses him with words behind which there is nothing, and now also that he pursues such words? The former supposes always a sympathy, though it be a feigned one, which is excluded by λόγοι [they hate him] and λόγοι [withdraw themselves]; and the latter, spoken of the poor, would be unnatural, for his purposed endeavour goes not out after empty talk, but after real assistance. So 7c: pursuing after words which (are) nothing, although in itself not falling under critical suspicion, yet only of necessity is connected with this proverb regarding the poor. The LXX, however, has not merely one, but even four lines, and thus two proverbs following 7b. The former of these distichs is: ἐννοια ἀγαθὴ τοῖς εἰδόσιν αὐτὴν ἐγγιεῖ ἐννοια ἀγαθὴν τοῖς εἰδόσιν αὐτὴν; it is translated from the Hebr. (ἐννοια ἀγαθὴ, 5:2 = רָחֲק), but it has a meaning complete in itself, and thus has nothing to do with the fragment 7c. The second distich is: ὁ πολλὰ κακοποιῶν τελεσιουργεῖ κακίαν ὃς δὲ ἐρεθίζει λόγους οὐ σωθήσεται. This ὃς δὲ ἐρεθίζει λόγους is, without doubt, a translation of מְרֻצָּה מְרֻצִּים (7c); λόγους is probably a corruption of λόγως (thus the Complut.), not, he who pursueth words, but he who incites by words, as Homer (Il. iv. 5f.) uses the expression ἐρεθιζόμενον ἐπέκεισα. The concluding words, οὐ σωθήσεται, are a repetition of the Hebr. b. ἐννοια ἀγαθὴ not = has no reality, Jer. 5:12, cf. LXX 19:5 with 28:26, perhaps only a conjectural emendation of the unintelligible מִרְּעֶה. Thus we have before us in that ὁ πολλὰ κακοποιῶν κ. τ. λ., the line lost from the Hebr. text; but it is difficult to restore it to the Hebr. We have attempted it, p. 13. Supposing that the LXX had before them לא הֵמָה, then the proverb is— ‘He that hath many friends is rewarded with evil, Hunting after words which are nothing.”
i.e., since this his courting the friendship of as many as possible is a hunting after words which have nothing after them and come to nothing.

8 He that getteth understanding loveth his soul, And he that values reasonableness will acquire good;

Proverbs 19:8. or, more closely, since this would be the translation of interius 16:20; 17:20: so it happens, or it comes to this, that he acquires good (= interius לְפָנַי). the inf. with .postValue here, as at 18:24, the expression of a fut. periphrasticum, as in the Lat. consectorum est. Regarding שֵׁם הזֶרֶם p. 15:32, and פֶּרֶש רִבְפֵל שֶׁם הַבֹּז הָעָבָד הָיָה לִמְׁצֹא, vid., 15:32, and פֶּרֶש רִבְפֵל שֶׁם הַבֹּז הָעָבָד הָיָה לִמְׁצֹא.

85. That the deportment of men is either care for the soul, or the contrary of that, is a thought which runs through the Book of Proverbs. The group of proverbs (vv. 9–16) now following begins and closes in the same way as the preceding.

9 A lying witness doth not remain unpunished, And one who breathes out lies perisheth,

Proverbs 19:9. or goeth to ruin, for אָרִי (R. בָּר, to divide, separate) signifies to lose oneself in the place of the separated, the dead (Arab. in the infinite). In v. 5, instead of this אָפָל את (LXX), the negative או אפָל את, is used, or as the LXX there more accurately renders it, או אפָל את.

10 Luxury becometh not a fool; How much less a servant to rule over princes.

Proverbs 19:10. Thus also with לָא אֵש (3 p. אָשָׁא) 17:7 begins. אַשׁ בּ rises here, as at v. 7, a minori ad majus: how much more is it unbecoming = how much less is it seemly. The contrast in the last case is, however, more rugged, and the expression harsher. “A fool cannot bear luxury: he becomes by it yet more foolish; one who was previously a humble slave, but how has attained by good fortune a place of prominence and power, from being something good, becomes at once something bad: an insolent sceleratus” (FL). Agur, xxx. 22 φ, describes such a homo novus as an unbearable calamity; and the author of the Book of Ecclesiastes, written in the time of the Persian domination, speaks, 10:7, of such. The LXX translates, καὶ έαν οἰκέτης ἀφηθῇ μεθ᾽ ὕβρως δυναστεύει, rendering the phrase κρύπτων μεθ᾽ ὕβρως by μεθ᾽ ὕβρως, but all other translators had ὕβρεαμ before them.

11 The discretion of a man maketh him long-suffering, And it is a glory for him to forbear toward transgression.

Proverbs 19:11. The Syr., Targum, Aquila, and Theodotion translate παρά τοῦ παραβάσεως by μακροθυμία, and thus read παραβάσεσιν; but Rashi, Kimchi, and others remark that παρά τοῦ παραβάσεως is here only another vocalization for παρά τοῦ παραβάσεως, which is impossible. The Venet. also translates: Νῦν άνθρώπου μηκυνεῖ τὸν θυμὸν ἑαυτοῦ; the correct word would be αὐτοῦ: the discretion (intellectus or intelligeintia; vid., regarding נוח 3:4) of a man extends his anger, i.e., brings it about that it continues long before it breaks out (vid., 14:29). One does not stumble at the perf. in view of v. 7, 18:8; 16:26, and the like; in the proverbial style the fut. or the particip. is more common. In the synonymous parallel member, נוח 3:4 points to man as such: it is an honour to him to pass by a transgression (particularly that which affects himself), to let it go aside, i.e., to forbear revenge or punishment (cf. Arab. tjawz ‘aly); thus also the divine πάρεσις (Rom. 3:25) is designated by Mic. 7:18; and in Amos 7:8; 8:2, οὕτως stands absol. for the divine remission or passing by, i.e., unavenging of sin.

12 A murmuring as of a lion is the wrath of the king. And as dew on plants is his favour.

Proverbs 19:12. Line 1 is a variation of 20:2a; line 2a of 16:15b. אָשׁ בּ is not the being irritated against another, but generally ill-humour, fretfulness, bad humour; the murmuring or growling in which this state of mind expresses itself is compared to that of a lion which, growling, prepares and sets itself to fall upon its prey (vid., Isa. 5:29, cf. Amos 3:4). Opposed to the אָשׁ בּ stands the beneficial effect of the נץ, i.e., of the pleasure, the delight, the satisfaction, the disposition which shows kindness (LXX τὸ ἱλαρὸν αὐτοῦ). In the former case all are afraid; in the latter, everything lives, as when the refreshing dew falls upon the herbs of the field. The proverb presents a fact, but that the king may mirror himself in it.

13 A foolish son is destruction for his father, And a continual dropping are the contentions of a wife.

Proverbs 19:13. Regarding ἰμαχία, vid., at 17:4, cf. 10:3. Line 2α is expanded, 27:15, into a distich. The dropping is tarad, properly striking (cf. Arab. tirad, from tarad III, hostile assault) when it pours itself forth, stroke (drop) after stroke = constantly, or with unbroken continuity. Lightning-flashes are called (Jer Berachoth, p. 114, Shitomir’s ed.) ממסיסקופון, סרדרי opp. ממסיסקון, ממסיסKeil, ממסיסו when they do not follow in intervals, but constantly flash; and b. Bechoroth 44a; ממסיסקיס, ממסיסו, weeping eyes, ממסיסס, ממסיסס, dropping eyes, and ממסיסס, ממסיסס, eyes always flowing, are distinguished. An old interpreter (vid., R. Ascher in Pesachim II No. 21) explains ממסיסס ללה tarad by: “which drops, and drops, and always drops.” An Arab proverb which I once heard from Wetzstein, says that there are three things which make our house intolerable: ממסיסס (= ממסיסס), the trickling through of rain; ממסיסס, the contention of the wife; and ממסיסס, bugs.

14 House and riches are a paternal inheritance, But from Jahve cometh a prudent inheritance.

Proverbs 19:14. House and riches (opuslentia), which in themselves do not make men happy, one may receive according to the law of inheritance; but a prudent wife is God’s gracious gift, 18:22. There is not a more suitable word than ממסיסס (fem. of ממסיסס) to characterize a wife as a divine gift, making her husband happy. ממסיסס (רָדָם) is the property which says: “I am named modesty, which wears the crown of all virtues.”

15 Slothfulness sinketh into deep sleep, And an idle soul must hunger.

Proverbs 19:15. Regarding ממסיסס and its root-word vid., at 10:5. לדר, to befall, to make to get, is to be understood after Gen. 3:21; the obj. ממסיסס, וֹת, is naturally to be supplied.

In 15b the fut. denotes that which will certainly happen, the inevitable. In both of its members the proverb is perfectly clear; Hitzig, however, corrects ממסיסס, and brings out of it the meaning, “slothfulness gives tasteless herbs to eat.” The LXX has two translations of this proverb, here and at 18:8. That it should translate ממסיסס רמה by ἀνδρόγυνος was necessary, as Lagarde remarks, for the exposition of the “works of a Hebrew Sotades.” But the Hebrew literature never sunk to such works, wallowing in the mire of sensuality, and ἀνδρόγυνος is not at all thus enigmatic; the Greek word was also used of an effeminate man, a man devoid of manliness, a weakling, and was, as the LXX shows, more current in the Alexandrine Greek than elsewhere.

Proverbs 19:16. As at 6:23, cf. Eccles. 8:5, ממה, is here the commandment of God, and thus obligatory, which directs man in every case to do that which is right, and warns him against that which is wrong. And ממה ממה (according to the Masora with Tseré, as in Codd. and old editions, not ממה) is the antithesis of ממה ממה, נזר דרמף is the antithesis of ממה ממה, נזר דרמף, ממה ממה, ממה ממה, ממה ממה.

16:17. To despise one’s own way is equivalent to, to regard it as worth no consideration, as no question of conscience whether one should enter upon this way or that. Hitzig’s reading, “he that scattereth his ways,” lets himself be drawn by the manifold objects of sensuality sometimes in one direction and sometimes in another, is supported by Jer. 3:13, according to which it must be ממה ממה; the conj. is not in the style of the Book of Proverbs, and besides is superfluous. The LXX, which is fond of a quid pro quo—it makes, 13b, a courtesan offering a sacrifice she had vowed of the wages of sin of the quarrelsome woman—has here, as the Heb.
text: ὁ καταφρονών τῶν ἑαυτοῦ ὀδὸν ἄπολείται. Thus after the Keri ἀπολείται, as also the Targ., Syro-Hexap., and Luther; on the contrary, the Syr., Jerome, the Venet. adopt the Chethib ἀπολεῦσαι: he will become dead, i.e., dies no natural death. The Keri is more in the spirit and style of the Book of Proverbs (Prov. 15:10; 23:13; 10:21).

Proverbs 19:17–21. These verses we take together. But we have no other reason for making a pause at v. 21, than that v. 22 is analogous to v. 17, and thus presents itself to us as an initial verse.

17 He lendeth to Jahve who is compassionate to the lowly, And his bounty He requites to him.

Proverbs 19:17. As at 14:31, בתים, is part. Kal.

The Masoretically exact form of the word is בתים (as אמות, 20:14) with Mercha on the first syllable, on which the tone is thrown back, and the הָּמְׁיַת on the second. The Roman legal phrase, mutui datione contrahitur obligatio, serves to explain the fundamental conception of בעל, כליל, mutuo accipere, and mutuum dare (vid., 22:7). The construction, Ex. 22:24, “to make any one bound as a debtor, obligare,” lies at the foundation of the genitive connection (אֵלַל: not מַלְחָה יָד). With 17b cf. 12:14, where the subject of יִשָּׂא, יִשָּׂא (Keri) remains in the background. בַּעַל (not בְּעַל) is here his work done in the sense of good exhibited. “Love,” Hedinger once said, “is an imperishable capital, which always bears interest.” And the Archbishop Walther: nam Deo dat qui dat inopibus, ipse Deus est in pauperibus. Dr. Jonas, as Dächsel relates, once gave to a poor man, and said, “Who knows when God restores it!” There Luther interposed: “As if God had not long ago given it beforehand!” This answer of Luther meets the abuse of this beautiful proverb by the covetous.

Proverbs 19:18. This proverb brings to view once more the pedagogic character of this Older Book of Proverbs: Correct thy son, for yet there is hope; But go not too far to kill him.

That is meant relatively, as at 11:15, is seen from Job 11:18; 14:7; Jer. 31:16f.; Jer. 31:16f.; is the usual expression for etemin spes est. Though a son show obstinacy, and manifest a bad disposition, yet there is hope in the training of the youth of being able to break his self-will, and to wean him from his bad disposition; therefore his education should be carried forward with rigorous exactness, but in such a way that wisdom and love regulate the measure and limits of correction: ad eum interficiendum animam ne tollas (animum ne inducas). This is not the subject, for in that case the word would have been ἀναθήματα (2 Kings 14:10). It is the object: To raise the soul to something is equivalent to, to direct his desire to it, to take delight in it. The teacher should not seek correction as the object, but only as the means; he who has a desire after it, to put the child to death in the case of his guilt, changes correction into revenge, permits himself to be driven by passion from the proper end of correction, and to be pushed beyond its limits. The LXX translates freely εἰς τὴν ἐλπίδα, for εἰς τὸ ἐλπίζον is unrestrained abuse, as מָשָׂא אֲבָהָה, מָשָׁא אֶלֶם as Immanuel glosses. Besides, all the ancients and also the Venet. translate as the inf. of מָשָׂא. But Oetinger (for he translates: lift not thy soul to his cry, for which Euchel: let not his complaining move thy compassion) follows the derivation from קְפָר suggested by Kimchi, Меּרִי, and Immanuel, and preferred by Ralbag, so that קְפָר that after the from קְפָר יְבִセンター equivalent to יְבִセンター. But leaving out of view that עֶבֶד meansestrepare, not lamentari, and that עֶבֶד means attention, not desire, 23:13 points out to us a better interpretation.

Proverbs 19:19. Another proverb with that is meant relatively, as at 11:15, is seen from Job 11:18; 14:7; Jer. 31:16f.; Jer. 31:16f.; is the usual expression for etemin spes est. Though a son show obstinacy, and manifest a bad disposition, yet there is hope in the training of the youth of being able to break his self-will, and to wean him from his bad disposition; therefore his education should be carried forward with rigorous exactness, but in such a way that wisdom and love regulate the measure and limits of correction: ad eum interficiendum animam ne tollas (animum ne inducas). Proverbs 19:19. Another proverb with that is meant relatively, as at 11:15, is seen from Job 11:18; 14:7; Jer. 31:16f.; Jer. 31:16f.; is the usual expression for etemin spes est. Keri גְׁדָל־; Jerome’s impatiens is colourless. The Chethib גְׁדָלָה נֶדֶל gives no appropriate meaning. The Arab. jaril means lapidosus (whence גֹּרָל, cf. Aram. פִּסָא = ψῆφος), and Schultens translates accordingly aspere scruposus iracundiae, which is altogether after the manner of his own heavy style. Ewald translates גָרֵל as derived from the Arab jazyl, largu, grandis; but the possibility of the passing over of ר into ז, as maintained by Ewald and also by Hitzig, or the reverse, is physiologically undemonstrable, and is confirmed by no example worthy of mention. Rather it may be possible that the Heb. had an adj. גָרֹל or גָרֵל in the sense of stony, gravel-like, hard as gravel, but tow rather than gravel would be appropriate to חֵמָה. Hitzig corrects גֹמֵל חמה "who acts in anger;" but he says גָרֵל, to recoup anger, Isa. 59:18; is without support. This correction, however, is incomparably more feasible than Böttcher’s, "moderate inheritance bears expiation;" which must mean not only thick curdled milk, but also moderation, and Böttcher finds this “sound.” From all these instances one sees that גָרֵל is an error in transcription; the Keri יַדְעֵלַם rightly improves it, a man is thus designated whose peculiarity it is to fall into a high degree of passionate anger (חרם, Dan. 11:44): such an one has to bear, כְּעֶשׁ, a fine, i.e., to compensate, for he has to pay compensation or smart-money for the injury suffered, as e.g., he who in strife with another pushes against a woman with child, so that injury befalls her, Ex. 21:22. If we compare this passage with 2 Sam. 14:6, there appears for גָרֵל the meaning of taking away of the object (whether a person or a thing) against which the passionate hothead directs himself. Therewith the meaning of גָרֵל accords. The meaning is not that, בְּאֵשׁ, once is not enough, but much rather must be repeated, and yet is without effect; but that one only increases and heightens the חמה thereby.

It is in vain to seek to spare such a violent person the punishment into which he obstinately runs; much more advisable is it to let him rage till he ceases; violent opposition only makes the evil the greater. With "denn wenn" [for then], cf. 2:3, "ja wenn" [yea if], and with דּוּשָא in the conclusion, Job 14:7 (a parallelism syntactically more appropriate than Ps. 139:18).

20 Harken to counsel, and receive instruction, That thou mayest become wise afterwards.

Proverbs 19:20. The rule of morals, 12:15b, receives here the paraenetic tone which is the keynote of the introduction 1–9. Löwenstein translates: that thou mayest finally become wise. But בּוֹטְכֶר רֹאֵשׁ corresponds rather to our "hinfort" [posthac] than to “endlich” [finally]. He to whom the warning is directed must break with the self-willed, undisciplined ראשית [beginning] of his life, and for the future (τὸν ἐπίλοιπον ἐν σαρκὶ χρόνον, 1 Pet. 4:2) become wise. The relative contrast between the two periods of life is the same as at Job 8:7.

21 Many are the thoughts in a man’s heart; But Jahve’s counsel, that stands.

Proverbs 19:21. In תָקוּם lies, as at Isa. 40:8, both: that the counsel of God (His plan of the world and of salvation) is accomplished and comes into actual fact, and that it continues. This counsel is the true reality elevated above the checkered manifoldness of human purposes, aims, and subjectivities, which penetrates and works itself out in history. The thoughts of a man thus gain unity, substance, endurance, only in so far as he subjects himself to this counsel, and makes his thoughts and actions conformable and subordinate to this counsel.

Proverbs 19:22. The series makes a new departure with a proverb regarding the poor (cf. v. 17): A man’s delight is his beneficence; And better is a poor man than a liar. The right interpretation will be that which presses upon רָאֵשׁ no strange meaning, and which places the two parts of the verse in an inner mutual relation ethically right. In any case it lies nearer to interpret תאות, in relation to man, actively than passively: that which makes man worthy of desire (Rashi), adorns and distinguishes him (Kimchi, Aben-Ezra); or, that which is desired by man, is above all things sought for (Luzzatto); and, in like manner, the Heb. meaning for חסד lies nearer than the Aram. (vid., 14:34): the pleasure of a man is his disgrace (Ralbag). Thus Bertheau's translation: the desire of a man is his charitas, must mean: that which brings to a man true joy is to act amiably. But is that, thus generally expressed, true? And if this were the thought, how much more correctly and distinctly would it be expressed by שמחה_large (אשה שמחה, cf. 21:15)! Hitzig so rightly reminded by בְּשָר (of the Pharisee who thanks God that he is not as other men; the word ought to have been בְּשָר to remove every trace of self-satisfaction. Hitzig therefore proposes from the LXX and the Vulgate the text-correction מִתְבּוּא ת, and translates, from the revenue of a man is his kind gift;" and Ewald, who is satisfied with מִתְבּוּא ת, "the gain of a man is his pious love." The latter is more judicious: חסד (love) distributed is in reality gain (according to v. 17); but 22b corresponds rather with the former: "better is he who from want does not give חסד, than he who could give and says he has nothing." But was there then need for that קורוס of the LXX? If a poor man is better than a lord given to lying,—for שִׁמְחָה לָאָדָם עֲ сделаֲד̣֝֝ה (vid., ad 3:3), i.e., is its soul and very essence. Euchel, who accordingly translates: the philanthropy of a man consists properly in his goodwill, rightly compares the Rabbinical proverb, אחד המרבה ואחד הממעיט ובלבד שיתכוון, i.e., one may give more or less, it all depends on the intention, the disposition.

23 The fear of Jahve tendeth to life; Satisfied, one spendeth the night, not visited by evil. Proverbs 19:23. The first line is a variation of 14:27a. How the fear of God thus reacheth to life, i.e., helps to a life that is enduring, free from care and happy, 23b says: the promises are fulfilled to the God-fearing, Deut. 11:15 and Lev. 26:6; he does not go hungry to bed, and needs fear no awakening in terror out of his soft slumber (Prov. 3:24). With 1 explic., 23a is explained. גִּבּוֹנ means to spend the night (the long night) hungry. as גִּבְּוֹנ, Job 24:7, to pass the night in nakedness (cold). מַשֶּׁךְ, of visitation of punishment, we read also at Isa. 29:6, and instead of בֵּר, as it might be according to this passage, we have here the accus. of the manner placing the meaning of the ניפ. beyond a doubt (cf. 11:15, בֵּר in an evil manner). All is in harmony with the matter, and is good Heb.; on the contrary, Hitzig's ingenuity intruces, instead of בֵּר, an unheard of word, בֵּר, "and he stretches himself." One of the Greeks excellently translates: καὶ ἐμπλησθεὶς αὐλισθήσεται ἄνευ ἐπισκοπῆς πονηρᾶς. The LXX, which instead of בֵּר, γνῶσις, translates thus, בֵּר, discredit itself. The Midrash—Lagarde says of its translation—varies in colour like an opal. In other words, it handles the text like wax, and forms it according to its own taste, like the Midrash with its "read not so, but so." 24 The slothful hath thrust his hand into the dish; He bringeth it not again to his mouth. Proverbs 19:24. This proverb is repeated in a different form, 26:15. The figure appears, thus understood, an hyperbole, on which account the LXX understand by בָּשׁוּר לְבָמוֹן, the bosom of lap, κόλπον; Aquila and Symmachus understand by it the arm-pit, μασχάλην of μαλέκ; and the Jewish interpreters gloss it by בֵּר (Kimchi) or קרע החלוק, the slit (Ita. fenditura) of the shirt. But the domestic figure, 2 Kings 21:13, places before us a dish which, when it is empty, is wiped and turned upside down; and that the slothful when he eats appears too slothful to bring his hand, e.g., with the rice or the piece of bread he has taken out of the dish, again to his mouth, is true to nature: we say of such a man that he almost sleeps when he eats. The fut. after the perf. here denotes that which is not done after the former thing, i.e., that which is scarcely and only with difficulty done; ג ... לו may have the meaning of “yet not,” as at Ps. 129:2; but the sense of “not once” = ne ... quidem, lies here nearer Deut. 23:3.

25 The scorner thou smitest, and the simple is prudent; And if one reprove the man of understanding, he gaineth knowledge Proverbs 19:25. Hitzig translates in a way that is syntactically inexact: smite the scorner, so the simple becomes prudent; that would have required at least the word יוביר נס ו is one of many modes of expression for the simultaneous, discussed by me at Hab. 3:10. The meaning of the proverb has a complete commentary at 21:11, where its two parts are otherwise expressed with perfect identity of thought. In regard to the קינ, with whom denunciation and threatening bear no fruit (Prov. 13:1; 15:12), and perhaps even produce the contrary effect to that intended (Prov. 9:7), there remains nothing else than to vindicate the injured truths by means of the private justice of corporal punishment. Such words, if spoken to the right man, in the right spirit, at the right time, may affect him with wholesome terrors; but even though he is not made better thereby, yet the simple, who listens to the mockeries of such not without injury, will thereby become prudent (_gain הערית, prudence, as at 15:5), i.e., either arrive at the knowledge that the mockery of religion is wicked, or guard himself against incurring the same repressive measures. In 25ב חוכמ is neither inf. (Umbreit), which after 21:11b must be הובק, but the hypothetic perf. (Syr.) with the most general subject (Merc., Hitzig): if one impart instruction to the (dat. obj. as 9:7; 15:2) man of understanding (vid., 16:21), then he acquires knowledge, i.e., gains an insight into the nature and value of that which one wishes to bring him to the knowledge of (הידע, as 29:7; cf. 8:5). That which the deterring lesson of exemplary punishment approximately effects with the wavering, is, in the case of the man of understanding, perfectly attained by an instructive word.

We have now reached the close of the third chief section of the older Book of Proverbs. All the three sections begin with הבן חכם, 10:1; 13:1; 15:20. The Introduction, 1–9, dedicates this collection of Solomonic proverbs to youth, and the three beginnings accordingly relate to the relative duties of a son to his father and mother. We are now no longer far from the end, for 22:17 resumes the tone of the Introduction. The third principal part would be disproportionately large if it extended from 15:1 to 22:15. But there does not again occur a proverb beginning with the words “son of man.” We can therefore scarcely go wrong if we take 19:26 as the commencement of a fourth principal part. The Masora divides the whole Mishle into eight sedarim, which exhibit so little knowledge of the true division, that the parashas (sections) 10:1; 22:17 do not at all find their right place. The MSS, however, contain evidences that this Hagiograph was also anciently divided into parashas, which were designated partly by spaces between the lines (setwumoth) and partly by breaks in the lines (phethuchoth). In Baer’s Cod. Jamanensis, after 6:19, there is the letter ב written on the margin as the mark of such a break. With 6:20 (vid., l.c.) there indeed commences a new part of the introductory Mashal discourses. But, besides, we only seldom meet with coincidences with the division and grouping which have commended themselves to us. In the MS of the Graecus Venetus, 19:11, 16, and 19 have their initial letters coloured red; but why only these verses, is not manifest. A comparison of the series of proverbs distinguished by such initials with the Cod. Jaman, and Cod. II of the Leipzig City Library, makes it more than probable that it gives a traditional division of the Mishle, which may perhaps yet be discovered by a comparison of MSS. But this much is clear, that a historico-literary reconstruction of the Mishle, and of its several parts, can derive no help from this comparison.

Proverbs 19:26. With 19:26 there thus begins the fourth principal part of the Solomonic collection of proverbs introduced by 1–9. He that doeth violence to his father and chaseth his mother, is a son that bringeth shame and disgrace. The right name is given in the second line to him who acts as is described in the first. שִדֵד means properly to barricade [obstruere], and then in general to do violence to, here: to ruin one both as to life and property. The part., which has the force of an attributive clause, is continued in the finite: qui matrem fugat; this is the rule of the Heb. style, which is not φιλομέτοχος, Gesen. § 134, Anm. 2. Regarding מֵבִיש, vid., at 10:5; regarding the placing together of הֵבִיש וְׁהֶחְׁפִּיר, vid., 13:5, where for הֵבִיש, to make shame, to be scandalous, the word הִבְׁאִיש, which is radically different, meaning to bring into bad odour, is used. The putting to shame is in בוש (kindred with Arab. bâth) thought of as disturbario (cf. סְחָרָה) (cf. at Ps. 6:11), in עוֹנֵר (khfr) as opertio (cf. Cicero’s Cluent. 20: infamia et dedecore opertus), not, as I formerly thought, with Fürst, as reddening, blushing (vid., Ps. 34:6). Putting to shame would in this connection be too weak a meaning for מֵבִיש. The paedagogic stamp which v. 26 impresses on this fourth principal part is made yet further distinct in the verse that now follows.

27 Cease, my son, to hear instruction, To depart from the words of knowledge.

Proverbs 19:27. Oetinger correctly: cease from hearing instruction if thou wilt make no other use of it than to depart, etc., i.e., cease to learn wisdom and afterwards to misuse it. The proverb is, as Ewald says, as “bloody irony;” but it is a dissuasive from hypocrisy, a warning against the self-deception of which Jas. 1:22–24 speaks, against heightening one’s own condemnation, which is the case of that servant who knows his lord’s will and does it not, Luke 12:47. מֵבִיש, in the meaning to leave off doing something further, is more frequently construed with ב seq. infin. than with מ (cf. e.g., Gen. 11:8 with 1 Kings 15:21); but if we mean the omission of a thing which has not yet been begun, then the construction is with ב, Num. 9:13. Instead of מֵבִיש וְׁהֶחְׁפִּיר, there might have been also used מֵבִיש וּמֵבִיש (omit rather ... than ...), and מִלִשְׁגות would be more distinct; but as the proverb is expressed, מִלִשְׁגות is not to be mistaken as the subord. finit. of purpose. The LXX, Syr., Targ., and Jerome do violence to the proverb. Luther, after the example of older interpreters: instruction, that which leads away from prudent learning; but musar always means either discipline weaning from evil, or education leading to good.

Proverbs 19:28. The Mosaic law does not know the oath of witnesses; but the adjuring of witnesses to speak the truth, Lev. 4:1, places a false statement almost in the rank of perjury. The מִשְׁפָט, which legally and morally binds witnesses, is just their duty to state the matter in accordance with truth, and without deceitful and malicious reservation; but a worthless witness (vid., regarding בְּלִי עֲלָי, 6:12) despiseth what is right (יָלִיץ with accus.-obj. like 14:9), i.e., scornfully disregards this duty. Under 28b Hitzig remarks that בָּלַע only in קål means to devour, but in Piel, on the contrary, to absorb = annihilate; therefore he reads with the LXX and Syr. מִשְׁפָט [justice] instead of מִשְׁפָט [mischief]: the mouth of the wicked murders that which is right, properly, swallows down his feeling of right. But בִּל ע interchanges with בָל ע in the sense of swallowing only, without the connected idea of annihilation; cf. כְּבָל ע for the continuance [duration] of a gulp = for a moment, Num. 4:20 with Job 7:29; and one can thus understand 28b without any alteration of the text after Job 15:16; cf. 20:12–15, as well as with the text altered after Isa. 3:12, by no means so that one makes און the subject: mischief swallows up, i.e., destroys, the mouth of the wicked (Rashi); for when “mouth” and “to swallow” stand connected, the mouth is naturally that which swallows, not that which is swallowed (cf. Eccles. 10:12: the mouth of the fool swallows, i.e., destroys, him). Thus 28b means that wickedness, i.e., that which is morally perverse, is a delicious morsel for the mouth of the godless, which he eagerly devours; to practise evil is for him, as we say, “ein wahrer Genuss” [a true enjoyment].

Proverbs 19:29. שְׁפָטִים never means punishment which a court of justice inflicts, but is always used of the judgments of God, even although they are inflicted by human instrumentality (vid., 2 Chron. 24:24); the singular, which nowhere occurs, is the segolate n. act. שְׁפֶט = שָפֶט, 2 Chron. 20:9, plur. שְׁפֶטִים, שְׁפּוּטִים. Hitzig’s remark: “the judgment may, after v. 25, consist in stripes,” is misleading; the stroke, הבזה, there is such as when, e.g., a stroke on the ear is applied to one who despises that which is holy, which, under the circumstances, may be salutary; but it does not fall under the category of shephuthim, nor properly under that of mahalŭmoth. The former are providential chastisements with which history itself, or God in history, visits the despsier of religion; the latter are strokes which are laid on the backs of fools by one who is instructing them, in order, if possible, to bring them to thought and understanding. נָכָון, here inflected as Niph., is used, as Job 15:23, as meaning to be placed in readiness, and thus to be surely imminent. Regarding mahalŭmoth, vid., at 18:6.

Proverbs 20:1. This proverb warns against the debauchery with which free-thinking is intimately associated. Wine is a mocker, mead boisterous; And no one who is overtaken thereby is wise.

The article stands with ב. Ewald maintains that in 10–22:6 the article occurs only here and at 21:31, and that it is here, as the LXX shows, not original. Both statements are incorrect. The article is found, e.g., at 19:6; 18:18, 17, and here the personification of “wine” requires it; but that it is wanting to מִיאָ is misleading; the stroke, מַכְּלֻם, there is such as when, e.g., a stroke on the ear is applied to one who despises that which is holy; mead is boisterous (cf. הומִיָה, 7:11), because he who is inebriated in his dissolute madness breaks through the limits of morality and propriety. He is unwise who, through wine and the like, i.e., overpowered by it (cf. 2 Sam. 13:28), staggers, i.e., he gives himself up to wine to such a degree that he is no longer master of himself. At 5:19 we read, ב מַכְלֵם, of the intoxication of love; here, as at Isa. 28:7, of the intoxication of wine, i.e., of the passionate slavish desire of wine or for wine. The word “Erpichte” [avidissimus], i.e., being indissolubly bound to a thing, corresponds at least in some degree to the idea. Fleischer compares the French: être fou de quelque chose. Isa. 28:7, however, shows that one has to think on actual staggering, being overtaken in wine.

2. A roaring as of a lion is the terror of the king; And he that provoketh him forfeiteth his life.

Proverbs 20:2. Line first is a variation of 19:12. The terror which a king spreads around (ךְמֶל, gen. subjecti., as, e.g., at Job 9:34 and generally) is like the growling of a lion which threatens danger. The thought here suggested is that it is dangerous to arouse a lion. Thus does not mean: he who is angry at him (Venet.: χολοῦμενος αὐτῷ), but he who provokes him (LXX, Syr., Targ., Jerome, Luther). signifies, as we saw at 14:16, to be in a state of excessive displeasure, extreme anger. Here the meaning must be: he who puts him into a state of anger (LXX, ὁ παροξύνων αὐτόν, in other versions with the addition of καὶ ἐπιμεγνύμονος, who conducts himself familiarly towards him = מתעorable). But can have this meaning? That the of transitive stems, e.g., (1 Kings 8:59) and (Mic. 6:16), is construed with the accus. of that which any one performs for himself (cf. Ewald’s Gramm. Arab. § 180), is not unusual; but can the of the intrans. (Pers.) means to fall into a passion, “express with the accusative the passion of another excited thereby” (Ewald, § 282a)? There is no evidence for this; and Hitzig’s conjecture, (Tiphel of the Targ. מותיב = מותיב), is thus not without occasion. But one might suppose that, as the reflexive of a Piel or Hiphil which meant to be put into a state of anger, may mean to draw forth the anger of any one, as in Arab., the VIIIth form (Hithpa.) of hadr, to be present, with the accus. as reflexive of the IVth form, may mean: sibi aliquid praesens sistere. Not so difficult is אָסִיף with the accus. of that which is missing, vid., 8:36 and Hab. 2:10.

3 It is an honour to a man to remain far from strife; But every fool showeth his teeth.

Proverbs 20:3. Or better: whoever is a fool quisquis amens, for the emphasis does not lie on this, that every fool, i.e., every single one of this sort, contends to the uttermost; but that whoever is only always a fool finds pleasure in such strife. Regarding vid., 17:14; 18:1. On the contrary, it is an honour to a man to be peaceable, or, as it is here expressed, to remain far from strife. The phrase may be translated: to desist from strife; but in this case the word would be pointed שׁב ב, which Hitzig prefers; for means, 2 Sam. 23:7, annihilation (the termination of existence); also Ex. 21:19, does not mean to be keeping holy day; but to be sitting, viz., at home, in a state of incapability for work. Rightly Fleischer: “לָשׁב כּ, like Arab. k’ad san, to remain sitting quiet, and thus to hold oneself removed from any kind of activity.” He who is prudent, and cares for his honour, not only breaks off strife when it threatens to become passionate, but does not at all enter into it, keeps himself far removed from it.

4 At the beginning of the harvest the sluggard plougheth not; And so when he cometh to the reaping-time there is nothing.

Proverbs 20:4. Many translators (Symmachus, Jerome, Luther) and interpreters (e.g., Rashi, Zöckler) explain: propter frigus; but ἡμέρα is, according to its verbal import, not a synon. of καρπίζειν, but means gathering = the time of gathering (synon. קָרָה), from καρπός, carpere, as harvest, the time of the καρπος, the plucking off of the fruit; but the harvest is the beginning of the old Eastern agricultural year, for in Palestine and Syria the time of ploughing and sowing with the harvest or early rains (חָרף = חָרף, Neh. 7:24; Ezra 2:18) followed the fruit harvest from October to December. The would be pointed what stands before the sluggard; the perf. קָרָה places him in the midst of this, and besides has this in its favour, that, interpreted as perf. hypotheticum, it makes the absence of an object to be more tenable. The Chethib, קָרָה, is not to be read after Ps. 109:10: he will beg in harvest—in vain
(Jerome, Luther), to which Hitzig well remarks: Why in vain? Amid the joy of harvest people dispense most liberally; and the right time for begging comes later. Hitzig conjecturally arrives at the translation: “A pannier the sluggard provideth not; Seeketh to borrow in harvest, and nothing cometh of it.”

But leaving out of view the “pannier,” the meaning “to obtain something as a loan,” which from the connection may bear, is here altogether imaginary. Let one imagine to himself an indolent owner of land, who does not trouble himself about the filling and sowing of his fields at the right time and with diligence, but leaves this to his people, who do only as much as is commanded them: such an one asks, when now the harvest-time has come, about the ingathering; but he receives the answer, that the land has lain unploughed, because he had not commanded it to be ploughed. When he asks, there is nothing, he asks in vain (וָאָיִן, as at 14:6; 13:4). Meîri rightly explains מֵחֹרֶף by מתחלת זמן החרישה, and 4b by: “so then, when he asks at harvest time, he will find nothing;” on the other hand, the LXX and Aram. think on חֵרֶף, carper conviciis, as also in Codd. here and there is found the meaningless מִחֹרֶף.

5 The purpose in the heart of a man is deep water; But a man of understanding draweth it out.

Proverbs 20:5. “Still waters are deep.” Like such deep waters (Prov. 18:4) is that which a man hath secretly (Isa. 29:15) planned in his heart. He keeps it secret, conceals it carefully, craftily misleads those who seek to draw it out; but the man of knowledge, i.e., one who possesses the right criteria for distinguishing between good and bad, true and false, and at the same time has the capacity to look through men and things, draws out (the Venet. well, ἀνέλξει) the secret for he penetrates to the bottom of the deep water. Such an one does not deceive himself with men, he knows how to estimate their conduct according to its last underlying motive and aim; and if the purpose is one that is pernicious to him, he meets it in the process of realization. What is here said is applicable not only to the subtle statesman and the general, but also the pragmatist and the expositor, as, e.g., of a poem such as the book of Job, the idea of which lies like a pearl at the bottom of deep water.

6 Almost every one meeteth a man who is gracious to him; But a man who standeth the test, who findeth such a one?

Proverbs 20:6. As רָצֵר אֲשֶׁר אֲמַתָּם 13:17, signifies a messenger in whom there is confidence, and אֲשֶׁר אֲמַתְּך 14:5, a witness who is altogether truthful, so is a man who remains true to himself, and maintains fidelity toward others. Such an one it is not easy to find; but patrons who make promises and awaken expectations, finally to leave in the lurch him who depends on them—of such there are many. This contrast would proceed from 6a also, if we took קָרָא in the sense of to call, to call or cry out with ostentation: multi homines sunt quorum suam quisque humanitatem proclamat (Schelling, Fleischer, Ewald, Zöckler, and also, e.g., Meîri). But אִיש חֶסֶד is certainly to be interpreted after 11:17, Isa. 57:1. Recognising this, Hitzig translates: many a man one names his dear friend; but in point of style this would be as unsuitable as possible. Must then mean vocat? A more appropriate parallel word to קָרָא אִיש חֶסֶד, a man well-affectioned and benevolent; but it is rare to find one who in his affection and its fruits proves himself to be true, and actually performs that which was hoped for from him. Luther translates, with the Syr. and Targ. after Jerome: Viel Menschen werden From gerhümpt [many men are reputed pious]; but if קָרָא אִיש חֶסֶד were equivalent to קָרָא אִיש חֶסֶד, then ought to have been used instead of קָרָא אִיש חֶסֶד. The LXX read רֵאֵם אֱדֹם קָרָא אָדָם אָדָם, man is something great, and a compassionate man is something precious; but it costs trouble to find out a true man. The fundamental thought remains almost the same in all these interpretations and readings: love is plentiful; fidelity, rare; therefore חסד of the right kind, after the image of God, is joined toאמת.

7 He who in his innocence walketh as one upright, Blessed are his children after him! Proverbs 20:7. We may not take the first line as a separate clause with צִדְק, as subject (Van Dyk, Elster) or predicate (Targ.); for, thus rendered, it does not appropriately fall in as parallel to the second line, because containing nothing of promise, and the second line would then strike in at least not so unconnectedly (cf. on the contrary, 10:9; 14:25). We have before us a substantival clause, of which the first line is the complex subject. But Jerome, the Venet., and Luther erroneously: the just man walking in his innocence; this placing first of the adj. is in opposition to the Hebr. syntax. We must, if the whole is to be interpreted as nom., regard צדיק as permutative: one walking in his innocence, a righteous one. But, without doubt,/tsedek is the accus. of the manner; in the manner of one righteous, or in apposition: as one righteous; cf. Job 31:26 with Mic. 2:7. Thus Hitzig rightly also refers to these two passages, and Ewald also refers to 22:11; 24:15. To walk in his innocence as a righteous man, is equivalent to always to do that which is right, without laying claim to any distinction or making any boast on that account; for thereby one only follows the impulse and the direction of his heart, which shows itself and can show itself not otherwise than in unreserved devotion to God and to that which is good. The children after him are not the children after his death (Gen. 24:67); but, according to Deut. 4:40, cf. Job 21:21, those who follow his example, and thus those who come after him; for already in the lifetime of such an one, the benediction begins to have its fulfilment in his children.

The following group begins with a royal proverb, which expresses what a king does with his eyes. Two proverbs, of the seeing eye and the necessary opening of the eyes, close it.

8 A king sitting on the seat of justice, Scattereth asunder all evil with his eyes. Proverbs 20:8. Excellently the Venet. ἐὰν θρόνον δίκης οὗτος is the name of the seat of rectitude (the tribunal), as the “throne of grace,” Heb. 4:17, is the name of the capporeth as the seat of mercy; the seat of the judge is merely called כסא; on the other hand, כסא is the contrast of כסא, Ps. 94:20: the seat from which the decision that is in conformity with what is right (cf. e.g., Jer. 5:28) goes forth, and where it is sought. As little here as at v. 26 is there need for a characterizing adj. to melek; but the LXX hits the meaning for it, understands such to דִיק: ὅταν βασιλεὺς δίκαιος καθίσῃ ἐπὶ θρόνον. By the “eyes” are we then to understand those of the mind: he sifts, dignoscit, with the eyes of the mind all that is evil, i.e., distinguishes it subjectively from that which is not evil? Thus Hitzig by a comparison of Ps. 11:4; 139:3 (where Jerome has eventilasti, the Vulg. investigasti). Scarcely correctly, for it lies nearer to think on the eyes in the king’s head (vid., 16:15); in that case: to winnow (to sift) means to separate the good and the bad, but first mediately: to exclude the bad; finally, v. 26 leads to the conclusion that מְזָרֶה is to be understood, not of a subjective, but of an actual scattering, or separating, or driving away. Thus the penetrating, fear-inspiring eyes of the king are meant, as Immanuel explains: בראיית עיניו מבריחם מפניו ומפזר אותם בכל פיאה. But in this explanation the personal rendering of צדיק is incorrect; for mezareh, meant of the driving asunder of persons, requires as its object a plur. (cf. 26a). Col-ra is understood as neut. like 5:14. Before the look of a king to whom it belongs to execute righteousness and justice (Isa. 16:5), nothing evil stands; criminal acts and devices seen through, and so also judged by these eyes, are broken up and scattered to all the winds, along with the danger that thereby threatened the community. It is the command: “put away the evil” (Deut. 13:6 [5]), which the king carries into effect by the powerful influence of his look. With col-ра there is connected the thought that in the presence of the heavenly King no one is wholly free from sin.

9 Who can say I have made my heart clean, I am pure from my sins?

Proverbs 20:9. It is the same time thought that Solomon expresses in his prayer at the consecration of the temple, 1 Kings 8:46: there is no man who sinneth not. To cleanse his heart as Ps. 73:13), is equivalent to to empty it, by self-examination and earnest effort after holiness, of all impure motives and inclinations; vid., regarding וִיהֵּיו, to be piercing, shining brightly, cloudlessly pure, Fleischer in Levy’s Chald. Wörterbuch, i. 424. The consequence of זָכַּה, i.e., of the purifying of the heart, the being pure from sinful conduct: I have become pure from my sins, i.e., from such as I might fall into by not resisting temptations; the suffix is not understood as actual, but as potential, like Ps. 18:24. No one can boast of this, for man’s knowledge of himself and of his sins remains always limited (Jer. 17:9f.; Ps. 19:13); and sin is so deeply rooted in his nature (Job 14:4; 15:14–16), that the remains of a sinful tendency always still conceal themselves in the folds of his heart, sinful thoughts still cross his soul, sinful inclinations still sometimes by their natural force overcome the moral resistance that opposes them, and stains of all kinds still defile even his best actions.

Proverbs 20:10. This proverb passes sentence of condemnation against gross sins in action and life. Diverse stones, diverse measures— An abomination to Jahve are they both. The stones are, as at 11:1; 16:11, those used as weights. Stone and stone, ephah and ephah, means that they are of diverse kinds, one large and one small (the LXX, in which the sequence of the proverbs from v. 10 is different, has μέγα καὶ μικρόν), so that one may be able deceitfully to substitute the one for the other. אֵיפָה (from אָפָה, to bake) may originally have been used to designate such a quantity of meal as supplied a family of moderate wants; it corresponds to the bath (Ezek. 45:11) as a measure for fluids, and stands here synecdochically instead of all the measures, including, e.g., the cor, of which the ephah was a tenth part, and the seah, which was a third part of it. 10b = 17:5, an echo of Lev. 19:36; Deut. 25:13–16. Just and equal measure is the demand of a holy God; the contrary is to Him an abhorrence.

Proverbs 20:11. If מְעַלֵל may be here understood after the use of מָעַלְלָה, to play, to pass the time with anything, then נֵער refers thereto: even by his play (Ewald). But granting that מְעַלֵל [children], synon. with מִעַלְלָה, had occasioned the choice of the word מְעַלֵל (vid., Fleischer on Isa. 3:4), yet this word never means anything else than work, an undertaking of something, and accomplishing it; wherefore Böttcher proposes מְעַלְלָה for מְעַלֵל may have meant play, in contradistinction to מְעַל. This is possible, but conjectural. Thus gam is not taken along with b’amalalav. That the child also makes himself known by his actions, is an awkward thought; for if in anything else, in these he must show what one has to expect from him. Thus gam is after the syntactical method spoken of at 17:26; 19:2, to be referred to נֵער (also the child, even the child), although in this order it is referred to the whole clause. The verb נֵער is, from its fundamental thought, to perceive, observe from an ἐναντιόσημον: to know, and to know as strange, to disown (vid., under Isa. 3:9); the Hithpa. elsewhere signifies, like (Arab.) tankkar, to make oneself unknowable, but here to make oneself knowable; Symmachus, ἐπιγνωρισθήσεται, Venet. γνωσθήσεται. Or does the proverb mean: even the child dissembles in his actions (Oetinger)? Certainly not, for that would be a statement which, thus generally made, is not justified by experience. We must then interpret 11b as a direct question, though it has the form of an indirect one: he gives himself to be known, viz., whether his disposition be pure and right. That one may recognise his actions in the conduct of any one, is a platitude; also that one may recognise his conduct in these, is not much better. פוֹעַל is therefore referred by Hitzig to God as the Creator, and he interprets it in the sense of the Arab. khulk, being created = natura. We also in this way explain, Ps. 103:14, as referable to God the יָרָץ; and that Poal occurs, e.g., Isa. 1:31, not merely in the sense of action, but also in that of performance or structure, is favourable to this interpretation. But one would think that poal, if thus used in the sense of the nature of man, would have more frequently occurred. It everywhere else means action or work. And thus it is perhaps also here used to denote action, but regarded as habitual conduct, and according to the root-meaning, moral disposition. The N.T. word ἐργον approaches this idea in such passages as Gal. 6:4. It is less probable that 11b is understood with reference to the future (Luther and others); for in that case one does not see why the poet did not make use of the more intelligible phrase אם זך וישר יִהְּיֶה פעלו. Poal occurs, as in our (Germ.) proverb: Was ein Haken werden will krümmt sich bald [what means to become a hook bends itself early]; or: Was ein Dörnchen werden will spitzt sich bei Zeiten [what means to become a thorn sharpens itself early]; or: Was ein Haken werden will krümmt sich bald [what means to become a gourd shows itself in the bud, to become a thorn sharpens itself early]; or: Was ein Haken werden will krümmt sich bald [what means to become a gourd shows itself in the bud, to become a thorn sharpens itself early]; or: Was ein Haken werden will krümmt sich bald. It is like our (Germ.) proverb: Was ein Haken werden will krümmt sich bald [what means to become a hook bends itself early]; or: Was ein Dörnchen werden will spitzt sich bei Zeiten [what means to become a thorn sharpens itself early], and to the Aram. בָּשֹׁם בְּתוֹכָהּ מַכְסִפוּ יְדֵשׁ = that which will become a gourd shows itself in the bud, Berachoth 48a.

12. The hearing ear and the seeing eye—Jahve hath created them both.

Proverbs 20:12. Löwenstein, like the LXX: the ear hears and the eye sees—it is enough to refer to the contrary to v. 10 and 17:15. In itself the proverb affirms a fact, and that it is its sensus simplex; but besides, this fact may be seen from many points of view, and it has many consequences, none of which is to be rejected as contrary to the meaning: (1.) It lies nearest to draw the conclusion, via eminenteiae, which is drawn in Ps. 94:9. God is thus the All-hearing and the All-seeing, from which, on the one side, the consolation arises that everything that is seen stands under His protection and government, 15:3; and on the other side, the warning, Aboth. 1: “Know what is above thee; a Seeing eye and a Hearing ear, and all thy conduct is marked in His book.” (2.) With this also is connected the sense arising out of the combination in Ps. 40:7: man ought then to use the ear and the eye in conformity with the design which they are intended to subserve, according to the purpose of the Creator (Hitzig compares 16:4); it is not first applicable to man with reference to the natural, but to the moral life: he shall not make himself deaf and blind to that which it is his duty to hear and to see; but he ought also not to hear and to see with pleasure that from which he should turn away (Isa. 33:15),—in all his hearing and seeing he is responsible to the Creator of the ear and the eye. (3.) One may thus interpret “hearing” and “seeing” as commendable properties, as Fleischer suggests from comparison of 16:11: an ear that truly hears (the word of God and the lessons of Wisdom) and an eye that truly sees (the works of God) are a gift of the Creator, and are (Arab.) lillhi, are to be held as high and precious. Thus the proverb, like a polished gem, may be turned now in one direction and now in another; it is to be regarded as a many-sided fact.

13. Love not sleep, lest thou become poor; Open thine eyes, and have enough to eat.

Proverbs 20:13. What is comprehended in the first line here is presented in detail in 6:9–11. The fut. Niph. of Yiḥāy, to become poor (cf. 10:4), is formed metaplastically from יָרָץ, רָץ, יָרָץ, רָץ, as at 1 Sam. 2:7; Hitzig compares (Arab.) ṛyth, which, however, means to loiter or delay, not to come back or down. The R. יָרָץ signifies either to be slack without support (cf. רָץ, ṛyth, properly hiscens, R. ṣוכָם, to open widely, which here follows).

Regarding the second imper. 13b, vid., 3:4: it has the force of a consequence, Las deine augen.
"wacker sein, So wirstu brots gnug haben" (Luth.) [Let thine eyes be open, so shalt thou have bread enough]. With these two proverbs of the eyes, the group beginning with v. 8 rounds itself off.

The following group has its natural limit at the new point of departure at v. 20, and is internally connected in a diversity of ways.

14 “Bad, bad!” saith the buyer; And going his way, he boasteth then.

Proverbs 20:14. Luther otherwise: “Bad, bad!” saith one if he hath it; But when it is gone, then he boasteth of it. This rendering has many supporters. Geier cites the words of the Latin poet: “Omne bonum praesens minus est, sperata videntur Magna.” Schultens quotes the proverbs τὸ παρὸν βαρύ and Praesentia laudato, for with Luther he refers to the present possession (אָזֵל, as 1 Sam. 9:7 = (Arab.) zâl, to cease, to be lost), and translates: at dilapsum sibi, tum demum pro splendido celebrat. But by this the Hithpa. does not receive its full meaning; and to extract from הָסַרְקַה the idea to which אָזֵללוֹ refers, if not unnecessary, is certainly worthless. Hakkoneh may also certainly mean the possessor, but the possessor by acquisition (LXX and the Venet. ὁ κτώμενος); for the most part it signifies the possessor by purchase, the buyer (Jerome, empor), as correlate of מֹכֵר, Isa. 24:2; Ezek. 4:12. It is customary for the buyer to undervalue that which he seeks to purchase, so as to obtain it as cheaply as possible; afterwards he boasts that he has bought that which is good, and yet so cheap. That is an every-day experience; but the proverb indirectly warns against conventional lying, and shows that one should not be startled and deceived thereby. The subject to אָזֵל לו refers, if not unnecessary, is thus the buyer; לו with לו denotes, more definitely even than לו אל, going from thence, s’en aller. Syntactically, the punctuation אָזֵל לו [and he takes himself off] (perf. hypoth., Ewald, 357a) would have been near (Jerome: et cum recesserit); but yet it is not necessary, with Hitzig, thus to correct it. The poet means to say: making himself off, he then boasts. We cannot in German place the “alsdann” [then] as the אָז here, and as also, e.g., at 1 Sam. 20:12; but Theodotion, in good Greek: και πορευθείς τότε καυχήσεται. We may write אָז לו with Mercha on the antepenult, on which the accent is thrown back, cf. בָּא, 19:17, but not אָז; for the rule for Dagesh does not here, with the retrogression of the tone, come into application, as, e.g., in Ps. 41:10. Singularly the Syr. and Targ. do not read אָז לו, but אָז לו and couple v. 15 with 14. In the LXX, vv. 14–19 are wanting.

15 There is indeed gold, and many pearls; But a precious treasure are lips full of knowledge.

Proverbs 20:15. In order to find a connection between this proverb and that which precedes, we need only be reminded of the parable of the merchantman who sought goodly pearls, Matt. 13:45f. The proverb rises to a climax: there is gold, and there are pearls in abundance, the one of which has always a higher value than the other; but intelligent lips are above all such jewels—they are a precious treasure, which gold and all pearls cannot equal. In a similar manner the N.T. places the one pearl above the many goodly pearls. So might דעת (chokma) be called the pearl above all pearls (Prov. 3:15; 8:11); but the lips as the organ of knowledge are fittingly compared with a precious vessel, a vessel of more precious substance than gold and pearls are.

16 Take from him the garment, for he hath become surety for another; And for strangers take him as a pledge.

Proverbs 20:16. The same proverb 27:13, where כָּל, with the usual aphaeresis, here interchanges with it the fuller form כל, which is also found at Ezek. 37:16. To this imperative מֵחֶנֶה is parallel: take him as a pledge (Theodotion, Jerome, the Venet. and Luther); it is not a substantive: his pledge (Targ.), which would require the word בֵּלֵהוּ (רֹעַל); nor is it to be read with the Syr. כֶּבֶל, כַּבֶּל, one pledges him; but it is imperative, not however of the Piel, which would be כַּבֶּל כַּבֶּל, and would mean “destroy him;” but, as Aben Ezra rightly, the imperative of Kal of קבל, to take as a pledge, Ex. 22:25, for כַּבֶּל כַּבֶּל without any example indeed except כְּנָנִי, Ps. 9:14; cf. 80:16. The first line is clear: take his garment, for he has become good for another (cf. 11:15), who has left him in the lurch, so that he must now become wise by experience. The second line also is intelligible if we read, according to the Chethîb, כְּנָרִים (Jerome, the Venet.), not כְּנָרִי, as Schultens incorrectly points it, and if we interpret this plur. like בנים, Gen. 21:7, with Hitzig following Luther, as plur. of the category: take him as a pledge, hold fast by his person, so as not to suffer injury from strange people for whom he has become surety. But the Kerî requires כְּנָרָי (according to which Theodotion and the Syr., and, more distinctly still than these, the Targ. translates), and thus, indeed, it stands written, 27:13, without the Kerî, thus Bathra 173b reads and writes also here. Either כנרים is a strange woman, a prostitute, a maîtresse for whom the unwise has made himself surety, or it is neut. for aliena res (LXX 27:13, τὰ ἀλλοτρία), a matter not properly belonging to this unwise person. We regard כנרים in this passage as original. בעד coincides with 6:26: it does not mean ani, but וֹנֵר; “for strange people” is here equivalent to “for the sake of, on account of strange people” is here equivalent to for the sake of, on account of strange people (ץָרִיָהּ תְּנָנִי, as the Venet. translates it).

Proverbs 20:17. “Bread of deceit” is not deceit itself, as that after which the desire of a man goes forth, and that for which he has a relish (thus, e.g., Immanuel and Hitzig); but that which is not gained by labour, and is not merited. Possession (vid., 4:17) or enjoyment (Prov. 9:17) obtained by deceit is thus called, as לֶחֶם כְּזָבִים, 23:3, denotes bread; but for him who has a relish for it, it is connected with deceit. Such bread of lies is sweet to a man, because it has come to him without effort, but in the end not only will he have nothing to eat, but his tongue, teeth, and mouth will be injured by small stones; i.e., in the end he will have nothing, and there will remain to him only evil (Fleischer). Or: it changes itself at last into gravel, of which his mouth is filled full, as we might say, “it lies at last in his stomach like lead.” כְּנָרִי is the Arab. Ḥatny, gravel (Hitzig, grien = gries, coarse sand, grit), R. כנרי, scindere. Similarly in Arab. Ḥajar, a stone, is used as the image of disappointed expectations, e.g., the adulterer finds a stone, i.e., experiences disappointment.

18 Plans are established by counsel, And with prudent government make war.

Proverbs 20:18. From the conception of a thought, practically influencing the formation of our own life and the life of the community, to its accomplishment there is always a long way which does not lead to the end unless one goes forward with counsel and strength combined, and considers all means and eventualities. The Niph. of וּבְּרָם means, in a passive sense: to be accomplished or realized (Ps. 141:2). The clause 18a is true for times of war as well as for times of peace; war is disastrous, unless it is directed with strategic skill (vid., regarding חֲבָלֻּהוּ, 1:5). Grotius compares the proverb, Γνῶμαι πλέον κρατοῦσιν ὴ σθένος χειρῶν. In 24:6, the necessity of counsel is also referred to the case of war. Ewald would read [the infin.] כִּי עָשָּׂה: with management it is that one carries on war. But why? Because to him the challenge to carry on war appears to be contrary to the spirit of proverbial poetry. But the author of the proverb does certainly mean: if thou hast to carry on war, carry it on with the skill of a general; and the imper. is protected by 24:6 against that infin., which is, besides, stylistically incongruous.
19 He that goeth out gossiping revealeth a secret; and the babbler have nothing to do.

Proverbs 20:19. Luther otherwise (like Hitzig)—Be not complicated with him who revealeth a secret, and with the slanderer, and with the false (better: loquacious) mouth, so that he and the warning apply to the threefold description, a rendering which Kimchi also, and Immanuel, and others at least suggest. But in connection with 11:13, the first line has the force of a judicium, which includes the warning to entrust nothing to a babbler which ought to be kept silent. Write מַפֹתוֹ, as found in Codd. and old Edd., with Munach on the penultima, on which the tone is thrown back, and Dagesh to ס, after the rule of the babbler (Gesen. § 20, 2a), altogether like פֶּתֶה, which Rashi, 15:32. 19b the Venet. translates after the first meaning of the word by Kimchi, תִּהְרְחִיבָהוּ תֻּכֵּדֵהוּ, to him who slanders and befools, for it thus improves Theodotion’s θυρείοντι τὰ χείλη αὐτοῦ. But מַפֹתוֹ means, Job 5:2, —cf. Hos. 7:11, —not him who befools another, but him who is befooled, is slandered, by another (Aben Ezra: פֶּתֶה וּפֶתֶה שֶׁפַּתיוֹ, with which here does not agree.

But now he who is easily befooled is called פֶּתֶה, as being open to influence (susceptible), patens; and if this particip. is used, as here, transitively, and, on account of the object standing near cannot possibly be equivalent to מַפֹתוֹ, the usage of the language also just mentioned is against it, then it means patefaciens or dilatans (cf. И. 9:27, Targ. אַשֵּׁן = אֲשֹהוּ, and places itself as synon. to שֶׁפַּתיוֹ, 13:3; thus one is called who does not close his mouth, who cannot hold his mouth, who always idly babbles, and is therefore, because he can keep nothing to himself, a dangerous companion. The Complut. rightly translates: μετὰ πλατύνοντος τὰ ἑαυτοῦ μὴ μίχθητι χείλη.

The following group begins, for once more the aim of this older Book of Proverbs becomes prominent, with an inculcation of the fourth commandment.

20 He that curseth his father and his mother, His light is extinguished in midnight darkness.

Proverbs 20:20. The divine law, Ex. 21:17, Lev. 20:9, condemns such an one to death. But the proverb does not mean this sentence against the criminal, which may only seldom be carried into execution, but the fearful end which, because of the righteousness of God ruling in history, terminates the life of such an unnatural son (Prov. 30:17). Of the godless, it has already been said that their light is extinguished, 13:9, there is suddenly an end to all that brightened, i.e., made happy and embellished their life; but he who acts wickedly (הָתֵר, R. יב, leiem esse, אֲשֹה מֵאִשּׁו, Deut. 27:16), even to the cursing of his father and mother, will see himself surrounded by midnight darkness (Symmachus, σκότωπος, moonless night), not: he will see himself in the greatest need, forsaken by divine protection (Fleischer), for Jansen rightly: Lux et lucerna in scripturis et vitae claritatem et posteritatem et prosperitatem significat. The apple of the eye, אֵשׁ עַיִן, of darkness (vid., 7:9), is that which forms the centre of centralization of darkness. The Syr. renders it correctly by bobtho, pupil [of the eye], but the Targ. retains the אֵשׁ עַיִן of the Kerî, and renders it in Aram. by אֵשׁ עַיִן, which Rashi regards as an infin., Parchon as a particip. after the form אֵשׁ עַיִן, but it may be also an infin. substantive after the form אֵשׁ עַיִן, and is certainly nothing else than the abbreviated and vocally obscured אֵשׁ עַיִן. For the Talm. אֵשׁ עַיִן, to be hard, furnishes no suitable idea; and the same holds true of אֵשׁ עַיִן, times, Lev. 15:25 of the Jerusalem Targ.; while the same abbreviation and the same passing over of o into u represents this as the inflected אֵשׁ עַיִן (= אֵשׁ עַיִן). There is also no evidence for a verb אֵשׁ עַיִן, to be black, dark; the author of Aruch interprets אֵשׁ עַיִן, Bereschith Rabba, c. 33, with reference to the passage before us, of a dark bathing apartment, but only tentatively, and אישון is there quoted as the Targ. of יין, Gen. 19:8, which the text lying before us does not ratify. Ishon means the little man (in the eye), and neither the blackness (Buxtorf and others) nor the point of strength, the central point (Levy) of the eye.

21 An inheritance which in the beginning is obtained in haste, Its end will not be blessed. Proverbs 20:21. The partic. מְׁבֹחָל may, after Zech. 11:8, cf. Syr. bhlā, nauseans, mean "detested," but that affords here no sense; rather it might be interpreted after the Arab. bajila, to be avaricious, "gotten by avarice, niggardliness," with which, however, neither נחֲלָה, inheritance, nor, since avarice is a chronic disease, בָרִאשָׁוֹנָה agrees. On the contrary, the Kerî מְׁבֹהֶלֶת [hastened] perfectly agrees, both linguistically (vid., 28:22; cf. 13:11) and actually; for, as Hitzig remarks, the words following v. 20 fully harmonize with the idea of an inheritance, into the possession of which one is put before it is rightly due to him; for a son such as that, the parents may live too long, and so he violently deprives them of the possession (cf. 19:26); but on such a possession there rests no blessing. Since the Piel may mean to hasten, Esth. 2:9, so מְׁבֹהָל may mean hastened = speedy, Esth. 8:14, as well as made in haste. All the old interpreters adopt the Kerî; the Aram. render it well by מְסַרְבִּא, from מְסַר, overturned; and Luther, like Jerome, haereditas ad quam festinatur.

22 Say not: I will avenge the evil; Hope in Jahve, so will He help thee. Proverbs 20:22. Men ought always to act toward their neighbours according to the law of love, and not according to the jus talionis, 24:29; they ought not only, by requiting good with evil (Prov. 16:13; Ps. 7:5a, 35:12), not to transgress this law of requital, but they ought to surpass it, by also recompensing not evil with evil (vid., regarding וּשְׁלָמָה, and synon. to 17:13); and that is what the proverb means, for 22b supposes injustice suffered, which might stir up a spirit of revenge. It does not, however, say that men ought to commit the taking of vengeance to God; but, in the sense of Rom. 12:17–19, 1 Pet. 3:9, that, renouncing all dependence on self, they ought to commit their deliverance out of the distress into which they have fallen, and their vindication, into the hands of God; for the promise is not that He will avenge them, but that He will help them. The jussive יִשְׁעָי (write יִשְׁעָד), according to Metheg-setzung, § 42, with Gaja as התמיע, with the ת to secure distinct utterance to the final guttural) states as a consequence, like, e.g., 2 Kings 5:10, what will then happen (Jerome, Luther, Hitzig) if one lets God rule (Gesen. § 128, 2c); equally possible, syntactically, is the rendering: that He may help thee (LXX, Ewald); but, regarded as a promise, the words are more in accordance with the spirit of the proverb, and they round it off more expressively.

23 An abomination to Jahve are two kinds of weights; And deceitful balances are not good. Proverbs 20:23. A variant to v. 10, 11:1. The pred. לעשות (Prov. 17:26; 18:5; 19:3) is conceived of as neut.; they are not good, much rather bad and pernicious, for the deceiver succeeds only in appearance; in reality he fails.

24 The steps of a man depend on Jahve; And a man—how can he understand his way? Proverbs 20:24. Line first is from Ps. 37:23, but there, where the clause has the verbal predicate יִקְנֶה, the meaning is that it is the gracious assistance of God, by virtue of which a man takes certain steps with his feet, while here we have before us a variation of the proverb "der Mensch denkt, Gott lenkt" [= man proposes, God disposes], 16:9, Jer. 10:23; for יִקְנֶה, as at 2 Sam. 3:37, Ps. 118:23, denotes God in general as conditioning, as the ultimate cause. Man is indeed free to turn himself hither or thither, to decide on this course of conduct or on that, and is therefore responsible for it; but the relations co-operating in all his steps as the possible and defining conditions are God's contrivance and guidance, and the consequences which are connected with his steps and flow therefrom, lie beyond the power of man,—every one of his steps is a link of a chain, neither the beginning nor the end of which he can see; while, on the other hand, God’s knowledge comprehends the beginning, middle, and end, and the wisdom of God ruling in the sphere of history, makes all human activity, the free action of man, subservient to his world-plan. The question, which has a negative answer, is applicable to man: what, i.e., how shall he understand his way? פָּתָן is like, e.g., Ex. 10:26, Job 9:2, 19:28, accus., and fluctuates between the functions of a governed accusative: What does he understand ... (Job 11:8) and an adv.: how, i.e., how so little, how even not, for it is the פָּתָן of the negative question which has become in (Arab.) מָא a word of negation. The way of a man is his life’s-course. This he understands in the present life only relatively, the true unravelling of it remains for the future.

25 It is a snare to a man to cry out hastily "holy;" And first after vows to investigate.

Proverbs 20:25. Two other interpretations of the first line have been proposed. The snare of a man devours, i.e., destroys the holy; but then מְדָשָׁה must be an expression of an action, instead of an expression of an endurance, which is impossible. The same is true against the explanation: the snare of a man devours, i.e., consumes, eats up the holy, which as such is withdrawn from common use. Jerome with his devotare sanctos, and Luther with his das Heilige lestern [to calumniate the holy], give to יַכְּלָל = קָלָל a meaning which loses itself in the arbitrary. Accordingly, nothing is to be done with the meaning קְלָלָתָא (Aquila, the Venet.). But יַכְּלָל, קָלָל, will be the abbreviated fut. of יָכַל (from יָכַל), Job 6:3 = (Arab.) laghâ temere loqui (proloqui); and יָכַל (after Hitzig: consecration, which is contrary to usage) is like κορβᾶν, Mark 7:11, the exclamation to which one suddenly gives utterance, thereby meaning that this or that among his possessions henceforth no longer belongs to him, but is consecrated to God, and thus ought to be delivered up to the temple. Such a sudden vow and halting deference to the oath that has been uttered is a snare to a man, for he comes to know that he has injured himself by the alienation of his property, which he has vowed beyond that which was due from him, or that the fulfilling of his vow is connected with difficulties, and perhaps also to others, with regard to whom its disposal was not permitted to him, is of evil consequences, or it may be he is overcome by repentance and is constrained to break his oath. The LXX hits the true meaning of the proverb with rare success: Παγίς ἀνδρὶ τοῖς τῶν ἱδίων ἁγιάσας μετὰ δὲ τὸ καταπίεται μετανοεῖν γίνεται. הַלּוּעַ is plur. of the category (cf. 16b Chethib), and יָלע, as 2 Kings 16:15, Arab. bakr, examinare, inquirere, means to subject to investigation, viz., whether he ought to observe, and might observe, a vow such as this, or whether he might not and ought not rather to renounce it (Fleischer). Viewed syntactically, 25a is so difficult, that Bertheau, with Hitzig, punctuates יָלע, but this substantive must be formed from a verb יָלע (cf. Hab. 3:13), and this would mean, after (Arab.) wala‘, “to long eagerly for,” which is not suitable here. The punctuation shows יָלע as the 3rd fut. What interpreters here say of the doubled accent of the word arises from ignorance: the correct punctuation is יֵלָע, with Gaja to י, to give the final guttural more force in utterance. The poet appears to place in the foreground: “a snare for a man,” as a rubrum; and then continuing the description, he cries out suddenly “holy!” and after the vow, he proceeds to deliberate upon it. Fleischer rightly: post voto inquisiturus est (in ea) יֵלָע; vid., at Hab. 1:17, which passage Hitzig also compares as syntactically very closely related.

Proverbs 20:26. A variant to 20:8, but here with the following out of the figure of the winnowing. For יָכַל is, without doubt, the wheel of the threshing-cart, ḥâṭîn, Isa. 28:27f.; and thus with מִזְרֶה, the winnowing fork, מִזְרֶה is to be thought of; vid., a description of them along with that of the winnowing shovel, מִזְרֶה, in Wetzstein’s Ex cursus to Isa., p. 707ff. We are not to think of the punishment of the wheel, which occurs only as a terrible custom of war (e.g., Amos 1:3). It is only meant that a wise king, by sharp and vigorous procedure, separates the godless, and immediately visits them with merited punishment, as he who works with the winnowing shovel gives the chaff to the wind.

Most ancient interpreters think on עֲגָלָה (from עָגַל vertere) in its metaphorical meaning: τρόπος (thus also Löwenstein, he deals with them according to merit), or the wheel of fortune, with reference to the constellations; thus, misfortune (Immanuel, Meîri). Arama, Oetinger, and others are, however, on the right track.

With a proverb of a light that was extinguished, v. 20 began the group; the proverb of God’s light, which here follows, we take as the beginning of a new group.

27 A candle of Jahve is the soul of man, Searching through all the chambers of the heart.

Proverbs 20:27. If the O.T. language has a separate word to denote the self-conscious personal human spirit in contradistinction to the spirit of a beast, this word, according to the usage of the language, as Reuchlin, in an appendix to Aben Ezra, remarks, is נשם, it is so called as the principle of life breathed immediately by God into the body (vid., at Gen. 2:7; 7:22). Indeed, that which is here said of the human spirit would not be said of the spirit of a beast: it is “the mystery of self-consciousness which is here figuratively represented” (Elster). The proverb intentionally does not use the word נשמה, for this is not the power of self-consciousness in man, but the medium of bodily life; it is related secondarily to נשמה (רוח), while unheard of. Hitzig is in error when he understands by נשמה here the soul in contradistinction to the spirit, and in support of this appeals to an expression in the Cosmography of Kazwîni: “the soul (Arab. ʻâl-nefs) is like the lamp which moves about in the chambers of the house;” here also en-nefs is the self-conscious spirit, for the Arab. and post-bibl. Heb. terminology influenced by philosophy reverses the biblical usage, and calls the rational soul נפש, and, on the contrary, the animal soul נשמה (Psychologie, p. 154). נשמה is the particip. of נשט, Zeph. 1:12, without distinguishing the Kal and Piel. Regarding נשמה, LXX ταμιεῖα κοιλίας, vid., at 18:8: נשמה denotes the inner part of the body (R. רוח, to be deepened), and generally of the personality; cf. Arab. bâṭn ʻâlrwh, the interior of the spirit, and 22:18, according to which Fleischer explains: “A candle of Jahve, i.e., a means bestowed on man by God Himself to search out the secrets deeply hid in the spirit of another.” But the candle which God has kindled in man has as the nearest sphere of illumination, which goes forth from it, the condition of the man himself—the spirit comprehends all that belongs to the nature of man in the unity of self-consciousness, but yet more: it makes it the object of reflection; it penetrates, searching it through, and seeks to take it up into its knowledge, and recognises the problem proposed to it, to rule it by its power. The proverb is thus to be ethically understood: the spirit is that which penetrates that which is within, even into its many secret corners and folds, with its self-testing and self-knowing light—it is, after Matt. 6:22, the inner light, the inner eye. Man becomes known to himself according to his moral as well as his natural condition in the light of the spirit; “for what man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him?” says Paul, 1 Cor. 2:11. With reference to this Solomonic proverb, the seven-branched candlestick is an ancient symbol of the soul, e.g., on the Jewish sepulchral... monuments of the Roman viá Portuensis. Our texts present the phrase בכר but the Talm. Pesachim 7b, 8a, the Peniticon in part 8, the Midrash Othiaths de-Rabbi Akiba, under the letter א, Alphasi (אָלף) in Pesachim, and others, read בכר; and after this phrase the Targum translates, while the Syr. and the other old versions render by the word "Lord" (Venet. כַּהַנָּא), and thus had had before them.

28 Love and truth guard the king; And he supports his throne by love.

Proverbs 20:28. We have not in the German [nor in the Eng.] language a couple of words that completely cover גְּרוּת אֱלֹהִים; when they are used of God, we translate them by grace and truth [Gnade u. Wahrheit]. Ps. 40:12 (שאול); when of men, by love and truth [Liebe u. Treue], 16:6; and when of the two-sided divine forces, by kindness and truth, 3:3. Love and truth are the two good spirits that guard the king. If it is elsewhere said that the king’s throne is supported “with judgment and with justice,” Isa. 9:6 [7]; here, on the other side, we see that the exercise of government must have love as its centre; he has not only to act on the line of right, שור ת ה דין; but, as the later proverb says, in such a way, that within this circle his conduct is determined by the central motive of love. In this sense we give the king not only the title of Grossmächtigster [most high and mighty], but also that of “Allergnädigster” [most gracious], for the king can and ought to exercise grace before other men; the virtue of condescension establishes his throne more than the might of greatness.

29 The ornament of young men is their strength; And the honour of the old is grey hairs.

Proverbs 20:29. Youth has the name בכר (different from בְּרֹא, chosen), of the maturity ר, whence Mishn. כְּחֵר, manhood, in contradistinction to נְעֶר, into which he enters from the bloom of boyhood; and the old man is called זָקָן (Arab. dhikn, as Schultens says, a mento pendulo, from the hanging chin אנמא, (Arab.) dhakan, chin, beard on the chin). To stand in the fulness of fresh unwasted strength is to youth, as such, an ornament (תפרק אמּוּをつけ, cf. פאראד, blooming colour of the countenance); on the contrary, to the old man who has spent his strength in the duties of his office, or as it is said at 16:31, “in the way of righteousness,” grey hairs (שיבי, from שָׁב, Arab. shâb, canescere) give an honourable appearance (סָפָר, from סָפָר, turgidum, amplum esse, vid., at Isa. 63:1).

30 Cutting wounds cleanse away evil, And reach the inner parts of the body.

Proverbs 20:30. The two words for wounds in line first stand in the st. constr.; to be bound around with stripes, to be striped) is properly the streak, the stripe; but is here heightened by the substantive, found in the Book of Esther, where it signifies the purification of the women for the harem (according to which, e.g., Ahron B. Joseph explains כומ ותרכו מינו שיתא השה). But the interpretation of ובּר, of severe means of cure, is constrained; that which lies nearest, however, is to understand ובּר of evil. But if, with this understanding of the word, we translate: Vibices plagiarum sunt lustratio quae adhibetur malo (Fleischer), one does not see why ובּר, and not rather gen. ובּר, is used. But if we read after the Chethîb, then all is syntactically correct; for (1.) that the word מַרְקָר בַּטֶּן, or מַרְקָר הֵחָזֶק, is not used, is in accordance with a well-known rule, Gesen. § 146. 3; and (2.) that מַרְקָר is connected, not directly with an accus. obj., but with בַּטֶּן, has its analogy in חֲדָרֵי בַּטֶּן, Job 42:2; חֲדָרֵי בַּטֶּן, Job 31:12, and the like, and besides has its special ground in the metaphorical character of the cleansing. Thus, e.g., one uses Syr. 't’a’ of external misleading; but with Syr. k of moral misleading (Ewald, § 217, 2); and Arab. ' of erecting a building; but with Arab. b of the intellectual erection of a memorial (monument). It is the so-called Bâ-ālmojâz; vid., de Sacy’s Chrest Arab. i. 397. The verb מְרִיק means in Talm. also, “to take away” (a metaph. of abstergere; cf. Arab. marak, to wipe off); and that meaning is adopted, Schabbath 33a, for the interpretations of this proverb: stripes and wounds a preparedness for evil carries away, and sorrow in the innermost part of the body, which is explained by רֹדֶךְ (a disease appearing in diverse forms; cf. Drachenschuss; as, the name of an animal disease); but granting that the biblical מְרִיק may bear this meaning, the ב remains unaccountable; for we say מְרִיק עֲבֵרָה לְאֵל הָאָרֶץ, for to prepare oneself for a transgression (sin of excess), and not מְרִיק עֲבֵרָה. We have thus to abide by the primary meaning, and to compare the proverb, Berachoth 5a: “afflictive providences wash away all the transgressions of a man.” But the proverb before us means, first at least, not the wounds which God inflicts, but those which human educational energy inflicts: deep-cutting wounds, i.e., stern discipline, leads to the rubbing off of evil, i.e., rubs it, washes it, cleanses it away. It may now be possible that in 30b the subject idea is permutatively continued: et verbera penetratium corporis (thus the Venet. πλήγμα τῶν ταμιείων τοῦ γαστρός), i.e., quorum vis ad intimos corporis et animi recessus penetrat (Fleischer). But that is encumbered, and מְרִיק בַּטֶּן (cf. v. 27, 18:8), as referring to the depths to which stern corporal discipline penetrates, has not its full force. מֵהָדוֹת is either a particip.: and that is touching (ferientes) the inner chambers of the body, or with the ב, or immediately the second object of מְרִיק to be supplied: and strokes (rub off, cleanse, make pure) the innermost part. Jerome and the Targ. also supply ב, but erroneously, as designating place: in secretioribus ventris, relatively better the LXX and Syr.: εἰς ταμιεία κοιλίας. Luther hits the sense at least, for he translates: One must restrain evil with severe punishment, And with hard strokes which one feels.

Proverbs 21:1. The group, like the preceding one, now closes with a proverb of the king. A king’s heart in Jahve’s hand is like brooks of water; He turneth it whithersoever He will. Brook and canal (the Quinta: ὥδραγωγοι) are both called תמריק, or תמריק ב, Job 20:17, Arab. falaj (from תמריק, to divide, according to which Aquila, Symmachus, and Theodotion, διαρέσεις; Venet. διανομαί; Jerome, divisiones); Jâkût has the explanation of the word: falaj is the name given to flowing water, particularly the brook from a spring, and every canal which is led from a spring out over flat ground.” Such brooks of water are the heart of a king, i.e., it is compared to such, in Jahve’s hand. The second line contains the point of comparison: He inclines it, gives to it the direction (הֵטָה, causat. of נָהַה), Num. 21:15 toward whatever He will (נָהַה) denotes willing, as a bending and inclining, viz., of the will; vid., at 18:2). Rightly Hitzig finds it not accidental that just the expression “brooks of water” is chosen as the figure for tractableness and subjection to government. In Isa. 32:2, the princes of Judah are compared to “rivers of water in a dry place” with reference to the exhaustion of the land during the oppression of the Assyrian invasion; the proverb has specially in view evidences of kindness proceeding from the heart, as at 16:15 the favour of the king is compared to clouds of latter rain emptying themselves in beneficent showers, and at 19:12 to the dew refreshing the plants. But the speciality of the comparison here is, that the heart of the king, however highly exalted above his subjects, and so removed from their knowledge he may be, has yet One above it by whom it is moved by hidden influences, e.g., the prayer of the oppressed; fore man is indeed free, yet he acts under the influence of divinely-directed circumstances and divine operations; and though he reject the guidance of God, yet from his conduct nothing results which the Omniscient, who is surprised by nothing, does not make subservient to His will in the world-plan of redemption. Rightly the Midrash: God gives to the world good or bad kings, according as He seeks to bless it or to visit it with punishment; all decisions that go forth from the king’s mouth come הָלַךְ, לְחַתְכֹּל, i.e., in their first commencement and their last reason they come from the Holy One.

2 Every way of a man is right in his own eyes; But a weigher of hearts is Jahve.

Proverbs 21:2. A proverb similar to 16:2 (where מַקְנִיתוֹ for מַקְנִית, יָשַׁר for מַשְׁפָּט, בִּסְדָת for בִּסְדָת). God is also, 17:3, called a trier, בַּעֲשָׂה, of hearts, as He is here called a weigher, בַּעֲשָׂה. The proverb indirectly admonishes us of the duty of constant self-examination, according to the objective norm of the revealed will of God, and warns us against the self-complacency of the fool, of whom 12:15 says (as Trimberg in "Renner"): “all fools live in the pleasant feeling that their life is the best,” and against the self-deception which walks in the way of death and dreams of walking in the way of life, 14:12 (Prov. 16:25).

Proverbs 21:3. We have already (p. 30) shown how greatly this depreciation of the works of the ceremonial cultus, as compared with the duties of moral obedience, is in the spirit of the Chokma; cf. also at 15:8. Prophecy also gives its testimony, e.g., Hos 6:7, according to which also here (cf. 20:8b with Isa. 9:8) the practising of νηστεία and δίκαιος (sequence of words as at Gen. 18:19, Ps. 33:5, elsewhere נָשֵׁט and מִשְׁפָּט, and yet more commonly מִשְׁפָּט מִנֵּסֶף) does not denote legal rigour, but the practising of the justum et aequum, or much rather the aequum et bonum, thus in its foundation conduct proceeding from the principle of love. The inf. נָשֵׁט (like as, 16:16) occurs three times (here and at Gen. 50:20; Ps. 101:3); once נָשֵׁט is written (Gen. 31:18), as also in the infin. absol. the form נָשֵׁט and נָשֵׁט interchange (vid., Norzi at Jer. 22:4); once נָשֵׁט for נָשֵׁט (Ex. 18:18) occurs in the status conjunctus.

Proverbs 21:4. If ר, in the sense of light, gives a satisfactory meaning, then one might appeal to 1 Kings 11:36 (cf. 2 Sam. 21:17), where ר, נִיר appears to signify lamp, in which meaning it is once (2 Sam. 22:29) written ר (like ר; or since ר = ר (ground-form, nawir, lightening) is as yet certainly established neither in the Heb. nor Syr., one might punctuate ר instead of ר, according to which the Greeks, Aram., and Luther, with Jerome, translate. But of the lamp of the godless we read at 13:9 and elsewhere, that it goeth out. We must here understand by ר the brilliant prosperity (Bertheau and others) of the wicked, or their “proud spirit flaming and flaring like a bright light” (Zöckler), which is contrary to the use of the metaphor as found elsewhere, which does not extend to a prosperous condition. We must then try another meaning for ר; but not that of yoke, for this is not Heb., but Aram.-Arab., and the interpretation thence derived by Lagarde: “Haughtiness and pride; but the godless for all that bear their yoke, viz., sin,” seeks in vain to hide behind the “for all that” the breaking asunder of the two lines of the verse. In Heb. ר.
5 The striving of the diligent is only to advantage. And hastening all [excessive haste] only to loss; or in other words, and agreeably to the Heb. construction: The thoughts of the industrious are (reach) only to gain, and every one who hastens—it (this his hastening) is only to loss.

Proverbs 21:5. Vid., at 17:21. At 10:4, Luther translates “the hand of the diligent,” here “the plans of an expert [endelichen],” i.e., of one actively striving (Prov. 22:29, endelich = קַמים) to the end. The נִיר, hastening overmuch, is contrasted with the diligent: Luther well: but he who is altogether too precipitant. Everywhere else in the Proverbs נִיר has a closer definition with it, wherefore Hitzig reads אָצוּר, which must mean: he who collects together; but נִיר in the same as our “eile mit Weile” [= festina lente], and Goethe’s Wie das Gestirn ohne Hast, Aber ohne Rast Drehe sich jeder Um die eigne Last.

“Like the stars, without haste but without rest, let only to gain, such haste brings only loss; over-exertion does injury, and urge (Ex. 5:13), here of impatient and inconsiderate rashness. While on the side of the diligent there is nothing but gain, such haste brings only loss; over-exertion does injury, and the work will want care, circumspection, and thoroughness. In the Book of Proverbs, the contrasts “gain” and “loss” frequently occur, 11:24; 14:23; 22:16: profit (the increase of capital by interest), opp. loss (of capital, or of part thereof), as commercial terms.

6 The gaining of treasures by a lying tongue Is a fleeting breath of such as seek death.

Proverbs 21:6. One may, at any rate, after the free manner of gnomic resemblances and comparisons, regard “fleeting breath” and “such as seek death” as two separated predicates: such gain is fleeting breath, so those who gain are seeking death (Caspari’s Beiträge zu Jes. p. 53). But it is also syntactically admissible to interpret the words rendered “seekers of... death” as gen.; for such interruptions of the st. constr., as here by וָצְר (fleeting), frequently occur, e.g., Isa. 28:1; 32:13; 1 Chron. 9:13; and that an idea, in spite of such interruption, may be thought of as gen., is seen from the Arab. But the text is unsettled. Symmachus, Syr., Targ., the Venet., and Luther render the phrase מבקשי, with מבקשים in the first line. But διότι of the LXX is an incorrect rendering of מְנָחָשִׁים, which the smuggling in of the "אֵל וַחֲרִישׁוֹן" (Arab.) drew after it, without our concluding therefrom that מְנָחָשִׁים is equivalent to מְנָחֶשְׁנִים (Munach), lay before the translators, on the contrary, the word which (Cappellus) lay before them, מבקשים, certainly deserves to be preferred to מבקשי: the possession is first, in view of him who has gotten it, compared to a fleeting (ךְך, as Isa. 42:2) breath (cf. e.g., smoke, Ps. 68:3), and then, in view of the inheritance itself and its consequences, is compared to the snares of death (Prov. 13:14; 14:27); for in פֹעֵל (here equivalent to רכש, acquisitio, Gen. 31:1; Deut. 8:17) lie together the ideas of him who procures and of the thing that is procured or effected (vid., at 20:11).

7 The violence of the godless teareth them away. For they have refused to do what is right.

Proverbs 21:7. The destruction which they prepare for others teareth or draggeth them away to destruction, by which wicked conduct brings punishment on itself; their own conduct is its own executioner (cf. 1:19); for refusing to practise what is right, they have pronounced judgment against themselves, and fallen under condemnation. Rightly Jerome, detrahent, with Aquila, κατασπάσει = figurrem (as Hab. 1:15), from רָהַנ (fleeing), on the contrary, the LXX incorrectly, ἐπεξεργασθέντωσιν, from רָהָנ, to dwell, to live as a guest; and the Venet., as Luther, in opposition to the usus loc.: δειδίσθαι (fut. of δειδίσσω, to terrify), from רָהָנ, to dread, fear, which also remains intrans., with the accus. following, Deut. 32:27. The Syr. and the Targ. freely: robbery (Targ. רֵבֶּה, perhaps in the sense of usury) will seize them, viz., in the way of punishment. In Arab. jarr (jariyrtn) means directly to commit a crime; not, as Schultens explains, admittere crimen paenam trohens; but atrahere (arripere), like (Arab.) jany (jinâyttn), contrahere crimen; for there the crime is thought of as violent usurpation, here as wicked accumulation.

8 Winding is the way of a man laden with guilt; But the pure—his conduct is right.

Proverbs 21:8. Rightly the accentuation places together “the way of a man” as subject, and “winding” as predicate: if the poet had wished to say (Schultens, Bertheau) "one crooked in his way" (quo ad viam), he would have contented himself with the phrase מָעָה מַעְּלָה נֶהְפֶּד, but, on the other hand, the accentuation is scarcely correct (the second Munach is a transformed Mugrash), for it interprets מַעָה מַעְּלָה as a second pred.; but מַעָה is adj. to מַעְּלָה (synon. מַעְּלָה מַעְּלָה) "as high as a mountain." As מַעְּלָה is a hapax leg., so also vazar, which is equivalent to (Arab.) mawzwwr, crimen onustus, from wazria, crimen committre, properly to charge oneself with a crime. The ancient interpreters have, indeed, no apprehension of this meaning before them; the LXX obtain from the proverb a thought reminding us of Ps. 18:27, in which vazar does not at all appear; the Syr. and Targ. translate as if the vav of vazar introduces the conclusion: he is a barbarian (nuchrojo); Luther: he is crooked; Jerome also sets aside the syntax: perversa via viri aliena est; but, syntactically admissible, the Venet. and Kimchi, as the Jewish interpreters generally, διαστροφωτάτη ὁδὸς ἀνδρὸς καὶ ἀλλόκοτος. Fleischers here even renounces the help of the Arab., for he translates: Tortuosa est via viri criminibus onusti, qui autem sancte vivit, is recte facti; but he adds thereto the remark that "vazar thus explained, with Cappellus, Schultens, and Gesenius, would, it is true, corresponding to the Arab. wazara, have first the abstract meaning of a verbal noun from wazira; the old explanation is therefore perhaps better: tortuosa est via viri et deflectens (scil. a recta linea, thus devia est), when the 'viri' is to be taken in the general sense of 'many, this and that one;' the closer definition is reflected from the י of the second clause." But (1) י as an adj. signifies peregrinus; one ought thus rather to expect י, degenerated, corrupt, although that also does not rightly accord; (2) the verbal noun also, e.g., 'all, passes over into a subst. and adj. signification (the latter without distinction of number and gender); (3) ר, after its adj. signification, is related to (Arab.) wazyr, as יך is to hakym, בך to rahyb; it is of the same form as י, with which it has in common its derivation from a root of similar meaning, and its ethical signification. In 8b, י is rightly accented as subj. of the complex pred. י is the pure in heart and of a good conscience. The laden with guilt (guilty) strikes out all kinds of crooked ways; but the pure needs not stealthy ways, he does not stand under the pressure of the bondage of sin, the ban of the guilt of sin; his conduct is straightforward, directed by the will of God, and not by cunning policy. Schultens: Integer vitae scelerisque purus non habet cur vacillet, cur titubet, cur sese contorqueat. The choice of the designation י (and the pure) may be occasioned by ר (Hitzig); the expression 8b reminds us of 20:11. The group now following extends to v. 18, where a new one begins with a variation of its initial verse.

9 Better to sit on the pinnacle of a house-roof, Than a contentious wife and a house in common.

Proverbs 21:9. We have neither to supplement the second line: than with a contentious wife … (Symmachus, Theodotion, Jerome, Luther), nor: than that one have a contentious …; but the meaning is, that sitting on the roof-top better befits one, does better than a quarrelsome wife and a common house (rightly the Targ. and Venet.), i.e., in a common house; for the connecting together of the wife and the house by vav is a Semitic hendiadys, a juxtaposition of two ideas which our language would place in a relation of subordination (Fleischer). This hendiadys would, indeed, be scarcely possible if the idea of the married wife were attached to אשת; for that such an one has with her husband a "house of companionship, i.e., a common house," is self-evident. But may it not with right be understood of the imperious positive mother-in-law of a widower, a splenetic shrewish aunt, a sickly female neighbour disputing with all the world, and the like? A man must live together with his wife in so far as he does not divorce her; he must then escape from her; but a man may also be constrained by circumstances to live in a house with a quarrelsome mother-in-law, and such an one may, even during the life of his wife, and in spite of her affection, make his life so bitter that he would rather, in order that he might have rest, sit on the pinnacle or ridge of a house-roof. י is the battlement (Zeph. 1:16) of the roof, the edge of the root, or its summit; he who sits there does so not without danger, and is exposed to the storm, but that in contrast with the alternative is even to be preferred; he sits alone. Regarding the Chethib, קד תָּרֶחֶם, מִדְּיָנוֹת, vid., at 6:14; and cf. the figures of the "continual dropping" for the continual scolding of such a wife, embittering the life of her husband, 19:13.

10 The soul of the godless hath its desire after evil; His neighbour findeth no mercy in his eyes; 14; and cf. the figures of the "continual dropping" for the continual scolding of such a wife, embittering the life of her husband, 19:13. The soul of the godless hath its desire after evil; His neighbour findeth no mercy in his eyes. Proverbs 21:10. The interchange of perf. and fut. cannot be without intention. Löwenstein renders the former as perf. hypotheticum: if the soul of the wicked desires anything evil …; but the perf. expresses that which is actually the case: the soul of the wicked has its desire directed (write אִוְּׁתָה with Munach, after Codd. and old Ed., not with Makkeph) toward evil, and the fut. expresses that which proceeds from this: he who stands near him is not spared.יֻּחַ֖ן is, as at Isa. 26:10, Hoph. of חָנּ֑ן, to incline, viz., oneself, compassionately toward any one, or to bend to him. But in what sense is בְּעֵינָיו added? It does not mean, as frequently, e.g., v. 2, according to his judgment, nor, as at 20:8; 6:13: with his eyes, but is to be understood after the phrase מָצָא חֵן בְּעֵינֵי: his neighbour finds no mercy in his eyes, so that in these words the sympathy ruling within him expresses itself: “his eyes will not spare his friends,” vid., Isa. 13:18.

Proverbs 21:11. The thought is the same as at 19:25. The mocker at religion and virtue is incorrigible, punishment avails him nothing, but yet it is not lost; for as a warning example it teaches the simple, who might otherwise be easily drawn into the same frivolity. On the other hand, the wise man needs no punishment, but only strengthening and furtherance: if “instruction” is imparted to him, he embraces it, makes it his own עִיָּנְהָ; for, being accessible to better insight, he gains more and more knowledge. De Dieu, Bertheau, and Zöckler make “the simple” the subject also in 11b: and if a wise man prospers, he (the simple) gains knowledge. But עִיָּנְהָ used thus impersonally, is unheard of; wherefore Hitzig erases the הָאָשֶׁר before עִיָּנְהָ if a wise man has prosperity. But עָשָׁר does not properly mean to have prosperity, but only mediately: to act with insight, and on that account with success. The thought that the simple, on the one side, by the merited punishment of the mocker; on the other, by the intelligent prosperous conduct of the wise, comes to reflection, to reason, may indeed be entertained, but the traditional form of the proverb does not need any correction.
Rashi, under the passage before us, רָשָע הַדֶּרֶךְ שִׁלָּחֵהוּ. Only do not translate with Bertheau and Zöckler: the Righteous One (All-righteous), for (1) this would require הבידיק, and (2) הבידיק is never by itself used as an attributive designation of God. Rightly, Fleischer and Ewald: a Righteous One, viz., God. It is the indetermination which seeks to present the idea of the great and dreadful: a Righteous One, and such a Righteous One! כְּפָא אָלֶּחָנָה. as Ps. 41:2, Neh. 8:13, here with ב, signifies to give attention to anything, to look attentively on it. The two participles stand in the same line: animum advertit ... evertit. Hitzig changes הלבה לִבֵּית into לִבֵּית וּלְּבֵית and makes י עושים the subject of 12b; but the proverb as it lies before us is far more intelligible.

13 He that stoppeth his ear at the cry of the poor— he also calls and is not heard.

Proverbs 21:13. Only the merciful find mercy, Matt. 5:7; the unmerciful rich man, who has no ear for the cry of the רֹעֹשׁ, i.e., of him who is without support and means of subsistence, thus of one who is needing support, will also remain unheard when he himself, in the time of need, calls upon God for help. Cf. the parable of the unmerciful servant of the merciful king, Matt. 18:23ff. וּמָתָן as Isa. 23:15, Gen. 4:13; 27:1; no preposition of our [German] language [nor English] expresses, as Fleischer here remarks, such a fulness of meaning as this מ does, to which, after a verb of shutting up such as נס צָפָה (cf. 17:28), the Arab. 'n would correspond, e.g., ā’my 'n āltryk: blind, so that he does not see the way.

14 A gift in secret turneth away anger; And a bribe into the bosom violent wrath.

Proverbs 21:14. Hitzig reads with Symmachus, the Targ., and Jerome, כְּפָא, and translates: “extinguishes anger;” but it does not follow that they did read כְּפָא; for the Talm. Heb. כְּפָא signifies to cover by turning over, e.g., of a vessel, Sanhedrin 77a, which, when it is done to a candle or a fire, may mean its extinction. But of the post-bibl. Heb. also means to bend, and thence to force out (Aram. כָּפָא, כָּפָא), according to which Kimchi hesitates whether to explain: overturns = smothers, or: bends = forces down anger. The Venet. follows the latter signification: κάμψει (for Villoison’s καλλιβηί), rests on a false reading of the MS. But there is yet possible another derivation from the primary signification, curvare, flectere, verte, according to which the LXX translates ἀνατρέπει, for which ἀποτρέπει would be yet better: ἔρημον, to bend away, to turn off, ἀρκεῖν, arcere, altogether like the Arab. (compared by Schultens) κř, and κř, ἀρκεῖν, to prevent, whence, e.g., ikfí t h a d a: hold that away from me, or: spare me that (Fleischer); with the words ἱφίκα sharran (Lat. defendaris semper a malo) princes were anciently saluted; κř signifies “to suffice,” because enough is there, where there is a keeping off of want. Accordingly we translate: Donum clam acceptum avertit iram, which also the Syr. meant by mephadka (מְפַדָּק). This verb is naturally to be supplied to 14b, which the LXX has recognised (it translates: but he who spares gifts, excites violent anger). Regarding רֶשֶׁע, vid., at 17:8; and regarding רֶשֶׁע, בָּרֹעַ, at 17:23. Also here רֶשֶׁע (ראש = ראש) like Arab. jayb, 'ubb, רֹעֹשׁ, denotes the bosom of the garment; on the contrary (Arab.) hijr, hidn, רֹעֹשׁ, is more used of that of the body, or that formed by the drawing together of the body (e.g., of the arm in carrying a child). A present is meant which one brings with him concealed in his bosom; perhaps 13b called to mind the judge that took gifts, Ex. 23:8 (Hitzig).

15 It is a joy to the just to do justice, And a terror for them that work iniquity.

Proverbs 21:15. To act according to the law of rectitude is to these as unto death; injustice has become to them a second nature, so that their heart strives against rectitude of conduct; it also enters to little into their plan of life, and their economy, that they are afraid of ruining themselves thereby. So we believe, with Hitzig, Elster, Zöckler, and Luther, this must be explained in accordance with our interpretation of 10:29. Fleischer and others supplement the second parallel member from the first: וּפְׁעֹל אָוֶן מְׁחִתָה לְׁפֹעֲלֵי אָיֶן; others render 15b as an independent sentence: ruin falls on those who act wickedly. But that ellipsis is hard and scarcely possible; but in general אוֹן, as contrasted correlate to שִמְׁחָה, can scarcely have the pure objective sense of ruin or destruction. It must mean a revolution in the heart. Right-doing is to the righteous a pleasure (cf. 10:23); and for those who have אוֹן, and are devoid of moral worth, and thus simply immoral as to the aim and sphere of their conduct, right-doing is something which alarms them: when they act in conformity with what is right, they do so after an external impulse only against their will, as if it were death to them.

16 A man who wanders from the way of understanding, Shall dwell in the assembly of the dead.

Proverbs 21:16. Regarding חֵסֵכָל, vid., 1:3; and regarding רָפָאִים, 2:18. The verb רוּת means to repose, to take rest, Job 3:13, and to dwell anywhere, 14:33; but originally like (Arab.) nākh and hadd, to lay oneself down anywhere, and there to come to rest; and that is the idea which is here connected with יְנוֹח, for the figurative description of יִרְצָה אוֹר or יִרְצָה אֵין is formed after the designation of the subject, 16a: he who, forsaking the way of understanding, walks in the way of error, at length comes to the assembly of the dead; for every motion has an end, and every journey a goal, whether it be one that is self-appointed or which is appointed for him. Here also it is intimated that the way of the soul which loves wisdom and follows her goes in another direction than earthwards down into hades; hades and death, its background appear here as punishments, and it is true that as such one may escape them.

17 He who loveth pleasure becometh a man of want; He who loveth wine and oil doth not become rich.

Proverbs 21:17. In Arab. samh denotes the joyful action of the “cheerful giver,” 2 Cor. 9:7; in Heb. the joyful affection; here, like farah, pleasure, delight, festival of joy. Jerome: qui diliget epulas. For feasting is specially thought of, where wine was drunk, and oil and other fragrant essences were poured (cf. 27:9; Amos 6:6) on the head and the clothes. He who loves such festivals, and is commonly found there, becomes a man of want, or suffers want (cf. Judg. 12:2, a man of strife); such an one does not become rich (עֶשֶׂר, like 10:4, עָשָׂה עֹשֶׂר, Jer. 17:11); he does not advance, and thus goes backwards.

18 The godless becometh a ransom for the righteous; And the faithless cometh into the place of the upright.

Proverbs 21:18. The thought is the same as at 11:8. An example of this is, that the same world-commotion which brought the nations round Babylon for its destruction, put an end to Israel’s exile: Cyrus, the instrument in God’s hands for inflicting punishment on many heathen nations, was Israel’s liberator, Isa. 43:3. Another example is in the exchange of places by Haman and Mordecai, to which Rashi refers. כֹּפֶר is equivalent to λύτρον, ransom; but it properly signifies price of atonement, and generally, means of reconciliation, which covers or atones for the guilt of any one; the poll-tax and “oblations” also, Ex. 30:15f., Num. 31:50, are placed under this point of view, as blotting out guilt: if the righteousness of God obtains satisfaction, it makes its demand against the godless, and lets the righteous go free; or, as the substantival clause 18b expresses, the faithless steps into the place of the upright, for the wrath passes by the latter and falls upon the former. Regarding בוגֵד, vid., 2:22. Thus, in contrast to the רַשָׁע, he is designated, who keeps faith neither with God nor man, and with evil intention enters on deceitful ways,—the faithless, the malicious, the assassin.

Proverbs 21:19. With this verse, a doublet to v. 9 (Prov. 25:24), the collector makes a new addition; in v. 29 he reaches a proverb which resembles the closing proverb of the preceding group, in its placing in contrast the רשע and ישר; — It is better to dwell in a waste land, Than a contentious wife and vexation.

The corner of the roof, Hitzig remarks, has been made use of, and the author must look further out for a lonely seat. But this is as piquant as it is devoid of thought; for have both proverbs the same author, and if so, were they coined at the same time? Here also it is unnecessary to regard מֵאֵשֶת as an abbreviation for מִשֶבֶת עם אשת.

Hitzig supplies שְׁכֹן, by which אשת, as the accus.-obj., is governed; but it is not to be supplied, for the proverb places as opposite to one another dwelling in a waste land (read שֶבֶת בְּאֶרֶץ־מִדְׁבָר, with Codd. and correct Ed.) and a contentious wife (Chethîb, מַדְיָנִים, Kerî, מְדָיָנִים) and vexation, and says the former is better than the latter. For נָכָע {and vexation} is not, as translated by the ancients, and generally received, a second governed genitive to אשת, but dependent on מִן, follows "contentious woman" (cf. 9b): better than a quarrelsome wife, and at the same time vexation.

20 Precious treasure and oil are in the dwelling of the wise; And a fool of a man squanders it.

Proverbs 21:20. The wise spares, the fool squanders; and if the latter enters on the inheritance which the former with trouble and care collected, it is soon devoured. The combination אוצָר נֶחְׁמָד וָשֶמֶן [desirable treasure and oil] has something inconcinnate, wherefore the accentuation places אוצָר by itself by Mehuppach Legarmeh; but it is not to be translated "a treasure of that which is precious, and oil," since it is punctuated אוצָר, and not אוצָר וָשֶמֶן; and besides, in that case מִשֶבֶת would have been used instead of אוצָר. Thus by אוצָר נֶחְׁמָד וָשֶמֶן, a desirable and splendid capital in gold and things of value (Isa. 23:18; Ps. 19:11); and by נֶחְméd, mentioned by way of example, stores in kitchen and cellar are to be thought of, which serve him who lives luxuriously, and afford noble hospitality,—a fool of a man (כְּסִיל אָדָם, as at 15:20), who finds this, devours it, i.e., quickly goes through it, makes, in short, a tabula rasa of it; cf. 28:4, with בֵּל, ch. 2 Sam. 20:26, and Prov. 19:28. The suffix of בֵּל 참 is referred back to as the main idea, or distributively also both to the treasure and the oil. The LXX (ὅσιαυρός ἐπιθυμητὸς) ἀναπαύσεται ἐπὶ στόματος σοφοῦ, {i.e., שְׁכֹן בְּפָה, according to which Hitzig corrects; but the fool, he who swallows down "the precious treasure with a wise mouth," is a being we can scarcely conceive of. His taste is not at all bad; why then a fool? Is it perhaps because he takes more in than he can at one time digest? The reading of the LXX is corrected by 20b.

21 He that followeth after righteousness and kindness Will obtain life, righteousness, and honour.

Proverbs 21:21. How we are to render צְדָקָה וָחָסֶד is seen from the connection of 21:3 and Hos. 6:7: tsedakah is conduct proceeding from the principle of self-denying and compassionate love, which is the essence of the law, Mic. 6:8; and hĕsĕd is conduct proceeding from sympathy, which, placing itself in the room of another, perceives what will benefit him, and sets about doing it (cf. e.g., Job 6:14: to him who is inwardly melted {disheartened} is due from his neighbour). The reward which one who strives thus to act obtains, is designated 21b by כָּבוד וּיְבִלְעָה. Honour and life stand together, 22:4, when שֶׂשִׁי precedes, and here נָכָע stands between, which, 8:18, Ps. 24:5, is thought of as that which is distributed as a gift of heaven, Isa. 45:8, which has glory in its train, Isa. 58:8; as Paul also says, "Whom He justified,

A wise man scaleth a city of the mighty; And casteth down the fortress in which they trusted. Proverbs 21:22.
Eccles. 9:14f. is a side-piece to this, according to which a single wise man, although poor, may become the deliverer of a city besieged by a great army, and destitute of the means of defence. seq. acc., means to climb up, Joel 2:7; here, of the scaling of a fortified town, viz., its fortress. א is that which makes it צדakah, its fortress. צדakah is its armour of protection, which is designated by the genit. the object and ground of their confidence.

The vocalization, מותח, for מיבטחה (cf. Jer. 48:13 with Job 18:14), follows the rule Gesen. § 27, Anm. 2b. The suff., as in מותח, Isa. 23:17, is lightened, because if its mappik, Michlol 30b; vid., regarding the destroy the proud fortress. With זֵד יָהִיר, he brings to ruin, cf. Deut. 20:20.

He that guardeth his mouth and his tongue, Keepeth his soul from troubles. Proverbs 21:23.

and internal evils, hurtful incidents and (נפש, Ps. 25:17; 31:8, i.e., distress of conscience, self-accusation, sorrow on account of the irreparable evil which one occasions.
24 A proud and arrogant man is called mocker (free-spirit); One who acteth in superfluity of haughtiness.

Proverbs 21:24. We have thus translated (p. 28): the proverb defines almost in a formal way an idea current from the time of Solomon: יֵלִים (properly, the distorer, vid., 1:7) is an old word; but as with us in the west since the last century, the names of free-thinkers and esprits forts (cf. Isa. 46:12) have become current for such as subject the faith of the Church to destructive criticism, so then they were called לְׁאֶתְׁנ נָה, who mockingly, as men of full age, set themselves above revealed religion and prophecy (Isa. 28:9); and the above proverb gives the meaning of this name, for it describes in his moral character such a man. Thus we call one דז, haughty, and יר, i.e., destroying himself, and thus thoughtlessly haughty, who acts in superfluity or arrogance (vid., at 11:23) of haughtiness; for not only does he inwardly raise himself above all that is worthy of recognition as true, of faith as certain, of respect as holy; but acting as well as judging frivolously, he shows reverence for nothing, scornfully passing sentence against everything.
Abulwalîd (vid., Gesen. Thes.) takes יר in the sense of obstinate; for he compares the Arab.
jař (jahar), which is equivalent to lijâj, under יר in all its offshoots and derivations has the sense of pride; we have then rather to compare the Arab. ʾistaihara, to be insane (= dhabḥʾakhl, mens ejus alienata est), perhaps also to ḥajîr, mutahawwi, being overthrown, praecipis, so that יר denotes one who by his ṭָאַרְפּוֹרְפּוֹנֵי is carried beyond all ṭָאַרְפּוֹרְפּוֹנֵי (vid., Rom. 12:3), one who is altogether mad from pride. The Syr. madocho Proverbs 21:25. The desire of the slothful killeth him; For his hands refuse to be active.

Proverbs 21:26. Otherwise Fleischer: per totum diem avet avidus, i.e., avarus; but that in which אֲוָה (Targ. אַוָּה) is rendered here and at Hab. 2:5, is its synonym; this word also combines in itself the ideas foolhardy, and of one acting in a presumptuous, mad way; in a word, of one who is arrogant. Schultens is in the right way; but when he translates by tumidus mole cava ruens, he puts, as it is his custom to do, too much into the word; tumidus, puffed up, presents an idea which, etymologically at least, does not lie in it. The Venet.: ἀκρατὴς θρασὺς βωμολόχος τοὔμονα ὁι, which may be translated: an untractable reckless person we call a fool [homo ineptus], is not bad.

25 The desire of the slothful killeth him; For his hands refuse to be active.

Proverbs 21:27. Line first = 15:8a. Regarding the syllogistic אַיּוֹ כִי, vid., 12:31; 15:11; regarding זִמָה, crime, particularly the sin of lewdness (from זָמָם, to press together, to collect the thoughts upon something, to contrive, cf. raffinement de la volupté), at 10:23. The ב is not meant, as at Ezek. 22:11, of the way and manner; for that the condition of life of the רשע is not a pure one, is not to be supposed. It is as Hitzig, rightly, that of price: for a transgression, i.e., to atone for it; one is hereby reminded, that he who had intercourse with a betrothed bondmaid had to present an ascham [trespass-offering], Lev. 19:20–22. But frequently enough would it occur that rich sensualists brought trespass-offerings, and other offerings, in order thereby to recompense for their transgressions, and to purchase for themselves the connivance of God for their dissolute life. Such offerings of the godless, the proverb means, are to God a twofold and a threefold abomination; for in this case not only does the godless fail in respect of repentance and a desire after salvation, which are the conditions of all sacrifices acceptable to God, but he makes God directly a minister of sin.

28 A false witness shall perish; But he who heareth shall always speak truth.

Proverbs 21:28. The LXX translate 28b by ἀνήρ δὲ φυλασσόμενος καλήσας. Cappellus supposes that they read ἀνὴρ γινώσκει for ἀνὴρ γινώσκει, which, however, cannot mean “taking care.” Hitzig further imagines ἀνὴρ γινώσκει for ἀνὴρ γινώσκει, and brings out the meaning: “the man that rejoiceth to deliver shall speak.” But where in all the world does ἀνὴρ γινώσκει mean “to deliver”? It means, “to guard, preserve;” and to reach the meaning of “to deliver,” a clause must be added with ὡς, καθὼς, ὡσει, ὡς ἐπιθυμεῖ, ὡς ἐπιχείρει, ὡς ὀνειρεῖται, ὡς εἰσέλθῃ, ὡς ἀνρίζῃ, ὡς προφυλάσσῃ ἀνὴρ γινώσκει, ὡς ἀπελευσθῇ, ὡς ἀπαλλαγῇ, ὡς ἀποκαλυφθῇ, ὡς ἀνθρώπῳ γίνῃ, ὡς ἀνθρώπη γίνη, ὡς γίνῃ ἐν ἀνθρώπῳ, ὡς ἐπισκοπῇ, ὡς ἀνομία. When one who speaks lies (RICS, with Chethîb), and a man who hears (RICS, with Chethîb, and with the orthophonic Dagesh), are contrasted, the former is one who fancifully or malevolently falsifies the fact, and the latter is one who before he speaks hears in order that he may say nothing that he has not surely heard. As גָּלֶל שֵׁם means an obedient heart, so here לָנֶצְח בְּלָן שֵׁם means a man who attentively hears, carefully proves. Such an one will speak לָנֶצְח, i.e., not: according to the truth, and not: for victory (Aquila, Symmachus, Theodotion, εἰς νῖκος), i.e., so that accomplishes it (Oetinger); for the Heb. לָנֶצְח has neither that Arab. nor this Aram. signification; but, with the transference of the root meaning of radiating or streaming over, to time, continuous existence (vid., Orelli, Synonyma der Zeit und Ewigkeit, pp. 96–97), thus: he will speak for continuance, i.e., either: without ever requiring to be silent, or, which we prefer: so that what he says stands; on the contrary, he who testifies mere fictions, i.e., avers that they are truth, is destroyed (28α = 19:9b, cf. 5): he himself comes to nothing, since his testimonies are referred to their groundlessness and falsity; for καὶ λυτὸς ἐστίν, the lie has no feet on which it can stand, it comes to nothing sooner or later.

Proverbs 21:29. Another proverb with ἀνὴρ γινώσκει—A godless man showeth boldness in his mien; But one that is upright—he proveth his way. The Chethîb has ἀνὴρ γινώσκει; but that the upright directeth, dirigit, his way, i.e., gives to it the right direction (cf. 2 Chron. 27:6), is not a good contrast to the boldness of the godless; the Kerî, יִכְזָב, deserves the preference. Aquila, Symmachus, the Syr., Targ., and Venet. adhere to the Chethîb, which would be suitable if it could be translated, with Jerome, by corrigit; Luther also reads the verb with ἔτε, but as if it were ὁ ἀνὴρ γινώσκει (whoever is pious, his way will stand)—only the LXX render the Kerî (συνιεί). As for the rest, the ancients waver between the Chethîb and the Kerî: the former refers to manner of life in general; the latter (as at 3:31 and elsewhere) to the conduct in separate cases; thus the one is just as appropriate as the other. In the circumstantial designation אִיש רָשָׁע (whoever is rebellious, his head will stand), i.e., his way will come to nothing sooner or later.

Therefore the latter (as the LXX) is to be preferred. Another proverb with ἀνὴρ γινώσκει (cf. 11:7) we have the stamp of the distinction of different classes of men peculiar to the Book of Proverbs. לָנֶצְח (to make firm, defiant) had, 7:13, as accus.; the כְּלָשׁ here is not that used in metaphoristic expressions instead of the accus. obj., which we have spoken of at 15:4; 20:30, but that of the means; for the face is thought of, not as the object of the action, but, after Gesen. § 138, 1, as the means of its accomplishment: the godless makes (shows) firmness, i.e., defiance, accessibility to no admonition, which is countenance; but the upright considers, i.e., proves (Prov. 15:8), his way. כְּלָשׁ (בִּין) means a perceiving of the object in its specific peculiarity, an understanding of its constituent parts and essential marks; it denotes knowing an event analytically, as נִבְּחָר, as well as synthetically (cf. Arab. shakl), and is thus used as the expression of a perception, which apprehends the object not merely immediately, but closely examines into its circumstances. If we further seek for the boundaries, the proverbs regarding the rich and the poor, 22:2, 7, 16, present themselves as such, and this the more surely as 22:16 is without contradiction the terminus. Thus we take first together 21:30–22:2.

30 No wisdom and no understanding, And no counsel is there against Jahve.

Proverbs 21:30. The expression might also be בְּלִי אֶחָד, but the predominating sense would then be, that no wisdom appears to God as such, that He values none as such. With בְּלִי אֶחָד the proverb is more objective: there is no wisdom which, compared with His, can be regarded as such (cf. 1 Cor. 3:19), none which can boast itself against Him, or can at all avail against Him (לְּנֶגֶד, as Dan. 10:12; Neh. 3:37); whence it follows (as Job 28:28) that the wisdom of man consists in the fear of God the Alone-wise, or, which is the same thing, the All-wise. Immanuel interprets חָכְמָה of theology, תְׁבוּנָה of worldly science, עֵצָה of politics; but חכמה is used of the knowledge of truth, i.e., of that which truly is and continues; תבונה of criticism, and עצה of system and method; vid., at 1:2; 8:14, from which latter passage the LXX has substituted here instead of הבונה instead of הבונה לְּנֶגֶד it translates πρὸς τὸν ἄσεβη, i.e., for that which is against Jahve.

31 The horse is harnessed for the day of battle; But with Jahve is the victory, Proverbs 21:31. i.e., it remains with Him to give the victory or not, for the horse is a vain means of victory, Isa. 33:17; the battle is the Lord’s, 1 Sam. 17:47; i.e., it depends on Him how the battle shall issue; and king and people who have taken up arms in defence of their rights have thus to trust nothing in the multitude of their war-horses (סֵס, horses, including their riders), and generally in their preparations for the battle, but in the Lord (cf. Ps. 20:8, and, on the contrary, Isa. 31:1). The LXX translates נָשָׁר by η θησερία, as if the Arab. name of victory, nasr, proceeding from this fundamental meaning, stood in the text;rush (from וְשָׁנָה, Arab. ws’, to be wide, to have free space for motion) signifies properly prosperity, as the contrast of distress, oppression, slavery, and victory (cf. e.g., Ps. 144:10, and יְשׁוּעָה, 1 Sam. 14:45). The post-bibl. Heb. uses נְשָׁר for victory; but the O.T. Heb. has no word more fully covering this idea than יְשׁוּעָה (yishoua) itself.

Proverbs 22:1–16

1 A good name has the preference above great riches; For more than silver and gold is grace.

Proverbs 22:1. The proverb is constructed chiastically; the commencing word נִבְּחָר (cf. 21:3), and the concluding word טוב, are the parallel predicates; rightly, none of the old translators have been misled to take together חֵן טוב, after the analogy of שֵׁלֶחֶת טוב (3:14; 13:15). שֵם also does not need טוב for nearer determination; the more modern idiom uses שֵּם טוב, the more ancient uses שֵם alone (e.g., Eccles. 7:1), in the sense of ὄνομα καλόν (thus here LXX); for being well known (renowned) is equivalent to a name, and the contrary to being nameless (Job 30:8); to make oneself a name, is equivalent to build a monument in honour of oneself; possibly the derivation of the word שֵּם, to be high, prominent, known, may have contributed to this meaning of the word sensu eximio, for שֵּם has the same root word as שֵּם. Luther translates שֵּם by Das Gerücht [rumour, fame], in the same pregnant sense; even to the present day, renom, reccommée, riputazione, and the like, are thus used. The parallel חֵן signifies grace and favour (being beloved); grace, which brings favour (Prov. 11:16); and favour, which is the consequence of a graceful appearance, courtesy, and demeanour (e.g., Esth. 2:15).

2 The rich and the poor meet together; The creator of them all is Jahve.

Proverbs 22:2. From this, that God made them all, i.e., rich and poor in the totality of their individuals, it follows that the meeting together is His will and His ordinance; they shall in life push one against another, and for what other purpose than that this relationship of mutual intercourse should be a school of virtue: the poor shall not envy the rich (Prov. 3:31), and the rich shall not despise the poor, who has the same God and Father as himself (Prov. 14:31; 17:5; Job 31:15); they shall remain conscious of this, that the intermingling of the diversities of station is for this end, that the lowly should serve the exalted, and the exalted should serve the lowly. 29:13 is a variation; there also for both, but particularly for the rich, lies in the proverb a solemn warning.

The group of proverbs beginning here terminates at v. 7, where, like the preceding, it closes with a proverb of the rich and the poor.

3 The prudent seeth the evil, and hideth himself; But the simple go forward, and suffer injury.

Proverbs 22:3. This proverb repeats itself with insignificant variations, 27:12. The Kerî makes it more conformable to the words there used. The Chethib is not to be read Kal, for this Kal is inusit., but נַעֲרָה, or much rather נַעַרָה, since it is intended to be said what immediate consequence on the part of a prudent man arises from his perceiving an evil standing before him; he sees, e.g., the approaching overthrow of a decaying house, or in a sudden storm the fearful flood, and betimes betakes himself to a place of safety; the simple, on the contrary, go blindly forward into the threatening danger, and must bear the punishment of their carelessness. The fut. consec. 3a denotes the hiding of oneself as that which immediately follows from the being observant; the two perf. 3b, on the other hand, with or without י, denote the going forward and meeting with punishment as occurring contemporaneously (cf. Ps. 48:6, and regarding these diverse forms of construction, at Hab. 3:10). “The interchange of the sing. and plur. gives us to understand that several or many simple ones are found for one prudent man” (Hitzig). The Niph. of נִסָּר signifies properly to be punished by pecuniary fine (Ex. 21:22) (cf. the post-bibl. נָסָרָה, to threaten punishment, which appears to have arisen from censere, to estimate, to lay on taxes); here it has the general meaning of being punished, viz., of the self-punishment of want of foresight.

Proverbs 22:4. As עֲנָוָה יִרְׁא תַ‏ה ה’ Ps. 45:5, is understood of the two virtues, meekness and righteousness, so here the three Göttingen divines (Ewald, Bertheau, and Elster), as also Dunasch, see in עֲנָוָה יִרְׁא ת ה’ an asyndeton; the poet would then have omitted vav, because instead of the copulative connection he preferred the appositional (Schultens: praemium mansuetudinis quae est reverentia Jehovae) or the permutative (the reward of humility; more accurately expressed: the fear of God). It is in favour of this interpretation that the verse following (v. 5) also shows an asyndeton. Luther otherwise: where one abides in the fear of the Lord; and Oetinger: the reward of humility, endurance, calmness in the fear of the Lord, is ...; Fleischer also interprets יראת ה’ as 21:4, חטאת (lucerna impiorum vitiosa), as the accus. of the nearer definition. But then is the nearest-lying construction: the reward of humility is the fear of God, as all old interpreters understand 4a (e.g., Symmachus, ὑστερον πραούτης φόβος κυρίου), a thought so incomprehensible, that one must adopt one or other of these expedients? On the one side, we may indeed say that the fear of God brings humility with it; but, on the other hand, it is just as conformable to experience that the fear of...
God is a consequence of humility; for actually to subordinate oneself to God, and to give honour to Him alone, one must have broken his self-will, and come to the knowledge of himself in his dependence, nothingness, and sin; and one consequence by which humility is rewarded, may be called the fear of God, because it is the root of all wisdom, or as is here said (cf. 3:16; 8:18), because riches, and honour, and life are in its train. Thus 4a is a concluded sentence, which in 4b is so continued, that from 4a the predicate is to be continued: the reward of humility is the fear of God; it is at the same time riches ... Hitzig conjectures ἡ ἀρετὴ, the beholding Jahve; but the visio Dei (beatifica) is not a dogmatic idea thus expressed in the O.T. עָקֵב denotes what follows a thing, from עָקֵב, to tread on the heels (Fleischer); for עָקֵב (Arab. 'akib) is the heels, as the incurvation of the foot; and עָקֵב, the consequence (cf. Arab. 'akb, 'ukb, posteritas), is mediated through the v. denom. עָקֵב, to tread on the heels, to follow on the heels (cf. denominatives, such as Arab. batn, zahr, 'ân, עָקֵב, to strike the body, the back, the eye).

5 Thorns, snares, are on the way of the crooked; He that guardeth his soul, let him keep far from them. Proverbs 22:5. Rightly the Venet. άκανθα, παγίδες ἐν ὁδῷ στρεβλοῦ. The meaning of עָקֵב (plur. of עָקִיב, or עָקֵב, the same as עָקִיב and עָקִיב) and פָחַת (from פָחַת, Arab. faḥ), stands fast, though it be not etymologically verified; the placing together of these two words (the LXX obliterating the asyndeton: τρίβολος καὶ παγίδες) follows the scheme מְשַׁרְשֵׁל בָּא בִּמְשַׁרְשֵׁל, Hab. 3:11. The verb עָקֵב (perverse of heart, crooked, 17:20; 11:20) drives his crooked winding way, corresponding to his habit of mind, which is the contrast and the perversion of that which is just, a way in which there are thorns which entangle and wound those who enter thereon, snares which unexpectedly bring them down and hold them fast as prisoners; the hedge of thorns, 15:19, was a figure of the hindrances in the way of the wicked themselves. The thorn and snares here are a figure of the hindrances and dangers which go forth from the deceitful and the false in the way of others, of those who keep their souls, i.e., who outwardly and morally take heed to their life (Prov. 16:17; 13:3, pred. here subj.), who will keep, or are disposed to keep, themselves from these thorns, these snares into which the deceitful and perversely-hearted seek to entice them.

6 Give to the child instruction conformably to His way; So he will not, when he becomes old, depart from it.

Proverbs 22:6. The first instruction is meant which, communicated to the child, should be, after the measure (Gen. 43:7 = post-bibl. πλὴν λέι), of his way, i.e., not: of his calling, which he must by and by enter upon (Bertheau, Zöckler), which of itself cannot mean; also not: of the way which he must keep in during life (Kidduschin 30a); nor: of his individual nature (Elster); but: of the nature of the child as such, for עָקֵב is the child's way, as e.g., derek col-haaretz, Gen. 19:31, the general custom of the land; derek Mitsrayim, Isa. 10:24, the way (the manner of acting) of the Egyptians. The instruction of youth, the education of youth, ought to be conformed to the nature of youth; the matter of instruction, the manner of instruction, ought to regulate itself according to the stage of life, and its peculiarities; the method ought to be arranged according to the degree of development which the mental and bodily life of the youth has arrived at. The verb עָקֵב is a denominative like עָקֵב, v. 4; it signifies to affect the taste, קְחָב = (ךְוּקְחָב, (ךְוּקְחָב), in the Arab. to put date syrup into the mouth of the suckling; so that we may compare with it the saying of Horace, [Ep. i. 2, 69]: Quo semel est imbuta recens servabit odorem Testa diu. In the post-bibl. Heb. קְחָב denotes that which in the language of the Church is called catechizatio; ספר חנוך (Lauser) is the usual title of the catechisms. It is the fundamental and first requisite of all educational instruction which the proverb formulates, a suitable motto for the lesson-books of pedagogues and catechists.

מִמֶּה [from it] refers to that training of youth, in conformity with his nature, which becomes a second nature, that which is imprinted, inbred, becomes accustomed. V. 6 is wanting in the LXX; where it exists in MSS of the LXX, it is supplied from Theodotion; the Complut. translates independently from the Heb. text.

7 A rich man will rule over the poor, And the borrower is subject to the man who lends.

Proverbs 22:7. “This is the course of the world. As regards the sing. and plur. in 7a, there are many poor for one rich; and in the Orient the rule is generally in the hands of one” (Hitzig).

The fut. denotes how it will and must happen, and the substantival clause 7b, which as such is an expression of continuance (Arab. thabât, i.e., of the remaining and continuing), denotes that contracting of debt brings naturally with it a slavish relation of dependence. לֹוֶה, properly he who binds himself to one se ei obligat, and מ לְׁוֶה, as 19:17 (vid., l.c.), qui alterum (mutui datione) obligat, from לָוָה, Arab. lwy, to wind, turn, twist round (cog. root laff), whence with Fleischer is also to be derived the Aram. אבל, “into connection;” so לָשֶׁ, properly “pushing against,” refers to the radically related אֶל מ לְׁוֶה = (לָשֶׁ), contiguum esse.

אֶל מ לְׁוֶה is one who puts himself in the way of lending, although not directly in a professional manner. The pred. precedes its subject according to rule. Luther rightly translates: and he who borrows is the lender’s servant, whence the pun on the proper names: “Borghart [= the borrower] is Lehnhart’s [= lender’s] servant.”

The group now following extends to the end of this first collection of Solomon’s proverbs; it closes also with a proverb of the poor and the rich.

8 He that soweth iniquity shall reap calamity; And the rod of his fury shall vanish away.

Proverbs 22:8. “Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap” (Gal. 6:7); he that soweth good reapeth good, 11:18; he that soweth evil reapeth evil, Job 4:8; cf. Hos. 10:12f. ישוע is the direct contrast of יֹשֶר (e.g., Ps. 125:3; 107:42), proceeding from the idea that the good is right, i.e., straight, rectum; the evil, that which departs from the straight line, and is crooked. Regarding מַעַה, which means both perversity of mind and conduct, as well as destiny, calamity, vid., 12:21. That which the poet particularly means by מַעַה is shown in 8b, viz., unsympathizing tyranny, cruel misconduct toward a neighbour. שֵבֶט עֶבְׁרָתו is the rod which he who soweth iniquity makes another to feel in his anger. The saying, that an end will be to this rod of his fury, agrees with that which is said of the despot’s sceptre, Isa. 14:5f.; Ps. 125:3. Rightly Fleischer: baculus insolentiae ejus consumetur h. e. facultas qua pollet alios insolenter tractandi evanescet. Hitzig’s objection, that a rod does not vanish away, but is broken, is answered by this, that the rod is thought of as brandished; besides, one uses כָּלָה of anything which has an end, e.g., Isa. 16:4. Other interpreters understand “the rod of his fury” of the rod of God’s anger, which will strike the ע וָּל and יִכְׁלֶה, as at Ezek. 5:13; Dan. 12:7: “and the rod of His punishment will surely come” (Ewald, and similarly Schultens, Euchel, Umbreit). This though also hovers before the LXX: πληγὴν δὲ ἔργων αὐτοῦ συντελέσει (יִכְׁלֶה). But if the rod of punishment which is appointed for the unrighteous be meant, then we would have expected כָּלָה. Taken in the future, the כָּלָה of the כָּלָה is not its confectio in the sense of completion, but its termination or annihilation; and besides, it lies nearer after 8a to take the suffix of ע וָּל subjectively (Isa. 14:6; 16:6) than objectively. The LXX has, after v. 8, a distich:— ἄνδρα ἱλαρὸν καὶ δότην εὐλογεῖ ὁ θεὸς ματαιότητα δὲ ἔργων αὐτοῦ συντελέσει.
The first line (2 Cor. 9:7) is a variant translation of 9a (cf. 21:17), the second (21:18) is a similar rendering of 8b.

9 He who is friendly is blessed; Because he giveth of his bread to the poor.

Proverbs 22:9. The thought is the same as at 11:25. טוב ע יִן (thus to be written without Makkeph, with Munach of the first word, with correct Codd., also 1294 and Jaman), the contrast of ר ע ע יִן, 23:6; 22:22, i.e., the envious, evil-eyed, ungracious (post-bibl. also צ ר ע יִן), is one who looks kindly, is good-hearted, and as ἀλφός δότης shows himself benevolent. Such gentleness and kindness is called in the Mishna ע יִן טובָה (Aboth ii. 13), or ע יִן יָפָה. Such a friend is blessed, for he has also himself scattered blessings (cf. אָסְדָה, 11:25; 21:13); he has, as is said, looking back from the blessing that has happened to him, given of his bread (Luther, as the LXX, with partitive genitive: seins brots [= of his bread]) to the poor; cf. the unfolding of this blessing of self-denying love, Isa. 8. The LXX has also here another distich: Νίκην καὶ τιμὴν περιποιεῖται ὁ δῶρα δοὺσ. The first line appears a variant translation of 19:6b, and the second of 1:19b, according to which selfishness, in contrast to liberality, is the subject to be thought of. Ewald translates the second line: And he (who distributes gifts) conquers the soul of the recipients.

10 Chase away the scorner, and contention goeth out, And strife and reproach rest.

Proverbs 22:10. If in a company, a circle of friends, a society (LXX ἀχθηλε ἐκ συνεδρίου), a wicked man is found who (vid., the definition of לץ, 21:24) treats religious questions without respect, moral questions in a frivolous way, serious things jestingly, and in his scornful spirit, his passion for witticism, his love of anecdote, places himself above the duty of showing reverence, veneration, and respect, there will arise ceaseless contentions and conflicts. Such a man one ought to chase away; then there will immediately go forth along with him dispeace (תָּן לץ), there will then be rest from strife and disgrace, viz., of the strife which such a one draws forth, and the disgrace which it brings on the society, and continually prepares for it. But קלון is commonly understood of the injury, abuse, which others have to suffer from the scoffer, or also (thus Fleischer, Hitzig) of the opprobria of the contentious against one another. But קלון is not so used; it means always disgrace, as something that happens, an experience, vid., at 18:3. The praise of one who is the direct contrast of a לץ is celebrated in the next verse.

11 He that loveth heart-purity, Whose grace of lips, the king is his friend.

Proverbs 22:11. Thus with Hitzig, it is to be translated not: he who loveth with a pure heart,—we may interpret תְׁהָור־לֵב syntactically in the sense of puritate cordis or purus corde (Ralbag, Ewald, after 20:7), for that which follows and is its supplement has to stand where possible as the accus. of the object; thus not: qui amat puritatem cordis, gratiosa erunt labia ejus (de Dieu, Geier, Schultens, C. B. Michaelis, Fleischer), for between heart-purity and graciousness of speech there exists a moral relation, but yet no necessary connection of sequence; also not: he who loves purity of heart, and grace on his lips (Aben Ezra, Schelling, Bertheau), for “to love the grace of one’s own lips” is an awkward expression, which sounds more like reprehensible self-complacency than a praiseworthy endeavour after gracious speech. Excellently Luther: “He who has a true heart and amiable speech, The king is his friend.”

טְׁהָור־לֵב is not adjectival, but substantival; יָפָה, as Job
17:10, but of the segolate, תֶלֶר, or (since the ground-form of בֶּית, בָּאֵל 1 Sam. 16:7, may be בָּאֵל as well as בֶּית) of the neut. כָּלִים, like פשָׂח, Ps. 46:5; 65:5: that which is pure, the being pure = purity (Schultens). بَا (gracefulness of his lips) is the second subject with the force of a relative clause, although not exactly thus thought of, but: one loving heart-purity, gracefulness on his lips—the king is his friend. Ewald otherwise: “he will be the king’s friend,” after the scheme 13:4; but here unnecessarily refined. A counsellor and associate who is governed by a pure intention, and connects therewith a gentle and amiable manner of speech and conversation, attaches the king to himself; the king is the friend of such an one, and he also is “the friend of the king.” 1 Kings 4:5. It is a Solomonic proverb, the same in idea as 16:13. The LXX, Syr., and Targ. introduce after אַבָּא the name of God; but 11b does not syntactically admit of this addition. But it is worth while to take notice of an interpretation which is proposed by Jewish interpreters: the friend of such an one is a king, i.e., he can royally rejoice in him and boast of him. The thought is beautiful; but, as the comparison of other proverbs speaking of the king shows, is not intended.

12 The eyes of Jahve preserve knowledge; So he frustrateth the words of the false.

Proverbs 22:12. The phrase “to preserve knowledge” is found at 5:2; there, in the sense of to keep, retain; here, of protecting, guarding; for it cannot possibly be said that the eyes of God keep themselves by the rule of knowledge, and thus preserve knowledge; this predicate is not in accord with the eyes, and is, as used of God, even inappropriate. On the other hand, after “to preserve,” in the sense of watching, guarding a concrete object is to be expected, cf. Isa. 26:3. We need not thus with Ewald supply רָאוּ, knowledge, stands metonymically for 아ַש (Meiri) or איש (Aben Ezra), or רַעֶד (Arama); Schultens rightly: Cognitio veritatis ac virtutis practica fertur ad homines eam colentes ac praestantes. Where knowledge of the true and the good exists, there does it stand under the protection of God. 12b shows how that is meant, for there the perf. is continued in the second consec. modus (fut. consec.): there is thus protection against the assaults of enemies who oppose the knowledge which they hate, and seek to triumph over it, and to suppress it by their crooked policy. But God stands on the side of knowledge and protects it, and consequently makes vain the words (the outspoken resolutions) of the deceitful. Regarding סִלֵּף, vid., 11:3 and 19:3. The meaning of סִלֵּף is here essentially different from that in Ex. 23:8, Deut. 16:19: he perverteth their words, for he giveth them a bearing that is false, i.e., not leading to the end. Hitzig reads ספר for ספר, which Zöckler is inclined to favour: God keeps the evil which is done in His eyes, and hinders its success; but “to observe wickedness” is an ambiguous, untenable expression; the only passage that can be quoted in favour of this “to observe” is Job 7:20. The word יִרְשַׁע, handed down without variation, is much rather justified.

13 The sluggard saith, “A lion is without, I shall be slain in the midst of the streets.”

Proverbs 22:13. Otherwise rendered, 26:13. There, as here, the perf. יָדַר has the meaning of an abstract present, Gesen. § 126. 3. The activity of the industrious has its nearest sphere at home; but here a work is supposed which requires him to go forth (Ps. 104:3) into the field (Prov. 24:27). Therefore יָדַר stands first, a word of wide signification, which here denotes the open country outside the city, where the sluggard fears to meet a lion, as in the streets, i.e., the rows of houses forming them, to meet a רָגֵז (רָגֵז, i.e., a murder from motives of robbery of revenge. This strong word, properly to destroy, crush, Arab. radkh, is intentionally chosen: there is designed to be set forth the ridiculous hyperbolical pretence which the sluggard seeks for his slothfulness.

(Keil and Delitzsch). Luther right well: “I might be murdered on the streets.” But there is intentionally the absence of [perhaps] and of [lest]. Meîri here quotes a passage of the moralists: (Fleischer). And what is the absence of اوּל י and פֶן [lest].

Meîri here quotes a passage of the moralists: (prophesying) belongs to the evidences of the sluggard; and Euchel, the proverb (the sluggard’s prophecy), i.e., the sluggard acts like a prophet, that he may palliate his slothfulness.

14 A deep pit is the mouth of a strange woman; He that is cursed of God falleth therein.

Proverbs 22:14. The first line appears in a different form as a synonymous distich, 23:27. The LXX translate στόμα παρανόμου without certainly indicating which word they here read, whether רָע (Prov. 4:14), or רשע (Prov. 29:12), or עלָה (Prov. 3:32). 23:27 is adduced in support of רוּה (vid., 2:16); נון (harlots) are meant, and it is not necessary thus to read with Ewald. The mouth of this strange woman or depraved Israelitess is a deep ditch (שֻׁחָה עֲמֻּקָה, otherwise עֲמֻּקָה, as 23:27a, where also occurs עֵמֶק), namely, a snare-pit into which he is enticed by her wanton words; the man who stands in fellowship with God is armed against this syren voice; but the זְׁעוּם ה׳, i.e., he who is an object of the divine ἀγέλελομανος τῷ ὀντωτ (Venet. κεχολωμένος τῷ ὄντωτ), indignation, punishing evil with evil, falls into the pit, yielding to the seduction and the ruin. Schultens explains τὸ τὰς by, is in quem despumat indignabundus; but the meaning despumat is not substantiated; cf. Arab. zaghm, is probably a word which by its sound denoted anger as a hollow roaring, and like pealing thunder. The LXX has, after v. 14, three tedious moralizing lines.

15 Folly is bound to the heart of a child; The rod of correction driveth it forth.

Proverbs 22:15. Folly, i.e., pleasure in stupid tricks, silly sport, and foolish behaviour, is the portion of children as such; their heart is as yet childish, and folly is bound up in it. Education first driveth forth this childish, foolish nature (for, as Menander says:

Ὁ μὴ δαρεὶς ἄνθρωπος οὐ παιδεύεται), and if effects this when it is unindulgently severe: the אֲבָב מנה (vid., 23:13) removeth from the heart, for it imparts intelligence and makes wise (Prov. 29:15). The LXX is right in rendering 16α: ἀνοια ἐξῆπται (from ἐξάπτειν) καρδίας νέου: but the Syr. has “here mangled the LXX, and in haste has read ἀνοία ἐξίπταται: folly makes the understanding of the child fly away” (Lagarde).

16 Whosoever oppresseth the lowly, it is gain to him; Whosoever giveth to the rich, it is only loss.

Proverbs 22:16. It is before all clear that לְה רְּבֵות and לְׁמ חְׁסר, as at 21:5, לְׁמות ר and למחسعر, are contrasted words, and form the conclusions to the participles used, with the force of hypothetical antecedents. Jerome recognises this: qui calumniatur pauperem, ut augeat divitias suas, dabit ipse ditiori et egebit. So Rashi, who by עַשְׁר thinks on heathen potentates. Proportionally better Euchel, referring בְּשָׁק and נֹתֵן, not to one person, but to two classes of men: he who oppresses the poor to enrich himself, and is liberal toward the rich, falls under want. The antithetic distich thus becomes an integral one,—the antithesis manifestly intended is not brought out. This may be said also against Bertheau, who too ingeniously explains: He who oppresses the poor to enrich himself gives to a rich man, i.e., to himself, the enriched, only to want, i.e., only to lose again that which he gained unrighteously. Ralbag is on the right track, for he suggests the explanation: he who oppresses the poor, does it to his gain, for he thereby impels him to a more energetic exercise of his strength; he who gives to the rich man does it to his own loss, because the rich man does not thank him for it, and still continues to look down on him. But if one refers יִלָּחֵש to the poor, then it lies nearer to interpret אתלַחֵש of the rich: he who gives presents to the rich only thereby promotes his sleepy indolence, and so much the more robs him or activity (Elster); for that which one gives to him is only swallowed up in the whirlpool of his extravagance (Zöckler). Thus Hitzig also explains, who remarks, under 17\(a\): “Oppression produces reaction, awakens energy, and thus God on the whole overrules events” (Ex. 1:12). Similarly also Ewald, who thinks on a mercenary, unrighteous rich man: God finally lifts up the oppressed poor man; the rich man always becoming richer, on the contrary, is “punished for all his wickedness only more and more.” But with all these explanations there is too much read between the lines. Since אַךְ֙ לְמָכָ֖שׁ (Prov. 11:24; 21:5) refers back to the subject: himself to mere loss, so also will it be here; and the LXX, Symmachus, Jerome (cf. also the Syr. auget malum suum) are right when they also refer לו, not to the poor man, but to the oppressor of the poor. We explain: he who extorts from the poor enriches himself thereby; but he who gives to the rich has nothing, and less than nothing, thereby—he robs himself, has no thanks, only brings himself by many gifts lower and lower down. In the first case at least, 17\(a\), the result corresponds to the intention; but in this latter case, 17\(b\), one gains only bitter disappointment.

FIRST APPENDIX TO THE FIRST COLLECTION OF SOLOMONIC PROVERBS—22:17–24:22

The last group if distiches, beginning with 10:1, closed at 22:16 with a proponent of the poor and the rich, as that before the last, vid., at 22:7. In 22:17ff., the law of the distich form is interrupted, and the tone of the introductory Mashals is again perceptible. Here begins an appendix to the older Book of Proverbs, introduced by these Mashals. Vid., regarding the style and proverbial form of this introduction, at pages 5 and 13.

Proverbs 22:17–29

Proverbs 22:17–21. Vv. 17–21, forming the introduction to this appendix, are these Words of the Wise:
17 Incline thine ear and hear the words of the wise, and direct thine heart to my knowledge!
18 For it is pleasant if thou keep them in thine heart; Let them abide together on thy lips.
19 That thy trust may be placed in Jahve, I have taught thee to-day, even thee!
20 Have not I written unto thee choice proverbs, Containing counsels and knowledge, 21 To make thee to know the rule of the words of truth, That thou mightest bring back words which are truth to them that send thee?

From 10:1 to 22:16 are the “Proverbs of Solomon,” and not “The Words of the Wise;” thus the above παραίνεσις is not an epilogue, but a prologue to the following proverbs. The perfects כָּהָֽוּדְס עְּתִי and כָת בְּתִי refer, not to the Solomonic proverbial discourses, but to the appendix following them; the preface commends the worth and intention of this appendix, and uses perfects because it was written after the forming of the collection. The author of this preface (vid., pp. 17, 26) is no other than the author of 1–9. The וְ (with Mehuppach, after Thorath Emeth, p. 27) reminds us of 4:20; 5:1. The phrase שִית לֵב, animum advertere, occurs again in the second appendix, 24:32. וְנַעֲם is repeated at 23:8; 24:4; but נַעֲם with נֵמָה is common in the preface, 1–9. כִי נַעֲם contains, as at Ps. 135:3; 147:1, its subject in itself. כִי־תִשְׁמְרֵם is not this subject: this that thou preservest them, which would have required rather the infin. שָמְרֵם (Ps. 133:1) or לְשָמְרֵם; קֶשְׁפָרָם, but it supposes the case in which appears that which is amiable and praiseworthy: if thou preservest them in thy heart, i.e., makest them thoughtfully become thy mental possession. The suffix נֵמָה refers to the Words of the Wise, and mediately also to לְשָמְרֵם, for the author designates his practical wisdom, which is laid down in the following proverbs, which, although not composed by him, are yet penetrated by his subjectivity. Regarding אַל which, from meaning the inner parts of the body, is transferred to the inner parts of the mind, vid., under 20:27. The clause 18b, if not dependent on יי, would begin with רְאוֹנָת. The absence of the copula and the antecedence of the verb bring the optative rendering nearer. Different is the syntactical relation of 5:2, where the infin. is continued in the fin. The fut. נ Después, which, 4:27, meant to be rightly placed, rightly directed, here means: to stand erect, to have continuance, stabilem esse. In v. 19, the fact of instruction precedes the statement of its object, which is, that the disciple may place his confidence in Jahve, for he does that which is according to His will, and is subject to His rule. מִבְּטֶן, in Codd. and correct editions with Pathach (vid., Michlol 184b); the ה is as virtually doubled; vid., under 21:22. In 19b the accentuation הרודפים is contrary to the syntax; Codd. and old editions have rightly אַרְוֵעַ פָּאָה for הרודפים, for after Gesen. § 121. 3, an emphatic repetition of “thee;” יָנָה, like יָכִין, 23:15; 1 Kings 21:19. Hitzig knows of no contrast which justifies the emphasis. But the prominence is thus effected is not always of the nature of contrast (cf. Zech. 7:5, have ye truly fasted to me, i.e., to serve me thereby), here it is strong individualizing; the te etiam te is equivalent to, thee as others, and thee in particular. Also that, as Hitzig remarks, there does not appear any reason for the emphasizing of “to-day,” is incorrect: הֲזֵא is of the same signification as at Ps. 95:7; the reader of the following proverbs shall remember later, not merely in general, that he once on a time read them, but that he to-day, that he on this definite day, received the lessons of wisdom contained therein, and then, from that time forth, became responsible for his obedience or his disobedience.

Proverbs 22:20. In 20a the Chethib does not appear any reason for the emphasizing of “thee;” מִבְּטֶן, and finds in 20a, contrary to the syntax and the usus loq., the exhortation that he who is addressed ought to write these good doctrines thrice (τρισσῶς) on the tablet of his heart; the Syr. and Targ. suppose the author to say that he wrote them three times; Jerome, that he wrote them threefold—both without any visible meaning, since threefold cannot be equivalent to manchföltiglich (Luther) [= several times, in various ways]. Also the Keri, which without doubt is the authentic word, is interpreted in many unacceptable ways; Rashi and Elia Wilna, following a Midrash explanation, think on the lessons of the Law, the Prophets, and the Hagiographa; Arama, on those which are referable to three classes of youth; Malbim (as if here the author of the whole Book of Proverbs, from 1 to 31, spake), on the supposed three chief parts of the Mishle; Dächsel better, on 1–9, as the product of the same author as this appendix. Schultens compares Eccles. 4:12, and translates triplici filo nixa. Kimchi, Meiri, and others, are right, who gloss דְּבֵרָם הַבָּבָשׁ מִשְׁלֵי by מֶלֶךְ יִשְׂרָאֵל; and compare 8:6; accordingly the Veneta, with the happy quid pro quo, by τρισμέγιστα. The LXX translates the military by τριστάτης; but this Greek word is itself obscure, and is explained by Hesychius (as well as by Suidas, and in the Etymologicum) by Regii satellites qui ternas hastas manu tenebant, which is certainly false. Another Greek, whom Angellius quotes, says, under Ex. 15:4, that τριστάτης was the name given to the warriors who fought from a chariot, every three of whom had one war-chariot among them; and this appears, according to Ex. 14:7; 15:4, to be really the primary meaning. In the period of David we meet with the word יְשָרִים as the name of the heroes (the Gibbôrim) who stood nearest the king. The shalish -men form the élite troops that stood highest in rank, at whose head stood two triads of heroes,—Jashobeam at the head of the first trias, and thus of the shalish -men generally; Abishai at the head of the second trias, who held an honourable place among the shalish -men; but not yet reached not to that first trias, 2 Sam. 23:8ff. (= 1 Chron. 11:11ff.). The name יְשָרִים (Apoc. 2 Sam. 23:8, נגָּדִים, and v. 13, 1 Chron. 27:6) incorrectly had the same relation to בְּמֹעֵצות, 8:6, as ducalia to principalia. The name of the chief men (members of the chief troop) is transferred to the chief proverbs, as, Jas. 2:8, that law which stands as a king at the head of all the others is called the “royal law;” or, as Plato names the chief powers of the soul, μέρη ἡγεμόνες. As in this Platonic word-form, so shalishim here, like negidim there, is understood neut. cf. under 8:6, 12:11; יְשָרִים, 16:13. The word בְּמֹעֵצות (occurring at 1:31 also) Fleischer rightly explains as the ב of uniting or accompanying: chief proverbs which contain good counsels and solid knowledge.

Proverbs 22:21. In the statement of the object in v. 21, we interpret that which follows לְּשׁוֹאֲלֶי כָּךָ, not permutat.: ut te docerem recta, verba vera (Fleischer); but ut te docerem, Ps. 60:6) is the bearer of the threefold idea: rectitudinem, or, better, regulam verborum veritatis. The (Arab.) verb kasita means to be straight, stiff, inflexible (synon. ἀκρό, to be hard, tight, proportionately direct); and the name kist denotes not only the right conduct, the right measure (quantitas justa), but also the balance, and thus the rule or the norm. In 21b, אֲמָרֵי אָמְתֵּי, which is preferred by Ewald, recommends itself, according to which the LXX translates, τοῖς προβαλλομένοις σοι, which the Syro-Hexap. renders by προβαλλόμενοι σοι, i.e., to those who lay problems before thee (vid., Lagarde). The teacher of wisdom seeks to qualify him who reads the following proverbs, and permits himself to be influenced by them, to give the right answer to those who question him and go to him for counsel, and thus to become himself a teacher of wisdom.

Proverbs 22:22, 23. After these ten lines of preliminary exhortation, there now begins the collection of the "Words of the Wise" thus introduced. A tetrastich which, in its contents, connects itself with the last proverb of the Solomonic collection, 22:16, forms the commencement of this collection:
22 Rob not the lowly because he is lowly; And oppress not the humble in the gate.
23 For Jahve will conduct their cause, And rob their spoilers of life.

Though it may bring gain, as said 22:16a, to oppress the לַיְלָה, the lowly or humble, yet at last the oppressor comes to ruin. The poet here warns against robbing the lowly because he is lowly, and thus without power of defence, and not to be feared; and against doing injustice to the יָרִיב, the bowed down, and therefore incapable of resisting in the gate, i.e., in the court of justice. These poor men have not indeed high human patrons, but One in heaven to undertake their cause: Jahve will conduct their cause (יָרִיב, רִיבָם, as at 23:10), i.e., will undertake their vindication, and be their avenger. אָלָף (אָלָף), Aram. and Arab. daḳḳ (cf. daḳḳ, [Arab.] daḳḳ), signifies to crush anything so that it becomes broad and flat, figuratively to oppress, synon.akash (Fleischer). The verb כָּבוּשׁ has, in Chald. and Syr., the significatio to stick, to fix (according to which Aquila here translates καθηλοῦν, to nail; Jerome, configere); and as root-word to כָּבוּשׁ, the significatio to be arched, like (Arab.) kab', to be humbacked; both significations are here unsuitable. The connection here requires the meaning to rob; and for Mal. 3:8 also, this same meaning is to be adopted, robbery and taking from one by force (Parchon, Kimchi), not: to deceive (Köhler, Keil), although it might have the sense of robbing by withholding or refraining from doing that which is due, thus of a sacrilege committed by omission or deception. The Talm. does not know the verb כָּבוּשׁ in this meaning; but it is variously found as a dialectic word for גָּזַל. Schultens' etymological explanation, capitium injicere (after [Arab.] kab', to draw back and conceal the head), is not satisfactory. The construction, with the double accus., follows the analogy of the double accus., Gesen. § 139. 2. Regarding the sing. בִּמְשָׁל, even where several are spoken of, vid., under 1:19.

Proverbs 22:24, 25. Another tetrastich follows:
24 Have no intercourse with an angry man, And with a furious man go thou not;
25 Lest thou adopt his ways, And bring destruction upon thy soul.

The Piel רַעְשׁ, Judg. 14:20, signifies to make or choose any one as a friend or companion (רַעְשׁ, רַעְשׁוֹ); the Hithpa. רַעְשָׁה (cf. at 18:24), to take to oneself (for oneself) any one as a friend, or to converse with one; רֵעָה אֵלֵי חוּדֵי אַלִּיתָה sounds like אָלִיתָה אַלִּיתָה, Isa. 41:10, with Pathach of the closed syllable from the apocope. The angry man is called בָּעֵל בְּנֵה, as the covetous man בָּעֵל בְּנֵה, בָּעֵל בְּנֵה, 24:8; vid., regarding בָּעֵל at 1:19 and 18:9. אֲשׁוֹחַ חוֹדוֹ, a hot-head of the highest degree, is meant as warning (cf. 16:10b). בָּעֵל בְּנֵה, Ps. 26:4, to come along with one, is equivalent to go into fellowship or companionship with one, which is expressed by בָּעֵל בְּנֵה, יְלִף, יְלִיף, 13:20, as בָּעֵל בְּנֵה means, Josh. 23:7, 12, to enter into communion with one, venire in consuetudinem. This בָּעֵל בְּנֵה is not a trace of a more recent period of the language. Also יַחֲנָה, discas, cannot be an equivalent for it: Heb. poetry has at all times made use of Aramaisms as elegancies. אָלִיתָה, Arab. אָלִיתָה, אָלִיתָה, Arab. âlîfa, signifies to enentrusted with anything = to learn (Piel אָלִיתָה, to teach, Job 15:15, and in Elihu’s speeches), or also to become confidential with one (whence companion, confidant, 2:17); this אָלְּף אָלְּפִּים is never a Heb. prose word; the bibl. אָלְּף אָלְּפִּים is only used at a later period in the sense of teacher. אָרְׁחות are the ways, the conduct (Prov. 2:20, etc.), or manner of life (Prov. 1:19) which any one enters upon and follows out, thus manners as well as lot, condition. In the phrase “to bring destruction,” יחוּד is used as in our phrase Schaden nehmen [to suffer injury]; the ancient language also represented the forced entrance of one into a state as a being laid hold on, e.g., Job 18:20, cf. Isa. 13:8; here מֶחקָה is not merely equivalent to danger (Ewald, falsely: that thou takest not danger for thy soul), but is equivalent to destruction, sin itself is a snare (Prov. 29:6); to bring a snare for oneself is equivalent to suffer from being ensnared. Whosoever comes into a near relation with a passionate, furious, man, easily accommodates himself to his manners, and, hurried forward by him and like him to outbreaks of anger, which does that which is not right before God, falls into ruinous complications.

Proverbs 22:26, 27. A third distich follows:
26 Be not among those who strike hands, Among those who become surety for loans.
27 If thou hast nothing to pay, Why shall he take away thy bed from under thee?
To strike hands is equivalent to, to be responsible to any one for another, to stake one’s goods and honour for him, 6:1; 11:15, 17:18; —in a word, אָרְׁחָה, seq. acc., to pledge oneself for him (Gen. 43:9), or for the loan received by him, אֶרֶץ, לֵשָׁה, Deut. 24:10 (from בָּרֵאשׁ, with אֲשֶֽׁר, of the person and accus. of the thing: to lend something to one on interest). The proverb warns against being one of such sureties (write עֲרָבָּה with Cod. 1294, and old impressions such as the Venice, 1521), against acting as they do; for why wouldest thou come to this, that when thou cast not pay (שָׁלְם), to render a full equivalent reckoning, and, generally, to pay, 6:31), he (the creditor) take away thy bed from under thee?—for, as 20:16 says, thus improvident suretyships are wont to be punished.

Proverbs 22:28. A fourth proverb—a distich—beginning with the warning אָלָֽׁם:
28 Remove not the perpetual landmark Which thy ancestors have set up.
28a = 23:10a. Regarding the inviolability of boundaries established by the law, vid., at 15:25. בֵּין הָעָלִים denotes “the boundary mark set up from ancient times, the removal of which were a double transgression, because it is rendered sacred by its antiquity” (Orelli, p. 76). מָצַב signifies to remove back, Hiph. to shove back, to move away. אֲשֶר has the meaning of מַעַל, מְעַל, quippe quod. Instead of עָלָם, the Mishna reads, Pea v. 6, עָלָם, which in the Jerusalem Gemara one Rabbi understands of those brought up out of Egypt, another of the poor; for “to rise” (in the world) is a euphemism ()&& for “to come down” (be reduced in circumstances).

Proverbs 22:29. After these four proverbs beginning with אָלָם, a new series begins with the following tristich:
29 Seest thou a man who is expert in his calling— Before kings may he stand; Not stand before obscure men;
i.e., he can enter into the service of kings, and needs not to enter into the service of mean men = he is entitled to claim the highest official post.
In 26:12 = 29:20, interchanging with מַעַל, is perf. hypotheticum (cf. 24:10; 25:16): si videris; the conclusion which might begin with אֲשֶֽׁר expresses further what he who sees will have occasion to observe. Rightly Luther: Sihestu einen Man endelich (vid., at 21:5) in seinem geschefft, u.s.w. [= seest thou a man expert in his business, etc.]. מַעַל denotes in all the three chief dialects one who is skilful in a manner not merely by virtue of external artistic ability, but also by means of intellectual mastery of it: ...) which is the same thing, a fut. meant optatively puttest ..., the perf. consec. after an imperf., or, which is the same thing, a fut. meant optatively (e.g., Lev. 19:18 with אל, and also v. 34 without אל) continues the exhortation; to be thus understood, the author ought to have used the expression בִּיטָמֵת עֲשָׂרִים וּבְּעֶשָׂרִים בָּשָׂר בְּשָׂר בְּשָׂר שָׂרָה וְׁשָׂרָה. Rightly Luther: “and put a knife to thy throat,” but continuing: “wilt thou preserve thy life,” herein caught in the same mistake of the idea with Jerome, the Syr., and Targ., to which reference is here separates itself.

Proverbs 23

Proverbs 23:1–3. 22:29, which speaks of a high position near the king, is appropriately followed by a hexastich referring to the slipperiness of the smooth ground of the king’s court.

1 When thou sittest to eat with a ruler, Consider well whom thou hast before thee.

2 And put thy knife to thy throat If thou art a man of good appetite.

3 Be not lustful after his dainties, Because it is deceitful food.

The לֶאֱכֹל לֶאֱכֹל is that of end: ad cibum capiendum, thus as one invited by him to his table; in prose the expression would be לֶאֱכֹל נֶפֶשׁ, to eat, is poet., 4:17; 9:5. The fut. clothes the admonition in the form of a wish or counsel; the infin. intens. יִתְׁי makes it urgent: consider well him whom thou hast before thee, viz., that he is not thine equal, but one higher, who can destroy thee as well as be useful to thee. With יִתְׁי the jussive construction begun by בְּרֵךְ is continued. Zöckler and Dächsel, after Ewald and Hitzig, translate incorrectly: thou puttest ..., the perf. consec. after an imperf., or, which is the same thing, a fut. meant optatively...
Pathach. מַטִּיר מֵעָשִׁיר, signifieth savoury dishes, dainties, like (Arab.) דָּחַק, from adhik (to taste, to relish); cf. sapres, from sapere, in the proverb: the bit-bits of the king burn the lips (vid., Fleischer, Ali’s Hundred Proverbs, etc., pp. 71, 104). With והוא begins, as at 3:29, a conditioning clause: since it is, indeed, the more crafty, and, as we say, speculative. It, which is not very particular in finding out means in their moral relations; but is so much the more crafty, and, as we say, speculative. Rightly Aquila, the Venet., Jerome, and Luther: take not pains to become rich. On the contrary, the LXX reads אַלַּא חָיְּשֶׁנֶת לְּהֶעָשִׁיר, stretch not thyself (if thou art poor) after a rich man; and the Syr. and Targ. אַלַּא נִקְּעֵ֯ לְּהֶעָשִׁיר, draw not near to the rich man; but, apart from the uncertainty of the expression and the construction in both cases, poetry, and proverbial poetry too, does not prefer the article; it never uses it without emphasis, especially as here must be the case with it not elided. These translators thought that expressed in v. 4; but the subject is not יִנְשָׁשׁ, but the rich [riches] contained in יִנְשָׁשׁ, the self-intelligible it [in “it maketh wings,” etc.] is that about which trouble has been taken, about which there has been speculation. That is a deceitful possession; for what has been gained by many years of labour and search, often passes away suddenly, is lost in a moment. To let the eyes fly after anything, is equivalent to, to direct a (flying) look toward it: wilt thou let thine eyes rove toward the same, and it is gone? i.e., wilt thou expose thyself to the fate of seeing which that was gained with trouble and craft torn suddenly away from thee? Otherwise Luther, after Jerome: Let not thine eyes fly after that which thou cast not have; but apart from the circumstance that about which trouble has been taken, cannot possibly be understood in the sense of ad opes quas non potes habere (that would have required הביא, an instance of the analogy of נַשַּׁשׁ, in this sense after the analogy of נְשָׁשׁ, but the end aimed at would have been denoted by נָשַׁשׁ and not by נָשַׁשׁ). Better Immanuel, after Rashi: if thou doublest, i.e., shuttest (by means of the two eyelids) thine eyes upon it, it is gone, i.e., has vanished during the night; but πόνος, duplicare, is Aram. and not Heb. Rather the explanation is with Chajûq, after Isa. 8:22f.: if thou veilest (darkest) thine eyes, i.e., yieldest thyself over to carelessness; but the noun יָשָׁשׁ shows that שָׁשׁ, spoken of the eyes, is intended to signify to fly (to rove, flutter). Hitzig too artificially (altering the expression to הלועפִּים): if thou faintest, art weary with the eyes toward him (the rich patron), he is gone,—which cannot be adopted, because the form of a question does not accord with it. Nor would it accord if אִיָּחֵן were thought of as a conclusion: “dost thou let thy look fly toward it? It is gone;” for what can this question imply? The וָוְָעַיֶּף of a double one (יָעַיֶּף), does not exist; the Kerî, viz., it is one of the ten words registered in the Masora, at the beginning of which a ו is to be read instead of the written ו. Most of the ancients translate with the amalgamation of the Kerî and the Chethîb: and he (the rich man, or better: the riches) flees heavenwards (Syr., Aquila, Symmachus, Theodotion, Jerome, and Luther). After the Kerî the Venet. renders: οὖς ἀετὸς πτήσεται τοῖς οὐρανοῖς (viz., πολιοῦντος). Rightly the Targ.: like an eagle which flies to heaven (according to which also it is accentuated), only it is not to be translated “am Himmel” [to heaven], but “gen Himmel” [towards heaven]: הֲתָעוּף is the accusative of direction—the eagle flies heavenward. Bochart, in the Hierozoïcon, has collected many parallels to this comparison, among which is the figure in Lucian’s Timon, where Pluto, the god of wealth, comes to one limping and with difficulty; but going away, outstrips in speed the flight of all birds. The LXX translates ὡς ἀετός πτήσεται εἰς τὸν οἶκον τοῦ προεστηκότος αὐτοῦ. Hitzig accordingly reads ὡς ἀετός πτήσεται εἰς τὸν οἶκον τοῦ προεστηκότος αὐτοῦ, and he (the rich patron) withdraws from thee to his own steep residence. But ought not οἶκος τοῦ προεστηκότος αὐτοῦ to be heaven, as the residence of Him who administers wealth, i.e., who gives and again takes it away according to His free-will?

Proverbs 23:6–8. There now follows a proverb with unequally measured lines, perhaps a heptastich:

6 Eat not the bread of the jealous, And let not thyself lust after his dainties;

7 For as one who calculates with himself, so is he: “Eat and drink,” saith he to thee; But his heart is not with thee.

malignus oculo, the envy and selfishness of egoism seeking to have and retain all for itself. The LXX ἀνδρὶ βασκάνῳ, for the look of the evil eye, עין רע (cattivo occhio), refers to enchantment; cf. βασκαίνω, fascinare, to bewitch, to enchant, in modern Greek, to envy, Arab. 'an, to eye, as it were, whence ma'în, ma'în, hit by the piercing look of the envious eye, invidia, as Apuleius says, letali plaga percussus (Fleischer). Regarding 턦 تحديثا، the parallel line 3a. 7a is difficult. The LXX and Syr. read שער שער (hair). The Targ. renders שער עין, and thus reads שער [fool], and thus brings together the soul of the envious person and a high portal, which promises much, but conceals only deception behind (Ralbag). Joseph ha-Nakdan reads שער with sin; and Rashi, retaining the schîn, compares the “sour figs,” Jer. 29:17. According to this, Luther translates: like a ghost (a monster of lovelessness) is he inwardly; for, as it appears in شعر شعر, the goat-like spectre, hovered before him. Schultens better, because more in conformity with the text: quemadmodum suam ipsius animam abhorret (i.e., as he does nothing to the benefit of his own appetite) sic ille (erga alios muito magis). The thought is appropriate, but forced. Hitzig for once here follows Ewald; he does not, however, translate: “like as if his soul were divided, so is it;” but: “as one who is divided in his soul, so is he;” but the verb שער, to divide, is inferred from שער, gate = division, and is as foreign to the extra-bibl. usus loq. as it is to the bibl. The verb שער signifies to weigh or consider, to value, to estimate. These meanings Hitzig unites together: in similitudinem arioli et conjectoris aestimat quod ignorat, perhaps meaning thereby that he conjecturally supposes that as it is with him, so is it with others: he dissembles, and thinks that others dissemble also. Thus also Jansen explains. The thought is far-fetched, and does not cover itself by the text. The translation of the Venet. also: ὦ γὰρ ἐμέτρησεν ἐν ψυχῇ οἱ οὕτως ἐστίν (perhaps: he measures to others as peniously as to himself), does not elucidate the text, but obscures it. Most moderns (Bertheau, Zöckler, Dähnel, etc.) as he reckons in his soul, so is he (not as he seeks to appear for a moment before thee). Thus also Fleischer: quemadmodum repetut apud se, ita est (sc. non ut loquitur), with the remark that שער, to measure, market value, Arab. si'r), to measure, to tax to as to determine the price, to reckon; and then like שער, in general, to think, and thus also Melri with the neut. rendering of ita est. But why this circumlocution in the expression? The poet ought in that case just to have written כי לא ממ, for he is not as he speaks with his mouth. If one read שער (Symmachus, εἰκάζων), then we have the thought adapted to the portrait that is drawn; for like one calculating by himself, so is he, i.e., he is like one who estimates with himself the value of an object; for which we use the expression: he reckons the value of every piece in thy mouth. However, with this understanding the punctuation also of שער as finite may be retained and explained after Isa. 26:18: for as if he reckoned in his soul, so is he; but in this the perf. is inappropriate; by the particip. one reaches the same end by a smoother way. True, he says to thee: eat and drink (Song 5:1 b), he invites thee with courtly words; but his heart is not with thee (בְּךָ, like 24:23): he only puts on the appearance of joy if thou partakest abundantly, but there lurks behind the mask of liberal hospitality the grudging niggardly calculator, who poisons thy every bite, every draught, by his calculating, grudging look. Such a feast cannot possibly do good to the guest: thy meal (הב, from הקב, cf. κλαύν τὸν ὄρτον, Aram. לְאֵלָה, to divide and distribute bread, whence פיִר, to receive aliment, is derived) which thou hast eaten thou wilt spue out, i.e., wilt vomit from disgust that thou hast eaten such food, so that that which has been partaken of does thee no good.
Proverbs 23:9. Another case in which good words are lost: Speak not to the ears of a fool, For he will despise the wisdom of thy words. To speak in the ears of any one, does not mean to whisper to him, to so to speak that it is distinctly perceived. כְּסִיל, as we have no often explained, is the intellectually heavy and dull, like pinguis and tardus; Arab. balyd, clumsy, intellectually immovable (cf. bld, the place where one places himself firmly down, which one makes his point of gravity). The heart of such an one is covered over (Ps. 119:70), as with grease, against all impressions of better knowledge; he has for the knowledge which the words spoken design to impart to him, no susceptibility, no mind, but only contempt. The construction בְּלאֹ is has been frequently met with from 6:30.

Proverbs 23:10, 11. The following proverb forms a new whole from component parts of 22:28 and 22:22f:
10 Remove not ancient landmarks; And into the fields of orphans enter thou not.
11 For their Saviour is a mighty one; He will conduct their cause against thee.

Proverbs 23:12. The following proverb warrants us to pause here, for it opens up, as a compendious echo of 22:17–21, a new series of proverbs of wisdom:
12 Apply thine heart to instruction, And thine ear to the utterances of knowledge.

We may, according as we accent בְּלאֹ the divine origin or the human medium, translate, offer disciplinae (Schultens), or adhibe ad disciplinam cor tuum (Fleischer). This general admonition is directed to old and young, to those who are to be educated as well as to those who are educated. First to the educator:
13 Withhold not correction from the child; For thou wilt beat him with the rod, and he will not die.
14 Thou beatest him with the rod, And with it deliverest his soul from hell.

Proverbs 23:13, 14. The exhortation, 13a, presupposes that education by word and deed is a duty devolving on the father and the teacher with regard to the child. In 13b, בְּלאֹ is in any case the relative conjunction. The conclusion does not mean: so will he not fall under death (destruction), as Luther also would have it, after Deut. 19:21, for this thought certainly follows v. 14; nor after 19:18: so may the stroke not be one whereof he dies, for then the author ought to have written וְלִכְרָאוּת נִמְסֶת; but: he will not die of it, i.e., only strike if he has deserved it, thou needest not fear; the bitter medicine will be beneficial to him, not deadly.
The הַדְּמַא standing before the double clause, v. 14, means that he who administers corporal chastisement to the child, saves him spiritually; for לא הוֹשֵׁא does not refer to death in general, but to death falling upon a man before his time, and in his sins, vid., 15:24, cf. 8:26.

Proverbs 23:15, 16. The following proverb passes from the educator to the pupil:

15 My son, if thine heart becometh wise, My heart also in return will rejoice; 16 And my reins will exult If thy lips speak right things.

Wisdom is inborn in no one. A true Arab proverb says, “The wise knows how the fool feels, for he himself was also once a fool;” and folly is bound up in the heart of a child, according to 22:15, which must be driven out by severe discipline. b, as many others, cf. 22:19b, shows that these “words of the wise” are penetrated by the subjectivity of an author; the author means: if thy heart becomes wise, so will mine in return, i.e., corresponding to it (cf. הָיוֹת, Gen. 20:6), rejoice. The thought of the heart in v. 15 repeats itself in v. 16, with reference to the utterance of the mouth. Regarding מִשְׁרָיו, vid., 1:5. Regarding the “reins,” כְּלָיוֹת (perhaps from כְּלָה, to languish, Job 19:21), with which the tender and inmost affections are connected, vid., Psychologie, p. 268f.

Proverbs 23:17, 18. The poet now shows how one attains unto wisdom—the beginning of wisdom is the fear of God:

17 Let not thine heart strive after sinners, But after the fear of Jahve all the day. 18 Truly there is a future, And thy hope shall not come to naught.

The LXX, Jerome, the Venet., and Luther, and the Arab interpreters, render 17b as an independent clause: “but be daily in the fear of the Lord.” That is not a substantival clause (cf. 22:7), nor can it be an interjectional clause, but it may be an elliptical clause (Fleischer: from the prohibitive יֵלֶךְ, is to be taken for the second parallel member the v. subst. lying at the foundation of all verbs); but why had the author omitted הָיוֹת? Besides, one uses the expressions, to act (עָשֹּׁה), and to walk (לֵךְ) in the fear of God, but not the expression to be in the fear of God. Thus מֵישָרִים, like מִשְׁרָיו, is dependent on מִשְׁרָיו; and Jerome, who translates: Non aemuletur cor tuum peccatores, sed in timore Domini esto tota die, ought to have continued: sed timorem Domini tota die; for, as one may say in Latin: aemulari virtutes, as well as aemulari aliquem, so also in Heb. כִּי, of the envying of those persons whose fortune excites to dissatisfaction, because one has not the same, and might yet have it, 3:31; 24:1, 19, as well as of emulation for a thing in which one might not stand behind others: envy not sinners, envy much rather the fear of God, i.e., let thyself be moved with eager desire after it when its appearance is presented to thee. There is no O.T. parallel for this, but the Syr. tan and the Greek ζηλοτυποῦν are used in this double sense. Thus Hitzig rightly, and, among the moderns, Malbim; with Aben Ezra, it is necessary to take בְּיִרְאָת for בֵּי־רֹאָת, this proverb itself declares the fear of God to be of all things the most worthy of being coveted. In v. 18, Umbreit, Elster, Zöckler, and others interpret the כֵּי as assigning a reason, and the אִם as conditioning: for when the end (the hour of the righteous judgment) has come; Berthelau better, because more suitable to the יֵש and the רְחֵרָה: when an end (an end adjusting the contradictions of the present time) comes, as no doubt it will come, then thy hope will not be destroyed; but, on the other hand, the succession of words in the conclusion (vid., at 3:34) opposes this; also one does not see why the author does not say directly, מִי יֵשׁ אֲחָדַרְת, but expresses himself thus conditionally. If אִם is meant hypothetically, then, with the LXX ἐὰν γὰρ τιμίης αὐτῷ ἐσταὶ σοι ἐκείνω, we should supply after it ἐπεσκέπασθαι, that had fallen out. Ewald’s: much rather there is yet a future (Dächsel: much rather be happy there is ...), is also impossible; for the preceding clause is positive, not negative. The particles כִּי אִם, connected thus, mean: for if (e.g., Lam. 3:32); or also relatively: that if (e.g., Jer. 26:15). After a negative clause they have the meaning of "unless," which is acquired by means of an ellipsis; e.g., Isa. 55:10, it turns not back thither, unless it has watered the earth (it returns back not before then, not unless this is done). This "unless" is, however, used like the Lat. nisi, also without the conditioning clause following, e.g., Gen. 28:17, hic locus non est nisi domus Dei. And hence the expression כִּי אִם, after the negation going before, acquires the meaning of "but," e.g., 17b: let not thy heart be covetous after sinners, for thou canst always be zealous for the fear of God, i.e., much rather for this, but for this. This pleonasm of אם sometimes occurs where כִּי is not used confirmatively, but affirmatively: the "certainly if" forms the transition, e.g., 1 Kings 20:6 (vid., Keil's Comm. l.c.), whose "if" is not seldom omitted, so that כִּי אִם has only the meaning of an affirmative "certainly," not "truly no," which it may also have, 1 Sam. 25:34, but "truly yes." Thus כִּי אִם is used Judg. 15:7; 2 Sam. 15:21 (where כִּי is omitted by the Keri); 2 Kings 5:20; Jer. 51:14; and thus it is also meant here, 18a, notwithstanding that כִּי אִם, in its more usual signification, "besides only, but, nisi," precedes, as at 1 Sam. 21:6, cf. 5. The objection by Hitzig, that with this explanation: "certainly there is a future," vv. 18 and 17 are at variance, falls to the ground, if one reflects on the Heb. idiom, in which the affirmative signification of כִּי is interpenetrated by the confirmative. The והיה, connected with והיה, is the glorious final issue; the word in itself designates the end into which human life issues (cf. Ps. 37:37f.); here, the end crowning the preceding course. Jeremiah (Jer. 29:11) in this sense connects אחרית ותקוה [end and expectation]. And what is here denied of the תִּקְוָה, the hope (not as certain Jewish interpreters dream, the thread of life) of him who zealously strives after the fear of God, is affirmed, at Ps. 37:38, of the godless: the latter have no continuance, but the former have such as is the fulfilling of his hope.

Proverbs 23:19–21. Among the virtues which flow from the fear of God, temperance is made prominent, and the warning against excess is introduced by the general exhortation to wisdom:

19  Hear thou, my son, and become wise, And direct thy heart straight forward on the way.
20  And be not among wine-drinkers, And among those who devour flesh;
21  For the drunkard and glutton become poor, And sleepiness clotheth in rags.

The והיה, connected with והיה, imports that the speaker has to do with the hearer altogether by himself, and that the latter may make an exception to the many who do not hear (cf. Job 33:33; Jer. 2:31). Regarding והיה, to make to go straight out, vid., at 4:14; the Kal, 9:6, and also the Piel, 4:14, mean to go straight on, and, generally, to go. The way merely, is the one that is right in contrast to the many byways.

Fleischer: “the way sensu eximio, as the Oriental mystics called the way to perfection merely (Arab.) âlaṭr ḳ; and him who walked therein, âlsâlak, the walker or wanderer.” As at 22:26, the “Words of the Wise,” are to be compared in point of style. The degenerate and perverse son is more clearly described, Deut. 21:20, as זולִל וְׁסֹבֵא. These two characteristics the poet distributes between 20a and 20b. והיה means to drink (whence והיה, drink = wine, Isa. 1:22) wine or other intoxicating drinks; Arab. sabâ, vinum potandi causa emere. To the והיה, here added, והיה in the parallel member corresponds, which consequently is not the fleshly body of the gluttons themselves, but the prepared flesh which they consume at their luxurious banquets. The LXX incorrectly as to the word, but not contrary to the sense, “be no wine-bibber, and stretch not thyself after picknicks (συμβολαίας), and buying in of flesh (κρεών τε ὀγορασμοίς)," whereby ἀσωτοὶ is translated in the sense of the Aram. בֵּית (Lagarde). ἀσωτοὶ denotes, intransitively, to be little valued (whence ἀσωτοῦ, opp. ἔρημος, Jer. 15:19), transitively to value little, and as such to squander, to lavish prodigally; thus: qui prodigi sunt carnis sibi; ἀσωτοὶ is dat. commodi. Otherwise Gesenius, Fleischer, Umbreit, and Ewald: qui prodigi sunt carnis suae, who destroy their own body; but the parallelism shows that flesh is meant wherewith they feed themselves, not their own flesh (τροφής ἵνα, like Ps. 58:5), which, i.e., its health, they squander. ἀσωτοὶ also, in phrase used in Deut. 21:20 (cf. with Hitzig the formula φάγος καὶ οἰνοπότης, Matt. 11:19), denotes not the dissolute person, as the sensualist, πορνοκόπος (LXX), but the συμβολοκόπος (Aquila, Symmachus, Theodotion), κρεωβόρος (Venet.), κρεῶν (Onkelos), i.e., flesh-eater, ravenous person, glutton, in which sense it is rendered here, by the Syr. and Targ., by ἀσωτοὶ, i.e., ἀσωτοῖς. Regarding the metaplastic fut. Niph. וַיַּנְּשֵׁר (LXX πηκτόρας), vid., at 20:13, cf. 11:25. זֶרֶד (the form of זָרֶד, ἀσωτοῖς, must be drowsiness, lethargy, long sleeping, which necessarily follows a life of riot and revelry. Such a slothful person comes to a bit of bread (Prov. 21:17); and the disinclination and unfitness for work, resulting from night revelry, brings it about that at last he must clothe himself in miserable rags. The rags are called κρέας καὶ ῥάκας, (τροφής ἵνα), Arab. ruk’at, from the patching, mending. Lagarde, more at large, treats of this word here used for rags.

The parainesis begins anew, and the division is open to question. Vv. 22–24 can of themselves be independent distichs; but this is not the case with v. 25, which, in the resumption of the address and in expression, leans back on v. 22. The author of this appendix may have met with vv. 23 and 24 (although here also his style, as conformed to that of 1:9, is noticeable, cf. 23b with 1:2), but vv. 22 and 25 are the form which has given to them.

Proverbs 23:22–25. Thus 22–25 are a whole:—

22. Hearken to thy father, to him who hath begotten thee, And despise not thy mother when she has grown old.

23. Buy the truth, and sell it not, Wisdom and discipline and understanding.

24. The father of a righteous man rejoiceth greatly; (And) he that is the father of a wise man—he will rejoice.

25. Let thy father and thy mother be glad; And her that bare thee exult.

The octastich begins with a call to childlike obedience, for שמע, to listen to any one, is equivalent to, to obey him, e.g., Ps. 81:9, 14 (cf. "hearken to his voice," Ps. 95:7). רחל, his mother, is a relative clause (cf. Deut. 32:18, without זר or אשה), according to which it is rightly accentuated (cf. on the contrary, Ps. 78:54).

22b, strictly taken, is not to be translated neve contemne cum senuerit matrem tua, for the logical object to אנה is attracted as subj. of ראה (Hitzig). There now follows the exhortation comprehending all, and formed after 4:7, to buy wisdom, i.e., to shun no expense, no effort, no privation, in order to attain to the possession of wisdom; and not to sell it, i.e., not to place it over against any earthly possession, worldly gain, sensual enjoyment; not to let it be taken away by any intimidation, argued away by false reasoning, or prevailed against by enticements into the way of vice, and not to become unfaithful to it by swimming with the great stream (Ex. 23:2); for truth, ἀλήθεια, is that which endures and proves itself in all spheres, the moral as well as the intellectual. In 23b, in like manner as 1:3; 22:4, a threefold object is given to ראה instead of ראה: there are three properties which are peculiar to truth, the three powers which handle it: ἀλήθεια is knowledge solid, pressing into the essence of things;краса is moral culture; and יד the central faculty of proving and distinguishing (vid., 1:3–5). Now v.
24 says what consequences are for the parents when the son, according to the exhortation of 23, makes truth his aim, to which all is subordinated. Because in אמת the ideas of practical and theoretical truth are interconnected. יד and זה are also here parallel to one another. The Chethib of 24a is יול, which Schultens finds tenable in view of (Arab.) jal, fut jająlu (to turn round; Heb. to turn oneself for joy) but the Heb. usus loq. knows elsewhere only יול, יי as the Kerî corrects. The LXX, misled by the Chethib, translates קולס ἐκτρέφει (incorrect ἐκτρυφήσει), i.e., קולס
In 24b, יריית, is of the nature of a pred. of the conclusion (cf. Gen. 22:24; Ps. 115:7), as if the sentence were: has one begotten a wise man, then (cf. 17:21) he has joy of him; but the Kerî effaces this יול, and assigns it to יול as Vav apodosis, and assigns it to יול —an unnecessary mingling of the syntactically possible, more emphatic expression. This proverbial whole now rounds itself off in v. 25 by a reference to v. 22, —the Optative here corresponding to the Impr. and Prohib. there: let thy father and thy mother rejoice (LXX εὐφρανέσθω), and let her that bare thee exult (here where it is possible the Optat.
form אַלְקָנָה).

Proverbs 23:26–28. This hexastich warns against unchastity. What, in 1–9, extended discourses and representations exhibited to the youth is here repeated in miniature pictures. It is the teacher of wisdom, but by him Wisdom herself, who speaks:
26 Give me, my son, thine heart; And let thine eyes delight in my ways.
27 For the harlot is a deep ditch, And the strange woman a narrow pit.
28 Yea, she lieth in wait like a robber, And multiplieth the faithless among men.
We have retained Luther’s beautiful rendering of v. 26, in which this proverb, as a warning word of heavenly wisdom and of divine love, has become dear to us. It follows, as Symmachus and the Venet, the Chethib (incorrect like Ex. 2:16; Job 5:12), the stylistic appropriateness of which proceeds from 16:7, as on the other hand the Kerî (cf. 1 Sam.
14:27) is supported by 22:12, cf. 5:2. But the correction is unnecessary, and the Chethib sounds more affectionate, hence it is with right defended by Hitzig. The ways of wisdom are ways of correction, and particularly of chastity, thus placed over against “the ways of the harlot,” 7:24ff. Accordingly the exhortation, v.
26, verifies itself; warning, by v. 27, cf. 22:14, where ימה was written, here as at Job 12:22, with the long vowel ימה ימה changes with ימה שותה ימה and means, not the fountain of sorrow (Löwenstein), but the narrow pit. ימה is fem. gen., 26:21f., and ימה means narrow, like étroit (old French, estreit), from strictus. The figure has, after 22:14, the mouth of the harlot in view. Whoever is enticed by her syren voice falls into a deep ditch, into a pit with a narrow mouth, into which one can more easily enter than escape from. V. 28 says that it is the artifice of the harlot which draws a man into such depth of wickedness and guilt.
With ימה, which, as at Judg. 5:29, belongs not to אמה but to the whole sentence, the picture of terror is completed. The verb ימה (whence Arab. hataf, death, natural death) means to snatch away. If we take ימה as abstr.: a snatching away, then it would here stand elliptically for ימה אַשָּׁה (בַּשָּׁה) ימה, which in itself is improbable (vid., 7:22, ימה) and also unnecessary, since, as ימה ימה, etc. show, such abstracta can pass immediately into concreta, so that ימה thus means the person who snatches away, i.e., the street robber, latro (cf. ימה, [Arab.] khataf, Ps. 10:9, rightly explained by Kimchi as cogn.). In 28b, ימה cannot mean abripit (as LXX, Theodotion, and Jerome suppose), for which the word תִסְפֶּה (תֶאֱסֹף) would have been used. But this verbal idea does not harmonize with the connection; תוסיף means, as always, addit (auget), and that here in the sense of multiplicat. The same thing may be said of הבוגדים as is said (Prov. 11:150 of הַבָּאָדָם). Hitzig’s objection, “הוסיף, to multiply, with the accusative of the person, is not at all used,” is set aside by 19:4. But we may translate: the faithless, or: the breach of faith she increases. Yet it always remains a question whether הבוגדים is dependent on הבוגדים, as Eccles. 8:9, cf. 2 Sam. 23:3, on the verb of ruling (Hitzig), or whether, as frequently הבוגדים, e.g., Ps. 78:60, it means inter homines (thus most interpreters). Uncleanness leads to faithlessness of manifold kinds: it makes not only the husband unfaithful to his wife, but also the son to his parents, the scholar to his teacher and pastor, the servant (cf. the case of Potiphar’s wife) to his master. The adulteress, as she entices now one and now another into her net, increases the number of those who are faithless towards men. But are they not, above all, faithless towards God? We are of opinion that not הבוגדים, but ש עוּדָה, has its complement in הבוגדים, and needs it: the adulteress increases the faithless among men, she makes faithlessness of manifold kinds common in human society. According to this, also, it is accentuated; הבוגדים is placed as object by Mugrasch, and הבוגדים is connected by Mercha with התוסף.

Proverbs 23:29–35. The author passes from the sin of uncleanness to that of drunkenness; they are nearly related, for drunkenness excites fleshly lust; and to wallow with delight in the mire of sensuality, a man, created in the image of God, must first brutalize himself by intoxication. The Mashal in the number of its lines passes beyond the limits of the distich, and becomes a Mashal ode.

29 Whose is woe? Whose is grief? Whose are contentions, whose trouble, whose wounds without cause? Whose dimness of eyes?
30 Theirs, who sit late at the wine, Who turn in to taste mixed wine.
31 Look not on the wine as it sparkleth red, As it showeth its gleam in the cup, Glideth down with ease.
32 The end of it is that it biteth like a serpent, And stingeth like a basilisk.
33 Thine eyes shall see strange things, And thine heart shall speak perverse things;
34 And thou art as one lying in the heart of the sea, And as one lying on the top of a mast.
35 “They have scourged me—it pained me not; They have beaten me—I perceived it not. When shall I have wakened from sleep? Thus on I go, I return to it again.”

The repeated למי asks who then has to experience all that; the answer follows in v. 30. With אוי, the אֲבָה occurring only here accords; it is not a substantive from אָבָה (whence אֵבָּן) after the form of צְחֹק, in the sense of egestas; but, like the former אוי, an interjection of sorrow (Venet. וַיָּאֲרָא וַיֹּאָרְא וַיֹּאָרְא). Regarding מִדְּבָּר (Chethib, vid., at 6:14). Regarding מִדְּבָּר (Chethib, vid., at 6:22) meditation and speech, here sorrowful thought and sorrowful complaint (1 Sam. 1:16; Ps. 55:18; cf. חָגַה, חָגֵה, e.g., over the exhausted purse, the neglected work, the anticipated reproaches, the diminishing strength. In the connection חָכַל עֵינֵי יִם (cf. Ps. 35:19) the accus. adv. חָכַל (French gratuitement) represents the place of an adjective: strokes which one receives without being in the situation from necessity, or duty to expect them, strokes for nothing and in return for nothing (Fleischer), wounds for a long while (Oetinger). The Mashal in the number of its lines passes beyond the limits of the distich, and becomes a Mashal ode.
does not refer to the reddening, but the dimming of the eyes, and of the power of vision. The answer, v. 30, begins, in conformity with the form of the question, with ל (write ל מְׁא חֲרִים, with Gaja to י, according to Metheg-Setzung, § 20, Michlol 46b): pain, and woe, and contention they have who tarry late at the wine (cf. Isa. 5:11), who enter (viz., into the wine-house, Eccles. 2:4, the house of revelry) "to search" mingled drink (vid., at 9:2; Isa. 5:22). Hitzig: "they test the mixing, as to the relation of the wine to the water, whether it is correct." But ל חְּקור is like גִבֹרִים, Isa. 5:22, meant in mockery: they are heroes, viz., heroes in drinking; they are searchers, such, namely, as seek to examine into the mixed wine, or also: thoroughly and carefully taste it (Fleischer).

The evil consequences of drunkenness are now registered. That one may not fall under this common sin, the poet, v. 31, warns against the attraction which the wine presents to the sight and to the sense of taste: one must not permit himself to be caught as a prisoner by this enticement, but must maintain his freedom against it. הִתְא דֵם, to make, i.e., to show oneself red, is almost equivalent to הֶאֱדִים; and more than this, it presents the wine as itself co-operating and active by its red play of colours (Fleischer).

Regarding the antiptosis (antiphonesis): Look not on the wine that is ..., vid., at Gen. 1:3; yet here, where עין means not merely "to see," but "to look at," the case is somewhat different. In 31b, one for the most part assumes that עין signifies the eye of the wine, i.e., the pearls which play on the surface of the wine (Fleischer). And, indeed, Hitzig's translation, after Num. 11:7: when it presents its appearance in the cup, does not commend itself, because it expresses too little. On the other hand, it is saying too much when Böttcher maintains that עין never denotes the mere appearance, but always the shining aspect of the object. But used of wine, עין appears to denote not merely aspect as such, but its gleam, glance; not its pearls, for which עין would be the word used, but shining glance, by which particularly the bright glance, as out of deep darkness, of the Syro-Palestinian wine is thought of, which is for the most part prepared from red (blue) grapes, and because very rich in sugar, is thick almost like syrup. Jerome translates עין well: (cum splenduerit in vitro) color ejus. But one need not think of a glass; Böttcher has rightly said that one might perceive the glittering appearance also in a metal or earthen vessel if one looked into it.

The Chethib is an error of transcription; the Midrash makes the remark on this, that בביס suits the wine merchant, and בבס the wine drinker. From the pleasure of the eye, 31c passes over to the pleasures of the taste: (that, or, as it) goeth down smoothly (Luther); the expression is like Eccles. 7:10. Instead of הליך, commonly used of pleasant going; and instead of גִבֹרִים with ל, the norm will with ב of the manner; directness is here easiness, facility (Arab. jusr); it goes as on a straight, even way unhindered and easily down the throat.

Proverbs 23:32. V. 32 shows how it issues with the wine, viz., with those who immoderately enjoy it. Is הָיְתָה [its end] here the subject, as at 5:4? We must in that case interpret as attributives, as the Syr. and Targ. translate the latter, and Ewald both. The issue which it brings with it is like the serpent which bites, etc., and there is nothing syntactically opposed to this (cf. e.g., Ps. 17:12); the future, in contradistinction to the participle, would not express properties, but intimations of facts. But the end of the wine is not like a serpent, but like the bite of a serpent. The wine itself, and independent of its consequences, is in and of itself like a serpent. In accordance with the matter, אחריתו may be interpreted, with Hitzig (after Jerome, in novissimo), as acc. adverb. = באחריתו, Jer. 17:11. But why did not... the author more distinctly write this word זָרָה? The syntactic relation is like 29:21: after the manner of a substantival clause, the subject to that which follows as its virtual predicate: “its end is: like a serpent it biteth = this, that it biteth like a serpent.” Regarding זָרָה, serpens regulus (after Schultens, from (Arab.) saf, to breathe out glowing, scorching), vid., at Isa. 7:8. The Hiph. Heb. here understands of the division of the liver, and Hitzig, after the LXX, Vulgate, and Venet., of squirting the poison; both after the Arab. farth. But, הַפריש, Syr. afrès, also signifies, from the root-idea of dividing and splitting, to sting, poindre, pointer, as Rashi and Kimchi gloss, whence the Aram. פְׁרָש, an ox-goad, with which the ancients connect מָרָש (of the spur), the name for a rider, eques, and also a horse (cf. on the contrary, Fleischer in Levy, W.B. ii. 574); a serpent’s bite and a serpent’s sting (Lat. morsus, ictus, Varro: cum pepugerit colubra) are connected together by the ancients.

Proverbs 23:33, 34. The excited condition of the drunkard is now described. First, v. 33 describes the activity of his imagination as excited to madness. It is untenable to interpret זָרָה here with Rashi, Aben Ezra, and others, and to translate with Luther: “so shall thine eyes look after other women” (circumspicient mulieres impudicas, Fleischer, for the meaning to perceive, to look about for something, to seek something with the eyes, referring to Gen. 41:33). For זָרָה acquires the meaning of mulieres impudicas only from its surrounding, but here the parallel זָרָה (perverse things) directs to the neut. aliena (cf. 15:28, רָעַה), but not merely in the sense of unreal things (Ralbag, Meîri), but strange, i.e., abnormal, thus bizarre, mad, dreadful things. An old Heb. parable compares the changing circumstances which wine produces with the manner of the lamb, the lion, the swine, the monkey; here juggles and phantoms of the imagination are meant, which in the view and fancy of the drunken man hunt one another like monkey capers. Moreover, the state of the drunkard is one that is separated from the reality of a life of sobriety and the safety of a life of moderation, 34a: thou act like one who lies in the heart of the sea. Thus to lie in the heart, i.e., the midst, of the sea as a ship goes therein, 30:19, is impossible; there one must swim but swimming is not lying, and to thing on a situation like that of Jonah, 1:5, one must think also of the ship; but this does not necessarily mean “to sleep,” and, besides, the sleep of a passenger in the cabin on the high sea is of itself no dangerous matter. Rightly Hitzig: on the depth of the sea (cf. Jonah 2:4)—the drunken man, or the man overcome by wine (Isa. 28:7), is like one who has sunk down into the midst of the sea; and thus drowned, or in danger of being drowned, he is in a condition of intellectual confusion, which finally passes over into perfect unconsciousness, cut off from the true life which passes over him like one dead, and in this condition he has made a bed for himself, as בְּרֵאשׁ בָּלָב denotes. With רָעַה, the sail-yard fastened by ropes, is the sail-yard happens thus to no one, and it is no place for such a purpose; but as little as one can quarter him who is on the ridge of the roof, in the 'Alîja, because no one is able to lie down there, so little can he in the bower [Mastkorb] him who is here spoken of (Böttcher). The poet says, but only by way of comparison, how critical the situation of the drunkard is; he compares him to one who lies on the top of the mast, המַחְלִית, after the forms מַחְלָה, מַחְלֵית (Isa. 33:23). To lay oneself down on the sail-yard happens thus to no one, and it is no place for such a purpose; but as little as one can quarter him who is on the ridge of the roof, in the 'Alîja, because no one is able to lie down there, so little can he in the bower [Mastkorb] him who is here spoken of (Böttcher). The poet says, but only by way of comparison, how critical the situation of the drunkard is; he compares him to one who lies on the highest sail-hard, and is exposed to the danger of being every moment thrown into the sea; for the rocking of the ship is the greater in proportion to the height of the sail-yard. The drunkard is, indeed, thus often exposed to the peril of his life; for an accident of itself not great, or a stroke, may suddenly put an end to his life.

Proverbs 23:35. The poet represents the drunken man as now speaking to himself.
has been well cudgelled; but because insensible, he has not felt it, and he places himself now where he will sleep out his intoxication. Far from being made temperate by the strokes inflicted on him, he rejoices in the prospect, when he has awaked out of his sleep, of beginning again the life of drunkenness and revelry which has become a pleasant custom to him. חָלָה means not only to be sick, but generally to be, or to become, affected painfully; cf. Jer. 5:3, where חָל is not the 3rd pl. mas. of חִיל, but of חָלָה. The words מָת יָאִיצ are, it is true, a cry of longing of a different kind from Job 7:4. The sleeping man cannot forbear from yielding to the constraint of nature: he is no longer master of himself, he becomes giddy, everything goes round about with him, but he thinks with himself: Oh that I were again awake! and so little has his appetite been appeased by his sufferings, that when he is again awakened, he will begin where he left off yesterday, when he could drink no more. מָת יא is here, after Nolde, Fleischer, and Hitzig, the relative quando (quum); but the bibl. usus loq. gives no authority for this. In that case we would have expected הֱקִיצָתִי instead of אָקִיץ. As the interrog. is more animated than the relat., so also נְׁשֵׁי רָעָה is more animated (1 Sam. 2:3) than רוּאִים לְׁבֵךְ. The suffix of אָבַקְשׁ refers to the wine: raised up, he will seek that which has become so dear and so necessary to him.

Proverbs 24

Proverbs 24:1, 2. After this divergence (in 23:29–35) from the usual form of the proverb, there is now a return to the tetrastich:

1 Envy not evil men, And desire not to have intercourse with them.

2 For their heart thinketh of violence, And their lips speak mischief.

The warning, not to envy the godless, is also found at 3:31; 23:17; 24:19, but is differently constructed in each of these passages.

Regarding תִּתְא ו with Pathach, vid., at 23:3. אַשְׁחָר (cf. רֵי 28:5) are the wicked, i.e., such as cleave to evil, and to whom evil clings. The warning is grounded in this, that whoever have intercourse with such men, make themselves partners in greater sins and evil: for their heart broodeth (write fun, Munach Dechi) violence, i.e., robbery, plunder, destruction, murder, and the like. With מַא (in the Mishle only here and at 21:7, cf. מִשְׁרְדָה, 19:26) connects itself elsewhere here (cf. Hab. 1:3) labor, molestia, viz., those who prepare it for others by means of slanderous, crafty, uncharitable talk.

Proverbs 24:3, 4. The warning against fellowship with the godless is followed by the praise of wisdom, which is rooted in the fear of God.

3 By wisdom is the house builded, And by understanding is it established.

4 And by knowledge shall the chambers be filled With all manner of precious and pleasant goods.

What is meant by the “building of the house” is explained at 14:1. It is wisdom, viz., that which originates from God, which is rooted in fellowship with Him, by which every household, be it great or small, prospers and attains to a successful and flourishing state; כונֵן, as parallel word to בָנָה (Prov. 3:19; Hab. 2:12), is related to it as statuere to extruere; the Hithpal (as at Num. 21:17) means to keep oneself in a state of continuance, to gain perpetuity, to become established. That אֵלַי by Athnach has not passed over into the pausal קָנָי, arises from this, that the Athnach, by the poetical system of accents, has only the force of the prose accent Sakef; the clause completes itself only by 4b; the pausal form on that account also is not found, and it is discontinued, because the Athnach does not produce any pausal effect (vid., at Ps. 45:6). The form of expression in v. 4 is like 1:13; 3:10. But the כַּפְרָה, of storerooms (LXX as
Isa. 26:20, ταμιεῖα, ἡ προσευξία, like 22:18; 23:8, is peculiar to this collection.

Proverbs 24:5, 6. The praise of wisdom is continued: it brings blessings in the time of peace, and gives the victory in war.

5 A wise man is full of strength; And a man of understanding showeth great power.

6 For with wise counsel shalt thou carry on successful war; And safety is where counsellors are not wanting.

The ב כֹח (thus with Pathach in old impressions, Cod. 1294, Cod. Jaman., and elsewhere with the Masoretic note (خيرت الملك) introduces, as that of ב כֹח, Ps. 24:4, the property in which a person or thing appears; the article (cf. עֲבָר, 2:13, Gesen, § 35, 2A) is that of gender. The parallel מאמץ כח, a Greek translates by ὑπὲρ κραταιὸν ἰσχύϊ = מֵא מִיץ כֹח (Job 9:4; Isa. 40:26). But after 5a it lies nearer that the poet means to express the power which lies in wisdom itself (Eccles. 7:19), and its superiority to physical force (Prov. 21:22); the LXX, Syr., and Targ. also, it is true, translate 5a as if (praepotente) were the words used. The parallel מאמץ כח, a Greek translates with μετέωροι τῷ ἄφρονι ἡ ἐπιστῆμαι; it is a plur., as Ps. 49:4 shows; but, as is evident from the personification and the construction, 1:20, one inwardly multiplying and heightening, which is related to חכמה as science or the contents of knowledge is to knowledge. That this plur. comes here into view as in 1–9 (vid., p. 25), is definitely accounted for in these chapters by the circumstance that wisdom was to be designated, which is the mediatrix of all wisdom; here, to be designated in intentional symphony with רָאמות, whose plur. ending ôth shall be for that very reason, however, inalienable. Thus רָאמות will be the name of a costly foreign bijouterie, which is mentioned in the Book of Job, where the unfathomableness and inestimableness of wisdom is celebrated; vid., Job 27:18, where we have recorded what we had to say at the time regarding this word. But what is now the meaning of the saying that wisdom is to the fool a pearl or precious coral? Joël Bril explains: "The fool uses the sciences like a precious..."
stone, only for ornament, but he knows not how to utter a word publicly,” This is to be rejected, because ראמות is not so usual a trinket or ornament as to serve as an expression of this thought. The third of the comparison lies in the rarity, costliness, unattainableness; the fool despises wisdom, because the expenditure of strength and the sacrifices of all kinds which are necessary to put one into the possession of wisdom deter him from it (Rashi). This is also the sense which the expression has when ראמות = רמות; and probably for the sake of this double meaning the poet chose just this word, and not פנינים, גביש, or any other name, for articles of ornament (Hitzig). The Syr. has incorrectly interpreted this play upon words: sapientia abjecta stulto; and the Targumist: the fool grumbles (מִתְׁרְׁעֵם) against wisdom. He may also find the grapes to be sour because they hang too high for him; here it is only said that wisdom remains at a distance from him because he cannot soar up to its attainment; for that very reason he does not open his mouth in the gate, where the council and the representatives of the people have their seats: he has not the knowledge necessary for being associated in counselling, and thus must keep silent; and this is indeed the most prudent thing he can do.

Proverbs 24:8. From wisdom, which is a moral good, the following proverb passes over to a kind of σοφία δαιμονιώδης: He that meditateth to do evil, We call such an one an intriguer. A verbal explanation and definition like 21:24 (cf. p. 29), formed like 16:21 from בּוּז. Instead of בותילמֹּדָה [lord of mischief] in 12:2, the expression is איש סְם (cf. at 22:24). Regarding מֹדָה in its usual sense, vid., 5:2. Such definitions have of course no lexicographical, but only a moral aim. That which is here given is designed to warn one against gaining for himself this ambiguous title of a refined (cunning, versutus) man; one is so named whose schemes and endeavours are directed to the doing of evil. One may also inversely find the turning-point of the warning in 8b: “he who projects deceitful plans against the welfare of others, finds his punishment in this, that he falls under public condemnation as a worthless intriguer” (Elster). But מֹדָה is a רֶינָה מָצָה, vid., 5:2; the title is thus equivocal, and the turning-point lies in the bringing out of his kernel: מְחַשֵּׁב לָרָע = meditating to do evil.

Proverbs 24:9. This proverb is connected by עם with v. 8, and by על with v. 7; it places the fool and the mocker over against one another. The undertaking of folly is sin; And an abomination to men is the mocker.

Since it is certain that for 9b the subject is “the mocker,” so also “sin” is to be regarded as the subject of 9a. The special meaning flagitium, as 21:27, יָם will then not have here, but it derives it from the root-idea “to contrive, imagine,” and signifies first only the collection and forthputting of the thoughts towards a definite end (Job 17:11), particularly the refined preparation, the contrivance of a sinful act. In a similar way we speak of a sinful beginning or undertaking. But if one regards sin in itself, or in its consequences, it is always a contrivance or desire of folly (gen. subjecti), or: one that bears on itself (gen. qualitatis) the character of folly; for it disturbs and destroys the relation of man to God and man, and rests, as Socrates in Plato says, on a false calculation. And the mocker (the mocker at religion and virtue) is תועֲבֵב אָדָם.

The form of combination stands here before a word with ה, as at Job 18:2; 24:5, and frequently. but why does not the poet say directly חָטֵא אָדָם? Perhaps to leave room for the double sense, that the mocker is not only an abomination to men, viz., to the better disposed; but also, for he makes others err as to their faith, and draws them into his frivolous thoughts, becomes to them a cause of abomination, i.e., of such conduct and of such thoughts as are an abomination before God (Prov. 15:9, 26).

Proverbs 24:10. The last of these four distichs stands without visible connection: Hast thou shown thyself slack in the day of adversity, Then is thy strength small.

The perf. 10a is the hypothetic, vid., at 22:29. If a man shows himself remiss (Prov. 18:9), i.e., changeable, timorous, incapable of resisting in times of difficulty, then shall he draw therefrom the conclusion which is expressed in 10b. Rightly Luther, with intentional generalization, “he is not strong who is not firm in need.” But the address makes the proverb an earnest admonition, which speaks to him who shows himself weak the judgment which he has to pronounce on himself. And the paronomasia צָרָה and צָרָה may be rendered, where possible, “if thy strength becomes, as it were, pressed together and bowed down by the difficulty just when it ought to show itself (viz., כְָׁלְלְׁהַּרְּחִיב לְּ), then it is limited, thou art a weakling.” Thus Fleischer accordingly, translating: si segnis fueris die angustiae, angustae sunt vires tuae. Hitzig, on the contrary, corrects after Job 7:11, וַיֹּאמֶר “Klemm (klamm) ist dein Mut” [= strait is thy courage]. And why? Of כָּעַש [strength], he remarks, one can say כֶּשֶׁל [it is weak] (Ps. 31:11), but scarcely כָּר [strait, straitened]; for force is exact, and only the region of its energy may be wide or narrow. To this we answer, that certainly of strength in itself we cannot use the word כָּעַש in the sense here required; the confinement (limitation) may rather be, as with a stream, Isa. 59:19, the increasing (heightening) of its intensity. But if the strength is in itself anything definite, then on the other hand its expression is something linear, and the force in view of its expression is that which is here called כָּר, i.e., not extending widely, not expanding, not inaccessible. כָּר is all to which narrow limits are applied. A little strength is limited, because it is little also in its expression.

Proverbs 24:11, 12. Now, again, we meet with proverbs of several lines. The first here is a hexastich:

11 Deliver them that are taken to death, And them that are tottering to destruction, oh stop them!

12 If thou sayest, “We knew not of it indeed,” — It is not so: The Weigher of hearts, who sees through it, And He that observeth thy soul, He knoweth it, And requiteth man according to his work.

If כָּעַש is interpreted as a particle of adjuration, then כָּעַש is equivalent to: I adjure thee, forbear not (cf. Neh. 13:25 with Isa. 58:1), viz., that which thou hast to do, venture all on it (LXX, Syr., Jerome). But the parallelism requires us to take together כָּעַש כָּעַש (such as with tottering steps are led forth to destruction) as object along with כָּעַש כָּעַש, as well as כָּעַש כָּעַש (such as from their condition are carried away to death, cf. Ex. 14:11) as object to כָּעַש כָּעַש. Thus כָּעַש כָּעַש also is not to be interpreted as an interrogative; for, thus expressed, an retinetis ought rather to have for the converse the meaning: thou shalt indeed not do it! (cf. e.g., Isa. 29:16). And כָּעַש cannot be conditional: si prohibere poteris (Michaelis and others), for the fut. after כָּעַש has never the sense of a potential. Thus כָּעַש is, like וַיֹּאמֶר, understood in the sense of utinam, as it is used not merely according to later custom (Hitzig), but from ancient times (cf. e.g., Isa. 29:16). And כָּעַש also is not to be interpreted as an interrogative; for, thus expressed, an retinetis ought rather to have for the converse the meaning: thou shalt indeed not do it! (cf. e.g., Ex. 32:32 with Gen. 23:13). כָּעַש introduces an objection, excuse, evasion, which is met by הֲלֹא; introducing “so say I on the contrary,” it is of itself a reply, vid., Deut. 7:17f. כָּעַש we will not have to interpret personally (LXX τοῦτον); for, since v. 11 speaks of several of them, the neut. rendering (Syr., Targ., Venet., Luther) in itself lies nearer, and כָּעַש, hoc, after כָּעַש, is also in conformity with the usus loq.; vid., at Ps. 56:10.
But the neut.註冊 does not refer to the moral obligation expressed in v. 11; to save human life when it is possible to do so, can be unknown to no one, wherefore Jerome (as if the words of the text were הָלַבָּב הָדָעַב: vires non suppetunt.註冊 refers to the fact that men are led to the tribunal; only thus is explained the change ofידעתי, which was to be expected, intoוּיָד עְׁנ. the objection is, that one certainly did not know, viz., that matters had come to an extremity with them, and that a short process will be made with them. To this excuse, with pretended ignorance, the reply of the omniscient God stands opposed, and suggests to him who makes the excuse to consider: It is not so: the Searcher of hearts (vid., at 16:2), He sees through it, viz., what goes on in thy heart, and He has thy soul under His inspection (נֹצֵר, as Job 7:20: LXX καὶ ὁ πλάσας ὑμᾶς; וְׁיֹצֵר, which Hitzig prefers, for he thinks thatנצר must be interpreted in the sense of to guard, preserve; Luther rightly); He knows, viz., how it is with thy mind, He looks through it, He knows (cf. for both, Ps. 139:1–4), and renders to man according to his conduct, which, without being deceived, He judges according to the state of the heart, out of which the conduct springs.

It is to be observed that v. 11 speaks of one condemned to death generally, and not expressly of one innocently condemned, and makes no distinction between one condemned in war and in peace. One sees from this that the Chokma generally has no pleasure in this, that men are put to death by men, not even when it is done legally as punishment for a crime. For, on the one side, it is true that the punishment of the murderer by death is a law proceeding from the nature of the divine holiness and the inviolability of the divine ordinance, and the worth of man as formed in the image of God, and that the magistrate who disowns this law as a law, disowns the divine foundation of his office; but, on the other side, it is just as true that thousands and thousands of innocent persons, or at least persons not worthy of death, have fallen a sacrifice to the abuse or the false application of this law; and that along with the principle of recompenstate righteousness, there is a principle of grace which rules in the kingdom of God, and is represented in the O.T. by prophecy and the Chokma. It is, moreover, a noticeable fact, that God did not visit with the punishment of death the first murderer, the murderer of the innocent Abel, his brother, but let the principle of grace so far prevail instead of that of law, that He even protected his life against any avenger of blood. But after that the moral ruin of the human race had reached that height which brought the Deluge over the earth, there was promulgated to the post-diluvians the word of the law, Gen. 9:6, sanctioning this inviolable right of putting to death by the hand of justice. The conduct of God regulates itself thus according to the aspect of the times. In the Mosaic law the greatness of guilt was estimated no externally (cf. Num. 35:31), but internally, a very flexible limitation in its practical bearings. And that under certain circumstances grace might have the precedence of justice, the parable having in view the pardon of Absalom (2 Sam. 14) shows. But a word from God, like Ezek. 18:23, raises grace to a principle, and the word with which Jesus (John 8:11) dismisses the adulteress is altogether an expression of this purpose of grace passing beyond the purpose of justice. In the later Jewish commonwealth, criminal justice was subordinated to the principle of predominating compassion; practical effect was given to the consideration of the value of human life during the trial, and even after the sentence was pronounced, and during a long time no sentence of death was passed by the Sanhedrim. But Jesus, who was Himself the innocent victim of a fanatical legal murder, adjudged, it is true, the supremacy to the sword; but He preached and practised love, which publishes grace for justice. He was Himself incarnate Love, offering Himself for sinners, the Mercy which Jahve proclaims by Ezek. 18:23. The so-called Christian state ["Citivas Dei"] is indeed in manifest opposition to this. But Augustine declares himself, on the supposition that the principle of grace must penetrate the new ear, in all its conditions, that began with Christianity, for the suspension of punishment by death, especially because the heathen magistrates had abused the instrument of death, which, according to divine right, they had control over, to the destruction of Christians; and Ambrosius went so far as to impress it as a duty on a Christian judge who had pronounced the sentence of death, to exclude himself from the Holy Supper. The magisterial control over life and death had at that time gone to the extreme height of bloody violence, and thus in a certain degree it destroyed itself. Therefore Jansen changes the proverb (v. 11) with the words of Ambrosius into the admonition:

Quando indulgentia non nocet publico, eripe intercessione, eripe gratia tua sacerdos, aut tu imperator eripe subscriptione indulgentiae.

When Samuel Romilly's Bill to abolish the punishment of death for a theft amounting to the sum of five shillings passed the English House of Commons, it was thrown out by a majority in the House of Lords. Among those who voted against the Bill were one archbishop and five bishops. Our poet here in the Proverbs is of a different mind. Even the law of Sinai appoints the punishment of death only for man-stealing. The Mosaic code is incomparably milder than even yet the Carolina. In expressions, however, like the above, a true Christian spirit rules the spirit which condemns all blood-thirstiness of justice, and calls forth to a crusade not only against the inquisition, but also against such unmerciful, cruel executions even as they prevailed in Prussia in the name of law in the reign of Friedrich Wilhelm I, the Inexorable.

Proverbs 24:13, 14. The proverb now following stands in no obvious relation with the preceding. But in both a commencement is made with two lines, which contain, in the former, the principal thought; in this here, its reason:

13 My son, eat honey, for it is good, And honeycomb is sweet to thy taste.

14 So apprehend wisdom for thy soul; When thou hast found it, there is a future, And thy hope is not destroyed.

After its nearest fundamental thought, גְּדָת, Arab. tejjib, means that which smells and tastes well; honey (דְּב ש, from דָב ש, to be thick, consistent) has, besides, according to the old idea (e.g., in the Koran), healing virtue, as in general bitterness is viewed as a property of the poisonous, and sweetness that of the wholesome. הָנִּיח is second accus. dependent on אֱכָל, for honey and honeycomb were then spoken of as different; נֹפֶת (from נָפ ת, to pour, to flow out) is the purest honey (virgin-honey), flowing of itself out of the comb. With right the accentuation takes 13b as independent, the substantival clause containing the reason, “for it is good:” honeycomb is sweet to thy taste, i.e., applying itself to it with the impression of sweetness; ע ל, as at Neh. 2:5; Ps. 16:6 (Hitzig).

In the clause of 14a, it is manifest that v. 13 is not spoken for its own sake. To apprehend wisdom, is elsewhere equivalent to, to receive it into the mind, 1:2, Eccles. 1:17 (cf. דעת בינה, 4:1, and frequently), according to which Böttcher also here explains: learn to understand wisdom. But לכ ל unfolds itself in 14bc: even as honey has for the body, so wisdom has for the soul, beneficent wholesome effects. דעה חכמה is thus not absolute, but is meant in relation to these effects. Rightly Fleischer: talem reputa; Ewald: sic (talem) scito spaintiam (esse) animae tuae, know, recognise wisdom as something advantageous to thy soul, and worthy of commendation. Incorrectly Hitzig explains אִם מָצָאת, “if the opportunity presents itself.”

Apart from this, that in such a case the words would rather have been כי תימצא, to find wisdom is always equivalent to, to obtain it, to make it one’s won, 3:13; 8:35; cf. 2:5; 8:9. דע stands for דְּעֶה, after the form רְׁדָה; שְׁבָה (after Böttcher, § 396, not without the influence of the following commencing sound), cf. the similar transitions of א- into א- placed together at Ps. 20:4; the form שָׁפֶה is also found, but שָׁפֶה is the form in the Cod. Hilleli, as confirmed by Moses Kimchi in Comm., and by David Kimchi, Michloli 101b. With שָׁפֶה begins the apodosis (LXX, Jerome, Targ., Luther, Rashi, Ewald, and others). In itself, שָׁפֶה (cf. Gen. 47:6) might also continue the conditional clause; but the explanation, si inveneris (eam) et ad postremum ventum erit (Fleischer, Bertheau, Zöckler), has this against it, that הָיִיתִי does not mean: the end comes, but: there is an end, 23:18; cf. 19:18; here: there is an end for thee, viz., an issue that is a blessed reward. The promise is the same as at 23:18. In our own language we speak of the hope of one being cut off; (Arab.) jaz’a, to be cut off, is equivalent to, to give oneself up to despair.

15 Lie not in wait, oh wicked man, against the dwelling of the righteous; Assault not his resting-place. For seven times doth the righteous fall and rise again, But the wicked are overthrown when calamity falls on them.

Proverbs 24:15, 16. The רֵבֶץ [practising violence], against which the warning is here given, are not directed, as at 1:11; 19:26, immediately against the person, but against the dwelling-place and resting-place (רֵבֶץ, e.g., Jer. 50:6, as also יְפְסָל 3:33) of the righteous, who, on his part, does injustice and wrong to no one; the warning is against coveting his house, Ex. 20:17, and driving him by cunning and violence out of it. Instead of יְפְסָל, Symmachus and Jerome have incorrectly read יָפְסָל, and from this misunderstanding have here introduced a sense without sense into v. 15; many interpreters (Löwenstein, Ewald, Elster, and Zöckler) translate with Luther appositionally: as a wicked man, i.e., “with mischievous intent,” like one stealthily lurking for the opportunity of taking possession of the dwelling of another, as if this could be done with a good intent: יְפָשָׁש is the vocative (Syr., Targ., Venet.: ἄρας, and this address (cf. Ps. 75:5f.) sharpens the warning, for it names him who acts in this manner by the right name. The reason, 16a, sounds like an echo of Job 5:19. רָשָע signifies, as at Ps. 119:164, seven times; cf. 17:10. אָבֶשׁ (not אָבֶשׁ) is perf. consec., as רֶשׁ, e.g., Gen. 3:22: and he rises afterwards (notwithstanding), but the transgressors come to ruin; יְבֶךֶשׁ, if a misfortune befall them (cf. 14:32), they stumble and fall, and rise no more.

Proverbs 24:17, 18. Warning against a vindictive disposition, and joy over its satisfaction.

17 At the fall of thine enemy rejoice not, And at his overthrow let not thine heart be glad; 18 That Jahve see it not, and it be displeasing to Him, And He turns away His anger from Him. The Chethîb, which in itself, as the plur. of category, שֵׁבַע, might be tolerable, has 17b against it: with right, all interpreters adhere to the Kerî with י from è in doubled close syllable, as in the like Kerî, 1 Sam. 24:5). יְבֶךֶשׁ (דְָּשֶׁךְ) is the form in Niph. and Hiph., which in Niph. occurs only once with the initial guttural (as בֵּשַׁת or half guttural שֶׁבֶת). יְבֶךֶשׁ (דְָּשֶׁךְ) is not adj. here as at 1 Sam. 25:3, but perf. with the force of a fût. (Symmachus: καὶ μὴ ἀποκεντρῶν τὸν αὐτὸν). The proverb extends the duty of love even to an enemy; for it requires that we do good to him and not evil, and warns against rejoicing when evil befalls him. Hitzig, indeed, supposes that the noble morality which is expressed in v. 17 is limited to a moderate extent by the motive assigned in 18b. Certainly the poet means to say that God could easily give a gracious turn for the better, as to the punishment of the wicked, to the decree of his anger against his enemy; but his meaning is not this, that one, from joy at the misfortune of others, ought to desist from interrupting the process of the destruction of his enemy, and let it go on to its end; but much rather, that one ought to abstain from this joy, so as not to experience the manifestation of God’s displeasure thereon, but His granting grace to him against whom we rejoice to see God’s anger go forth.

Proverbs 24:19, 20. Warning against envying the godless for their external prosperity:
19 Be not enraged on account of evil-doers, Envy not the godless;
20 For the wicked men shall have no future, The light of the godless is extinguished.

Ver. 19 is a variation of Ps. 37:1; cf. also 3:21 (where with הָרִים following the traditional גִּבֹּר, which Hupfeld would here insert). The verb לָתְּמָר is fut. apoc. of אֲרָנָה, to be heated (to be indignant), distinguished from the Tiphel תִּפְּה, to be jealous. The ground and occasion of being enraged, and on the other side, of jealousy or envy, is the prosperity of the godless, Ps. 73:3; cf. Jer. 12:1. This anger at the apparently unrighteous division of fortune, this jealousy at the success in which the godless rejoice, rest on short-sightedness, which regards the present, and looks not on to the end. The expression 'פו אֲרָנָה, mere as in the expression פֶּתֶר אֲרָנָה, 14b (cf. Ps. 37:37), always denotes the happy, glorious issue indemnifying for past sufferings. Such an issue the wicked man has not; his light burns brightly on this side, but one day it is extinguished. In 20b is repeated 13:9; cf. 20:20.

Proverbs 24:21, 22. A warning against rebellious thoughts against God and the king:
21 My son, honour Jahve and the king, And involve not thyself with those who are otherwise disposed;
22 For suddenly their calamity ariseth, And the end of their years, who knoweth it?

The verb לִשְׁמָר, proceeding from the primary idea of folding (complicare, duplicare), signifies transitively to do twice, to repeat, 17:9; 26:11, according to which Kimchi here inappropriately thinks on relapsing; and intransitively, to change, to be different, Esth. 1:7; 3:8. The Syr. and Targ. translate the word לִשְׁפַּע fools; but the Kal לַשָּׁפָע (לָשֶׁפָע) occurs, indeed, in the Syr., but not in the Heb., in the meaning alienata est (mens ejus); and besides, this meaning, alieni, is not appropriate here. A few, however, with Saadía (cf. Deutsch-Morgenländische Zeitschr. xxi. 616), the dualists (Manichees), understand it in a dogmatic sense; but then must be dem. of לַשָּׁפָע, while much more it is its root-word. Either שׁנֵי means those who change, novantes = novarum rerum studiosi, which is, however, exposed to this objection, that the Heb. שׁנֵי, in the transitive sense to change, does not elsewhere occur; or it means, according to the usus log., diversos = diversum sentientes (C. B. Michaelis and others), and that with reference to 21a: מְמָרָם דבריהם ומצותם (Meiri Immanuel), or מְמָשִׁים ונתמך ההכמה (Ahron b. Joseph). Thus they are called (for it is a common name of a particular class of men) dissidents, oppositionists, or revolutionaries, who recognise neither the monarchy of Jahve, the King of kings, nor that of the earthly king, which perhaps Jerome here means by the word detractoribus (= detractatoribus). The Venet. incorrectly, עם חזות, וְיִשְׁנָה with at 14:10, ב שׁנֵיהֶם the hophor, meant to mix oneself up with something, here with מְמָרָה, to mix oneself with some one, i.e., to make common cause with him. The reason assigned in v. 22 is, that although such persons as reject by thought and action human and divine law may for a long time escape punishment, yet suddenly merited ruin falls on them. כז is, according to its primary signification, weighty, oppressive misfortune, vid., i. 27. In כז it is thought of as hostile power (Hos. 10:14); or the rising up of God as Judge (e.g., Isa. 33:10) is transferred to the means of executing judgment. מִשְׁפָּד = מִשְׁפָּד, Arab. fid, fut. jafûdu or jafidu, a stronger power of bâd, cogn. אֲבָד) is destruction (Arab. fied, fid, death); this word occurs, besides here, only thrice in the Book of Job. But to what does כז refer? Certainly not to Jahve and the king (LXX, Schultens, Umbreit, and Bertheau), for in itself it is doubtful to interpret the genit. after פד as designating the subject, but improper to comprehend God and man under one cipher. Rather it may refer to two, of whom one class refuse to God, the other to the king, the honour that is due (Jerome, Luther, and at last Zöckler); but in the foregoing, two are not distinguished, and the want of reverence for God, and for the magistrates appointed by Him, is usually met with, because standing in interchangeable relationship, in one and the same persons. Is there some misprint then in this word? Ewald suggests שוניהם, i.e., of those who show themselves as שונים (altercatores) towards God and the king. In view of קמיהם, Ex. 32:25, this brevity of expression must be regarded as possible. But if this were the meaning of the word, then it ought to have stood in the first member (איד שניהם), and not in the second. No other conjecture presents itself. Thus שוניהם is perhaps to be referred to the שונים, and those who engage with them: join thyself not with the opposers; for suddenly misfortune will come upon them, and the destruction of both (of themselves and their partisans), who knows it? But that also is not satisfactory, for after the address was to have been expected, 22b. Nothing remains, therefore, but to understand שוניהם, with the Syr. and Targ., as at Job 36:11; the proverb falls into rhythms פיתאום and פיד and שונים and פיתאום. But “the end of their year” is not equivalent to the hour of their death (Hitzig), because for this פיד (cf. Arab. feid and fid, death) was necessary; but to the expiring, the vanishing, the passing by of the year during which they have succeeded in maintaining their ground and playing a part. There will commence a time which no one knows beforehand when all is over with them. In this sense, “who knoweth,” with its object, is equivalent to “suddenly ariseth,” with its subject. In the LXX, after 24:22, there follow one distich of the relations of man to the word of God as deciding their fate, one distich of fidelity as a duty towards the king, and the duty of the king, and one pentastich or hexastich of the power of the tongue and of the anger of the king. The Heb. text knows nothing of these three proverbs. Ewald has, Jahrb. xi. 18ff., attempted to translate them into Heb., and is of opinion that they are worthy of being regarded as original component parts of 1–29, and that they ought certainly to have come in after 24:22. We doubt this originality, but recognise their translation from the Heb. Then follows in the LXX the series of Proverbs, 30:1–14, which in the Heb. text bear the superscription of “the Words of Agur;” the second half of the “Words of Agur,” together with the “Words of Lemuel,” stand after 24:34 of the Heb. text. The state of the matter is this, that in the copy from which the Alexandrines translated the Appendix 30–31:9, stood half of it, after the “Words of the Wise” [which extend from 22:17 to 24:22], and half after the supplement headed “these also are from wise men” [24:23–34], so that only the proverbial ode in praise of the excellent matron [31:10] remains as an appendix to the Book of Hezekiah’s collection, 25–29.

There now follows a brief appendix to the older Book of Proverbs, bearing the superscription, 23a, “These also are from wise men,” i.e., also the proverbs here following originate from wise men. The old translators (with the exception of Luther) have not understood this superscription; they mistake the Lamed auctoris, and interpret the 5 as that of address: also these (proverbs) I speak to wise men, sapientibus (LXX, Syr., Targ., Jerome, Venet.). The formation of the superscription is like that of the Hezekiah collection, 25:1, and from this and other facts we have concluded (vid., pp. 19, 20) that this second supplement originated from the same source as the extension of the older Book of Proverbs, by the appending of the more recent, and its appendices. The linguistic complexion of the proverbs here and there resembles that of the first appendix (cf. 29b with 12d, and נעשו, 25a, with עותים, 22:18; 23:8; 24:4); but, on the other hand, 23b refers back to 28:21 of the Hezekiah collection, and in v. 33f. is repeated 6:10f. This appendix thus acknowledges its secondary character; the poet in minute details stands in the same relation to the Solomonic Mashal as that in which in general he stands to the author of the Introduction, 1–9. That 23b is not in itself a proverb, we have already (p. 6) proved; it is the first line of a hexastich (vid., p. 13).

Proverbs 24:23–25. The curse of partiality and the blessing of impartiality:

23b  Respect of persons in judgment is by no means good:
24  He that saith to the guilty, “Thou art in the right,” Him the people curse, nations detest.
25  But to them who rightly decide, it is well,
And upon them cometh blessing with good.
Partiality is either called שְׁאֵת פָנִים, 18:5, respect to the person, for the partisan looks with pleasure on the פני, the countenance, appearance, personality of one, by way of preference; or הַכֶּר־פָנִים, as here and at 28:21, for he places one person before another in his sight, or, as we say, has a regard to him; the latter expression is found in Deut. 1:17; 16:19. הכיר (vid., 20:11) means to regard sharply, whether from interest in the object, or because it is strange. Heidenheim regards as weaker than אל; but the reverse is the case (vid., p. 148), as is seen from the derivation of this negative (= balj, from בָּלָה, to melt, to decay); thus it does not occur anywhere else than here with the pred. adj. The two supplements delight in this מב, 22:29; 23:7, 35. The thesis 23b is now confirmed in vv. 24 and 25, from the consequences of this partiality and its opposite: He that saith (אומר, with Mehruppach Legarmeh from the last syllable, as rightly by Athias, Nissel, and Michaelis, vid., Thorath Emeth p. 32) to the guilty: thou art right, i.e., he who sets the guilty free (for and צדיק and have here the forensic sense of the post-bibl. צדיק and הדין, him they curse, etc.; cf. the shorter proverb, 17:15, according to which a partial, unjust judge is an abomination to God. Regarding figere, to curse, properly, to pierce through. Regarding לאמוס, vid., at 22:14. לאמוס (from אָם and עָמָה, which both mean to bind and combine) are plur. of categ.: not merely individuals, not merely families, curse such an unrighteous judge and abhor him, but the whole people in all conditions and ranks of society; for even though such an unjust judge bring himself and his favourites to external honour, yet among no people is conscience so blunted, that he who absolves the crime and ennobles the miscarriage of justice shall escape the vox populi. On the contrary, it goes well (ננעים, like 2:10; 9:17, but here with neut. indef. subj. as ישב, Gen. 12:13, and frequently) with those who place the right, and particularly the wrong, fully to view; דוכי is he who mediates the right, Job 9:33, and particularly who proves, censures, punishes the wrong, 9:7, and in the character of a judge as here, Amos 5:10; Isa. 29:21. The genitive connection is not altogether of the same signification as ים התה過程中, wine of a good sort, Song 7:10, and אשה ער, a woman of a bad kind, 6:24, for every blessing is of a good kind; the gen. thus, as at Ps. 21:4, denotes the contents of the blessing; cf. Eph. 1:3, “with all spiritual blessings,” in which the manifoldness of the blessing is presupposed.

Proverbs 24:26. Then follows a distich with the watchword מְכֹחִים:

26  He kisseth the lips Who for the end giveth a right answer.
The LXX, Syr., and Targ. translate: one kisseth the lips who, or: of those who ...; but such a meaning is violently forced into the word (in that case the expression would have been שפתים משביעים or שפתי משיב). Equally impossible is Theodotion’s χείλεσι καταφιληθήσεται, for ישק cannot be the fut. Niph. Nor is it: lips kiss him who ... (Rashi); for, to be thus understood, the word ought to have been משבת שפתי, naturally to be taken as the subj., and thus it supplies the meaning: he who kisseth the lips giveth an excellent answer, viz., the lips of him whom the answer concerns (Jerome, Venet., Luther). But Hitzig ingeniously, “the words reach from the lips of the speaker to the ears of the hearer, and thus he kisses his ear with his lips.” But since to kiss the ear is not a custom, not even with the Florentines, then a welcome answer, if its impression is to be compared to a kiss, is compared to a kiss on the lips. Hitzig himself translates: he commends himself with the lips who ...; but נשק may mean to join oneself, Gen. 41:40, as kissing is equivalent to the joining of the lips; it does not mean intrans. to cringe. Rather the explanation: he who joins the lips together ...; for he, viz., before reflecting, closed his lips together (suggested by Meiri); but with שפתים, brings the idea of kissing, labra labris jungere, far nearer. This prevails against Schultens’ armatus est (erit) labia, besides שפתי, certainly, from the primary idea of connecting (laying together) (vid., Ps. 78:9), to equip (arm) oneself therewith; but the meaning arising from thence: with the lips he arms himself ... is direct nonsense. Fleischer is essentially right, Labra osculatur (i.e., quasi osculum oblatum reddit) qui congrua respondet. Only the question has nothing to do with a kiss; but if he who asks receives a satisfactory answer, an enlightening counsel, he experiences it as if he received a kiss. The Midrash incorrectly remarks under דבילים זכovies, “words of merited denunciation,” according to which the Syr. translates. Words are meant which are corresponding to the matter and the circumstances, and suitable for the end (cf. 8:9).

Such words are like as if the lips of the inquirer received a kiss from the lips of the answerer.

Proverbs 24:27. Warning against the establishing of a household where the previous conditions are wanting: Set in order thy work without, And make it ready for thyself beforehand in the fields,— After that then mayest thou build thine house.

The interchange of ובוות and וב площ shows that by מלאכתך השדה field-labour, 1 Chron. 27:26, is meant. הנה, used of arrangement, procuring, here with ומקרא, signifies the setting in order of the word, viz., the cultivation of the field. In the parallel member, וּפֹעֲלָה, carrying also its object, in itself is admissible: make preparations (LXX, Syr.); but the punctuation היה ופועלה (Targ., Venet.; on the other hand, Jerome and Luther translate as if the words were ופועלה ופועלה is not worthy of being contended against: set it (the work) in the fields in readiness, i.e., on the one hand set forward the present necessary work, and on the other hand prepare for that which next follows; thus: do completely and circumspectly what thy calling as a husbandman requires of thee,— then mayest thou go to the building and building up of thy house (vid., at v. 3, 14:1), to which not only the building and setting in order of a convenient dwelling, but also the bringing home of a housewife and the whole setting up of a household belongs; prosperity at home is conditioned by this—one fulfils his duty without in the fields actively and faithfully. One begins at the wrong end when he begins with the building of his house, which is much rather the result and goal of an intelligent discharge of duty within the sphere of one’s calling. The perf., with 1 after a date, such as א ancor, and the like, when things that will or should be done are spoken of, has the fut. signification of a perf. consec., Gen. 3:5; Ex. 16:6f., 17:4; Ewald, § 344b.

Proverbs 24:28. Warning against unnecessary witnessing to the disadvantage of another: Never be a causeless witness against thy neighbour; And shouldst thou use deceit with thy lips?

The phrase does not mean a witness who appears against his neighbour without knowledge of the facts of the case, but one who has no substantial reason for his giving of testimony; for בָּשָׁפְתֶּי means groundless, with reference to the occasion and motive, 3:30; 23:29; 26:2. Other designations stood for false witnesses (LXX, Syr., Targ.). Rightly Jerome, the Venet., and Luther, without, however, rendering the gen. connection, maintained that the Hiphil of פָּתַת beath may be as well as פָתָת, but the former of these forms with מ could only be metaplastically possible, and would be פָתַת (vid., Hitzig under Jer. 11:20). And what can this Hiph. of הבָּשָׁפְתֶּא mean? “To crumble” one’s neighbours (Chajûg) is an unheard of expression; and the meanings, to throw out crumbs, viz., crumbs of words (Böttcher), or to speak with a broken, subdued voice (Hitzig), are extracted from the rare Arab. חָלֵפַת (fatâfit), for which the lexicographers note the meaning of a secret, moaning sound. When we see הבָּשָׁפְתֶּא standing along with לְפָתַת, then before all we are led to think of הבָּשָׁפְתֶּא [to open], 20:19; Ps. 73:36. But we stumble at the interrog. ו which nowhere else appears connected with ב. Ewald therefore purposes to read הבָּשָׁפְתֶּא [and will open wide] (LXX μὴ δὲ παρατόνου): “that thou usest treachery with thy lips;” but from הבָּשָׁפְתֶּא, to make wide open, Gen. 9:27, “to use treachery” is, only for the flight of imagination, not too wide a distance. On ו the "et num, one need not stumble; אֲבַנֹּל וְיָדוֹ סָמֵךְ שָׁמֵךְ 2 Sam. 15:35, shows that the connection of a question by means of ו is not inadmissible; Ewald himself takes notice that in the Arab. the connection of the interrogatives 'a and hal with ו w and f is quite common; and thus he reaches the explanation: wilt thou befool then by thy lips, i.e., pollute by deceit, by inconsiderate, wanton testimony against others? This is the right explanation, which Ewald hesitates about only from the fact that the interrog. ו comes in between the ו consec. and its perf., a thing which is elsewhere unheard of. But this difficulty is removed by the syntactic observation, that the perf. after interrogatives has often the modal colouring of a conj. or optative, e.g., after the interrog. pronoun, Gen. 21:7, quis dixerit, and after the interrogative particle, as here and at 2 Kings 20:9, iveritne, where it is to be supplied (vid., at Isa. 38:8). Thus: et num persuaseris (deceperis) labisi tuis, and shouldst thou practise slander with thy lips, for thou bringest thy neighbour, without need, by thy uncalled for rashness, into disrepute? “It is a question, או nakar (cf. 23:5), for which 'a (not hal), in the usual Arab. interrogative: how, thou wouldest? one then permits the inquirer to draw the negative answer: “No, I will not do it” (Fleischer).

Proverbs 24:29. The following proverb is connected as to its subject with the foregoing: one ought not to do evil to his neighbour without necessity; even evil which has been done to one must not be requited with evil: Say not, “As he hath done to me, so I do to him: I requite the man according to his conduct.” On the ground of public justice, the talio is certainly the nearest form of punishment, Lev. 24:19f.; but even here the Sinaitic law does not remain in the retortion of the injury according to its external form (it is in a certain manner practicable only with regard to injury done to the person and to property), but places in its stead an atonement measured and limited after a higher point of view. On pure moral grounds, the jus talionis ("as thou to me, so I to thee") has certainly no validity. Here he to whom injustice is done ought to commit his case to God, 20:22, and to oppose to evil, not evil but good; he ought not to set himself up as a judge, nor to act as one standing on a war-footing with his neighbour (Judg. 15:11); but to take God as his example, who treats the sinner, if only he seeks it, not in the way of justice, but of grace (Ex. 34:6f.). The expression 29b reminds of 24:12. Instead of אינון, there is used here, where the speaker points to a definite person, the phrase לא יש. Jerome, the Venet., and Luther translate: to each one, as if the word were vocalized thus, לא יש (Ps. 62:13).

Proverbs 24:30–34. A Mashal ode of the slothful, in the form of a record of experiences, concludes this second supplement (vid., p. 14):

30 The field of a slothful man I came past, And the vineyard of a man devoid of understanding.
31 And, lo! it was wholly filled up with thorns; Its face was covered with nettles; And its wall of stones was broken down.
32 But I looked and directed my attention to it; I saw it, and took instruction from it:
33 “A little sleep, a little slumber, A little folding of the hands to rest.
34 Then cometh thy poverty apace, And thy want as an armed man.”

The line 29b with לא יש is followed by one with לא יש. The form of the narrative in which this warning against drowsy slothfulness is clothed, is like Ps. 37:35f. The distinguishing of different classes of men by אד a and לא יש (cf. 24:20) is common in proverbial poetry.

The construction is as Isa. 5:6; 34:13; Gesen. § 133, 1, Anm. 2. The sing. הקסם does not occur; perhaps it means properly the weed which one tears up to cast it aside, for (Arab.) קמד is matter dug out of the ground. The ancients interpret it by urticae; and Luther translate: to burn, appears, indeed, to be the name of the nettle; the botanical name (Arab.) חולאר (as from חל, to burn, appears, at least a leguminous plant) is from its sound not Arab, and thus lies remote. The Pual ראה sounds like Ps. 80:11 (cf. פא, Ps. 72:20); the position of the words is as this passage of the Psalm; the Syr., Targ., Jerome, and the Venet. render the construction actively, as if the word were רוא.

In v. 32, Hitzig proposes to read לא יש פא and I stopped (stood still); but ראה is trans., not only at Eccles. 7:9, but also at 2:15: to hold anything fast; not: to hold oneself still. And for what purpose the change? A contemplating and looking at a thing, with which the turning and standing near is here connected, manifestly includes a standing still; לא יש פא, after לא יש, is, as commonly after הביס (e.g., Job 35:5, cf. Isa. 42:18), the expression of a lingering looking at an object after the attention has been directed to it. In modern impressions, לא יש פא are incorrectly accentuated; the old editions have rightly לא יש פא with רива; for לא יש פא, but אד a as occurs with לא יש, are connected. In 8:17, this prominence of the personal pronoun serves for the expression of reciprocity; elsewhere, as e.g., Gen. 21:24, 2 Kings 6:3, and particularly, frequently in Hosea, this circumstantiality does not make the subject prominent, but the action; here the suitable extension denotes that he rightly makes his comments at leisure (Hitzig). לא יש פא אד is, as at 22:17, the turning of attention and reflection; elsewhere לא יש פא, to receive a moral, 8:10, Jer. 7:28, is here equivalent to, to abstract, deduce one from a fact, to take to oneself a lesson from it. In vv. 33 and 34 there is a repetition of 6:9, 10. Thus, as v. 33 expresses, the sluggard speaks to whom the neglected piece of ground belongs, and v. 34 places before him the result. Instead of כְַ֫נִּים כִּמְׁה לֵ of the original passage [6:9, 10], here כְַ֫נִּים מִתְׁה לֵ, of the coming of poverty like an avenging Nemesis; and instead of כָּוָ֣וֶ֣שׁ וּמְחֻֽר, here כָּוָּאָ֣שׁ וּמְחֻֽרי (the Cod. Jaman. has it without the י), which might be the plene written pausal form of the sing. (vid., at 6:3, cf. 6:11), but is more surely regarded as the plur.: thy deficits, or wants; for to thee at one time this, and at another time that, and finally all things will be wanting. Regarding the variants כָּרֵא ש and כָּרֵיש (with א in the original passage, here in the borrowed passage with י, vid., at 10:4: כָּאָ֣שׁ נָּמֹ֖ן is translated in the LXX by ὀσπερ ἀγαθὸς δρομεύς (vid., at 6:11); the Syr. and Targ. make from it a tabellarius, a letter-carrier, coming with the speed of a courier.

Second Collection of Solomonic Proverbs—25–29

The older Solomonic Book of Proverbs, with its introduction, 1:9, and its two supplements, (1) 22:17–24:22, (2) 24:23–24, is now followed by a more modern Solomonic Book of Proverbs, a second extensive series of משלי שלמה, which the collector has introduced with the superscription:

1 These also are proverbs of Solomon, Which the men of Hezekiah the king of Judah have collected.

Proverbs 25:1. Hezekiah, in his concern for the preservation of the national literature, is the Jewish Pisistratos, and the “men of Hezekiah” are like the collectors of the poems of Homer, who were employed by Pisistratos for that purpose. כְַ֫נִּים is the subject, and in Cod. 1294, and in the editions of Bomberg 1515, Hartmann 1595, Nissel, Jablonsky, Michaelis, has Dechî. This title is like that of the second supplement, 24:23. The form of the name כְַ֫נִּים, abbreviated from כְַ֫נִּים: is not favourable to the derivation of the title from the collectors themselves. The LXX translates: Αὖτα οἱ παοκιαὶ Σαλωμὼντος οἱ αὐτώτιτοι (cf. Jas. 3:17), ὡς ἐξεγέρασιν οἱ φύλοι Εζεκίου, for which Aquila has ὡς μετῆραν ἄνδρες Εζεκίου, Jerome, transluterunt. nsah signifies, like (Arab.) nsah, to snatch away, to take away, to transfer from another place; in later Heb.: to transcribe from one book into another, to translate from one language into another: to take from another place and place together; the Whence? remains undetermined: according to the anachronistic rendering of the Midrash, ἡμετέρα, i.e., from the Apocrypha; according to Hitzig, from the mouths of the people; more correctly Euchel and others: from their scattered condition, partly oral, partly written. Vid., regarding העתק, Zunz, in Deutsch-Morgenl. Zeitsch. xxv. 147f., and regarding the whole title, pp. 5, 6; regarding the forms of proverbs in this second collection, p. 14; regarding their relation to the first, and their end and aim, pp. 19, 20. The first Collection of Proverbs is a Book for Youth, and this second a Book for the People.

Proverbs 25:2. It is characteristic of the purpose of the book that it begins with proverbs of the king: It is the glory of God to conceal a thing: And the glory of the king to search out a matter. That which is the glory of God and the glory of the king in itself, and that by which they acquire glory, stand here contrasted. The glory of God consists in this, to conceal a matter, i.e., to place before men mystery upon mystery, in which they become conscious of the limitation and insufficiency of their knowledge, so that they are constrained to acknowledge, Deut. 29:28, that “secret things belong unto the Lord our God.” There are many things that are hidden and are known only to God, and we must be contented with that which He sees it good to make known to us. The honour of kings, on the contrary, who as pilots have to steer the ship of the state (Prov. 11:14), and as supreme judges to administer justice (1 Kings 3:9), consists in this, to search out a matter, i.e., to place in the light things that are problematical and subjects of controversy, in conformity with their high position, with surpassing intelligence, and, in conformity with their responsibility, with conscientious zeal. The thought that it is the glory of God to veil Himself in secrecy (Isa. 55:15; cf. 1 Kings 8:12), and of the king, on the contrary, not to surround himself with an impenetrable nimbus, and to withdraw into inaccessible remoteness,—this thought does not, immediately at least, lie in the proverb, which refers that which is concealed, and its contrary, not to the person, but to a matter. Also that God, by the concealment of certain things, seeks to excite to activity human research, is not said in this proverb; for 2b does not speak of the honour of wise men, but of kings; the searching out, 2b, thus does not refer to that which is veiled by God. But since the honour of God at the same time as the welfare of men, and the honour of the king as well as the welfare of his people, is to be thought of, the proverb states that God and the king promote human welfare in very different ways,—God, by concealing that which sets limits to the human welfare in very different ways, and the heart of kings—is this third thing which the proverb particularly aims at—which in themselves, and especially with that which goes on in their depths, are impenetrable and unsearchable. The proverb is a warning against the delusion of being flattered by the favour of the king, which may, before one thinks of it, be withdrawn or changed even into the contrary; and a counsel to one to take heed to his words and acts, and to see to it that he is influenced by higher motives than by the fallacious calculation of the impression on the view and disposition of the king. The in both cases is the expression of the reverence, as e.g., at 2 Chron. 9:22. not = , but like Isa. 26:19; 65:17, for which generally occurs only in the st. constr.

Proverbs 25:4, 5. There now follows an emblematic (vid., p. 9) tetrastich:

4 Take away the dross from silver, So there is ready a vessel for the goldsmith;
5 Take away the wicked from the king, And his throne is established by righteousness.

The form יִוה (cf. the inf. Poal יָהַה, Isa. 59:13) is regarded by Schultens as showing a ground-form יָה, but there is also found e.g., יָש, whose ground-form is יָשׁ, the verb יָשָׁה, Ar. haj, discedere), cf. יָשׁ (whence יָשָׁה, semovit, 2 Sam. 20:13 = Syr. āwagy, cf. Arab. āwjy, to withhold, to abstain from), signifies to separate, withdraw; here, of the separation of the, the refuse, i.e., the dross (vid., regarding the plena scriptio, Baer’s krit. Ausg. des Jesaia, under 1:22); the goldsmith is designated by the word יָשׁ, from יָשׁ, to turn, change, as he who changes the as yet drossy metal by means of smelting, or by purification in water, into that which is pure. In 5a יָשָׁה is, as at Isa. 27:8, transferred to a process of moral purification; what kind of persons are to be removed from the neighbourhood of the king is shown by Isa. 1:22, 23. Here also (as at Isa. 1.c.) the emblem or figure of v. 4 is followed in v. 5 by its moral antitype aimed at. The punctuation of both verses is wonderfully fine and excellent. In v. 4, ויצא is not pointed וְיֵצֵא, but as the consecutive modus אֲשֶׁר; this first part of the proverb refers to a well-known process of art: the dross is separated from the silver (inf. absol., as 12:7; 15:22), and so a vessel (utensil) proceeds from the goldsmith, for he manufactures pure silver; the ל is here similarly used as the designation of the subject in the passive, 13:13; 14:20. In v. 5, on the contrary, ו יִכון is not the punctuation used, but the word is pointed indicatively וְׁיִכון; this second part of the proverb expresses a moral demand (inf. absol. in the sense of the imperative, Gesen. § 131, 4b like 17:12, or an optative or concessive conjunction): let the godless be removed, not from the neighbourhood of the king, for which the words are מִלָּפֶת מֶלֶךְ; also not those standing before the king, i.e., in his closest neighbourhood (Ewald, Bertheau); but since, in the absolute, מִלָּפֶת, not an act of another in the interest of the king, but of the king himself, is thought of: let the godless be removed from before the king, i.e., because he administers justice (Hitzig), or more generally: because after that Psalm (101), which is the “mirror of princes,” he does not suffer him to come into his presence. Accordingly, the punctuation is ב צֶדֶק, not בְּצֶדֶק (Prov. 16:12); because such righteousness is meant as separates the righteous from it and itself from him, as Isa. 16:5 (vid., Hitzig), where the punctuation of הבש denotes that favour towards Moab seeking protection.

Proverbs 25:6, 7. There now follows a second proverb with מִלָּלָה, as the one just explained was a second with מַלְאכָם: a warning against arrogance before kings and nobles. 6 Display not thyself before the king, And approach not to the place of the great. 7 For better than one say to thee, “Come up hither,” Than that they humble thee before a prince, Whom thine eyes had seen. The נָדִיב are those, like 18:16, who by virtue of their descent and their office occupy a lofty place of honour in the court and in the state. The הַדוּר (vid., under 8:16) is the noble in disposition and the nobleman by birth, a general designation which comprehends the king and the princes. The Hithpa. is like the reflex forms 12:9; 13:7, for it signifieth to conduct oneself as נָדִיב or נָדִיר (vid., 20:29), to play the part of one highly distinguished. The נָדִיב has, 6b, its nearest significiation: it denotes, not like הבש standing still, but approaching to, e.g., Jer. 7:2. The reason given in v. 7 harmonizes with the rule of wisdom, Luke 14:10f.: better is the saying to thee, i.e., that one say to thee (Ewald, § 304b), προσανάβηθι ἀνώτερον (thus in Luke), than that one humble thee לִפְׁנֵי נָדִיב, not: because of a prince (Hitzig), for לִפְׁנֵי nowhere means either pro (Prov. 17:18) or propter, but before a prince, so that thou must yield to him (cf. 14:19), before him whom thine eyes had seen, so that thou art not excused if thou takest up the place appropriate to him. Most interpreters are at a loss to explain this relative. Luther: “which thine eyes must see,” and Schultens: ut videant oculi tui. Michaelis, syntactically admissible: quem videre gestiverunt oculi tui, viz., to come near to him, according to Bertheau, with the request that he receives some high office. Otherwise Fleischer: before the king by whom thou and thine are seen, so much the more felt is the humiliation when it comes upon one after he has pressed so far forward that he can be perceived by the king. But הבש is not specially the king, but any distinguished personage whose place he who has pressed forward has taken up, and from which he must now withdraw when the right poseedor of it comes and lays claim to his place. אֲשֶׁר is never used in poetry without emphasis. Elsewhere it is equivalent to ὁτιν-ς, quippe quem, here equivalent to ὁτιπέρ, quem quidem. Thine eyes have seen him in the company, and thou canst say to thyself, this place belongs to him, according to his rank, and not to thee,—the humiliation which thou endurest is thus well deserved, because, with eyes to see, thou wert so blind. The LXX, Syr., Symmachus (who reads 8a, לָרִיב, εἰς πλῆθος), and Jerome, refer the words “whom thine eyes had seen” to the proverb following; but אְשֶׁר does not appropriately belong to the beginning of a proverb, and on the supposition that the word לָרִיב is generally adopted, except by Symmachus, they are also heterogeneous to the following proverb:

8 Go not forth hastily to strife, That it may not be said, “What wilt thou do in the end thereof, When now thy neighbour bringeth disgrace upon thee?”

9 Art thou striving with thy neighbour? strive with him, But disclose not the secret of another;

10 That he who heareth it may not despise thee, And thine evil name depart no more.

Proverbs 25:8–10. Whether לָרִיב is infin., as at Judg. 21:22, or subst., as at 2 Chron. 19:8, is not decided: ad litigandum and ad litem harmonize. As little may it be said whether in.lazy אֲשֶׁר [go not forth], a going out to the gate (court of justice), or to the place where he is to be met who is to be called to account, is to be thought of; in no respect is the sense metaphorical: let not thyself transgress the bounds of moderation, ne te laisse pas emporter; אֲשֶׁר is correlate to לָרִיב, Judg. 21:22. The use of אֲשֶׁר in 8b is unprecedented. Euchel and Lowenstein regard it as an imper.: reflect upon it (test it); but אֲשֶׁר does not signify this, and the interjectional אֲשֶׁר does not show the possibility of an inter. Kal אֲשֶׁר, and certainly not אֲשֶׁר (אֲשֶׁר). The conj. אֲשֶׁר is the connecting form of an original subst. (= panj), which signifies a turning away. It is mostly connected with the future, according to which Nolde, Oetinger, Ewald, and Bertheau explain מִפֶּן indefinite, something, viz., unbecoming. In itself, it may, perhaps, be possible that מִפֶּן was used in the sense of ne quid (Venet. μηποτέ, τί); but “to do something,” for “to commit something bad,” is improbable; also in that case we would expect the words to be thus: מִפֶּן תעשה מַה. Thus מִפֶּן will be an interrogative, as at 1 Sam. 20:10 (vid., Keil), and the expression is brachylogical: that thou comest not into the situation not to know what thou oughtest to do (Rashi: פֶּן ת�א לירא אל תודר פֶּן תמות מַה), or much rather anakoluth.; for instead of saying פֶּן לירא מַה, the poet, shunning this unusual things, adopts at once the interrogative form: that it may not be said at the end thereof (viz., of the strife); what wilt thou do? (Umbreit, Stier, Elster, Hitzig, and Zöckler). This extreme perplexity would occur if thy neighbour (with whom thou disputest so eagerly and unjustly) put thee to shame, so that thou standest confounded (לְלָכָה, properly to hurt, French blesser). If now the summons 9a follows this warning against going out for the purpose of strife: fight out thy conflict with thy neighbour, then אֲשֶׁר set forth with emphasis, denotes not such a strife as one is surprised into, but that into which one is drawn, and the tuam in causam tuam is accented in so far as 9b localizes the strife to the personal relation of the two, and warns against the drawing in of an third person: and expose not the secret of another אֲשֶׁר, (after Michlol 130a, and Ben-Bileam, who places the word under the poetic וָחָדְשֵׁים, the word in Pathach 1, as is Cod. 1294, and elsewhere in correct texts). One ought not to bring forward in a dispute, as material of proof and means of acquittal, secrets entrusted to him by another, or secrets which one knows regarding the position and conduct of another; for such faithlessness and gossiping affix a stigma on him who avails himself of them, in the public estimation, v. 10; that he who hears it may not blame thee (קָשָׁה = Aram. קש, vid., under 14:34), and the evil report concerning thee continue without recall. Fleischer: ne infamia tua non recedat i.e., nunquam desinat per ora hominum propagari, with the remark, "אָפְּנָיו, which properly means in stealthy creeping on of the rumour, and in דָבָר lies a (Arab.) tarsh ḥh," i.e., the two ideas stand in an interchangeable relation with a play upon the words: the evil rumour, once put in circulation, will not again retrace its steps; but, on the contrary, as Virgil says:

In fact, every other can sooner rehabilitate himself in the public estimation that he who is regarded as a prattler, who can keep no secret, or as one so devoid of character that he makes public what he ought to keep silent, if he can make any use of it in his own interest. In regard to such an one, the words are continually applicable, hic niger est, hunc tu, Romane, caveto, 20:19. The LXX has, instead of דָבָר דָבָר, read הָהָה, a word driven on its wheels, as Böttcher. That מְד בֵר = also its passive מְדֻּבָר = מְדֻּבָר, corresponding to the plur. מְד בֵר, is not used, arises from this, that מְד בֵר is here manifestly not a word without connection, but a sentence of motive, contents, and aim united. For, the meaning of הבשנ = הבשנ presents itself from 15:23, according to which, among the old interpreters, Symmachus, Jerome, and Luther render "at its time." Abulwalid compared the Arab. āiffan (āibban, also āffan, whence āly 'īffanīhi, justo tempore), which, as Orelli has shown in his _Synon. der Zeitbegriffe_, p. 21f., comes from the roots _ā'ab_ , to drive (from within) going out, time as consisting of individual moments, the one of which drives on the other, and thus denotes time as a course of succession. One may not hesitate as to the prep. ל, for, as e.g., in דָבָר דָבָר, have the meaning of wheels (the Venet., after Kimchi, אֹפֶן = אֹפֶן, Lev. 16:12, sounds dualistic, appears to denote the circumstances, the relations of the time, and would, as e.g., in כַּלָּבָר יבָר and כַּלָּבָר יבָר, have the meaning of קָרָד. But the form אָפְּנ יִם = אָפְּנ יִם, which like אָפְּנ יִם, Lev. 16:12, sounds dualistic, appears to oppose this. Hitzig supposes that אָפְּנ יִם may designate the time as a circle, with reference to the two arches projecting in opposite directions, but uniting themselves together; but the circle which time describes runs out from one point, and, moreover, the Arab. names for time ā'af, ā'af, and the like, which interchange with ā'āfann, show that this does not proceed from the idea of circular motion. Ewald and others take for אָפְּנ יִם the meaning of wheels (the Venet., after Kimchi, אֹפֶן = אֹפֶן), whereby the form is to be interpreted as dual of אָפְּנ יִם = אָפְּנ יִם, "a word driven on its wheels,"—so Ewald explains: as the potter quickly and neatly forms a vessel on his wheels, thus a fit and quickly framed word. But ā'āfann signifies to drive cattle and to speak = to cause words to follow one another (cf. Arab. syūk, pressing on = flow of words), but not to drive = to fashion in that artisan sense. Otherwise Böttcher, "a word fitly

Proverbs 25:11. The first emblematical distich of this collection now follows:

11 Golden apples in silver salvers. A word spoken according to its circumstances.

The Syr. and Jerome vocalize יבָר יבָר, יבָר יבָר, both are admissible, but the figure and that which is represented are not place din so appropriate a relation as by יבָר יבָר; the wonderfully penetrating expression of the text, which is rendered by the traditional nikkud, agrees here with the often occurring יבָר יבָר (סְפָר = דָבָר), also its passive יבָר יבָר. The defective writing is like, e.g., Ps. 112:7, and gives no authority to prefer יבָר יבָר (Böttcher). That יבָר יבָר, corresponding to the plur. יבָר יבָר, is not used, arises from this, that יבָר יבָר is here manifestly not a word without connection, but a sentence of motive, contents, and aim united. For, the meaning of הבשנ = הבשנ presents itself from 15:23, according to which, among the old interpreters, Symmachus, Jerome, and Luther render "at its time." One may not hesitate as to the prep. ל, for, as e.g., in דָבָר דָבָר, have the meaning of wheels (the Venet., after Kimchi, אֹפֶן = אֹפֶן, Lev. 16:12, sounds dualistic, appears to denote the circumstances, the relations of the time, and would, as e.g., in כַּלָּבָר יבָר and כַּלָּבָר יבָר, have the meaning of קָרָד. But the form אָפְּנ יִם = אָפְּנ יִם, which like אָפְּנ יִם, Lev. 16:12, sounds dualistic, appears to oppose this. Hitzig supposes that אָפְּנ יִם may designate the time as a circle, with reference to the two arches projecting in opposite directions, but uniting themselves together; but the circle which time describes runs out from one point, and, moreover, the Arab. names for time ā'af, ā'af, and the like, which interchange with ā'āfann, show that this does not proceed from the idea of circular motion. Ewald and others take for אָפְּנ יִם the meaning of wheels (the Venet., after Kimchi, אֹפֶן = אֹפֶן), whereby the form is to be interpreted as dual of אָפְּנ יִם = אָפְּנ יִם, "a word driven on its wheels,"—so Ewald explains: as the potter quickly and neatly forms a vessel on his wheels, thus a fit and quickly framed word. But ā'āfann signifies to drive cattle and to speak = to cause words to follow one another (cf. Arab. syūk, pressing on = flow of words), but not to drive = to fashion in that artisan sense. Otherwise Böttcher, "a word fitly spoken, a pair of wheels perfect in their motion," to which he compares the common people “in their jesting,” and adduces all kinds of heterogeneous things partly already rejected by Orelli (e.g., the Homeric ἐπιτροχάδην, which is certainly no commendation). But “jesting” is not appropriate here; for what man conceives of human speech as a carriage, one only sometimes compares that of a babbler to a sledge, or says of him that he shoves the cart into the mud. Is it then thus decided that אָפְּנִים is a dual? It may be also like אָפִן, the plur. especially in the adverbial expression before us, which readily carried the abbreviation with it (vid., Gesen. Lehrgeb. § 134, Anm. 17). On this supposition, Orelli interprets אָפְּנִים from אָפִן, to turn, in the sense of turning about, circumstances, and reminds of this, that in the post-bibl. Heb. this word is sued as indefinitely as πρόσωπος, e.g., באָאְפָּנוֹ, quodammodo (vid., Reland’s Analecta Rabbinita, 1723, p. 126). This late Talm. usage of the word can, indeed, signify nothing as to the bibl. word; but that אָפְּנִים, abbreviated אָפִים can mean circumstances, is warranted by the synon. אָפִּין. Aquila and Theodotion appear to have thus understood it, for their ἐπὶ ἁρμόζουσιν αὐτῷ, which they substitute for the colourless οὐτίς of the LXX, signifies: under the circumstances, in accordance therewith. So Orelli thus rightly defines: “אָפְּנִים denote the āḥwāl, circumstances and conditions, as they form themselves in each turning of time, and those which are ascribed to by the suffix are those to which it is proper, and to which it fits in. Consequently a word is commended which is spoken whenever the precise time arrives to which it is adapted, a word which is thus spoken at its time as well as at its place (van Dyk, fay mahillah), and the grace of which is thereby heightened.” Aben Ezra’s explanation, אין פניםicho certificate, in the approved way, follows the opinion of Abulwalid and Parchon, that אָפְּנִים is equivalent to פנים (cf. aly wajhihi, sua ratione), which is only so far true, that both words are derived from R. פנים, to turn.

In the figure, it is questionable whether by תפוּחֵי זָהָב apples of gold, or gold-coloured apples, are meant (Luther: as pomegranates and citrons); thus oranges are meant, as at Zech. 4:12. הבן, besides, signifies a metallic substance, one appears to be under the necessity of thinking of apples of gold; cf. the brazen pomegranates. But (1) apples of gold of natural size and massiveness are obviously too great to make it probable that such artistic productions are meant; (2) the material of the emblem is usually not of less value than that of which it is the emblem (Fleischer); (3) the Scriptures are fond of comparing words with flowers and fruits, 10:31; 12:14; 13:2; 18:20, and to the essence of the word which is rooted in the spirit, and buds and grows up to maturity through the mouth and the lips, the comparison with natural fruits corresponds better in any case than with artificial. Thus, then, we interpret “golden apples” as the poetic name for oranges, aurea mala, the Indian name of which with reference to or (gold) was changed into the French name orange, as our pomaranze is equivalent to pomum aurantium. מְשִׁיבָה is the plur. of מְשִׁיבָה, already explained, 18:11; the word is connected neither with פָּרְשָׂבָה, to twist, wreath (Ewald, with most Jewish interpreters ), nor with פָּרְשָׂבָה, to pierce, infigere (Radslob, vid., under Ps. 73:7); it signifies medal or ornament, from פָּרְשָׂבָה, to behold (cf. פָּרְשָׂבָה, פָּרְשָׂבָה, θέα = θέαμα, Isa. 2:6), here a vessel which is a delight to the eyes. In general the Venet. rightly, ἐν μορφώμασιν ἀργύρου; Symmachus and Theodotion, more in accordance with the fundamental idea, ἐν περιβλέπτοις ἀργύρου; the Syr. and Targ. specially: in vessels of embossed work (נְגִין, from נָגָה, to draw, to extend); yet more specially the LXX, ἐν ὁρίσκῳ σαροίου, on a chain of cornelian stone, for which, perhaps, ἐν φορμίσκῳ (Jäger) ἀργυρίου, in a little silver basket, is the original phrase. Aquila, after Bereschith rabba c. 93, translates by μῆλα χρύσου ἐν δίσκοις ἀργυφίου. Jerome: in lectis argenteis, appears to have fallen into the error of taking מְשֵׁךְ for מְשֶׁכֶב, lectus. Hitzig here emends a self-made ἀπαξ λεγ. Luther’s “golden apples in silver baskets” is to be preferred. A piece of sculpture which represents fruit by golden little disks or points within groups of leaves is not meant,—for the proverb does not speak of such pretty little apples,—but golden oranges are meant. A word in accordance with the circumstances which occasion it, is like golden oranges which are handed round in silver salvers or on silver waiters. Such a word is, as adopting another figure we might say, like a well-executed picture, and the situation into which it appropriately fits is like its elegant frame. The comparison with fruit is, however, more significant; it designates the right word as a delightful gift, in a way which heightens its impression and its influences.

Proverbs 25:12. Another proverb continues the commendation of the effective word; for it represents, in emblem, the interchangeable relation of speaker and hearer: A golden earring and an ornament of fine gold—A wise preacher to an ear that heareth; i.e., as the former two ornaments form a beautiful ensemble, so the latter two, the wise preacher of morality and an attentive ear, form a harmonious whole: יָשָׁר, down upon, is explained by Deut. 32:2. יָשָׁר, at 11:12, standing along with קָצִיר, meant a ring for the nose; but here, as elsewhere, it means an earring (LXX, Jerome, Venet.), translated by the Syr. and Targ. by קָדִישָא, because it serves as a talisman. A ring for the nose cannot also be here thought of, because this ornament is an emblem of the attentive ear: willingly accepted chastisement or instruction is an ear-ornament to him who hears (Stier). But the gift of the wise preacher, which consists in rightly dividing the word of truth, 2 Tim. 2:15, is as an ornament for the neck or the breast חִלַּי (= Arab. khaly, fem. חָלְיָה = hilyt), of fine gold (כָּתֶם, jewel, then particularly precious gold, from כָּתָם, Arab. katam, recondere). The Venet. well: κόσμος ἀπορροφύσου (fine gold); on the contrary (perhaps in want of another name for gold), כָּתֶם is translated, by the LXX and Syr., by sardine; by the Targ., by emerald; and by Jerome, by margaritum. It looks well when two stand together, the one of whom has golden earrings, and the other wears a yet more precious golden necklace—such a beautiful mutual relationship is formed by a wise speaker and a hearer who listens to his admonitions.

Proverbs 25:13. The following comparative tristich refers to faithful service rendered by words: Like the coolness of snow on a harvest day Is a faithful messenger to them that send him: He refresheth the soul of his master. The coolness (צִנָה from צָנָן, to be cool) of snow is not that of a fall of snow, which in the time of harvest would be a calamity, but of drink cooled with snow, which was brought from Lebanon or elsewhere, from the clefts of the rocks; the peasants of Damascus store up the winter’s snow in a cleft of the mountains, and convey it in the warm months to Damascus and the coast towns. Such a refreshment is a faithful messenger (vid., regarding צִיר, 13:17, here following קָצִיר as a kind of echo) to them that send him: He refreshes the soul of his master.

Proverbs 25:14. This proverb relates to the word which promises much, but remains unaccomplished: Clouds and wind, and yet no rain—A man who boasteth with a false gift. Incorrectly the LXX and Targ. refer the predicate contained in the concluding word of the first line to all the three subjects; and equally incorrectly Hitzig, with Heidenheim, interprets מֵתָה שָׂקֶר, of a gift that has been received of which one boasts, although it is in reality of no value, because by a lying promise a gift is not at all obtained. But as לֶהָם מִהוֹבֵּן, 23:3, is bread which, as it were, deceives him who eats it, so מֵתָה שָׂקֶר is a gift which amounts to a lie, i.e., a deceitful pretence. Rightly Jerome: vir gloriosus et promissa non complens. In the Arab. ṣaliḍ, which Fleischer compares, the figure 14a and its counterpart 14b are amalgamated, for this word signifies both a boaster and a cloud, which is, as it were, boastful, which thunders much, but rains only sparsely or not at all. Similar is the Arab. khullab, clouds which send forth lightning, and which thunder, but yet give no rain; we say to one, magno promissor hiatu: thou art (Arab.) kabaraḳn khullabin, i.e., as Lane translates it: “Thou art only like lightning with which is no rain.” Schultens refers to this proverbial Arabic, fulmen nubis infecundae. Liberality is called (Arab.) nadnay, as a watering, cf. 11:25. The proverb belongs to this circle of figures. It is a saying of the German peasants, “Wenn es sich wolket, so will es regnen”[when it is cloudy, then there will be rain]; but according to another saying, “nicht alle Wolken regnen”[it is not every cloud that yields rain]. “There are clouds and wind without rain.” Three proverbs follow, which have this in common, that they exhort to moderation:

15 By forbearance is a judge won over; And a gentle tongue breaketh the bone. Proverbs 25:15. קָצִין (vid., 6:7) does not denote any kind of distinguished person, but a judge or a person occupying a high official position. And פִתָה does not here mean, to talk over or delude; but, like Jer. 20:7, to persuade, to win over, to make favourable to one; for אֲפֵס (vid., 14:29) is dispassionate calmness, not breaking out into wrath, which finally makes it manifest that he who has become the object of accusation, suspicion, or of disgrace, is one who nevertheless has right on his side; for indecent, boisterous passion injures even a just cause; while, on the contrary, a quiet, composed, thoughtful behaviour, which is not embarrassed by injustice, either experienced or threatened, in the end secures a decision in our favour. “Patience overcomes” is an old saying. The soft, gentle tongue (cf. ד, 15:1) is the opposite of a passionate, sharp, coarse one, which only the more increases the resistance which it seeks to overcome. “Patience,” says a German proverb, “breaks iron;” another says, “Patience is stronger than a diamond.” So here: a gentle tongue breaketh the bone (גֶרֶם = עֶצֶם, as at 17:22), it softens and breaks to pieces that which is hardest. Sudden anger makes the evil still worse; long-suffering, on the contrary, operates convincingly; cutting, immoderate language, embitters and drives away; gentle words, on the contrary, persuade, if not immediately, yet by this, that they remain as it were unchangeable.

Proverbs 25:16. Another way of showing self-control: Hast thou found honey? eat thy enough, Lest thou be surfeited with it, and vomit it up. Honey is pleasant, salutary, and thus to be eaten sparingly, 24:13, but ne quid nimis. Too much is unwholesome, 27α: αὐτοῦ καὶ μέλιτος τὸ πλέον ἐστὶ χολή, i.e., even honey enjoyed immoderately is as bitter as gall; or, as Freidank says: des honges sneeze erdruizet sô mans ze viel geniuzet [the sweetness of honey offends when one partakes too much of it]. Eat if thou hast found any in the forest or the mountains, ד יֶךֶָ, thy enough (LXX τὸ ἱκανόν; the Venet. τὸ ἄρκοῦν σοι), i.e., as much as appeases thine appetite, that thou mayest not become surfeited and vomit it out (ו הֲקֵאתו with Tsere, and א quiesc., as at 2 Sam. 14:10; vid., Michlol 116a, and Parchon under אֱלָקִית). Fleischer, Ewald, Hitzig, and others, place vv. 16 and 17 together, so as to form an emblematic tetrastich; but he who is surfeited is certainly, in v. 16, he who willingly enjoys, and in 17, he to whom it is given to enjoy without his will; and is not, then, v. 16 a sentence complete in itself in meaning? That it is not to be understood in a purely dietetic sense (although thus interpreted it is a rule not to be despised), is self-evident. As one can suffer injury from the noblest of food if he overload his stomach therewith, so in the sphere of science, instruction, edification, there is an injurious overloading of the mind; we ought to measure what we receive by our spiritual want, the right distribution of enjoyment and labour, and the degree of our ability to change it in succum et sanguinem,—else it at last awakens in us dislike, and becomes an evil to us.

Proverbs 25:17. This proverb is of a kindred character to the foregoing. “If thy comrade eats honey,” says an Arabic proverb quoted by Hitzig, “do not lick it all up.” But the emblem of honey is not continued in this verse: Make rare thy foot in thy neighbour’s house, Lest he be satiated with thee, and hate thee.

To make one’s foot rare or dear from a neighbour’s house is equivalent to: to enter it seldom, and not too frequently; חוגך, includes in itself the idea of keeping at a distance (Targ. קלה, Symmachus, ופוסטלון; and another: φίμωσον πόδα σου), and קב has the sense of the Arab. ‘an, and is not the comparative, as at Isa. 13:12: regard thy visit dearer than the house of a neighbour (Heidenheim). The proverb also is significant as to the relation of friend to friend, whose reciprocal love may be turned into hatred by too much intercourse and too great fondness. But צפש, is including a friend, any one with whom we stand in any kind of intercourse. “Let him who seeks to be of esteem,” says a German proverb, “come seldom;” and that may be said with reference to him whom his heart draws to another, and also to him who would be of use to another by drawing him out of the false way and guiding on the right path,—a showing of esteem, a confirming of love by visiting, should not degenerate into forwardness which appears as burdensome servility, as indiscreet self-enjoyment; nor into a restless impetuosity, which seeks at once to gain by force that which one should allow gradually to ripen.

Proverbs 25:18–22. This group of proverbs has the word רע in each of them, connecting them together. The first of the group represents a false tongue:

18 A hammer, and a sword, and a sharp arrow— A man that beareth false witness against his neighbour.

An emblematic, or, as we might also say, an iconological proverb; for 18a is a quodlibet of instruments of murder, and 18b is the subscription under it: that which these weapons of murder accomplish, is done to his neighbour by a man who bears false witness against him—he ruins his estate, takes away his honour, but yet more: he murders him, at one time more grossly, at another time with more refinement; at one time slowly, at another time more quickly. העון, from העון, is equivalent to ידך, ידך, ידך from ידך; the Syr. and Targ. have instead פדועא (פדיעא) from פדועא; the word פדיעא, on which Hitzig builds a conjecture, is an error of transcription (vid., Lagarde and Levy). The expression, 18b, is from the decalogue, Ex. 20:16; Deut. 5:17. It is for the most part translated the same here as there: he who speaks against his neighbour as a false witness.

But rightly the LXX, Jerome, the Venet., and Luther: false testimony. As אלי signifies both that which is mighty = power, and Him who is mighty = God, so עדים signifies both him who bears testimony and the testimony that is borne, properly that which repeats itself and thereby strengthens itself; accordingly we say ענה לער, Deut. 31:21, i.e., as evidence (Jerome, pro testimonio). The prep. ב with this ענה has always the meaning of contra, also at 1 Sam. 12:3; Gen. 30:33 is, however, open to question.

19 A worthless tooth and an unsteady foot— Trust in a faithless man in the day of need.
Proverbs 25:19. The form רֵיח (with Mercha on the antepenult), Isa. 29:19, takes the place of an inf. absol.; דֶָה, however (about the tone syllable of which Dechi does not decide, thus without doubt Midra) is certainly not a subst.: tooth of breaking (Gesen.); for how strange such a designation of a worthless tooth! שְׁן is indeed mas. in 1 Sam. 14:5, but it can also be used as fem., as יֵלֶד, which is for the most part fem., also occurs as mas., Göttche. § 650. Böttcher, in the new Aehrenlese, and in the Lehrbuch, takes רֵיח as fem. of an adj. שָׁן, but the form שִׁלֵּד, which is not an adj., and does not form a fem., although it means not merely profanity, but that which is profane; this is true also of the Aram. שִׁלֵּד, for which Sod is the fem. of an adj. מְשָׁנָה, Esth. 2:9, Targ., is a female name mistaken by Buxtorf. Are we then to read רֵיח, with Hitzig, after the LXX?—an unimportant change. We interpret the traditional רֵיח, with Fleischer, as derived from שָׁן, שָׁנָה, breaking to pieces (crumbling), in an intransitive sense. The form שָׁנָה is also difficult. Böttcher regards it as also, e.g., Aben Ezra after the example of Gecatilia as part. Kal. מִשְׁקָל = מִשְׁקָל, “only on account of the pausal tone and the combination of the two letters מִ and שָׁנָה instead of שָׁנָה.” But this vocal change, with its reasons, is merely imaginary. מִשְׁקָל is the part. Pual, with the preformative ש struck out, Ewald 169d. The objection that the part. Pual should be מִשְׁקָל, after the form מִשְׁקָל, does not prove anything to the contrary; for מִשְׁקָל cannot be the fem. so as not to coincide with the fem. of the part. Kal, cf. besides to the long ש the form without the Dagesh Midra, Eccles. 9:12 = מִשְׁקָל, הַכִּפְּלֵיהֹים (Arnheim, Gramm. p. 139). מִשְׁקָל is a leg that has become tottering, trembling. He who in a time of need makes a faithless man his ground of confidence, is like one who seeks to bite with a broken tooth, and which he finally crushes, and one who supports himself on a shaking leg, and thus stumbles and falls. The gen. connection signifies either the ground of confidence consisting in a faithless man, or the confidence place din one who is faithless. But, after the Masora, we are to read here, as at Ps. 65:6, מִשְׁקָל, which Michlol 184a also confirms, and as it is also found in the Venice 1525, Basel 1619, and in Norzi. This מִשְׁקָל is constr. according to Kimchi, notwithstanding the Kametz; as also מַשְׁקָל, Ezra 8:30 (after Abulwalid, Kimchi, and Norzi). In this passage before us, מַשְׁקָל may signify a deceitful ground of confidence (cf. Hab. 2:5), but the two other passages present a genit. connection of the words. We must thus suppose that the מַשְׁקָל of מַשְׁקָל and מַשְׁקָל, in these three passages, is regarded as fixed, like the ą of the form (Arab.) mif’âl. The above proverb, which connects itself with v. 18, not only by the sound ש, but also by ש, which is assonant with שׁנָה, is followed by another with the catchword ש:רְעָה. 20 He that layeth aside his coat on a day of frost, vinegar on nitre, And he who welcomes songs a dejected heart.

Proverbs 25:20. Is not this intelligible, sensible, ingenious? All these three things are wrong. The first is as wrong as the second, and the third, which the proverb has in view, is morally wrong, for one ought to weep with those that weep, Rom. 12:15; he, on the contrary, who laughs among those who weep, is, on the most favourable judgment, a fool. That which is wrong in 20a, according to Böttcher in the Aehrenlese, 1849, consists in this, that one in severe cold puts on a fine garment. As if there were not garments which are at the same time beautiful, and keep warm? In the new Aehrenlese he prefers the reading מִבְּטָח, if one changes his coat. But that surely he might well enough do, if the one were warmer than the other! Is it then impossible that מִבְּטָח, in the connection, means transire faciens = removens?
The Kal מַעְדָּה, tarnsiit, occurs at Job 28:8. So also, in the poetic style. מַעְדָּה might be used in the sense of the Aram. מַעְדָּה. Rightly Aquila, Symmachus, περιαιρῶν; the Venet. better, ἀφαιρούμενος (Mid.). ḳֵרֶד is an overcoat or mantle, so called from covering, as כִּבֵּד (R. כִּבֵּד, to fasten, fix), the garment lying next the body, vid., at Ps. 22:19. Thus, as it is foolish to lay off upper clothing on a frosty day, so it is foolish also to pour vinegar on nitre; carbonic acid nitre, whether it be mineral (which may be here thought of) or vegetable, is dissolved in water, and serves diverse purposes (vid., under Isa. 1:25); but if one pours vinegar on it, it is destroyed. מַעְדָּה is, at 26:23 and elsewhere, a heart morally bad, here a heart badly disposed, one inclined to that which is evil; for מַעְדָּה is the contrast of מַעְדָּה, and always the consequence of a disposition joyfully excited; the inconsistency lies in this, that one thinks to cheer a sorrowful heart by merry singing, if the singing has an object, and is not much more the reckless expression of an animated pleasure in view of the sad condition of another. מַעְדָּה signifies, as at Job 33:27, to sing to any one, to address him in singing; cf. מַעְדָּה, Jer. 6:10, and particularly מַעְדָּה, Hos. 2:16; Isa. 40:2. The בַּעֲרָכָה בַּעֲרָכָה is neither the partitive, 9:5, nor the transitive, 20:30, but the instrumental; for, as e.g., at Ex. 7:20, the obj. of the action is thought of as its means (Gesen. § 138, Anm. 3*); one sings “with songs,” for definite songs underlie his singing. The LXX, which the Syr., Targ., and Jerome more or less follow, has formed from this proverb one quite different: “As vinegar is hurtful to a wound, so an injury to the body makes the heart sorrowful; as the moth in clothes, and the worm in wood, so the sorrow of a man injures his heart.” The wisdom of this pair of proverbs is not worth much, and after all inquiry little or nothing comes of it. The Targ. at least preserves the figure 20b: as he who pours vinegar (Syr. chalo) on nitre; the Peshito, however, and here and there also the Targum, has jathro (arrow-string) instead of methro (nitre). Hitzig adopts this, and changes the tristich into the distich: He that meeteth archers with arrow on the string, Is like him who singeth songs with a sad heart.

The Hebrew of this proverb of Hitzig’s (מַעְדָּה מַעְדָּה) is unhebraic, the meaning dark as an oracle, and its moral contents nil.

21 If thine enemy hunger, feed him with bread; And if he thirst, give him water to drink.

22 For thereby thou heapest burning coals on his head, And Jahve will recompense it to thee.

Proverbs 25:21, 22. The translation of this proverb by the LXX is without fault; Paul cites therefrom Rom. 12:20. The participial construction of 22a, the LXX, rightly estimating it, thus renders: for, doing this, thou shalt heap coals on his head. The expression, “thou shalt heap” (σωρεύεσθαι), is also appropriate; for חָתָה certainly means first only to fetch or bring fire (vid., 6:27); but here, by virtue of the constructio praegnans with על, to fetch, and hence to heap up,—to pile upon. Burning pain, as commonly observed, is the figure of burning shame, on account of undeserved kindness shown by an enemy (Fleischer). But how burning coals heaped on the head can denote burning shame, is not to be perceived, for the latter is a burning on the cheeks; wherefore Hitzig and Rosenmüller explain: thou wilt thus bring on him the greatest pain, and appease thy vengeance, while at the same time Jahve will reward thy generosity. Now we say, indeed, that he who rewards evil with good takes the noblest revenge; but if this doing of good proceed from a revengeful aim, and is intended sensibly to humble an adversary, then it loses all its moral worth, and is changed into selfish, malicious wickedness. Must the proverb then be understood in this ignoble sense? The Scriptures elsewhere say that guilt and punishment are laid on the head of any one when he is made to experience and to bear them. Chrysostom and others therefore explain after Ps. 140:10 and similar passages, but thereby the proverb is morally falsified, and v.
22 accords with v. 21, which counseled not to the avenging of oneself, but to the requital of evil with good. The burning of coals laid on the head must be a painful but wholesome consequence; it is a figure of self-accusing repentance (Augustine, Zöckler), for the producing of which the showing of good to an enemy is a noble motive. That God rewards such magnanimity may not be the special motive; but this view might contribute to it, for otherwise such promises of God as Isa. 58:8–12 were without moral right. The proverb also requires one to show himself gentle and liberal toward a needy enemy, and present a twofold reason for this: first, that thereby his injustice is brought home to his conscience; and, secondly, that thus God is well-pleased in such practical love toward an enemy, and will reward it;—by such conduct, apart from the performance of a law grounded in our moral nature, one advances the happiness of his neighbour and his own.

The next group of proverbs extends from v. 23 to v. 28.

Proverbs 25:23. The north is called צפונ from צפון, to conceal, from the firmament darkening itself for a longer time, and more easily, like the old Persian apâkhtara, as (so it appears) the starless, and, like aquilo, the north wind, as bringing forward the black clouds. But properly the “fathers of rain” are, in Syria, the west and the south-west; and so little can נזעיק here mean the pure north wind, that Jerome, who knew from his own experience the changes of weather in Palestine, helps himself, after Symmachus (διάλωσι βροχήν), with a quid pro quo out of the difficulty: ventus aquilo dissipat pluvias; the Jewish interpreters (Aben Ezra, Joseph Kimchi, and Meîri) also thus explain, for they connect together חלתה, in the meaning groundingը, with the unintelligible חלילה (far be it!). But may also, perhaps like ξόφος (Deutsch. Morgenl. Zeitisch. xxi. 600f.), standing not without connection therewith, denote the northwest; and probably the proverb emphasized the northern direction of the compass, because, according to the intention of the similitude, he seeks to designate such rain as is associated with raw, icy-cold weather, as the north wind (Prov. 27:16, LXX, Sir. 43:20) brings along with it. The names of the winds are gen. fem., e.g., Isa. 43:6. אקלד (Aquila, ὁδινες cf. 8:24, ὁδινηθης) has in Codd., e.g., the Jaman., the tone on the penult., and with Tsere Metheg (Thorath Emeth, p. 21) serving as אפורה. So also the Arab. nataj is used of the wind, as helping the birth of the rain-clouds. Manifestly פנים, countenances manifesting extreme displeasure (vid., the Kal פנים, 24:24), are compared to rain. With justice Hitzig renders פנים, as e.g., John 2:6, in the plur. sense; because, for the influence which the tongue slandering in secret (Ps. 101:5) has on the slandered, the “sorrowful countenance” would not be so characteristic as for the influence which it exercises on the mutual relationships of men: the secret babbler, the confidential communication throwing suspicion, now on this one and now on that one, behind their backs, excites men against one another, so that one shows to another a countenance in which deep displeasure and suspicion express themselves.

24 Better to sit on the top of a roof, Than a quarrelsome woman and a house in common.

25 Fresh water to a thirsty soul; And good news from a far country.

Proverbs 25:25. Vid., regarding the form of this proverb, p. 8; we have a similar proverb regarding the influence of good news at 15:30. Fresh cold water is called at Jer. 18:14 מים קרים; vid., regarding קרו, 18:27. יעף, cogn. יעף, properly to become darkened, therefore figuratively like (Arab.) gushi a ‘alh, to become faint, to become feeble unto death, of the darkness which spreads itself over the eyes” (Fleischer).
This proverb, with the figure of “fresh water,” is now followed by one with the figure of a “fountain”:

26 A troubled fountain and a ruined spring—A righteous man yielding to a godless man.

Proverbs 25:26. For the most part, in בְּשָׁם one thinks of a yielding in consequence of being forced. Thus e.g., Fleischer: as a troubled ruined spring is a misfortune for the people who drink out of it, or draw from it, so is it a misfortune for the surrounding of the righteous, when he is driven from his dwelling or his possession by an unrighteous man. And it is true: the righteous can be compared to a well (מִים, well-spring, from יָנָה, a well, as an eye of the earth, and פָּרָד, fountain, from פָּרָד, רָמֶס, רָמֶס, to round out, to dig out), with reference to the blessing which flows from it to its surroundings (cf. 10:11 and John 7:38). But the words “yielding to” (contrast “stood before,” 2 Kings 10:4, or Josh. 7:12), in the phrase “yielding to the godless,” may be understood of a spontaneous as well as of a constrained, forced, wavering and yielding, as the expression in the Psalm בָּלָה יֵמָו [non movebor, Ps. 10:6] affirms the certainty of being neither inwardly nor outwardly ever moved or shaken. The righteous shall stand fast and strong in God without fearing the godless [Rom. 5:1:2f.], unmoving and firm as a brazen wall (Jer. 1:17f.). If, however, he is wearied with resistance, and from the fear of man, or the desire to please man, or from a false love of peace he yields before it, and so gives way,—then he becomes like to a troubled fountain (רָמֶס, רָמֶס, פָּרָד, פָּרָד, פָּרָד, יְנָה, יְנָה).

Ezek. 34:18; Isa. 41:25; Jerome: fons turbatus pede), a ruined spring; his character, hitherto pure, is now corrupted by his own guilt, and now far from being a blessing to others, his wavering is a cause of sorrow to the righteous, and an offence to the weak—he is useful no longer, but only injurious. Rightly Lagarde: “The verse, one of the most profound of the whole book, does not speak of the misfortunate, but of the fall of the righteous, whose sin compromises the holy cause which he serves, 2 Sam. 12:14.” Thus also e.g., Löwenstein, with reference to the proverb Sanhedrin 92b: also in the time of danger let not a man disown his honour. Bachja, in his Ethics, referring to this figure, 26a, thinks of the possibility of restoration: the righteous wavers only for the moment, but at last he comes right (וֹתֵimitéךְ). But this interpretation of the figure destroys the point of the proverb.

Proverbs 25:27. This verse, as it stands, is scarcely to be understood. The Venet translates 27b literally: ἐρευνά τε δόξας αὐτῶν δόξα; but what is the reference of this ἐρευνά? Euchel and others refer it to men, for they translate: “to set a limit to the glory of man is true glory;” but the “glory of man” is denoted by the phrase כְּבֹד הָעָו וַתַּרְפֵּה, not by כְּבֹד וַתַּרְפֵּה. And, besides, does not mean measure and limit. Oetinger explains: “To eat too much honey is not good; whereas the searching after their glory, viz., of pleasant and praiseworthy things, which are likened to honey, is glory, cannot be too much done, and is never without utility and honour;” but how can כְּבֹד be of the same meaning as כְּבֹד הָעָו ולָרָפֶה; or such an abbreviation of the expression is impossible. Schultens, according to Rashi: vestigatio gravitatis eorum est gravitas, i.e., the searching out of their difficulty is a trouble; better Vitringa (since nowhere occurs in this sense of gravitas molestae ac pondere oppressura): investigatio praestantiae eorum est gloriosa; but Vitringa, in order to gain a connection to 27a, needs to introduce etiamsi, and in both explanations the reference of the כְָבֹד is imaginary, and it by no means lies near, since the Scripture uses the word כְָבֹד of God, and His kingdom and name, but never of His law or His revelation. Thus also is an argument against Bertheau, who translates: the searching out of their glory (viz., of the divine law and revelation) is a burden, a strenuous occupation of the mind, since it does not in itself mean searching out, and is equivocally, even unintelligibly, expressed, since כְָבֹד denotes, it... is true, here and there, a great multitude, but never a burden (as כבד). The thought which Jerome finds in 27b: qui scrutator est majestatis oppressit a gloria, is judicious, and connects itself synonym. with 27a; but such a thought is unwarranted, for he disregards the suff. of כבדים, and renders כבד in the sense of difficulty (oppression). Or should it perhaps be vocalized כבדים (Syr., Targ., Theodotion, διδοξασμένα = כבדות)? Thus vocalized, Umbreit renders it in the sense of honores; Elster and Zöckler in the sense of difficultates (difficilia); but this plur., neither the biblical, nor, so far as I know, the post-bibl. usage of the word has ever adopted. However, the sense of the proverb which Elster and Zöckler gain is certainly that which is aimed at. We accordingly translate: To surfeit oneself in eating honey is not good. But as an inquirer to enter on what is difficult is honour. We read instead of כבדים כבוד, which Elster and Zöckler gain is certainly that which is aimed at. We accordingly translate: To surfeit oneself in eating honey is not good. But as an inquirer to enter on what is difficult is honour. We read instead of כבדים כבוד, which Gesenius explains: nimium studium honoris est sine honore—impossible, for he leaves the text unchanged: “To despise their honour (that is, of men) is honour (true, real honour);” Hitzig, for he changes the text like Gesenius: “To despise honour is more than honour,” with the ingenious remark: To obtain an order [insigne ordinis] is an honour, but not to wear it then for the first time is its bouquet. Nowhere any trace either in Hebrew or in Aramaic is to be found of the verb חקר, to despise (to be despised), and so it must here remain without example. Nor have we any need of it. The change of כבדים into כבוד is enough. The proverb is an antithetic distich; 27a warns against inordinate longing after enjoyments, 27b praises earnest labour. Instead of כבד כבוד, if honey in the mass were intended, the words would have been כבוד כבוד (Eccles. 5:11; 1 Kings 10:10), or at least כבוד כבוד (Amos 4:9); can only be a n. actionis, and renders כבוד כבוד its inverted object (cf. Jer. 9:4), as Böttcher has discerned: to make much of the eating of honey, to do much therein is not good (cf. v. 16). In 27b Luther also partly hits on the correct rendering: “and he who searches into difficult things, to him it is too difficulty,” for which it ought to be said: to him it is an honour. כבד כבוד, viz., כבד כבוד, signifies difficult things, as כבד כבוד 12:11, vain things. The Heb. כבד, however, never means difficult to be understood or comprehended (although more modern lexicons say this), but always only burdensome and heavy, gravis, not difficilis. כבוד כבוד are also things of which the כבוד, i.e., the fundamental searching into them (Prov. 18:17; 25:2f.), costs an earnest effort, which perhaps, according to the first impression, appears to surpass the available strength (cf. Ex. 18:18). To overdo oneself in eating honey is not good; on the contrary, the searching into difficult subjects is nothing less than an eating of honey, but an honour. There is here a paronomasia. Fleischer translates it: explorare gravior grave est; but we render grave est not in the sense of molestiam creat, but gravitatem parit (weight = respect, honour).

Proverbs 25:28. This verse, counselling restraint as to the spirit, is connected with the foregoing, which counsels to self-control as to enjoyment: A city broken through, now without walls— A man without self-control over his spirit.

A “city broken down” is one whose wall is “broken,” 2 Chron. 32:5, whether it has met with breaches (פרצים), or is wholly broken; in the former case also the city is incapable of being defended, and it is all one as if it had no wall. Such a city is like a man “who hath no control over his own spirit” (for the accentuation of the Heb. words here, vid., Thorath Emeth, p. 10): cujus spiritui nulla cohibitio (Schultens), i.e., qui animum suum cohibere non potest (Fleischer: רַע, רָע, to press together, to oppress, and thereby to hold back). As such a city can be plundered and laid waste without trouble, so a man who knows not to hold in check his desires and affections is in constant danger of blindly following the impulse of his unbridled sensuality, and of being hurried forward to outbreaks of passion, and thus of bringing unhappiness upon himself. There are sensual passions (e.g., drunkenness), intellectual (e.g., ambition), mingled (e.g., revenge); but in all of these a false ego rules, which, instead of being held down by the true and better ego, rises to unbounded supremacy. Therefore the expression used is not שָׁוֵהוּ, but רַע, desire has its seat in the soul, but in the spirit it grows into passion, which in the root of all its diversities is selfishness (Psychol. p. 199); self-control is accordingly the ruling of the spirit, i.e., the restraining (keeping down) of the false enslaved ego-life by the true and free, and powerful in God Himself.

There now follows a group of eleven proverbs of the fool; only the first of the group has after it a proverb of different contents, but of similar form: As snow in summer, and rain in harvest; So honour befitteth not a fool.

Proverbs 26:1. If there is snow in high summer (גֵּיוֹן, to be glowing hot), it is contrary to nature; and if there is rain in harvest, it is (according to the alternations of the weather in Palestine) contrary to what is usually the case, and is a hindrance to the ingathering of the fruits of the field. Even so a fool and respect, or a place of honour, are incongruous things; honour will only injure him (as according to 19:10, luxury); he will make unjust use of it, and draw false conclusions from it; it will strengthen him in his folly, and only increase it. רַע (רַע הוא) is the adj. to the Pil. 93:5 (plur. רֵא), 19:10, and נָאוֹה, 17:7, are also masc. and fem. of the adj., according to which, that which is said under 19:10 is to be corrected. Symmachus and Theodotion have translated oυκ ἔπρεψεν, and have therefore read רַע. The root word is רַע (אַל רַע) to aim at something (vid., Hupfeld under Ps. 23:2).

Proverbs 26:2. This verse is formed quite in the same way as the preceding: As the sparrow in its fluttering, as the swallow in its flying, So the curse that is groundless: it cometh not. This passage is one of those fifteen (vid., under Ps. 100:3) in which the נא of the text is changed by the Keri into נ, the Talm., Midrash, and Sohar refer this נ to him who utters the curse himself, against whom also, if he is a judge, such inconsiderate cursing becomes an accusation by God; partly to him who is cursed, for they read from the proverb that the curse of a private person also (סינוסו, ונתנהו) is not wont to fall to the ground, and that therefore one ought to be on his guard against giving any occasion for it (vid., Norzi). But Aben Ezra supposes that נ and נ interchange, as much as to say that the undeserved curse falls on him (נ), who curses, and does not fall (נ) on him who is cursed. The figures in 2α harmonize only with נ, according to which the LXX, the Syr., Targ., Venet., and Luther (against Jerome) translate, for the principal matter, that the sparrow and the swallow, although flying out (Prov. 27:8), return home again to their nest (Ralbag), would be left out of view in the comparison by נ. This emphasizes the fluttering and flying, and is intended to affirm that a groundless curse is a רַע, aimless, i.e., a thing hovering in the air, that it fails and does not take effect. Most interpreters explain the two Lameds as declaring the destination: ut passer (sc. natus est) ad vagandum, as the sparrow, through necessity of nature, roves about ... (Fleischer). But from 25:3 it is evident that the Lamed in both cases declares the reference or the point of comparison: as the sparrow in respect to its fluttering about, etc.
The names of the two birds are, according to Aben Ezra, like dreams without a meaning; but the Romanic exposition explains rightly צפור by passereau, and דרור by hirondelle, for צפור (Arab. 'usfuwr), twitterer, designates at least preferably the sparrow, and דרור the swallow, from its flight shooting straight out, as it were radiating (vid., under Ps. 84:4); the name of the sparrow, דûrî (found in courtyards), which Wetstein, after Saadia, compares to דרור, is etymologically different. Regarding חינם, vid., under 24:28. Rightly the accentuation separates the words rendered, "so the curse undeserved" (קִלְׁל ת, after Kimchi, Michlol 79b, קִלְׁל ת), from those which follow; médico אמ is the explication of כז: thus hovering in the air is a groundless curse—it does not come (דבר, like e.g., Josh. 21:43). After this proverb, which is formed like v. 1, the series now returns to the "fool."

3 A whip for the horse, a bridle for the ass, And a rod for the back of fools. Proverbs 26:3. J. D. Michaelis supposes that the order should be reversed: a bridle for the horse, a whip for the ass; but Arnoldi has here discovered the figure of speech merismus (cf. 10:1); and Hitzig, in the manner of the division, the rhythmical reason of the combination (cf. שׁם חם ויפת for שׁם יפת וחם:) whip and bridle belong to both, for one whips a horse (Neh. 3:2) and also bridles him; one bridles an ass (Ps. 32:9) and also whips him (Num. 22:28f). As whip and bridle are both serviceable and necessary, so also serviceable and necessary is a rod, לְׁגֵו כְׁסִילִים, 10:13; 19:29.

4 Answer not the fool according to his folly, Lest thou thyself also become like unto him. Proverbs 26:4. After, or according to his folly, is here equivalent to recognising the foolish supposition and the foolish object of his question, and thereupon considering it, as if, e.g., he asked why the ignorant man was happier than the man who had much knowledge, or how one may acquire the art of making gold; for "a fool can ask more than ten wise men can answer." He who recognises such questions as justifiable, and thus sanctions them, places himself on an equality with the fool, and easily himself becomes one. The proverb that follows affirms apparently the direct contrary:

5 Answer the fool according to his folly, Lest he regard himself as wise. Proverbs 26:5. שִׁפַּד כֶּסֶל (with Makkeph, and Gaja, and Chatef) here stands opposed to עֲנֵה כְּסִיל (with Makkeph, and Chatef). The Gospel of John, e.g., 5:31, cf. 8:31, is rich in such apparently contradictory sayings. The sic et non here lying before us is easily explained; after, or according to his folly, is this second time equivalent to, as is due to his folly: decidedly and firmly rejecting it, making short work with it (returning a sharp answer), and promptly replying in a way fitted, if possible, to make him ashamed. Thus one helps him, perhaps, to self-knowledge; while, in the contrary case, one gives assistance to his self-importance. The Talmud, Schabbath 30b, solves the contradiction by referring v. 4 to worldly things, and v. 5 to religious things; and it is true that, especially in the latter case, the answer is itself a duty toward the fool, and towards the truth. Otherwise the Midrash: one ought not to answer when one knows the fool as such, and to answer when he does not so know him; for in the first instance the wise man would dishonour himself by the answer, in the latter case he would give to him who asks the importance appertaining to a superior.

6 He cutteth off the feet, he drinketh injury, Who transacteth business by a fool. Proverbs 26:6. He cutteth off, i.e., his own feet, as we say: he breaks his neck, il se casse le cou; Lat. frangere brachium, crus, coxam; frangere navem (Fleischer). He thinks to supplement his own two legs by those of the messenger, but in reality he cuts them off; fro not only is the commission not carried out, but it is even badly carried out, so that instead of being refreshed (Prov. 13:17; 25:13) by the quick, faithful execution of it, he has to swallow nothing but damage; cf. Job 34:7, where, however, drinking scorn is meant of another (LXX), not his own;
on the contrary, here refers to injury suffered (as if it were מִפִּסֵח, for the suff. of חָמָס, is for the most part objective); cf. the similar figures 10:26. So also does the Targumist, in thinking that it can be used for מַקְצֵה; but Hitzig adopts this reading, and renders: “from the end of the legs he swallows injury who sends messages by a fool.” The end of the legs are the feet, and the feet are those of the foolish messenger. The proverb in this form does not want in boldness, but the wisdom which Hitzig finds in its is certainly not mother-wit. Böttcher, on his part, also with מַקְצֵה, renders: “from the end of his feet he drinks in that which is bitter ...”—that also is too artificial, and is unintelligible without the explanation of its discoverer. But that he who makes a fool his messenger becomes himself like unto one who cuts off his own legs, is a figure altogether excellent.

7 The hanging down of the legs of a lame man; And a proverb in a fool’s mouth.

Proverbs 26:7. With reference to the obscure מִפִּסֵח, the following views have been maintained:—(1) The form as punctuated appears directly as an imperative. Thus the LXX translate, the original text of which is here: ἐκ τῶν ποδῶν ἑαυτοῦ, for he errs, as also does Tatian, in thinking that it can be used for μάκας; but Hitzig adopts this reading, and renders: “from the end of the legs he swallows injury who sends messages by a fool.” The end of the legs are the feet, and the feet are those of the foolish messenger. The proverb in this form does not want in boldness, but the wisdom which Hitzig finds in its is certainly not mother-wit. Böttcher, on his part, also with מַקְצֵה, renders: “from the end of his feet he drinks in that which is bitter ...”—that also is too artificial, and is unintelligible without the explanation of its discoverer. But that he who makes a fool his messenger becomes himself like unto one who cuts off his own legs, is a figure altogether excellent.

7a The hanging down of the legs of a lame man; and this, after Proverbs 26:7, is shattered against the “leg-taking-away,” which can only be used perhaps of frogs’ legs. (2) Symmachus translates: εἰσάγεται κνήματι ἄπω χολοῖς; and Chajûg explains מִפִּסֵח as 3 pret. Kal, to which Kimchi adds the remark, that he appears to have found מִפִּסֵח, which indeed is noted by Norzi and J. H. Michaelis as a variant. But the Masoretic reading is מִפָּסַח, and this, after Gesenius and Böttcher (who in this, without any reason, sees an Ephraimitic form of uttering the word), is a softened variation from מִפָּסַח. Only it is a pity that this softening, while it is supported by αἰτιος = ἄλογον folium = φύλλον, faillir = fallere, and the like, has yet not a single Hebrew or Semitic example in its favour. (3) Therefore Ewald finds, “all things considered,” that it is best to read יְדָלָי, “the legs are too loose for the lame man to use them.” But, with Dietrich, we cannot concur in this, nor in the more appropriate translation: “the legs of the lame hang down loose,” to say nothing of the clearly impossible: “high are the legs of the lame (one higher than the other),” and that because this form יְדָלָי for יְדָלָי also occurs without pause, Ps. 57:2; 73:2; 122:6, Isa. 21:12; but although thus, as at Ps. 36:9; 68:32, at the beginning of a clause, yet always only in connection, never at the beginning of an address. (4) It has also been attempted to interpret יְדָלָי as abstr., e.g., Euchel: “he learns from a cripple to dance, who seeks to learn proverbs from the mouth of a fool.” יְדָלָי must mean the lifting up of the legs = springing and dancing. Accordingly Luther translates: “As dancing to a cripple, So does it become a fool to speak of wisdom.”

The thought is agreeable, and according to fact; but these words to not mean dancing, but much rather, as the Arabic shows (vid., Schultens at 20:5, and on the passage before us), a limping, waddling walk, like that of ducks, after the manner of a well-bucket dangling to and fro. And יְדָלָי, after the form יְדָלָי, would be an unheard-of Aramaism. For forms such as יְשׁו, swimming, and יְשׁו, security, Ps. 30:7, on which C. B. Michaelis and others rest, cannot be compared, since they are modified from sachw, salw, while in יְדָלָי the ü ending must be, and besides the Aramaic יְדָלָי must in st. constr. be יְדָלָי. Since none of these explanations are grammatically satisfactory, and besides יְדָלָי = יְדָלָי = יְדָלָי gives a parallel member which is heterogeneous and not conformable to the nature of an emblematical proverb, we read יְדָלָי after the forms יְשׁו, סִכְו, 6:10; 24:33, and this signifies loose, hanging down, from יְדָלָי, to hang at length and loosely down, or transitively: to hang, particularly of the hanging down at length of the bucket-rope, and of the bucket itself, to draw water from the well. The יַק is similar to that of Job 28:4, only that here the connecting of the hanging down, and of that from which it hangs down, is clear. Were we to express the purely nominally expressed emblematical proverb in the form of a comparative one, it would thus stand as Fleischer translates it: ut laxa et flaccida dependent (torpent) crura a claudio, sic sententia in ore stultorum (sc. torpet h. e. inutilis est). The fool can as little make use of an intelligent proverb, or moral maxim (dictum sententiosum), as a lame man can of his feet; the word, which in itself is full of thought, and excellent, becomes halting, lame, and loose in his mouth (Schultens: deformer claudent); it has, as spoken and applied by him, neither hand nor foot. Strangely, yet without missing the point, Jerome: quomodo pulcras frustra habet claudis tibias, sic indecens est in ore stultorum parabola. The lame man possibly has limbs that appear sound; but when he seeks to walk, they fail to do him service,—so a bon-mot comes forth awkwardly when the fool seeks to make use of it. Hitzig’s conjecture: as leaping of the legs on the part of a lame man ..., Böttcher has already shown sufficient reasons for rejecting; leaping on the part of any one, for the leaping of any one, were a court style familiar to no poet.

Proverbs 26:8. This proverb presents to us a new difficulty. As one binds a stone in a sling. So is he who giveth honour to a fool.

This translation is warranted by tradition, and is in accordance with the actual facts. A sling is elsewhere called יֵכֶר, but that מִכְר המָר, also in the passage before us signifies a sling (from מַכָּר, to throw with stones = to stone or to throw stones = to sling, cf. Targ. Esth. 5:14 מַכָּר, of David’s slinging stones against Goliath), is supported by the LXX, Syr., and Targ. on the one side, and the Jewish Glossists on the other (Rashi: fronde, Ital. frombola). Rightly the LXX renders מְכָר הָרִיר as a verb: ὥς ἀποδεσμεύει; on the contrary, the Syr. and Targ. regard it as a substantive: as a piece of stone; but מִכְר as a substantive does not mean a piece, as one would put into a sling to use as a weapon, but a grain, and thus a little piece, 2 Sam. 17:13; cf. Amos 9:9. Errorneously Ewald: “if one binds to the sling the stone which he yet seeks to throw, then all this throwing and aiming are in vain; so it is in vain to give to a fool honour which does not reach him.” If one seeks to sling a stone, he must lay the lapis missilis so in the sling that it remains firm there, and goes forth only by the strong force of the slinging; this fitting of stones (of the stone), so that it does not of itself fall out, is expressed by כצרור (cf. 30:4; Job 26:8). The giving is compared to the binding, the stones to the honour, and the sling to the fool: the fool is related to the honour which one confers on him, as the stone to the sling in which one lays it—the giving of honour is a slinging of honour. Otherwise (after Kimchi) the Venet. ὡς συνδεσμὸς λίθου ἐν λιθάδι, i.e., as Fleischer translates: ut qui crumenam gemmarum plenam in acervum lapidum conjicit. Thus also Ralbag, Ahron b. Josef, and others, and lastly Zöckler. The figure is in the form of an address, and מרגמה (from רם, accumulare, congerere, vid., under Ps. 67:28) might certainly mean the heaping of stones. But כצרור cannot signify sicut qui mittit. Had such a meaning been intended, the word would have been כמרגמה or כמרגחות. Still different is the rendering of Joseph Kimchi, Aben Ezra, and finally Löwenstein: as when one wraps up a stone in a piece of purple stuff. But כמרגמה, purple, has nothing to do with the verb כמרגמות; it is, as the Aramaic כמרגמות shows, a compound word; the supposition of a denom. כמרגמות thus proceeds from a false etymological supposition. And Hitzig’s combination of מרגמה with (Arab.) munjam, handle and beam of a balance (he translates: as a stone on the beam of a balance, i.e., lies on it), is nothing but refined ingenuity, since we have no need at all of such an Arab. word for a satisfactory clearing up of מרגמה. We abide by the rendering of the sling. Böttcher translates: a sling that scatters; perhaps מרגמה in reality denotes such a sling as throws many stones at once. Let that, however, be as it may: that he who confers a title of honour, a place of honour, and the like, on a fool, is like one who lays a stone in a sling, is a true and intelligibly formed thought: the fool makes the honour no honour; he is not capable of maintaining it; that which is conferred on him is uselessly wasted.

A thorn goeth into the hand of a drunkard, And a proverb in a fool’s mouth;

Proverbs 26:9. i.e., if a proverb falls into a fool’s mouth, it is as if a thorn entered into the hand of a drunken man; the one is as dangerous as the other, for fools misuse such a proverb, which, rightly used, instructs and improves, only to the wounding and grieving of another, as a drunken man makes use of the pointed instrument which he has possession of for coarse raillery, and as a welcome weapon of his strife. The LXX, Syr. (Targ.?), and Jerome interpret עָלָה in the sense of shooting up, i.e., of growing; Böttcher also, after 24:31 and other passages, insists that the thorn which has shot up may be one that has not grown to perfection, and therefore not dangerous. But thorns grow not in the hand of any one; and one also does not perceive why the poet should speak of it as growing in the hand of a drunken man, which the use of the hand with it would only make worse. We have here עָלָה בְׁיָדִי, i.e., it has come into my hand, commonly used in the Mishna, which is used where anything, according to intention, falls into one’s hands, as well as where it comes accidentally and unsought for, e.g., Nazir 23a, מְשַׁמְחִית לְעֵילָתוֹ בְּיָדִי בָּשָׂר חוֹדֵר, he who designs to obtain swine’s flesh and (accidentally) obtains lamb’s flesh. Thus rightly Heidenheim, Löwenstein, and the Venet.: ἀκανθα ἀνέβη εἰς χεῖρα μεθύοντος, which signifies a thorn bush, 2 Kings 14:9, as well as a thorn, Song 2:2, but where not the thorns of the rose, and indeed no rose at all, is meant. Luther thinks of the rose with the thorn when he explains: “When a drunkard carries and brandishes in his hand a thorn bush, he scratches more with it than allows the roses to be smelled—so a fool with the Scriptures, or a right saying, often does more harm than good.” This paraphrase of Luther’s interprets עלה more correctly than his translation does; on the other hand, the latter more correctly is satisfied with a thorn twig (as a thorn twig which pierces into the hand of a drunken man); the roses are, however, assumed contrary to the text. This holds good also against Wessely’s explanation: “the Mashal is like a rose not without thorns, but in the mouth of a fool is like a thorn without a rose, as when a drunken man seeks to pluck roses and gains by his effort nothing but being pierced by thorns.” The idea of roses is to be rejected, because at the time when this proverb was formed there were no roses in Palestine. The proverb certainly means that a right Mashal, i.e., an ingenious excellent maxim, is something more and better than a חוח (the prick as of the Jewish thorn, Zizypus vulgaris, or the Christus-thorn, the Ziz spina Christi); but in the mouth of a fool such a maxim becomes only a useless and a hurtful thing; for the fool so makes use of it, that he only embarrasses others and recklessly does injury to them. The LXX translates מָשָׁל by δουλεία, and the Aram. by שִכור; how the latter reached this “folly” is not apparent; but the LXX vocalized מַשָׁל, according to which Hitzig, at the same time changing שַכור into שָכוּר, translates: “thorns shoot up by the hand of the hireling, and tyranny by the mouth of fools.” Although a hired labourer, yet, on this account, he is not devoid of conscience; thus 9a so corrected has something in its favour: one ought, as far as possible, to do all with his own hand; but the thought in 9b is far-fetched, and if Hitzig explains that want of judgment in the state councils creates despotism, so, on the other hand, 24:7 says that the fool cannot give counsel in the gate, and therefore he holds his mouth.

Proverbs 26:10. All that we have hitherto read is surpassed in obscurity by this proverb, which is here connected because of the resemblance of ושכר to שִכור. We translate it thus, vocalizing differently only one word: Much bringeth forth from itself all; But the reward and the hire of the fool pass away. The LXX translates πολλὰ χειμάζεται πᾶσα σὰρξ ἀφρόνων (all the flesh of fools suffers much), συντριβήσεται γὰρ ἡ ἐκστάσις αὐτῶν, which is in Hebrew:

An unfortunate attempt so to rectify the words that some meaning might be extracted from them. The first line of this translation has been adopted by the Syr. and Targ., omitting only the i.e., and the drunken man sails over the sea (בָּקָר יָם, as, 10b; but what does that mean? Does it mean that a drinkard, the drunken man, and not the drunkard, is used) nothing remains but to wander over the sea? or that the drunken man lets his imagination wander away over the sea, while he neglects the obligation that lies upon him? Symmachus and Theodotion, with the Midrash (Rashi) and Saadia (Kimchi), take sense in 10b = שֹכֵר (like Isa. 19:10, 25:8, שֹכֵר, translating: Judicium determinat causas, et qui imponit stulto silentium iras mitigat; but שֹכֵר does not mean judicium, nor שֹכֵר determinat, nor שֹכֵר causas.
As Gussetius, so also RaLBag (in the first of his three explanations), MeIRi, Elia Wilna interpret the proverb as a declaration regarding quarrelsome persons: he causeth woe to all, and hireth fools, hireth transgressors, for his companions; but in that case we must read שֹכֵר for שֹכֵר, bringing woe, would be either the Po. of שֹכֵר יָם, to bore through, or Pilel of שֹכֵר יָם, to put into distress (as with pangs); but שֹכֵר, transgressors = sinners, is contrary to the O.T.
usus loq., 22:3 (Prov. 27:12) is falsely cited in its favour; besides, for שֹכֵר there should have been at least שֹכֵר יָם and why יָם is repeated remains inexplicable. Others take מְׁחולֵל as the name of God, the creator of all men and things; and truly this is the nearest impression of these two words, for מְׁחולֵל is the usual designation for divine production, e.g., Ps. 90:2.
Accordingly Kimchi explains: The Lord is the creator of all, and He gives to fools and to transgressors their maintenance; but שֹכֵר, transgressors, is Mishnic, not bibl.; and means to hire, but not to supply with food. The proverb is thus incapable of presenting a thought like Matt. 5:45 (He maketh His sun to rise on the evil and on the good). Others translate: "The Lord is creator of all, and takes fools, takes idlers, into His service." Thus rendered, the proverb is offensive; wherefore Rashi, Moses Kimchi, Arama, and others regard the Mashal as in the mouth of fools, and thus they take vv. 9 and 10 together as a tetrastich.
Certainly this second collection of proverbs contains also tetrastichs; but vv. 9 and 10 cannot be regarded as together forming a tetrastich, because רָב (which is valid against Kimchi also) cannot mean God the Lord: רָב Lord, is unheard of in bibl. Heb., and at least the word רָב must be used for God. The Venet. on this account does not follow Kimchi, but translates, Αρχων πλάττει πάντα καὶ μισθοῦται μωρὸν καὶ μισθοῦται ὡς παραβάτας (ought to have been παραβάτας); but who could this cunning man be? Perhaps the Venet. is to be understood, after Gecatilia (in Rashi): a great (rich) man performs all manner of things; but if he hires a fool, it is as if he hired the first best who pass along the way. But that מְׁחולֵל is used in the general sense of to execute, to perform, is without example, and improbable. Also the explanation: a ruler brings grief, i.e., severe oppression, upon all (Abulwalîd, Immanuel, Aben Ezra, who, in his smaller grammar, explains מְׁחולֵל = רָב after Isa. 49:9; C. B. Michaelis: dolore afficit omnes), does not recommend itself; for מְׁחולֵל, whether it be from מְׁחולֵל, Isa. 51:9 (to bore through), or from בור, Ps. 29:9 (to bring on the pangs of birth), is too strong a word for hurting; also the clause, thus generally understood, is fortunately untrue. Translated as by Euchel: “the prominent persons destroy all; they keep fools in pay, and favour vagabonds;”—it sounds as if it had been picked up in an assembly of democrats. On the other hand, the proverb, as translated by Luther: A good master maketh a thing right; But he who hireth a bungler, by him it is spoiled, is worthy of the Book of Proverbs. The second line is here freely rendered, but it is also appropriate, if we abide closer by the words of the text, in this connection. Fleischer: Magister (artifex peritus) effingit omnia (i.e., bene perfit quaecunque ei committuntur); qui autem stultum conducit, conducit transeuntes (i.e., idem facit ac si homines ignotos et forte transeuntes ad opus gravius et difficilior conduceret). Thus also Gesenius, Böttcher, and others, who all, as Gecatilia above, explain עברים, τοὺς τυχόντας, the first best. But we are reluctantly constrained to object to this thought, because רֹב nowhere in bibl. Hebrew signifies a master; and the וְׁשֹכְר cannot bear that rendering, ac si. And if we leave it out, we nevertheless encounter a difficulty in חולל, which cannot be used of human production. Many Christian interpreters (Cocceius, Schultens, Schelling, Ewald, Bertheau, Stuer, Zöckler) give to רֹב a meaning which is found in no Jewish interpreter, viz., sagittarius, from רָבֹב (רָבֹב). Gen. 49:23 (and perhaps Ps. 18:15), after the forms כֹּל, כָּל, the plur. of which, רָבָּה, is found at Job 16:13, Jer. 50:29, but in a connection which removes all doubt from the meaning of the word. Here also may be more closely defined by מְחלֵל; but how then does the proverb stand? “an archer who wounds everything, and he who hires a fool, and hires passers-by” (Ewald: street-runners), i.e., they are alike. But if the archer piercing everything is a comic Hercules furens, then, in order to discover the resemblance between the three, there is need of a portion of ingenuity, such as is only particularly assigned to the favoured. But it is also against the form and the usage of the word to interpret עברים simply of rogues and vagabonds. Several interpreters have supposed that רֹב and מְחלֵל must stand in a certain interchangeable relation to each other. Thus, e.g., Ahron b. Josef: “Much makes amazement to all, but especially one who hires a fool …” But this “especially” (Before all) is an expression smuggled in. Agreeing with Umbreit and Hitzig, we translate line first; but in translating line second, we follow our own method: Much bringeth all out of it; i.e., where there is much, then one has it in his power, if he begins right, to undertake everything. רֹב has by the definition of a neuter, so as to designate not only many men, Ex. 19:21, but also much ability in a pecuniary and facultative sense (cf. the subst. רֹב, Isa. 63:7; Ps. 145:7); and of the much which bringeth forth all out of itself, effects all by itself, with equal right might be used, as 25:23, of the north wind. The antithesis 10b takes this form: But the reward (read מְחלֵל) and the master (who hires him for wages) of the fool pass away, i.e., perish; מְחלֵל, as if מְחלֵל, is used of chaff, Isa. 29:5; of stubble, Jer. 13:24; of shadow, Ps. 144:4. That which the fool gains passes away, for he squanders it; and he who took him into his service for wages is ruined along with him, for his work is only pernicious, not useful. Although he who possesses much, and has great ability, may be able to effect everything of himself, yet that is not the case when he makes use of the assistance therein of foolish men, who not only do not accomplish anything, but, on the contrary, destroy everything, and are only ruinous to him who, with good intention, associates them with himself in his work. That the word must be more accurately מְחלֵל, instead of מְחלֵל, one may not object, since מְחלֵל is perfectly unambiguous, and is manifestly the object.

The series of proverbs regarding fools is continued:

Like a dog which returneth to his vomit, Is a fool who cometh again with his folly.

שָׁב is like שונֶה, particip.; only if the punctuation were כֶלֶב, ought “which returneth to his vomit” to be taken as a relative clause (vid., under Ps. 38:14). Regarding על as designating the terminus quo with verbs of motions, vid., Köhler under Mal. 3:24. On קֵא = קִיא, cf. 23:8. Luther rightly; as a dog devours again his vomit. The LXX translate: ὥσπερ κύων ὅταν ἐπέλθῃ ἐπὶ τὸν ἑαυτοῦ ἔμετον; the reference in 2 Pet. 2:22: κύων ἐπιστρέψας ἐπὶ τὸ ἴδιον ἐξέραμα, is thus not from the LXX; the Venet. is not connected with this N.T. citation, but with the LXX, if its accordance with it is not merely accidental. To devour again its vomit is common with the dog. Even so, it is the manner of fools to return again in word and in deed to their past folly (vid., regarding שנה with ב of the object. 17:9); as an Aram. popular saying has it: the fool always falls back upon his foolish conduct. He must needs do so, for folly has become to him a second nature; but this “must” ceases when once a divine light shines forth upon him. The LXX has after v. 11 a distich which is literally the same as Sir. 4:21.

12 Seest thou a man who is wise in his own eyes? The fool hath more hope than he.

Proverbs 26:12. Regarding the perf. hypotheticum vid., at 22:29. Line second is repeated, 29:20, unchanged. מׅן, prae eo, is equivalent to the Mishnic מׅן, plusquam. As the conversion of a sinner, who does not regard himself as righteous, is more to be expected than that of a self-righteous man (Matt. 9:12f.), so the putting right of a fool, who is conscious that he is not wise (cf. 24:7), is more likely to be effected than that of one deeming himself wise; for the greatest hindrance to any turning toward that which is better lies in the delusion that he does not need it. Thus far the group of proverbs regarding fools.

There follows now a group of proverbs regarding the slothful:

13 The slothful saith there is a lion without, A lion in the midst of the streets;

Proverbs 26:13. cf. the original of this proverb, 22:13. שֵׂאָב, to say nothing of שֵׂאָב, is not the jackal; שָׁב is the bibl. name for the lion. דָּבָר is the more general expression for בּכֶרֶב, Isa. 5:25; by the streets he thinks of the rows of houses that form them.

14 The door turneth on its hinges, And the sluggard on his bed.

Proverbs 26:14. The comparison is clear. The door turns itself on its hinges, on which it hangs, in and out, without passing beyond the narrow space of its motion; so is the fool on his bed, where he turns himself from the one side to the other. He is called עָצֵל, because he is fast glued to the place where he is (Arab. ‘azila), and cannot be free (contrast of the active, cf. Arab. ḥafif, moving nimbly, agilis). But the door offers itself as a comparison, because the diligent goes out by it to begin his work without (Prov. 24:27; Ps. 104:23), while the sluggard rolls himself about on his bed. The hook, the hinge, on which the door is moved, called בּעָצֵל, from ב, העצם, to turn, has thus the name of עָצֵל.

15 The slothful has thrust his hand into the dish, It is hard for him to bring it back to his mouth again.

Proverbs 26:15. A variation of 19:24; the fut. בּיָשִיבָה, there, is here explained by בּיָשִיבָה, plus quam. The conversion of a sinner, who does not regard himself as righteous, is more to be expected than that of a self-righteous man (Matt. 9:12f.), so the putting right of a fool, who is conscious that he is not wise (cf. 24:7), is more likely to be effected than that of one deeming himself wise; for the greatest hindrance to any turning toward that which is better lies in the delusion that he does not need it. Thus far the group of proverbs regarding fools.

the most prudent is, as a general rule, crack-brained. Böttcher’s "maulfaule" [slow to speak] belongs to the German style of thinking: שלח in Syr. is not he who is slow to speak, but he who has a faltering tongue. Seven is the number of manifoldness in completed unfolding (Prov. 9:1). Meîri thinks, after Ezra 7:14, on the council of seven of the Asiatic ruler. But seven is a round number of plurality, v. 25, 24:16; 6:31. Regarding והוא substatiates the originality of מִתְׁע בֵּר, vid., at 11:22.

A series of proverbs which recommend the love of peace, for they present caricatures of the opposite:

17 He seizeth by the ears of a dog passing by, Who is excited by a strife which concerns him not.

Proverbs 26:17. According to the accentuation in the text, the proverb is to be translated with Fleischer: Qualis est qui prehendit aures canis, talis est qui forte transiens ira abripitur propter rixam alienam (eique temere se immiscent).

Since he is cautioned against unwarranted interference, the expression מִתְׁעָרֵב בְׁדִין might have been used (Prov. 14:10), according to which the Syr. translates; but לעibre substantiates the originality of מִתְׁע בֵּר (vid., 14:16; 20:2). On the other hand, the placing together, without any connection of the two participles, is perplexing; why not עֹבֵר מִתְׁע בֵּר?

For it is certainly not meant, that falling into a passion he passes by; but that passing by, he falls into a passion; for he stands to this object. The Targumist, feeling this also, renders עֹבֵר מִתְׁע בֵּר in the sense of being angry, but contrary to the usus loq. Wherefore the conjecture of Euchel and Abramsohn commends itself, that עֹבֵר belongs to חולל—the figure thereby becomes more distinct. To seize one’s own dog by the ear is not dangerous, but it is not advisable to do this with a strange dog. Therefore עֹבֵר belongs as a necessary attribute to the dog. The dog accidentally passing by corresponds to the strife to which one stands in no relation עֹבֵר, vid., regarding the Makkeph, Baer’s Genesis, p. 85, not. 9). Whoever is excited to passion about a strife that does not belong to him, is like one who lays hold by the ears (the LXX arbitrarily: by the tail) of a dog that is passing by—to the one or to the other it happens right when he brings evil upon himself thereby.

18 As a man who casteth brands, And arrows, And death;

19 So is the man who deceiveth his neighbour, And saith: I only make sport.

The old translations of מצהללה are very diverse. Aquila has rendered it by κακοηθιζόμενος; Symmachus: πειρώμενος; the Syr.: the vainglorious; the Targ.: מֶת "מֶת" (from מָת, a successor (spiritually); Jerome: noxius (injurious; for which Luther: secret). There is thus no traditional translation. Kimchi explains the word by וֹאֵפִים וֹאֵפִים (Venet. וֹאֵפִים); Aben Ezra by מָת (from מָת), to behave thoughtlessly, foolishly; but both erroneously, confounding with it וֹאֵפִים, Gen. 47:13, which is formed from מָת and not from וֹאֵפִים. and is related to וֹאֵפִים, and is related to מָת, according to which מצהללה would designate him who exerts himself (Rashi, וֹאֵפִים), or who is worn out (Saadia: who does not know what to do, and in weariness passes his time). The root וֹאֵפִים, whence the reflex form וֹאֵפִים, like וֹאֵפִים, from מָת, מה, המ, המ, the fundamental meaning of internal and external unrest; these verbs are used of the effect of fear (shrinking back from fear), and, generally, the want of self-command; the Syr. otialah, to be terrified, obstupescere, confirms this primary conception, connecting itself with the R. לָו. Accordingly, he who shoots every possible death-bearing Proverbs 26:21. The Venet. translates הבו by כארבון, and הנחל by אなんと: the former (from הקב) Arab. fahuma, to be deep black) is coal in itself; the latter (from זחלת, jaham, to set on fire, and intrans. to burn), coal in a glowing state (e.g., 25:22; Ezek. 1:13). Black coal is suited to glowing coal, to nourish it; and wood to the fire, to sustain it; and a contentious man is suited for and serves this purpose, to kindle up strife. The words of the tale-bearer are like dainty morsels; And they glide down into the innermost parts.

The proverbs next following treat of a cognate theme, hypocrisy (the art of dissembling), which, under a shining [gleissen] exterior, conceals hatred and destruction:

23 Dross of silver spread over an earthen vessel—Lips glowing with love and a base heart.

Proverbs 26:23. Dross of silver is the so-called glätte (French, litharge), a combination of lead and oxygen, which, in the old process of producing silver, was separated (Luther: silberschaum, i.e., the silver litharge; Lat. spuma argenti, having the appearance of foam). It is still used to glaze over potter's ware, which here (Greek, κσματος) is briefly called חמת שמח for הבו; for the vessel is better in appearance than the mere potsherds. The glossing of the earthenware is called צפח על חמת, which is applicable to any kind of covering (צפח, R. צפח, to spread or lay out broad) of a less costly material with that which is more precious. 23a contains the figure, and 23b its subscription: שֶׁשֶּׁפֶם אלֵיָהוֹב לְבֵל אוּן. Thus, with the taking away of the Makkeph after Codds, to be punctuated: burning lips, and therewith a base heart; burning, that is, with the fire of love (Meiri, אש.
agreeable deceit. If such a dissembler makes his voice to lie, and the like, but not to place or to lay ambush, and the like, but not to place or to lay for the poet to be used in this sense; he might also have expressed himself as Job 30:3; 38:27. The selection of this rare word is better explained if it denotes the superlative of deceit,—a course of conduct maliciously directed toward the deception of a neighbour. That is also the impression which the word has made on Jerome (fraudulenter), the Targ. (במהרה), in grinding), Luther (to do injury), and according to which it has already been explained, e.g., by C. B. Michaelis and Oetinger (“with dissembled, deceitful nature”). The punctuation of תכסה, Codd. and editions present in three different forms. Buxtorf in his Concordance (also Fürst), and the Basel Biblia Rabbínica, have the form תְׁכֶסֶה; but this is a mistake. Either תכסה or תכסה (Niph., with the same assimilation of the preformative י as in תכסה, Lev. 13:55; יכשו, Deut. 21:8) is to be read; Kimchi, in his Wörterbuch, gives תכסה, which is certainly better supported. A surer contrast of תכסה with בְׁמוּרְׁסְׁתָא, and its nature. Many Jewish interpreters gloss: “hatred seeks to conceal itself by hypocrisy,” but: in deceitful work. Also we refer not to בְׁמוּרְׁסְׁתָא, but to בְׁמוּרְׁסְׁתָא, for hatred is thought of in connection with its personal representative. We see from 26b that hatred is meant which not only broods over evil, but also carries it into execution. Such hatred may conceal itself in cunningly-contrived deception, yet the wickedness of the hater in the end comes out from behind the mask with the light of publicity.

This rendering of the Hithpa. form is more correct than Hitzig's ("in his breast) he prepares treachery;" for such a dissembler makes his voice agreeable (Piel of only here, for the form Ps. 13:3 (vid., Hupfeld's and also our comm. on Hitzig's ("in his breast) he prepares treachery;"

27 He who diggeth a pit falleth therein; And he that rolleth up a stone, upon himself it rolleth back.

Proverbs 26:27. The thought that destruction prepared for others recoils upon its contriver, has found its expression everywhere among men in divers forms of proverbial sayings; in the form which it here receives, 27a has its oldest original in Ps. 7:16, whence it is repeated here and in Eccles. 10:8, and Sir. 27:26.

Regarding בְׁמוּרְׁסְׁתָא הֻּכ בֵּס here has the sense of in eam ipsam; expressed in French, the proverb is: celui qui creuse la fosse, y tombera; in Italian: chi cava la fossa, caderà in essa. The second line of this proverb accords with Ps. 7:17 (vid., Hupfeld and Riehm on this passage). It is natural to think of the rolling as a rolling upwards; cf. Sir. 27:25, ὁ βάλλων λίθον εἰς ὕψος ἐπὶ κεφαλὴν αὐτοῦ βάλει, i.e., throws it on his own head. בְׁמוּרְׁסְׁתָא הֻּכ בֵּס is to be syntactically judged of like 18:13.

28 The lying tongue hateth those whom it bruiseth; And a flattering mouth causeth ruin.

Proverbs 26:28. The LXX, Jerome, the Targ., and Syr. render שִנְׁא דְּרֵי in the sense of non amat veritatem; they appear by דרי to have thought of the Aram. דרי, that which is pure; and thus they gain nothing else but an undeniable plain thought. Many Jewish interpreters gloss: מהבהבר, also after the Aram.: יקֵדּ = דרי; but the Aram. יַּקִּיד = דרי does not mean pure in the sense of being right, therefore Elia Wilna understands him who desires to justify himself, and this violent derivation from the Aram. thus does not lead to the end. Luther, translating: “a false tongue hates those who punish it,” explains, as also Gesenius, conterentes = castigantes ipsam; but דרי signifies, according to the usage of the language before us, “bruised” (vid., Ps. 9:10), not: bruising; and the thought that the liar hates him who listens to him, leads ad absurdum; but that he does not love him who bruises (punishes) him, is self-evident. Kimchi sees in דרי another form of דרי; and Meiri, Jona Gerundi in his ethical work [שעריו של תوبة] = The gates of Repentance, and others, accordingly render דרי in the sense of דרי: the lying tongue hates—as Löwenstein translates—the humble [pious]; also that for דרי, by the omission of יַּקִּיד, דרי may be read, is supposable; but this does not harmonize with the second half of the proverb, according to which שֶקֶר must be the subject, and must express some kind of evil which proceeds from such a tongue. Ewald: “the lying tongue hates its master,” but that is not in accordance with the Heb. style; the word in that case should have been המלח עלי. Hitzig countenances this אדוני, with the remark that the tongue is here personified; but personified, the tongue certainly means him who has it (Ps. 120:3). Böttcher's conjecture יְׁש נֵא דָכְיו, "confounds their talk," is certainly a curiosity. Spoken of the sea, those words would mean, "it changes its surge." But is it then at all necessary to uncover first the meaning of 28a? Rashii, Arama, and others refer ד כָיו to ד כִים = נידכאים (מדכים). Thus also perhaps the Venet., which translates τοὺς ἐπιτριμμοὺς (not: ἐπιτετριμμένους) στόματος C. B. Michaelis: Lingua falsitatis odio habet contritos suos, h. e. eos quos falsitate ac mendacio laedit contritosque facit. Hitzig objects that it is more correct to say: conterit perosos sibi. And certainly this lay nearer, on which account Fleischer remarks: in 28a there is to be supposed a poetic transposition of the ideas (Hypallage): homo qui lingua ad calumnias abutitur conterit eos quos odit. The poet makes ישנא the main conception, because it does not come to him so readily to say that the lying tongue bruises those against whom it is directed, as that it is hatred, which is active in this. To say this was by no means superfluous. There are men who find pleasure in repeating and magnifying scandalously that which is depreciatory and disadvantageous to their neighbour unsubstantiated, without being at all conscious of any particular ill-will or personal enmity against him; but this proverb says that such untruthful tongue-thrashing proceeds always from a transgression of the commandment, “Thou shalt not hate thy brother,” Lev. 19:17, and not merely from the want of love, but from a state of mind which is the direct opposite of love (vid., 10:18). Ewald finds it incongruous that 28a speaks of that which others have to suffer from the lying tongue, whereas the whole connection of this proverb requires that the tongue should here be regarded as bringing ruin upon its owner himself. But of the destruction which the wicked tongue prepares for others many proverbs also speak, e.g., 12:13, cf. 17:4, Lev. 19:17, and 28b does not mention that the smooth tongue (written וּפֶה־חָלָק with Makkeph) brings injury upon itself (an idea which must be otherwise expressed; cf. 14:32), but that it brings injury and ruin on those who have pleasure in its flatteries (Ps. 12:3; Isa. 30:10), and are befooled thereby: as blandiloquum (blanditiis dolum tegens) ad casum impellit, sc. aios (Fleischer).

Proverbs 27

In the group 1–6 of this chapter every two proverbs form a pair. The first pair is directed against unseemly boasting:

1  Boast not thyself of to-morrow, For thou knowest not what a day bringeth forth.

2a  Let another praise thee, and not thine own mouth; A stranger, and not thine own lips.
Proverbs 27:2. The negative לֹא is with פִּיךָ, as in (Arab.) ghyya fık, bound into one compact idea: that which is not thine own mouth (Fleischer), “not thine own lips,” on the other hand, is not to be interpreted as corresponding to it, like א ל מָוֶת, 12:28; since after the prohibitive א ל, יְׁהַלֵּךְ, praise thee easily supplies itself. זָרִי is properly the stranger, as having come from a distance, and נאכְרִי he who comes from an unknown country, and is himself unknown (vid., under 26:24); the idea of both words, however, passes from advena and alienigena to alius. There is certainly in rare cases a praising of oneself, which is authorized because it is demanded (2 Cor. 11:18), which, because it is offered strongly against one’s will, will be measured by truth (Prov. 10:13); but in general it is improper to applaud oneself, because it is a vain looking at oneself in a glass; it is indecent, because it places others in the shade; imprudent, because it is of no use to us, but only injures, for proprı́a laus sordet, and as Stobäus says, οὐδὲν οὕτως ἄκουσμα φορτικὸν ὡς ὁ καθ᾽ αὑτοῦ ἔπαινος. Compare the German proverb, “Eigenlob stinkt, Freundes Lob hinkt, fremdes Lob klingt” [= self-praise stinks, a friend’s praise is lame, a stranger’s praise sounds].

Proverbs 27:3. The second pair of proverbs designates two kinds of violent passion as unbearable:

3 The heaviness of a stone, the weight of sand— A fool’s wrath is heavier than both. We do not translate: Gravis est petra et onerosa arena, so that the substantives stand for strengthening the idea, instead of the corresponding adjective (Fleischer, as the LXX, Jerome, Syr., Targum); the two pairs of words stand, as 4a, in genit. relation (cf. on the contrary, 31:30), and it is as if the poet said: represent to thyself the heaviness of a stone and the weight of sand, and thou shalt find that the wrath of a fool compared thereto is still heavier, viz., for him who has to bear it; thus heavier, not for the fool himself (Hitzig, Zöckler, Dächsel), but for others against whom his anger goes forth. A Jewish proverb (vid., Tendlau, No. 901) says, that one knows a man by his wine-glass (כוס), his purse (כיס), and his anger (רָע), viz., how he deports himself in the tumult; and another says that one reads what is in a man when he is in an ill-humour. Thus also כעס is to be here understood: the fool in a state of angry, wrathful excitement is so far not master of himself that the worst is to be feared; he sulks and shows hatred, and rages without being appeased; no one can calculate what he may attempt, his behaviour is unendurable. Sand, חול, as it appears, as to the number of its grains innumerable, so as to its mass (in weight) immeasurable, Job 6:3; Sir. 22:13. נֵטֶל the Venet. translates, with strict regard to the etymology, by ἅρμα.

4 The madness of anger, and the overflowing of wrath— And before jealousy who keeps his place!

Proverbs 27:4. Here also the two pairs of words 4a stand in connection; אכזָיות (for which the Cod. Jaman has incorrectly אכזָיות) is the connecting form; vid., regarding אכזָיות, 5:9. Let one imagine the blind, relentless rage of extreme excitement and irritation, a boiling over of anger like a water-flood, which bears everything down along with it—these paroxysms of wrath do not usually continue long, and it is possible to appease them; but jealousy is a passion that not only rages, but reckons calmly; it incessantly ferments through the mind, and when it breaks forth, he perishes irretrievably who is its object. Fleischer generalizes this idea: “enmity proceeding from hatred, envy, or jealousy, it is difficult or altogether impossible to withstand, since it puts into operation all means, both secretly and openly, to injure the enemy.” But after 6:34f., cf. Song 8:8, there is particularly meant the passion of scorned, mortified, deceived love, viz., in the relation of husband and wife.

Proverbs 27:5. The third pair of proverbs passes over from this special love between husband and wife to that subsisting between friends:
5 Better is open accusation Than secret love.

An integral distich; instead has Munach, and instead of the second Metheg Tarcha, after Thorath Emeth, p. 11. Zöckler, with Hitzig, incorrectly: better than love which, from false indulgence, keeps concealed from his neighbour his faults, when he ought to tell him of them. That would require the phrase אобеспה not מוסתרת, מוסתרה. Dächsel, in order to accommodate the text to this meaning, remarks: concealed censure is concealed love; but it is much rather the neglected duty of love,—love without mutual discipline is weak, faint-hearted, and, if it is not too blind to remark in a friend what is worthy of blame, is altogether too forbearing, and essentially without conscience; but it is not “hidden and concealed love.” The meaning of the proverb is different: it is better to be courageously and sternly corrected—on account of some fault committed—by any one, whether he be a foe or a friend, than to be the object of a love which may exist indeed in the heart, but which fails to make itself manifest in outward act. There are men who continually assure us of the reality and depth of their friendship; but when it is necessary for them to prove their love to be self-denying and generous, they are like a torrent which is dry when one expects to drink water from it (Job 6:15). Such “secret” love, or, since the word is not מוסתרת, מוסתרה, love confined to the heart alone, is like a fire which, when it burns secretly, neither lightens nor warms; and before such a friend, any one who frankly and freely tells the truth has by far the preference, for although he may pain us, yet he does us good; while the former deceives us, for he leaves us in the lurch when it is necessary to love us, not merely in word and with the tongue, but in deed and in truth (1 John 3:18). Rightly Fleischer: Praestat correptio aperta amicitiae tectae, i.e., nulla re probatae.

6 Faithful are the wounds of a friend, And overloaded [plentiful] the kisses of an enemy.

Proverbs 27:6. The contrast to מאמנים, true, i.e., honourable and good (with the transference of the character of the person to his act), would be fraudulenta (Jerome), or, false (Ralbag); Ewald seeks this idea from with מוער, to stumble, make a false step; Hitzig, from מוער = (Arab.) dadhr, whence dâdhir, perfidus, to gain from; but (1) the comparison does not lie near, since usually the Arab. t corresponds to the Heb. ש, and the Arab. d to the Heb. ד. (2) the Heb. מוער has already three meanings, and it is not advisable to load it with yet another meaning assumed for this passage, and elsewhere not found. The three meanings are the following: (a) to smoke, Aram. עתר, whence עתר, vapour, Ezek. 8:11, according to which the Venet., with Kimchi’s and Parchon’s Lex., translates: the kisses of an enemy מוער מוער, i.e., are fog (b) to sacrifice, to worship, Arab. atar; according to which Aquila: ἐκκεντάκα (as, with Grabe, it is probably to be read ἐκκοσσά of the LXX); and agreeably to the Niph., but too artificially, Arama: obtained by entreaties = constrained; (c) to heap up, whence Hiph. מוער, Ezek. 35:13, cf. Jer. 33:6, according to which Rashi, Меîri, Gesenius, Fleischer, Bertheau, and most explain, cogn. with שער, whose Aram. form is שער, but מוער is properly a heap of goods or treasures. This third meaning gives to the kisses of an enemy a natural adjective: they are too abundant, so much the more plentiful to veil over the hatred, like the kisses by means of which Judas betrayed his Lord, not merely denoted by מוער, but by καταφιλεῖν, Matt. 26:49. This, then, is the contrast, that the strokes inflicted by one who truly loves us, although they tear into our flesh ( palmate, to split, to tear open), yet are faithful (cf. Ps. 141:5); on the contrary, the enemy covers over with kisses him to whom he wishes all evil. Thus also forms an indirect contrast to מאמנים.
In 7–10 there is also visible a weaving of the external with the internal. First, there are two proverbs, in each of which there is repeated a word terminating with ה.

7 A satisfied soul treadeth honeycomb under foot; And a hungry soul—everything bitter is (to it) sweet.

Proverbs 27:7. It is unnecessary to read תָבוּז (Hitzig); תָבוּס is stronger; “to tread with the feet” is the extreme degree of scornful despite. That satiety and hunger are applicable to the soul, vid., under 10:3. In 7b, the adverb הַל, relative to the nomin. absol., like 28:7, but not 13:18. “Hunger is the best cook,” according to a German proverb; the Hebrew proverb is so formed that it is easily transferred to the sphere of the soul. Let the man whom God has richly satisfied with good things guard himself against ingratitude towards the Giver, and against an undervaluing of the gifts received; and if they are spiritual blessings, let him guard himself against self-satisfaction and self-contentment, which is, in truth, the worst poverty, Rev. 3:17; for life without God is a constant hunger and thirst. There is in worldly things, even the most pleasing, a dissatisfaction felt, and a dissatisfaction awakening disgust; and in spiritual life, a satiety which supposes itself to be full of life, but which is nothing else than the decay of life, than the changing of life into death.

8 As a bird that wandereth from her nest, So is a man that wandereth from his home.

Proverbs 27:8. It is not a flying out that is meant, from which at any moment a return is possible, but an unwilling taking to flight (LXX 8b: οἵτων ἀποξενωθής Venet.: πλανούμενον ... πλανούμενος); for עוף נודא, Isa. 16:2, cf. Jer. 4:25, birds that have been frightened; and רָעָה, 21:15f., designates the fugitive; cf. רָעָה, Gen. 4:14, and above, 26:2, where רָעָה designates aimless roving about. Otherwise Fleischer: “warning against unnecessary roaming about, in journeyings and wanderings far from home: as a bird far from its nest is easily wounded, caught, or killed, so, on such excursions, one easily comes to injury and want. One may think of a journey in the East. The Arabs say, in one of their proverbs: alsafar kat’at man ẓiklyum (= journeying is a part of the pains of hell).” But here יד is not to be understood in the sense of a liber vagari. Rightly C. B. Michaelis: qui vagatur extorris et exul a loco suo sc. natalis vel habitationis ordinariae. This proverb mediately recommends the love of one’s fatherland, i.e., “love to the land in which our father has his home; on which our paternal mansion stands; in which we have spent the years of our childhood, so significant a part of one’s whole life; from which we have derived our bodily and intellectual nourishment; and in which home we recognise bone of our bone and flesh of our flesh.” But next it says, that to be in a strange land must be an unhappiness, because a man never feels better than at home, as the bird in its nest. We say: Heimat [home]—this beautiful word becomes the German language, which has also coined the expressive idea of Heimweh [longing for home]; the Heb. uses, to express the idea of home, the word:image, and of fatherland, the word אָדָם o אָדָמָי. The Heb. ידנה corresponds to the German Eland, but = Ellend, elilenti, of another land, strange. The two following proverbs have in common the catchword רֵע, and treat of the value of friendship:—

9 Oil and frankincense rejoice the heart; And the sweet discourse of a friend from a counselling of soul.

Proverbs 27:9. Regarding the perfuming with dry aromas, and sprinkling with liquid aromas, as a mark of honour towards guests, and as a means of promoting joyful social fellowship, vid., at 7:16f., 21:17. The pred. יְשֵׁק comprehends frankincense or oil as the two sides of one and the same thing; the LXX introduces, from Ps. 104:15, also wine. It also reads יָדוֹ as one word, which Hitzig regards as original; for he translates, prudence seeking to help oneself, and trusting friend, is better than one's own counsel, than "sweetness of the lips," 16:21) of a encouragement (Zöckler explain: sweetness, i.e., the sweet recognition of this, Cocceius, Umbreit, Stier, and Zöckler explain: sweetness, i.e., the sweet encouragement (טעם, in the sense of "sweetness [grace] of the lips," 16:21) of a friend, is better than one's own counsel, than prudence seeking to help oneself, and trusting merely to one's own resources; thus also Rashi: better than what one's own soul advises him. But (1) cannot mean one's own person (oneself) in contrast to another person; and (2) this does not supply a correct antithesis to 9a. Thus יָע will not express the preference, but the origin. Accordingly Ewald, e.g., explains: the sweetness of a friend whom one has proceeded from the counsel of soul, i.e., from such counsel as is drawn from a deep, full soul. But no proof can be brought from the usage of the language that יָע can be so meant; these words, after the analogy of 19:2, mean ability to give counsel as a quality of the soul (Prov. 8:14; Job 12:13), i.e., its ability to advise. Accordingly, with Bertheau, we explain יָע as the common predicate for 9a and 9b: ointment and perfume rejoice the heart, and (The Syr., Targ., well: even so) the sweet exhortation of a friend, from a soul capable of rendering counsel; also, this and this, more than that fragrance. This proverb is formed in the same way as 26:9, 14. In this explanation יָע is well referred back to יָע: and (more than) the sweet advice of his friend. But not so that יָע is equivalent to יָע, for one does not thus speak; but the construction is as when we say, in the German language: Nichts that einem Herzen wolter als wenn sein Freund es mitführend tröstet [nothing does more good to a heart than when a friend sympathizingly comforts it]; or: Zage nicht, tief betrübtes Herz! Dein Freund lebt und wird dir bald sich zeigen [Be not dismayed, deeply-troubled heart! thy friend lives, and will soon show himself to thee]. In such cases the word "Herz" [heart] does not designate a distinct part of the person, but, synecdochically, it denotes the whole person.

Proverbs 27:10. Another proverb, consisting of three lines, in commendation of friendship: Thine own friend and the friend of thy father forsake not, And into thy brother's house go not in the day of thy misfortune— Better is a near neighbour than a far-off brother.
In our editions רעים is incorrectly appointed with Pasek after it, so that the accent is Asla Legarmeh; the Pasek is, after the example of older editions, with Norzi, to be cancelled, so that only the conjunctive Asla remains; “thine own and the friend of thy father” denotes the family friend, like some family heirloom, descending from father to son. Such an old tried friend one must certainly not give up. The Kerî changes the second רון but רון (which, after the Masora in st. constr., retains its segol, Ewald, § 211e) is also admissible, for a form of comparison (Hitzig) this רון is not, but the fuller form of the abbreviated רוּ, from רוּ, to take care of, to tend, to pasture—an infinitive formation (= רון) like the Arab. cogn. ראָין a participial. Such a proved friend one ought certainly not to give up, and in the time of heavy trial (vid., regarding יס, 1:26) one should go to him and not to a brother’s house—it is by this supposed that, as 18:24 says, there is a degree of friendship (cf. 17:17) which in regard to attachment stands above that of mere fraternal relationship, and it is true; blood-relationship, viewed in itself, stands as a relationship of affection on natural grounds below friendship, which is a relationship of life on moral grounds. But does blood-relationship exclude friendship of soul? cannot my brother be at the same time my heart-friend? and is not friendship all the firmer when it has at the same time its roots in the spirit and in natural grounds? The poet seems to have said this, for in 10c, probably a popular saying (cf. “Besser Nachbar an der Wand als Bruder über Land” [Better a neighbour by one’s side than a brother abroad]), he gives to his advice a foundation, and at the same time a limitation which modifies its ruggedness. But Dächse places (like Schultens) in קָרָב קָרָב קָרָב and קָרָב קָרָב קָרָב meanings which the words do not contain, for he interprets them of inward nearness and remoteness; and Zöckler reads between the lines, for he remarks, a “near neighbour” is one who is near to the oppressed to counsel and help them, and a “distant brother” is one who with an unamiable disposition remains far from the oppressed. The state of the matter is simple. If one has a tried friend in neighbourly nearness, so in the time of distress, when he needs consolation and help, he must go to this friend, and not first to the house of a brother dwelling at a distance, for the former certainly does for us what the latter probably may and probably may not do for us.

Proverbs 27:11. This proverb has, in common with the preceding tristich, the form of an address: Become wise, my son, and make my heart rejoice, That I may give an answer to my accusers.

Better than "be wise" (Luther), we translate "become wise" (LXX σοφὸς γίνου); for he who is addressed might indeed be wise, though not at present so, so that his father is made to listen to such deeply wounding words as these, “Cursed be he who begat, and who educated this man” (Malbim). The cohortative clause 11b (cf. Ps. 119:42) has the force of a clause with a purpose (Gesen. § 128:1): ut habeam quod iis qui me convicientur regerere possim; it does not occur anywhere in the Hezekiah collection except here.

Proverbs 27:12. הָעֵד appears to lean on חכם. The prudent man seeth the misfortune, hideth himself; The simple pass on, suffer injury.

= 22:3, where חכם נָכְרִי is נָכְרִי, חכם נָכְרִי is נָכְרִי, and חכם נָכְרִי is נָכְרִי; the three asynedeta make the proverb clumsy, as if it counted out its seven words separately to the hearer. Ewald, § 349a, calls it a “Steinschrift” [an inscription on a stone]. The perfects united in pairs with, and yet more without, Vav, express the coincidence as to time.

Proverbs 27:13. אֲדוּר(ab) alliterates with אֲדוּר. Take from him the garment, for he hath become surety for another, And for the sake of a strange matter put him under bonds.

= 20:16, vid., there. נָכְרִי we interpret neut. (LXX τὰ ἀλλότρια; Jerome, pro alienis), although certainly the case occurs that one becomes surety for a strange woman (Aquila, Theodotion, περὶ εὐλογήσεως, by whose enticements and flatteries he is taken, and who afterwards leaves him in the lurch with the debts for which he had become security, to show her costly favour to another.

Proverbs 27:14. This proverb, passing over the three immediately intervening, connects itself with vv. 9 and 10. It is directed against cringing, noisy complimenting: He who blesses his neighbour with a loud voice, rising early in the morning, it is reckoned as a curse to him. The first line is intentionally very heavy, in order to portray the empréssement of the maker of compliments: he calls out to another his good wishes with a loud voice, so as to make the impression of deep veneration, of deeply felt thankfulness, but in reality to gain favour thereby, and to commend himself to greater acts of kindness; he sets himself to meet him, having risen up (שׁפָחְת, adverbial inf. abs.; cf. Jer. 44:4 with 25:4) early in the morning, to offer his captatio benevolentiae as speedily as possible; but this salutation of good wishes, the affected zeal in presenting which is a sign of a selfish, calculating, servile soul, is reckoned to him as מְפַלֶּף טוֹרִד, viz., before God and every one who can judge correctly of human nature, also before him who is complimented in so ostentatious and troublesome a manner, the true design of which is thus seen. Others understand the proverb after the example of Berachoth 14a, that one ought to salute no one till he has said his morning’s prayer, because honour is due before all to God (the Book of Wisdom, 10:28); and others after Erachin 16a, according to which one is meant who was invited as a guest of a generous lord, and was liberally entertained, and who now on the public streets blesses him, i.e., praises him for his nobility of mind—such blessing is a curse to him whom it concerns, because this trumpeting of his praise brings upon him a troublesome, importunate crowd. But plainly the particularity of מִשְׁתָּוָה lays the chief emphasis on the servility manifested; and one calls to mind the case of the clients besieging the doors of their patrons, those clientes matutini, each of whom sought to be the first in the salutatio of his distinguished wealthy patron.

Proverbs 27:15. This proverb passes from the complimentarius to its opposite, a shrewish wife: A continual dropping in a rainy day And a contentious woman are alike.

Thus we have already translated (p. 8), where, when treating of the manifold forms of parabolic proverbs, we began with this least poetic, but at the same time remarked that vv. 15 and 16 are connected, forming a tetrastich, which is certainly the case according to the text here lying before us. In verse 15, 19:13b is expanded into a distich, and made a complete verse. Regarding the explanation there given. The noun פָּרָד, which the Syr. translates by magyaḥ, but the Targumist retains, because it is in common use in the post-bibl. Heb. (Bereschith rabba, c. 1) and the Jewish Aramaic, signifies violent rain, after the Jewish interpreters, because then the people remain shut up in their houses; more correctly, perhaps, from the unbroken continuousness and thickness (cf. the Arab. insajara, to go behind each other in close column) with which the rain pours down. Regarding מַדְלֶף, vid., the explanation we have already at 21:9. The form מִשְׁתָּוָה is difficult. If accented, with Löwenstein and others, as Milra, then we would have a Nithkatal before us, as at Num. 1:47, or a Hothkatal—a passive form of the Kal, the existence of which, however, is not fully established. Rather this word is to be regarded as נסות, as Deut. 21:8; Ezek. 23:48) without the dagesh, and lengthened; the form of the word נסות, as found in the Cod. Jaman., aims at this. But the form נִשְׁתָּוָה is better established, e.g., by Cod. 1294, as Milel. Kimchi, Michaľol 131a (cf. Ewald, § 132c), regards it as a form without the dagesh, made up the Niph. and Hithpa., leaving the penultima toning unexplained. Bertheau regards it as a voluntative: let us compare (as נִשְׁתָּוָה, Isa. 41:23); but as he himself says, the reflexive form does not accord with this sense. Hitzig has adopted the right explanation (cf. Olshausen, § 275, and Böttcher, § 1072, who, however, registers it at random as an Ephraimitism). As one ma as suits legit, explain, but only darkens: and praeconem agit 116 as at Gen. 49:1, is equi us, is not at all possible. We suppose that the latter, in the order of the words lying before second subject (he meets oil, his right hand); oil with his right hand), or, with Hitzig, as a regarding masc. (cf. Song 1:3). There is no reason for regarding the gender of the object of the clause (oil meeteth his right hand) than the subject (his right hand meeteth oil), for the gender of רוח directs to י (e.g., Ezek. 15:6b; cf. 6a, where לִשְׁתָּוָה is as to gender indifferent): it is fem., while on the contrary שמה is generally masc. (cf. Song 1:3). There is no reason for regarding as an adverbial accus. (he meets oil with his right hand), or, with Hitzig, as a second subject (he meets oil, his right hand); the latter, in the order of the words lying before us, is not at all possible. We suppose that אֶפְרָא, as at Gen. 49:1, is equivalent to אֵפְרָא (Ewald, § 116c), for the explanation oleum dexterae ejus praecocem agit (Cocceius, Schultens) does not explain, but only darkens: and oleum dextera suă legit, i.e., colligit (Fleischer), is based on an untenable use of the word. As one may say of person to person, אֶפְרָא, occurs tibi, Num. 25:18, so also אֶפְרָא, of a thing that meets a man or one of his members; and if we compare רְיָה and רְיָה, then for 16b the meaning is possible: oil meets his right hand; the quarrelsome woman is like oil that cannot be held in the hand, which struggles against that which holds it, for it always glides out of the hand. Thus also Luther: “and seeks to hold oil with his hand,” as if he read קְרֵא. In fact, this word was more commonly used as the expression of untenableness than the colourless and singular word קְרֵא, which, besides, is so ambiguous, that none of the old translators has thought on any other קְרֵא than that which signifies “to call,” “to name.” The Jewish interpreters also adhere to this nearest lying אֶפְרָא, and, moreover, explain, as the Syr., Targ., Aquila, Symmachus, Jerome, and the Venet., אֶפְרָא, according to the accentuation as genit. connected, e.g., Rashi: he calls for oil to his right hand, viz., as the means of purification from leprosy, Lev. 8:14 [14:16]; and Aben Ezra: even when he calls for oil to his right hand, i.e., would move them to silence with the precious anointing oil. Perhaps v. 16 was originally an independent proverb as follows:

He who layeth up riches in store layeth up the wind, And he nameth them the fat of his right hand;

i.e., he sees in them that which makes his right hand fat and strong (וּלִקְר א, as at Ps. 109:24, opp. Zech. 11:17; cf. בָּרוֹנָה, Isa. 10:16, regarding ἐρυθών, the Phoenician god of health, at Isa. 59:10), and yet it is only the wind, i.e., something that is worthless and transient, which he stored up (שְׁמֶן, as at 13:22, and in מִשְׁמֶנָיו, Obad. v. 6). צָפְּנֶיהָ is used as it frequently occurs in the Book of Proverbs, e.g., 11:4, and the whole proverb expresses by another figure the same as 18:11. The fact that הָיָה (וְהָי), 25:23, and as a contrast thereto in the compass...
יִחָד (the south), hovered before the poet, may not have been without its influence on the choice of the words and expression here.

Proverbs 27:17. This proverb expresses the influence arising from the intercourse of man with man: Iron is sharpened by iron. And a man may sharpen the appearance of another.

When the Masora reads רְׁבָּד, Ewald remarks, it interprets the word as denoting “at the same time,” and the further meaning of the proverb must then accord therewith. Accordingly he translates: “iron together with iron! and one together with the face of another!” But then the prep. ב or עם is wanting after the second יִחָד— for רְׁבָּד is, in spite of Ewald, § 217 h, never a prep.—and the “face,” 17b, would be a perplexing superfluity. Hitzig already replies, but without doing homage to the traditional text.

The passive rendering of the idea 17 a and the active of 17b thus more distinctly appear, and the unsuitable jussive forms are set aside: ferrum ferro exacuitur, et homo exacuit faciem amici sui (Jerome, Targ., the Venet.). But that is not necessary. As רְׁבָּד may be the fut. of the Hiph. (he brought up) as well as of the Kal (he went up), so רְׁבָּד may be regarded as fut. Kal, and רְׁבָּד as fut. Hiph. Fleischer prefers to render רְׁבָּד also as Hiph. aciem exhibet, like divitias acquirit, and the like; but the jussive is not favourable to this supposition of an intransitive (inwardly transitive) Hiph. It may indeed be said that the two jussives appear to be used, according to poetic licence, with the force of indicatives (cf. under 12:26), but the repetition opposes it. Thus we explain: iron is sharpened [gewetzt, Luther uses this appropriate word] by iron (2 of the means, not of the object, which was rather to be expected in 17b after 20:30), and a man whets רְׁבָּד, the appearance, the deportment, the nature, and manner of the conduct of his neighbour. The proverb requires that the intercourse of man with man operate in the way of sharpening the manner and forming the habits and character; that one help another to culture and polish of manner, rub off his ruggedness, round his corners, as one has to make use of iron when he sharpens iron and seeks to make it bright. The jussive form is the oratorical form of the expression of that which is done, but also of that which is to be done.

18 Whosoever watcheth the fig-tree will enjoy its fruit; And he that hath regard to his master attaineth to honour.
Proverbs 27:18. The first member is, as in v. 17, only the means of contemplating the second; as faithful care of the tree has fruit for a reward, so faithful regard for one's master, honour; נזר is used as at Isa. 27:3, the כְּמוּם as at Hos. 4:10, etc.—the proverb is valid in the case of any kind of master up to the Lord of lords. The fig-tree presented itself, as Heidenheim remarks, as an appropriate figure; because in the course of several years' training it brings forth its fruit, which the language of the Mishna distinguishes as כְּמוּם, unripe, הבור, half ripe, and כְּמוּם, fully ripe. To fruit in the first line corresponds honour in the second, which the faithful and attentive servant attains unto first on the part of his master, and then also from society in general.

19 As it is with water, face correspondeth to face, So also the heart of man to man. Proverbs 27:19. Thus the traditional text is to be translated; for on the supposition that כְּמוּם כְּמוּם, yet it might not be translated: as in waters face corresponds to face (Jerome: quomodo in aquis resplendent vultus respicientium), because כְּמִם (instar) is always only a prep. and never conj. subordinating to itself a whole sentence (vid., under Ps. 38:14). But whether כְּמִם כְּמִם, “like water,” may be an abridgment of a sentence: “like as it is with water,” is a question, and the translation of the LXX (Syr., Targ., Arab.), διαφημών οὖχ ὁμοιοπαθεῖς πρόσωπα προσώπωσι κ.τ.λ., appears, according to Böttcher's ingenious conjecture, to have supposed כְּמִם כְּמִם, from which the LXX derived כְּמִמ כְּמִמ, sicunt non pares. The thought is beautiful: as in the water-mirror each one beholds his own face (Luther: der Scheme - = the shadow), so out of the heart of another each sees his own heart, i.e., he finds in another the dispositions and feelings of his own heart (Fleischer)—the face finds in water its reflection, and the heart of a man finds in man its echo; men are ὁμοιοπαθεῖς, and it is a fortunate thing that their heart is capable of the same sympathetic feelings, so that one can pour into the heart of another that which fills and moves his own heart, and can there find agreement with it, and a re-echo. The expression with כְּמִמ is extensive: one corresponds to another, one belongs to another, is adapted to the other, turns to the other, so that the thought may be rendered in manifold ways: the divinely-ordained mutual relationship is always the ground-thought. This is wholly obliterated by Hitzig’s conjecture: כְּמִמ כְּמִמ, “what a mole on the face is to the face, that is man's heart to man,” i.e., the heart is the dark spot in man, his partie honteuse. But the Scripture nowhere speaks of the human heart after this manner, at least the Book of Proverbs, in which לְפָנִים frequently means directly the understanding. Far more intelligible and consistent is the conjecture of Mendel Stern, to which Abrahamsohn drew my attention: כְּמִמ כְּמִמ, like water (viz., flowing water), which directs its course always forward, thus (is turned) the heart of man to man. This conjecture removes the syntactic harshness of the first member without changing the letters, and illustrates by a beautiful and excellent figure the natural impulse moving man to man. It appears, however, to us, in view of the LXX, more probable that כְּמִמ is abbreviated from the original כְּמִמ כְּמִמ (cf. 24:29).

Proverbs 27:20. The following proverb has, in common with the preceding, the catchword אֲבָדָן, and the emphatic repetition of the same expression:

20 The under-world and hell are not satisfied,
And the eyes of man are not satisfied.

A Keri נִבְלָא is here erroneously noted by Löwenstein, Stuart, and others. The Keri to אֲבָדָן אֲבָדָן, which secures the right utterance of the ending, and is altogether wanting in many MSS (e.g., Cod. Jaman). The stripping off of the כְּמִמ from the ending כְּמִמ is common in the names of persons and places (e.g., לְפָנִים, LXX Σολομόνων and אֲבָדָן; we write at pleasure either (א) (מִדָּה, Olsh. § 215g. אֲבָדָה) of the nature of a proper name, is already found in its full form אֲבָדָה at 15:11, along with שְׁאָול; the two synonyms are, as was there shown, not wholly alike in the idea they present, as the underworld and realm of death, but are related to each other almost the same as Hades and Gehenna; אֲבָדָה is what is called in the Jonathan-Targum בֵּית א בְּדָנָא, the place of destruction, i.e., of the second death (אֲבָדָה). The proverb places Hades and Hell on the one side, and the eyes of man on the other, on the same line in respect of their insatiableness. To this Fleischer adds the remark: cf. the Arab. al’a n l’a taml’aha all’a altrab, nothing fills the eyes of man but at last the dust of the grave—a strikingly beautiful expression! If the dust of the grave fills the open eyes, then they are full—fearful irony! The eye is the instrument of seeing, and consequently in so far as it always looks out after and farther, it is the instrument and the representation of human covetousness. The eye is filled, is satisfied, is equivalent to: human covetousness is appeased. But first “the desire of the eye,” 1 John 2:16, is meant in the proper sense. The eyes of men are not satisfied in looking and contemplating that which is attractive and new, and no command is more difficult to be fulfilled than that in Isa. 33:15, “... that shutteth his eyes from seeing evil.” There is therefore no more inexhaustible means, impiae sepculations, than the desire of the eyes.

There follow here two proverbs which have in common with each other the figures of the crucible and the mortar:

21 The crucible for silver and the furnace for gold, And a man according to the measure of his praise;

Proverbs 27:21. i.e., silver and gold one values according to the result of the smelting crucible and the smelting furnace; but a man, according to the measure of public opinion, which presupposes that which is said in 12:8, “according to the measure of his wisdom is a man praised.” מִלְחָם is not a ῥῆμα μέσον like our Leumund [renown], but it is a graduated idea which denotes fame down to evil Lob [fame], which is only Lob [praise] per antiphrasin. Ewald otherwise: “according to the measure of his glorifying;” or Hitzig better: “according to the measure with which he praises himself,” with the remark: “כֵּסָר is not the act, the glorifying of self, but the object of the glorying (cf. הבאת, הבאת, המר), i.e., that in which he places his glory.” Böttcher something further: “one recognises him by that which he is generally wont to praise in himself and others, persons and things.” Thus the proverb is to be understood; but in connection with 12:8 it seems to us more probable that מִלְחָם is thought of as going forth from others, and not as from himself. In line first, 17:3a is repeated; the second line there is conformable to the first, according to which it should be here said that the praise of a man is for him what the crucible and the furnace is for metal. The LXX, Syr., Targ., Jerome, and the Venet. read מְהַלָּל, and thereby obtain more concinnity. Luther accordingly translates: A man is tried by the mouth of his praise, As silver in the crucible and gold in the furnace. Others even think to interpret man as the subject examining, and so they vocalize the words. Thus e.g., Fleischer: Qualis est catinus argento et fornax auro, talis sit homo ori a quo laudatur, so that “mouth of his praise” is equivalent to the man who praises him with his mouth. But where, as here, the language relates to relative worth, the supposition for מְהַלָּל, that it denotes, as at 12:8, pro ratione, is tenable. And that the mouth of him who praises is a smelting crucible for him who is praised, or that the praised shall be a crucible for the mouth of him who praises, would be a wonderful comparison. The LXX has here also an additional distich which has no place in the Heb. text.

22 Though thou bruise a fool in a mortar among grit with a pestle, Yet would not his folly depart from him.
Proverbs 27:22. According to the best accredited accentuations, has Illuj. and has Pazer, not Rebia, which would separate more than the Dechi, and disturb the sequence of the thoughts. The first line is long; the chief disjunctive in the sphere of the Athnach is Dechi of הר א, this disjoins more than the Pazer of הבש, and this again more than the Legarmeh of ב מ כתש. The ב of הרפה does not belong to the stem of the word (Hitzig), but is the article; הרפה (from ו, to shake, to break; according to Schultens, from ו, to crumble, to cut in pieces, after the form רפה א, which is improbable) are bruised grains of corn (peeled grain, grit), here they receive this name in the act of being bruised; rightly Aquila and Theodotion, εν μεσον εμπτισσομενων (grains of corn in the act of being pounded or bruised), and the Venet. μεσον των πτισανων. In גבעל (thus to be written after Michlol 43b, not ב גבעל, as Heidenheim writes it without any authority) also the article is contained. ב is the vessel, and the ב of גבעל is Beth instrumenti; נבל (of lifting up for the purpose of bruising) is the club, pestle (Luther: stemppiel = pounder); in the Mishna, Beza 1:5, this word denotes a pounder for the cutting out of flesh. The proverb interprets itself: folly has become to the fool as a second nature, and he is not to be delivered from it by the sternest discipline, the severest means that may be tried; it is not indeed his substance (Hitzig), but an inalienable accident of his substance.

Proverbs 27:23–27. An exhortation to rural industry, and particularly to the careful tending of cattle for breeding, forms the conclusion of the foregoing series of proverbs, in which we cannot always discern an intentional grouping. It is one of the Mashal-odes spoken of p. 10. It consists of 11 = 4 + 7 lines.

23 Give heed to the look of thy small cattle, Be considerate about the herds.

24 For prosperity continues not for ever; And does the diadem continue from generation to generation?

25 (But) the hay is gone, and the after-growth appears, And the grass of the mountains is gathered:

26 Lambs serve to clothe thee, And goats are the price of a field.

27 And there is plenty of goats’ milk for thy nourishment, And for the nourishment of thy house, And subsistence for thy maidens.

The beginning directs to the fut., as is not common in these proverbs, vid., 26:26. With מידע, to take knowledge, which is strengthened by the inf. intensivus, is interchanged איש ל המלך, which means at 24:32 to consider well, but here, to be careful regarding anything. איש is the small or little cattle, thus sheep and goats.

Whether לינדריס (here and at Isa. 17:2) contains the article is questionable (Gesen. § 35. 2 A), and, since the herds are called עדרים, is not probable; thus: direct thy attention to the herds, that is, to this, that thou hast herds. המלך is the external side in general; here, the appearance which the sheep present; thus their condition as seen externally. In v. 24 I formerly regarded עמרי נזיר as a synonym of עמרי, to be understood of the produce of wool, or, with Hitzig, of the shearing of the meadow, and thus the produce of the meadow. But this interpretation of the word is untenable, and v. 25 provides for v. 24, thus understood, no natural continuation of thought. That עמרי signifies a store, fulness of possessions, property, and abundance, has already been shown under 15:6; but עמרי is always the mark of royal, and generally of princely dignity, and here denotes, per meton. signi pro re signata, that dignity itself. With the negative expression in 24a the interrogative in 24b is interchanged as at Job 40:9, with the implied negative answer; והinne, of an oath ("and truly not," as at Isa. 62:8), presents the same thought, but with a passionate colouring here unnecessary.
Rightly Fleischer: “ready money, moveable property, and on the other hand the highest positions of honour; are far more easily torn away from a man, and secure to him far less of quiet prosperity, than husbandry, viewed particularly with respect to the rearing of cattle.” In other words: the possession of treasures and of a lofty place of power and of honour has not in itself the security of everlasting duration; but rural economy, and particularly the rearing of cattle, gives security for food and clothing. The Chethib חָצֵר is found, e.g., at Ex. 3:15; the Keri עליה חוּר substitutes the more usual form. If v. 25 was an independent whole (Hitzig: grass vanishes and fresh green appears, etc.), then the meaning here and onward would be that in the sphere of husbandry it is otherwise than is said in v. 24: there that which is consumed renews itself, and there is an enlarging circulation. But this contrast to v. 24 must be expressed and formed unambiguously. The connection is rather this, that v. 23 commends the rearing of cattle, v. 24 confirms it, and 25ff. discuss what real advantages, not dependent on the accidents of public and social life, it brings.

I rejoice to agree with Fleischer in the opinion that the perfects of v. 25 form a complex hypothetical antecedent to v. 26: Quum evanuerit gramen (sc. vetus) et apparuerint herboe recentes et collecta fuerint pabula montium, agni vestitui tuo (inservient) et pretium agri (sc. a te emendi) erunt hirci, i.e., then wilt thou nourish thy herds of sheep and goats with the grass on thy fields, and with the dried gathered hay; and these will yield for thee, partly immediately and partly by the money derived therefrom (viz., from the valuable goats not needed for the flocks), all that is needful for thy life. He also remarks, under חָצֵר, that it means to make a place void, empty (viz., to quit the place, évacuer la forteresse); hence to leave one’s fatherland or home, to wander abroad; thus, rhetorically and poetically of things and possessions: to disappear. חָצָה (from חָצֵר, to be green) is hay, and עִשְׁבֵּת the after-growing second crop (after-grass); thus a meadow capable of being mowed a second time is though of. (with Dag. dirimens, as e.g., Deut. 32:32) are the herbage of the mountains. The time when one proceeds to sheep-shearing, v. 25 cannot intend to designate; it sets before us an interesting rural harvest scene, where, after a plentiful ingathering of hay, one sees the meadows again overspread with new grass (Ewald); but with us the shearing of sheep takes place in the month of May, when the warm season of the year is just at hand. The poet means in general to say, that when the hay is mown and now the herbage is grown up, and also the fodder from the mountains (Ps. 106:20) has been gathered home, when thus the barns are filled with plenty, the husbandman is guaranteed against the future on all sides by his stock of cattle. חָצֶל (from חָצֵר, Arab. halyb, with halab) is the usual metaplastic connecting form of לְשֵׁן, milk. יִּרְצָה (from יִרְצָה, like יִרְצָה from יָרָה), generally connected with the genitive of the person or thing, for which anything is sufficient (e.g., 25:16, יִרְצָה, to which Fleischer compares Arab. hasbuha, tassuha kifayuha), has here the genitive of the thing of which, or in which, one has enough. The complex subject-conception is limited by Rebia, and the governing יִרְצָה has the subordinated disjunctive Legarmeh. נָעַשְׂכֶה is a word of two genders (epicoenun), Gesen. § 107, 1d. In the influence of the ב still continues; one does not need to supply it meanwhile, since all that maintains and nourishes life can be called נְאֹם יְדִישׁ (vita = victus), e.g., 3:22. The LXX translates by σών θεραπόντων, and omits (as also the Syr., but not the Syro-Hexap.) the last line as now superfluous; but that the maids attending to the cattle—by whom we particularly think of milkers—are especially mentioned, intentionally presents the figure of a well-ordered household, full of varied life and activity (Job 40:29).
Proverbs 28

The preceding Mashal-ode (Prov. 27:23–27), commending the rearing of cattle, is a boundary. The series of proverbs beginning with the next chapter is not, however, a commencement, like that at 22:17; and Hitzig’s supposition, that 28:1–16 and 22:17ff. have one and the same author, stands on a false foundation. The second proverb of the twenty-eighth chapter shows directly that this new series of proverbs is subordinated to the aim of the Hezekiah-collection beginning with 25, and thus has to be regarded as an original component part of it. The traces of the post-exilian period which Hitzig discovers in 28:1–16 are not sufficient to remove the origin of the proverbs so far down from the times of Hezekiah. We take the first group, 28:1–11, together; for מבין and יבינו, pervading these eleven proverbs, gives to them, as a whole, a peculiar colouring; and 28:12 presents itself as a new beginning, going back to v. 2, which v. 1 precedes as a prelude.

Proverbs 28:1. We would misinterpret the sequence of the accents if we supposed that it denoted רַשָע as obj.; it by no means takes רַשָע as a parenthesis. It belongs thus to כָוִי רַשָע as collective sing. (cf. e.g., Isa. 16:4b); in 1b, כָוִי כָּלָה, as comprehensive or distributive (individualizing) singular, follows the plur. subject. One cannot, because the word is vocalized כָּלָה and not כָּלָה, regard כָּלָה כָּלָה as an attributive clause thereto (Ewald, like Jerome, quasi leo confidens); but the article, denoting the idea of kind, does not certainly always follow מ. We say, indifferently, כָּלָה or כָּלָה, כָּלָה or כָּלָה, כָּלָה or כָּלָה. In itself, indeed, כָּלָה may be used absolutely: he is confident, undismayed, of the lion as well as of the leviathan, Job 40:23. But it is suitable thus without any addition for the righteous, and רֶס and כָּלָה correspond to each other as predicates, in accordance with the parallelism; the accentuation is also here correct. The perf. רֶס denotes that which is uncaused, and yet follows: the godless flee, pursued by the terrible images that arise in their own wicked consciences, even when no external danger threatens. The fut. כָּלָה denotes that which continually happens: the righteous remains, even where external danger really threatens, bold and courageous, after the manner of a young, vigorous lion, because feeling himself strong in God, and assured of his safety through Him.

Proverbs 28:2. There now follows a royal proverb, whose key-note is the same as that struck at 25:2, which states how a country falls into the οὐκ ἀγαθόν of the rule of the many: Through the wickedness of a land the rulers become many; And through a man of wisdom, of knowledge, authority continues.

1 The godless flee without any one pursuing them; But the righteous are bold like a lion.

Proverbs 28:1. We would misinterpret the sequence of the accents if we supposed that it denoted רַשָע as obj.; it by no means takes וְאֵין־רוּדֵף as a parenthesis. רַשָע belongs thus to וּנָס as collective sing. (cf. e.g., Isa. 16:4b); in 1b, יִבְׁטָח, as comprehensive or distributive (individualizing) singular, follows the plur. subject. One cannot, because the word is vocalized כִכְׁפִיר and not כ כְׁפִיר, regard יִבְׁטָח as an attributive clause thereto (Ewald, like Jerome, quasi le confidens); but the article, denoting the idea of kind, does not certainly always follow כ. We say, indifferently, כָּאֲרִי or כ אֲרִי, כ אֲרִי or כ אֲרִי, כ לָבִיא or כְׁלָבִיא, and always כְׁא רְׁיֵה, not כָא רְׁיֵה. In itself, indeed, יִבְׁטָח may be used absolutely: he is confident, undismayed, of the lion as well as of the leviathan, Job 40:23. But it is suitable thus without any addition for the righteous, and רֶס and כָּלָה correspond to each other as predicates, in accordance with the parallelism; the accentuation is also here correct. The perf. רֶס denotes that which is uncaused, and yet follows: the godless flee, pursued by the terrible images that arise in their own wicked consciences, even when no external danger threatens. The fut. כָּלָה denotes that which continually happens: the righteous remains, even where external danger really threatens, bold and courageous, after the manner of a young, vigorous lion, because feeling himself strong in God, and assured of his safety through Him.

Proverbs 28:2. There now follows a royal proverb, whose key-note is the same as that struck at 25:2, which states how a country falls into the οὐκ ἀγαθόν of the rule of the many: Through the wickedness of a land the rulers become many; And through a man of wisdom, of knowledge, authority continues.

If the text presented כְּנַבֶּשׁ as Hitzig corrects, then one might think of a political revolt, according to the usage of the word, 1 Kings 12:19, etc.; but the word is כְּנַבֶּשׁ, and כְּנַבֶּשׁ (from כְּנַבֵּשׁ, dirumpere) is the breaking through of limits fixed by God, apostasy, irreligion, e.g., Mic. 1:5. But that many rulers for a land arise from such a cause, shows a glance into the Book of Hosea, e.g., 7:16: “They return, but not to the Most High (sursum); they are become like a deceitful bow; the princes shall then fall by the sword;” and 8:4: “They set up kings, but not by me; they have made princes, and I knew it not.” The history of the kingdom of Israel shows that a land which apostatizes from revealed religion becomes at once the victim of party spirit, and a subject of contention to many would-be rulers, whether the fate of the king whom it has rejected be merited or not. But what is now the contrast which 2b brings forward? The translation by Bertheau and also by Zöckler is impossible: “but through intelligent, prudent men, he (the prince) continueth long.” For 2a does not mean a frequent changing of the throne, which in itself may not be a punishment for the sins of the people, but the appearance at the same time of many pretenders to the throne, as was the case in the kingdom of Israel during the interregnum after the death of Jeroboam II, or in Rome at the time of the thirty tyrants; must thus refer to one of these "many" who usurped for a time the throne. בְּאָדָם may also mean, 23:28, inter homines; but must, with the adjective following, e.g., 11:7; 12:23; 17:18; 21:16, always denote one; and that translation also changes the כֵּן into a "so," "then" introducing the concluding clause, which it altogether disregards as untranslatable. But equally impossible is Böttcher's: "among intelligent, prudent people, one continues (in the government)," for then the subject-conception on which it depends would be slurred over. Without doubt כֵּן is here a substantive, and just this subject-conception. That it may be a substantive has been already shown at 11:19. There it denoted integrity (properly that which is right or genuine); and accordingly it means here, not the status quo (Fleischer: idem rerum status), but continuance, and that in a full sense: the jurisdiction (properly that which is upright and right), i.e., this, that right continues and is carried on in the land. Similarly Heidenheim, for he glosses כֵּן by מַעֲשֶׂה אָדָם and Umbreit, who, however, unwarned by the accent, subordinates this כֵּן [in the sense of "right"] to יֹדֵע as its object. Zöckler, with Bertheau, finds a difficulty in the asyndeton מֵבִין יֹדֵע שָׁה. But these words also, Neh. 10:29, stand together as a formula; and that this formula is in the spirit and style of the Book of Proverbs, passages such as 19:25; 29:7 show. A practical man, and one who is at the same time furnished with thorough knowledge, is thus spoken of, and prudence and knowledge of religious moral character and worth are meant. What a single man may do under certain circumstances is shown in 21:22; Eccles. 9:15. Here one has to think of a man of understanding and spirit at the helm of the State, perhaps as the nearest counsellor of the king. By means of such an one, right continues long (we do not need to supply לִהְׁיות after "continues long"). If, on the one side, the State falls asunder by the evil conduct of the inhabitants of the land, on the other hand a single man who unites in himself sound understanding and higher knowledge, for a long time holds it together.

Proverbs 28:3. A proverb of a tyrant here connects itself with that of usurpers: A poor man and an oppressor of the lowly—A sweeping rain without bringing bread. Thus it is to be translated according to the accents. Fleischer otherwise, but also in conformity with the accents: Quales sunt vir pauper et oppressor miserorum, tales sunt pluvia omnia secum abripiens et qui panem non habent, i.e., the relation between a poor man and an oppressor of the needy is the same as that between a rain carrying all away with it and a people robbed thereby of their sustenance; in other words: a prince or potentate who robs the poor of their possessions is like a pouring rain which floods the fruitful fields—the separate members of the sentence would then correspond with each other after the scheme of the chiasmus. But the comparison would be faulty, for אָדָם and כֵּן fall together, and then the explanation would be idem per idem. A "sweeping rain" is one which has only that which is bad, and not that which is good in rain, for it only destroys instead of promoting the growth of the corn; and as the Arab, according to a proverb compared by Hitzig, says of an unjust sultan, that he is a stream without water, so an oppressor of the helpless is appropriately compared to a pouring rain which floods the land and brings no bread. But then the words, "a poor man and an oppressor of the lowly," must designate one person, and in that case the Heb. words must be accentuated, נָכְר רָש ועָשק דָלִים (cf. 29:4a). For, that the oppressor of the helpless deports himself toward the poor man like a sweeping rain which brings no bread, is a saying not intended to be here used, since this is altogether too obvious, that the poor man has nothing to hope for from such an extortioner. But the comparison would be appropriate if 3a referred to an oppressive master; for one who belongs to a master, or who is in any way subordinated to him, has before all to expect from him that which is good, as a requital for his services, and as a proof of his master’s condescending sympathy. It is thus asked whether “a poor man and an oppressor of the lowly” may be two properties united in the person of one master. This is certainly possible, for he may be primarily a poor official or an upstart (Zöckler), such as were the Roman proconsuls and procurators, who enriched themselves by impoverishing their provinces (cf. LXX 28:15); or a hereditary proprietor, who seeks to regain what he has lost by extorting it from his relatives and workmen. But רש (poor) is not sufficient to give this definite feature to the figure of the master; and what does this feature in the figure of the master at all mean? What the comparison 3 says is appropriate to any oppressive ruler, and one does not think of an oppressor of the poor as himself poor; he may find himself in the midst of shattered possessions, but he is not poor; much rather the oppressor and the poor are, as e.g., at 29:13, contrasted with each other. Therefore we hold, with Hitzig, that רש of the text is to be read רֹאש, whether we have to change it into רֹאש or to suppose that the Jewish transcriber has here for once slipped into the Phoenician writing of the word; we do not interpret, with Hitzig, גֶבֶר רָש in the sense of ἄνδρεῖος ἐν ἁσβείαις (cf. the interchange of גֶבֶר and רָש in both texts of Ps. 18:26), but what the LXX read must have been גִבּוּר לְׁחֶשֶׁם (Isa. 5:22); and what can גֶבֶר here mean? The statement here made refers to the ruinous conduct of a גֶבֶר, a man of standing, or גְׁבִיר, a high lord, a “wicked ruler,” 28:15. On the contrary, what kind of rain the rule of an ideal governor is compared to, Ps. 72:1–8 tells.

4. They who forsake the law praise the godless; But they who keep the law become angry with them,

Proverbs 28:4. viz. the godless, for ראש is to be thought of collectively, as at v. 1. They who praise the godless turn away from the revealed word of God (Ps. 73:11–15); those, on the contrary, who are true to God’s word (Prov. 28:18) are aroused against them (vid., regarding גר, 15:18), they are deeply moved by their conduct, they cannot remain silent and let their wickedness go unpunished; הִתְׁגָרָה is zeal (excitement) always expressing itself, passing over into actions (syn. הִתְׁעורֵר, Job 17:8).

Proverbs 28:5. A similar antithetic distich: Wicked men understand not what is right; But they who seek Jahve understand all.

Regarding the gen. expression א נְׁשֵי־רָע, vid., under 2:14. He who makes wickedness hie element, falls into the confusion of the moral conception; but he whose end is the one living God, gains from that, in every situation of life, even amid the greatest difficulties, the knowledge of that which is morally right. Similarly the Apostle John (1 John 2:20): “ye have an unction from the Holy One, and ye know all things” (οἴδατε πάντα): i.e., ye need to seek that knowledge which ye require, and which ye long after, not without yourselves, but in the new divine foundation of your personal life; from thence all that ye need for the growth of your spiritual life, and for the turning away from you of hostile influences, will come into your consciences. It is a potential knowledge, all-comprehensive in its character, and obviously a human relative knowledge, that is here meant.

Proverbs 28:6. What is stated in this proverb is a conclusion from the preceding, with which it is also externally connected, for הָרשָׁע(harṣ,处理器, and now נשׁוֹכֶשׁ[nashōc],处理器, and now נשׁוֹכֶשׁ follow each other: Better a poor man who walketh in his innocence, Than a double-going deceiver who is rich thereby.

A variation of 19:1. Stainlessness, integritas vitae, as a consequence of unreserved devotion to God, gives to a man with poverty a higher worth and nobility than riches connected with falsehood which “halts between two opinions” (1 Kings 18:21), and appears to go one way, while in reality it goes another. The two ways דְׁרָכֵי יִם(cf. Sir. 2:12, oyai ἀμαρτωλοὶ ... ἐπιθαυμάζοντι ἐπὶ σῶο τριβως are, as v. 18, not ways going aside to the right or to the left of the right way, but the evil way which the deceiver truly walks in, and the good way which he pretends to walk in (Fleischer); the two ways of action placed over against one another, by one of which he masks the other.

7 He who keepeth instruction is a wise son; But he that is a companion of profligates bringeth his father into shame.

Proverbs 28:7. We have translated נָצָרTorah at v. 4 by “law;” here it includes the father’s instruction regarding the right way of life. נֵצָר according to the nearest lying syntax, has to be taken as pred. נַצֵּר[ņatz’er] are such as squander their means and destroy their health, vid., under 23:20f. נַצִּית signifies, as frequently from the idea of (cf. 29:3) pasturing, or properly of tending, to take care of, and to have fellowship with. נַצַּל[ņatz’al] which shall put to shame] denotes both that he himself does disgrace to him, and that he brings disgrace to him on the part of others.

Proverbs 28:8. This verse continues a series of proverbs (commencing in v. 7) beginning with a participle: He who increaseth his wealth by interest and usury, Gathereth it for one who is benevolent toward the lowly.

Wealth increased by covetous plundering of a neighbour does not remain with him who has scraped it together in so relentless a manner, and without considering his own advantage; but it goes finally into the possession of one who is merciful towards the poor, and thus it is bestowed in a manner that is pleasing to God (cf. 13:22, Job 22:16f.). The Kerî, which drops the second ב appears to wish to mitigate the sharpness of the distinction of the second idea supposed in its repetition. But Lev. 25:35–37, where an Israelite is forbidden to take usury and interest from his brother, the two are distinguished; and Fleischer rightly remarks that there means usury or interest taken in money, and הנשך usury or interest taken in kind; i.e., of that which one has received in loan, such as grain, or oil, etc., he gives back more than he has received. In other words: נשך is the name of the interest for the capital that is lent, and מְרַבִּית, or, as it is here called תריבית, the more, the addition thereto, the increase (Luther: ubersatz). This meaning of gain by means of lending on interest remains in נשך; but מְרַבִּית, according to the later usus loq., signifies gain by means of commerce, thus business-profit, vid., Baba Mezîa, v. 1. Instead of מְרַבִּית, more recent texts have the Kal וּיְּקֵבוֹצֶנ וּיְּקֵבְצֶנ, לְחָנֵן also is, as 14:31; 19:17, part. Kal, not inf. Poel: ad largiendum pauperibus (Merc., Ewald, Bertheau), for there the person of him who presents the gift is undefined; but just this, that it is another and better-disposed, for whom, without having it in view, the collector gathers his stores, is the very point of the thought.

Proverbs 28:10. A tristich beginning with a participle: He who misleads the upright into an evil way, He shall fall into his own pit; But the innocent shall inherit that which is good.

In the first case, 26:27 is fulfilled: the deceiver who leads astray falls himself into the destruction which he prepared for others, whether he misleads them into sin, and thus mediately prepares destruction for them, or that he does this immediately by enticing them into this or that danger; for בְׁדֶרֶךְ רָע may be understood of the way of wicked conduct, as well as of the experience of evil, of being betrayed, robbed, or even murdered. That those who are misled are called יְׁשָרִים, explains itself in the latter case: that they are such as he ought to show respect towards, and such as deserved better treatment, heightens the measure of his guilt. If we understand being morally led astray, yet may we not with Hitzig here find the “theory” which removes the punishment from the just and lays it on the wicked. The first pages of the Scripture teach that the deceiver does not by any means escape punishment; but certainly the deceiver of the upright does not gain his object, for his diabolical joy at the destruction of such an one is vain, because God again helps him with the right way, but casts the deceiver so much the deeper down.

We take vv. 12–20 together. A proverb regarding riches closes this group, as also the foregoing is closed, and its commencement is related in form and in its contents to v. 2:

The first line of this distich is parallel with 29:2; cf. 11:10a, 11a: when the righteous rejoice, viz., as conquerors (cf. e.g., Ps. 60:8), who have the upper hand, then תִפְׁאָרֶת, bright prosperity, is increased; or as Fleischer, by comparison of the Arab, yawn alazynt (day of ornament = festival day), explains: so is there much festival adornment, i.e., one puts on festival clothes, signum pro re signata: thus all appears festal and joyous, for prosperity and happiness then show themselves forth. רָוָע is adj. and pred. of the substantival clause; Hitzig regards it as the attribute: “the is there great glory;” this supposition is possible (vid., 7:26, and under Ps. 89:51), but here it is purely arbitrary. 28a is parallel with 12b: “if the godless arise, attain to power and prominence, these men are spied out, i.e., as we say, after

The rich man appears in his own eyes to be a wise man, i.e., in his self-delusion he thinks that he is so; but if he has anything to do with a poor man who has intelligence, then he is seen through by him. Wisdom is a gift not depending on any earthly possession.

11 A rich man deems himself wise; But a poor man that hath understanding searcheth him out, Zeph. 1:12, they are searched for as with lamps. יְׁחֻּפ ש אָדָם is to be understood after Obadiah, v. 6, cf. 2:4: men are searched out, i.e., are plundered (in which sense Heidenheim regards חָפֵשׁ as here a transposition from חָפֵשׁ), or, with reference to the secret police of despotism: they are subjected to espionage. But a better gloss is יִסָתֵר אָדָם: the people let themselves be sought for, they keep themselves concealed in the inside of their houses, they venture not out into the streets and public places (Fleischer), for mistrust and suspicion oppress them all; one regards his person and property nowhere safer than within the four walls of his house; the lively, noisy, variegated life which elsewhere rules without, is as if it were dead.

13 He that denieth his sin shall not prosper; But he that acknowledgeth and forsaketh it will obtain mercy.

Proverbs 28:13. Thus is this proverb translated by Luther, and thus it lives in the mouth of the Christian people. He who falsely disowns, or with self-deception excuses, if he does not altogether justify his sins, which are discernible as פְׁשָעִים, has no success; he remains, after Ps. 32, in his conscience and life burdened with a secret ban; but he who acknowledges (the LXX has ἐξηγούμενος instead of ἐξομολογούμενος, as it ought to be) and forsakes (for the remissio does not follow the confessio, if there is not the accompaniment of nova obedientia) will find mercy (ירחם, as Hos. 14:4). In close connection therewith stands the thought that man has to work out his salvation “with fear and trembling” (Phil. 2:12).

14 Well is it with the man who feareth always; But he that is stiff-necked shall fall into mischief.

Proverbs 28:14. The Piel פִחֵד occurs elsewhere only at Isa. 51:13, where it is used of the fear and dread of men; here it denotes the anxious concern with which one has to guard against the danger of evil coming upon his soul. Aben Ezra makes God the object; but rather we are to regard sin as the object, for while the truly pious is one that “fears God,” he is at the same time one that “feareth evil.” The antithesis extends beyond the nearest lying contrast of fleshly security; this is at the same time more or less one who hardens or steels his heart (מקשה, מלק], viz., against the word of God, against the sons of God in his heart, and against the affectionate concern of others about his soul, and as such rushes on to his own destruction (מות ברא, as at 17:20).

Proverbs 28:15. This general ethical proverb is now followed by one concerning the king:

15 A roaring lion and a ravening bear is a foolish ruler over a poor people, i.e., a people without riches and possessions, without lasting sources of help,—a people brought low by the events of war and by calamities. To such a people a tyrant is a twofold terror, like a ravenous monster. The LXX translate מושֵל רָשָע by ὃς τυραννεῖ πτωχὸς ὤν, as if רש had been transferred to this place from v. 3. But their translation of רש, 29:7, wavers between ἀσεβής and πτωχός, and of the bear they make a wolf שְׁאֵב, dialectical דֵיב. שוקֵק designates a bear as lingering about, running hither and thither, impelled by extreme hunger (Venet. ἐπιοῦσα), from שָקֵק = שוּק, to drive, which is said of nimble running, as well as of urging impulses (cf. under Gen. 3:16), viz., hunger.

Proverbs 28:16. Another proverb of the king: O prince devoid of understanding and rich in oppression! He that hateth unrighteous gain continueth long.

The old interpreters from the LXX interpret הַשְׁבִיק as pred. (as also Fleischer: princeps qui intelligentiae habet parum idem oppressions exercet multum); but why did not the author use the word הוּא or הוּא instead of this ambiguous inconvenient? Hitzig regards the first term as a nominative absolute, which does not assume a suffix in the second line. But examples such as 27a, 27:7b, are altogether of a different sort; there occurs a reference that is in reality latent, and only finds not expression; the clause following the nominative is related to it as its natural predicate, but here 15b is an independent clause standing outside of any syntactical relation to 15a. Heidenheim has acknowledged that here there lies before us a proverb not in the form of a mere declaration, but of a warning address, and thus also it is understood by Ewald, Bertheau, Elster, and Zöckler. The accentuation seems to proceed on the same supposition. It is the only passage in the Book of Proverbs where נָגִיד, of the supreme ruler of the people, and where the plur. תְׁבוּנות occur; it is not therefore at all strange if the proverb also has something strange in its formation. Often enough, proverbs are in the form of an address to a son, and generally to their reader; why not also one at least to the king? It is a proverb as when I say: Oh thou reckless, merry fellow! he who laughs much will sometimes weep long. Thus here the address is directed to the prince who is devoid of all wisdom and intelligence, which are necessary for a prince; but on this account the more earnest in exhortation to say to him that only one who hates defrauding the people attains an old age; thus that a prince who plunders the people wantonly shortens his life as a man, and his position as a ruler (cf. מְשַׁמֵּר שְׁנֵיהֶם, 24:22). The Kerî הנא has the tone thrown back on the penult., as the Chethîb שְׁנֵאֵו would also have it, cf. בִּלְמַא, 8:9. The relation of a plur. subj. to a sing. pred. is as at 27:16. Regarding בעז, vid., under 1:19. A confirmation of this proverb directing itself to princes if found in Jer. 22:13–19, the woe pronounced upon Jehoiakim. And a glance at the woe pronounced in Hab. 2:12, shows how easily v. 17 presents itself in connection.

Proverbs 28:17. Luther translates: “A man that doeth violence to the blood of any one,” as if he had read the word עֹשֵׂק. Löwenstein persuades himself that may mean “having oppressed,” and for this refers to רָכֹב, having clothed, in the Mishna coenatus, juratus; but none of all these cases are of the same nature, for always the conduct designated is interpreted as a suffering of that which is done, e.g., the drawing on, as a being clothed; the riding, as a being ridden, etc. Of לִנְּבֶס, in the sense of the oppression of another, there is no such part. pass. as throws the action as a condition back upon the subject. This is valid also against Aben Ezra, who supposes that עָשְׁק, said, may mean oppressing after the forms יְהָדְדִי, אָגוּר, שָדוּד, for of שָכוּן, settled = dwelling, that which has just been said is true; that אָגוּר is equivalent to אֹגֵר, cf. regarding it under 30:1, and that שָדוּד, Ps. 137:8, is equivalent to שֹׁדֵד, is not true. Kimchi adds, under the name of his father (Joseph Kimchi), also שָחוּט, Jer. 9:7 = שֹׁחס; but that “slaughtered” can be equivalent to slaughtering is impossible. Some MSS have the word עָשְׁק, which is not inadmissible, but not in the sense of “hard pressed;” for it is not used of avenging persecution, but: inwardly pressed, for Isa. 38:14 עָשְׁקָה also signifies the anguish of a guilty conscience. Whoever is inwardly bowed down by the blood of a man whom he has murdered, betakes himself to a ceaseless flight to escape the avenger of blood, the punishment of his guilt, and his own inward torment; he flees and finds no rest, till at last the grave (בור) according to the Eastern, i.e., the Babylonian, mode of writing (בר) receives him, and death accomplishes the only possible propitiation of the murderer. The exhortation, “let no one detain him,” does not mean that one should not lay hold on the fugitive; but, since נְתָן does not mean merely to hold fast, but to hold right, that one should not afford him any support, any refuge, any covering or security against the vengeance which pursues him; that one should not rescue him from the arm of justice, and thereby invade and disturb the public administration of justice, which rests on moral foundations; on the other side, the Book of Proverbs, 24:11f., has uttered its exhortation to save a human life whenever it is possible to do so. The proverb lying before us cannot thus mean anything else than that no one should give to the murderer, as such, any assistance; that no one should save him clandestinely, and thereby make himself a partaker of his sin. Grace cannot come into the place of justice till justice has been fully recognised. Human sympathy, human forbearance, under the false title of grace, do not stand in contrast to this justice. We must, however, render not directly as an admonition against that which is immoral; it may also be a declaration of that which is impossible: only let no one support him, let no one seek to deliver him from the unrest which drives him from place to place. This is, however, in vain; he is unceasingly driven about to fulfil his lot. But the translation: nemine eum sustinente (Fleischer), is inadmissible; a mere declaration of a fact without any subjective colouring is never seq. fut.

Proverbs 28:18. The LXX translate by δικαιος (as the accusative of manner), Aquila and Theodotion by τελειος but it may also be translated τελειον or τελειωθηνη, as the object accus. of 2:7. Instead of יִשָּׁק וַרְפָּא, v. 6, there is here יִשָּׁק וְרָפָא, obliquely directed in a double way, or reflex bending himself. At v. 6 we have interpreted the dual רְפָא rightly, thus cannot refer back to one of these two ways; besides, דְּרָכ as fem. is an anomaly, if not a solecism. בְּאָחָת signifies, like the Aram. בֵּית, either all at once (for which the Mish. בֵּית, Aram. בֵּית or once (= בֵּית אָחָת), and it signifies in the passage before us, not: once, aliquando, ass Nolde, with Flacius, explains, but: all at once, i.e., as Geier explains: penitus, sic ut pluribus casibus porro non sit opus. Schultens compares: “Procubuit moriens et humum semel ore momordit.”

Rightly Fleischer: repente totus concidet.

19 He who cultivateth his land is satisfied with bread, And he that graspeth after vanities is satisfied with poverty.

Proverbs 28:20. To this proverb of the cultivation of the land as the sure source of support, the next following stands related, its contents being cognate:

20 A strong, upright man is enriched with blessings; But he that hastens to become rich remains not unpunished.

אִיש אֱמוּנִים, 20:6, as well as אִיש אֱמוּנות, denotes a man bonae fidei; but the former expression refers the description to a constancy and certainty in the relations of favour and of friendship, here to rectitude or integrity in walk and conduct; the plur. refers to the all-sidedness and the ceaselessness of the activity. בְּרָכות is related, as at 10:6: the idea comprehends blessings on the side of God and of man, thus benedictio rei and benedictio voti. On the contrary, he who, without being careful as to the means, is in haste to become rich, remains not only unblessed, but also is not guiltless, and thus not without punishment;
also this הָלַע (e.g., 6:29), frequently met in the Mishle, is, like ברָכֹת, the union of two ideas, for generally the bibl. mode of conception and language comprehends in one, sin, guilt, and punishment.

With a proverb, in the first half of which is repeated the beginning of the second appendix, 24:23, a new group commences:

21 Respect of persons is not good; And for a morsel of bread a man may become a transgressor.

Proverbs 28:21. Line first refers to the administration of justice, and line second—the special generalized—to social life generally. The "Morsel of bread," as example of a bribe by means of which the favour of the judge is purchased, is too low a conception. Hitzig well: "even a trifle, a morsel of bread (1 Sam. 2:36), may, as it awakens favour and dislike within us, thus in general call forth in the will an inclination tending to draw one aside from the line of strict rectitude." Geier compares A Gellius' Noct. Att. i. 15, where Cato says of the Tribune Coelius: Frusto panis condici potest vel ut taceat vel ut loquatur.

Proverbs 28:22. Hitzig renders איש זר [the man of an evil eye] as apos. of the subject; but in that case the phrase would have been איש ע.eyeعين הבוהל lifts (cf. e.g., 29:1). עי ע.eyeعين בוהל (Prov. 23:6) is the jealous, envious, grudging, and at the same time covetous man. It is certainly possible that an envious man consumes himself in ill-humour without quietness, as Hitczig objects; but as a rule there is connected with envy a passionate endeavour to raise oneself to an equal height of prosperity with the one who is the object of envy; and this zeal, proceeding from an impure motive, makes men blind to the fact that thereby they do not advance, but rather degrade themselves, for no blessing can rest on it; discontentedness loses, with that which God has assigned to us, deservedly also that which it has. The pret. בִּעֲרָה, the expression of a fact; the part. בִּעֲרָה, the expression of an habitual characteristic action; the word signifies praeceps (qui praeceps furtur), with the root-idea of one who is unbridled, who is not master of himself (vid., under Ps. 2:5, and above at 20:21). The phrase wavers between נבָּה (Kimchi, under הבהל; and Norzi, under Codd. and old editions) and נבָּהל (thus, e.g., Cod. Jaman); only at Ps. 30:8 נבָּהל stands unquestioned. חֶסֶר [want] is recognised by Symmachus, Syr., and Jerome. To this, as the authentic reading, cf. its ingenious rendering of Bereschith Rabba, c. 58, to Gen. 23:14. The LXX reads, from 22b, that a חֶסֶד, ελεήμων, will finally seize the same riches, according to which Hitzig reads כְּפִיר, disgrace, shame (cf. 25:10).

Proverbs 28:23. It is impossible that aj can be the suffix of בְָר ו; the Talmud, Tamid 28a, refers it to God; but that it signifies: after my (Solomon's) example or precedence (Aben Ezra, Ahron b. Josef, Venet., J. H. Michaelis), is untenable—such a name given by the teacher here to himself is altogether aimless. Others translate, with Jerome: Qui corripit hominem gratiam postea inveniet apud eum magis, quam ille qui per linguae blandimenta decipit, for they partly purpose to read after my sample, partly to give to the meaning of postea. אָחָר ו, Ewald says, is a notable example of an adverb. Hitzig seeks to correct this adv. as at Neh. 3:30f., but where, with Keil, אָחָר ו is to be read; at Josh. 2:7, where the traditional text is accountable. This אָחָר ו may be formed like אֲז ו and מָת ו; but if it had existed, it would not be a ᾠδης ἀγ. The accentuation also, in the passage before us, does not recognise it; but it takes אָחָר ו and together, and how otherwise than that it appears, as Ibn-Jachja in his Grammar, and Immanuel have recognised it, to be a noun terminating in aj. It is a formation, like לִפְׁנ י, 1 Kings 6:10 (cf. Olshausen’s Lehrb. p. 428f.), of the same termination as ש ד י, ח ג י, and in the later Aram.-Heb. ר י, and the like. The variant אָח י, noticed by Heidenheim, confirms it; and the distinction between different classes of men (vid., p. 28) which prevails in the Book of Proverbs favours it. A אדם אחר י is defined, after the manner of Jeremiah (Jer. 7:24): a man who is directed backwards, and not לְׁפָנִים, forwards. Not the renegade— for מוכיח, opp. מוחלף לְשׁוֹן, does not lead to so strong a conception—but the retrograder is thus called in German: Rückläufige [one who runs backwards] or Rückwendige [one who turns backwards], who turns away from the good, the right, and the true, and always departs the farther away from them (Immanuel: going backwards in his nature or his moral relations). This centrifugal direction, leading to estrangement from the fear of Jahve, or, what is the same thing, from the religion of revelation, would lead to entire ruin if unreserved and fearless denunciation did not interpose and seek to restrain it; and he who speaks so truly, openly, and earnestly home to the conscience of one who is on the downward course, gains for himself thereby, on the part of him whom he has directed aright, and on the part of all who are well disposed, better thanks (and also, on the part of God, a better reward, James 5:19f.) than he who, speaking to him, smooths his tongue to say to him who is rich, or in a high position, only that which is agreeable. Laudat adulator, sed non est verus amator. The second half of the verse consists, as often (Ps. 73:8; Job 33:1; cf. Thorath Emeth, p. 51), of only two words, with Mercha Silluk.

24. He who robbeth his father and mother, and saith: It is no wrong, Is a companion of the destroyer.

Proverbs 28:24. The second line is related to 18:9b. Instead of dominus perditionis there found, there is here א ישׁ מְשִיחַ, vir perdens (perditor); the word thus denotes a man who destroys, not from revenge, but from lust, and for the sake of the life of men, and that which is valuable for men; thus the spoiler, the incendiary, etc. Instead of א ישׁ there, here we have ה ירבד in the same sense. He who robs his parents, i.e., takes to himself what belongs to them, and regards his doing so as no particular sin, because he will at last come to inherit it all (cf. 20:21 with 19:26), to be likened to a man who allows himself in all offences against the life and property of his neighbour; for what the deed of such a son wants in external violence, it makes up in its wickedness, because it is a rude violation of the tenderest and holiest demands of duty.

25. The covetous stirreth up strife; But he that trusteth in Jahve is richly comforted.

Proverbs 28:25. Line first is a variation of 15:18α; רוחניופש, רוחו ירבד with רוחניופש, ירבד, 21:4. He is of a wide heart who haughtily puffs himself up, of a wide soul (cf. with Schultens הרוח ירבד, of the opening up of the throat, or of revenge, Isa. 5:14; Hab. 2:5) who is insatiably covetous; for לִב is the spiritual, and נפש the natural, heart of man, according to which the widening of the heart is the overstraining of self-consciousness, and the widening of the soul the overstraining of passion. Rightly the LXX, according to its original text: ἄπληστος ἀνὴρ κινεῖ νείκη. Line second is a variation of 16:20; 29:25. Over against the insatiable is he who trusts in God (ו ב טו, with Gaja to the vocal, concluding the word, for it follows a word accented on the first syllable, and beginning with a guttural; cf. יֵאָ׳, 29:2; יִףָ׳, 29:18), that He will besow upon him what is necessary and good for him. One thus contented is easily satisfied (compare with the word 11:25; 13:4, and with the matter, 10:3; 13:24), is externally as well as internally appeased; while that other, never contented, has no peace, and creates dispeace around him.

26 He that trusteth in his own heart is a fool; But he that walketh in wisdom shall escape. From the promise in the second line, Hitzig concludes that a courageous heart is meant, but when by itself לְבָּב never bears this meaning. He who trusteth in his own heart is not merely one who is guided solely "by his own inconsiderate, defiant impulse to act" (Zöckler). The proverb is directed against a false subjectivity. The heart is that fabricator of thoughts, of which, as of man by nature, nothing good can be said, Gen. 6:5; 8:21. But wisdom is a gift from above, and consists in the knowledge of that which is objectively true, that which is normatively godlike.

Proverbs 28:27. In the first line the pronoun לְבָּב, referring back to the subject noun, is to be supplied, as at 27:7 לְּבָּב. He who gives to the poor has no want (מְבַסָּר), for God's blessing reimburses him richly for what he bestows. He, on the other hand, who veils (מָעֵר, cf. the Hithpa., Isa. 58:7) his eyes so as not to see the misery which calls forth compassion, or as if he did not see the misery which has a claim on his compassion; he is (becomes) rich in curses, i.e., is laden with the curses of those whose wants he cared not for; curses which, because they are deserved, change by virtue of a divine requital (vid., Sir. 4:5f.; Tob. 4:7) into all kinds of misfortunes (ופֶּרֶכֶת, 20a). is constructed after the form מְכַרְוָה, מְקַרְוָה from מַכֵּרָה.

Proverbs 28:28. The following proverb resembles the beginnings 28:2, 12. The proverbs 28:28; 29:1, 2, 3, form a beautiful square grasp, in which the first and third, and the second and fourth, correspond to one another.

Line first is a variation of 12b. Since they who hide themselves are merely called men, people, the meaning of יִרְבּ is probably not this, that the righteous then from all sides come out into the foreground (Hitzig), but that they prosper, multiply, and increase as do plants, when the worms, caterpillars, and the like are destroyed (Fleischer); Löwenstein glosses יִרְבּ by יָגֶדְלו, they become great = powerful, but that would be Elihu's style, Job 33:12, which is not in common use; the names of masters and of those in authority, רְבּ, רְבָּה, רְבּ, רְבּוּ, are all derived from רָבִי, not from רָבָה. The increase is to be understood of the prosperous growth (to become great = to increase, as perhaps also Gen. 21:10) of the congregation of the righteous, which gains in the overthrow of the godless an accession to its numbers; cf. 29:2, and especially 16.
by what follows, for the genit. after אִישׁ אִשָּׁה is, 16:29; 26:21; 29:10; 13:20, the designation of that which proceeds from the subject treated. And since/tool, Ps. 37:15, Job 23:4, denotes counter evidence, and generally rejoinders, thus in the first line a reasoner is designated who lets nothing be said to him, and nothing be shown to him, but contradicts all and every one. Thus e.g., Fleischer: vir qui correptus contradicit et cervicem obdurat. But this interpolated correptus gives involuntary testimony of this, that the nearest lying impression of the אִישׁ תו׳ suffers a change by מ קְׁשֶה עֹרֶף: if we read הקשה (לַב) with ה, the latter then designates the correptio, over against which is placed obstinate boldness (Syr., Targ., Jerome, Luther), and אִישׁ shows itself thus to be gen. objecti, and we have to compare the gen. connection of אִישׁ, as at 18:23; 21:17, or rather at 1 Kings 20:42 and Jer. 15:10. But it is unnecessary, with Hitzig, to limit תו׳ to divine infliction of punishment, and after Hos. 5:9, Isa. 37:3, to read [punishment], which occurs, Ps. 149:7, in the sense of punishment inflicted by man. Besides, we must think first not of actual punishment, but of chastening, reproving words; and the man to whom are spoken the reproving words is one whose conduct merits more and more severe censure, and continually receives correction from those who are concerned for his welfare. Hitzig regards the first line as a conditional clause: “Is a man of punishment stiff-necked?” … This is syntactically impossible. Only מָכָּשֶׁה עֹרֶף could have such force: a man of punishment, if he ... But why then did not the author rather write the words מָכָּשֶׁה וּעֹרֶף? Why then could not מָכָּשֶׁה וּעֹרֶף be a co-ordinated further description of the man? Cf. e.g., Ex. 17:21. The door of penitence, to which earnest, well-meant admonition calls a man, does not always remain open. He who with stiff-necked persistence in sin and in self-delusion sets himself in opposition to all endeavours to save his soul, shall one day suddenly, and without the prospect and possibility of restoration (cf. Jer. 19:11), become a wreck. Audi doctrinam si vis vitare ruinam.

Proverbs 29:2. The general ethical proverb is here followed by one that is political:

2 When the righteous increase, the people rejoice; And when a godless man ruleth, the people mourn.

Regarding בִּרְׁבות צ ד׳ (Aquila rightly, εν τῷ πληθυναι δικαιους), vid., at 28:28. If the righteous form the majority, or are in such numbers that they are the party that give the tone, that form the predominant power among the people (Fleischer, cum incrementa capiunt justi), then the condition of the people is a happy one, and their voice joyful (Prov. 11:10); if, on the contrary, a godless man or (after 28:1) godless men rule, the people are made to sigh (יֵאָנ ח עָם, with the Gaja, according to rule).

“There is reason,” as Hitzig remarks, “why should be placed first with, and then without, the article.” In the first case it denotes the people as those among whom there is such an increase of the righteous; in the second case, the article is wanting, because it is not generally used in poetry; and, besides, its absence makes the second line consist of nine syllables, like the first.

3 A man who loveth wisdom delighteth his father; And he who keepeth company with harlots spendeth his substance.

Line first is a variation of 10:1. אִישׁ אֹהֵב אֶלֶף has, according to rule, the Metheg, cf. 9a. אִישׁ is man, without distinction of age, from childhood (Gen. 4:1) up to ripe old age (Isa. 66:13); love and dutiful relation towards father and mother never cease. Line second reminds of 28:7 (cf. 13:20).

A series of six proverb follows, beginning with a proverb of the king:
4 A king by righteousness bringeth the land to a good condition; But a man of taxes bringeth it down.

Proverbs 29:4. The Hiph. הֶאֱמִיד signifies to make it so that a person or matter comes to stand erect and stand fast (e.g., 1 Kings 15:4); הָרָס, to tear down, is the contrary of building up and extending (Ps. 28:5), cf. מָעָנָה, opp. מָעָר, of the state, 11:11. By איש תְרוֹנִים is meant the king, or a man of this kind; but it is questionable whether as a man of gifts, i.e., one who lets gifts be made to him (Grotius, Fleischer, Ewald, Bertheau, Zöckler), or as a man of taxes, i.e., who imposes them (Midrash, Aben Ezra, Ralbag, Rosenmüller, Hitzig). Both interpretations are possible, for תרוֹנִים means tax (lifting, raising = dedicating), free-will offerings, as well as gifts that are obligatory and required by the laws of nature. Since the word, in the only other place where it occurs, Ezek. 45:13–16, is used of the relation of the people to the prince, and denotes a legally-imposed tax, so it appears also here, in passing over from the religious sphere to the secular, to be meant of taxes, and that according to its fundamental conception of gifts, i.e., such taxes as are given on account of anything, such as the produce of the soil, manufactures, heritages. Thus also is to be understood Aquila’s and Theodotion’s ἀνὴρ ἀφαιρεμάτων, and the rendering also of the Venet. ἑπάνον. A man on the throne, covetous of such gifts, brings the land to ruin by exacting contributions; on the contrary, a king helps the land to a good position, and an enduring prosperity, by the exercise of right, and that in appointing a well-proportioned and fit measure of taxation.

Proverbs 29:5. Fleischer, as Bertheau: vir qui alterum blanditiis circumvenit; but in thełę there does not lie in itself a hostile tendency, an intention to do injury; it interchanges with לֶא, Ps. 36:3, and what is expressed in line second happens also, without any intention on the part of the flatterer: the web of the flatterer before the eyes of a neighbour becomes, if he is caught thereby, a net for him in which he is entangled to his own destruction (Hitzig). הַשָּׁם signifies also, without any external object, 28:23; 2:16, as internally transitive: to utter that which is smooth, i.e., flattering. פְּעָמָיו, as Ps. 57:7 = פְּעָמָיו for which it is the usual Phoenician word.

Proverbs 29:6. Thus the first line is to be translated according to the sequence of the accents, Mahpach, Munach, Munach, Athnach, for the second Munach is the transformation of Dechi; אֶשֶׁר יִשְׁמַח thus, like אֵשׁ וּרְעָה, 28:5, go together, although the connection is not, like this, genitival, but adjectival. But there is also this sequence of the accents, Munach, Dechi, Munach, Athnach, which separates וּרְעָה and וְׁאָשֶׁר. According to this, Ewald translates: “in the transgression of one lies an evil snare;” but in that case the word ought to have been מָקוֹשׁ רְעָה, as at 12:13; for although the numeral sometimes precedes its substantive, yet no other adjective ever does; passages such as Isa. 28:21 and 10:30 do not show the possibility of this position of the words. In this sequence of accents the explanation must be: in the wickedness of a man is the evil of a snare, i.e., evil is the snare laid therein (Böttcher); but a reason why the author did not write מָקוֹשׁ רְעָה would also not be seen there, and thus we must abide by the accentuation איש רָע. The righteous also may fall, yet he is again raised by means of repentance and pardon; but in the wickedness of a bad man lies a snare into which having once fallen, he cannot again release himself from it, 24:16. In the second line, the form יָרוּן, for יָרֹן, is defended by the same metaplastic forms as יָשָׁר, יָרוּץ, Ps. 91:6; רָעָץ, Isa. 42:4; and also that the order of the words is not שֶׁיָּמַת וְרָעָץ (LXX ἐν χαρᾷ καὶ ἐν εὐφροσύνῃ; Luther: freuet sich Proverbs 29:7. The righteous knoweth and recogniseth the righteous claims of people of low estate, i.e., what is due to them as men, and in particular cases; but the godless has no knowledge from which such recognition may go forth (cf. as to the expression, 19:25). The proverb begins like 12:10, which commends the just man's compassion to his cattle; this commends his sympathy with those who are often treated as cattle, and worse even than cattle. The LXX translates ἔριζεν instead of רעש, it makes nonsense of it.

Proverbs 29:8. Isa. 28 shows what we are to understand by עונים ל зло, men to whom nothing is holy, and who despise all authority. The חוף does not signify irretiunt, from חוף (Venet. παγιδιοῦσι, after Kimchi, Aben Ezra, and others), but sufflant, from חוף (לזרע: they stir up or excite the city, i.e., its inhabitants, so that they begin to burn as with flames, i.e., by the dissolution of the bonds of mutual respect and of piety, by the letting loose of passion, they disturb the peace and excite the classes of the community and individuals against each other; but the wise bring it about that the breathings of anger that has broken forth, or is in the act of breaking forth, are allayed. The anger is not that of God, as it is rendered by Jerome and Luther, and as freely translated might mean. The Aram. יף in regard to יפעו in passages such as 6:19.

9 If a wise man has to contend with a fool, He [the fool] rageth and laugheth, and hath no rest.

Proverbs 29:9. Among the old translators, Jerome and Luther take the "wise man" as subject even of the second line, and that in all its three members: vir sapiens si cum stulto contenderit, sive irascatur sive reideat, non inveniet requiem. Thus Schultens, C. B. Michaelis, Umbreit, Ewald, Elster, and also Fleischer: "The doubled Vav is correlative, as at Ex. 21:16, Lev. 5:3, and expresses the perfect sameness in respect of the effect, here of the want of effect. If the wise man, when he disputes with a fool, becomes angry, or jests, he will have no rest, i.e., he will never bring it to pass that the fool shall cease to reply; he yields the right to him, and thus makes it possible for him to end the strife." But the angry passion, and the bursts of laughter alternating and Luther thus also understand the sentence; and Rashi remarks that the phrase is here לachable, for he rests; but mistrusting himself, refers to 1 Sam. 21:23. Ahron b. Josef glosses: to enter into friendship with him. Thus, on account of the contrast, most moderns, interpreting the phrase sensu bono, also Fleischer: probi autem vitam ejus conservare student. The thought is, as 12:6 shows, correct; but the usus loq. protests against this rendering, which can rest only on Ps. 142:5, where, however, the poet does not say איש אויל, but, as here also the usus loq. requires, ילקות. There are only three possible explanations which Aben Ezra enumerates: (1) they seek his, the bloody man’s, soul, i.e., they attempt his life, to take vengeance against him, according to the meaning of the expressions as generally elsewhere, used, e.g., at Ps. 63:10; (2) they revenge his, the guiltless man’s, life (LXX ἐκζητήσουσιν), which has fallen a victim, after the meaning in which elsewhere only בקש דם and דר ש נפש, Gen. 9:5, occur. This second meaning also is thus not in accordance with the usage of the words, and against both meanings it is to be said that it is not in the spirit of the Book of Proverbs to think of the ישרים [the upright, righteous] as executors of the sentences of the penal judicature. There thus remains the interpretation (3): the upright— they (the bloody men) seek the soul of such an one. The transition from the plur. to the sing. is individualizing, and thus the arrangement of the words is like Gen. 47:21: “And the people (as regards them), he removed them to the cities,” Gesen. § 145. 2. This last explanation recommends itself by the consideration that תם וׁישרים and ישרים are cognate as to the ideas they represents,—let one call to mind the common expression תם וׁישרי [perfect and upright, e.g., Job 1:1; 2:3],—that the same persons are meant thereby, and it is rendered necessary by this, that the thought, “bloody men hate the guiltless,” is incomplete; for the same thing may also be said of the godless in general. One expects to hear that just against the guiltless, i.e., men walking in their innocence, the bloody-mindedness of such men is specially directed, and 10b says the same thing; this second clause first brings the contrast to the point aimed at. Lutz is right in seeking to confute Hitzig, but he does so on striking grounds.

11 All his wrath the fool poureth out; But the wise man husheth it up in the background.

Proverbs 29:11. That רעה is not meant here of his spirit (Luther) in the sense of quaeunque in mente habet (thus e.g., Fleischer) the contrast shows, for לְשׁוֹבֵנה does not signify cohībet, for which רָשַׁע (LXX τακτεύται) would be the proper word: רעה thus is not here used of passionate emotion, such as at 16:31; Isa. 25:4; 33:11. רֶשֶׁב is not here equivalent to Arab. sabbah, aivein (Imman., Venet., and Heidenheim), which does not supply an admissible sense, but is equivalent to Arab. sabbakhis, to quiet (Ahron b. Josef: הקפיטאא = κατάπαυεται), the former going back to the root-idea of extending (amplificare), the latter to that of going to a distance, putting away: sabbakh, procul recessit, distitit, hence רֶשֶׁב, Ps. 89:10, and here properly to drive off into the background, synon. בָאָחוּר (Fleischer). But אִישׁ תָּכָכִים (only here with ב) is ambiguous. One might with Rashi explain: but the wise man finally, or afterwards (Symmachus, εἰς ἐκχύσεις; Venet. κατόπιν = κατάπαυεται), appeaseth the anger which the fool lets loose; i.e., if the latter gives vent to his anger, the former appeases, subdues, mitigates it (cf. לְשׁוֹבֵנה, LXX, Isa. 42:23). But it lies still nearer to refer the antithesis to the anger of the wise man himself; he does not give to it unbridled course, but husheth it in the background, viz., in his heart. Thus Syr. and Targ. reading רָשַׁע, the former, besides רֶשֶׁב (reputat eam), so also Aben Ezra: in the heart as the background of the organ of speech. Others explain: in the background, afterward, retrorsum, e.g., Nolde, but to which compescit would be more appropriate than sedat. Hitzig’s objection, that in other cases the expression would be רֶשֶׁב, is answered by this, that with the idea of pressing back (of אֲבָרוֹמָה) is connected. The order of the words also is in favour of the meaning in recessu (cordis). Irae dilatatio mentis pacatio (according to an old proverb).

Proverbs 29:12. They are so because they deceive him, and they become so; for instead of saying the truth which the ruler does not wish to hear, they seek to gain his favour by deceitful flatteries, misrepresentations, exaggerations, falsehoods. Audita rex quae praecipit lex. He does not do this, as the saying is, sicut rex ita greg (Sir. 10:2), in the sense of this proverb of Solomon.

Proverbs 29:13. A variation of 22:2, according to which the proverb is to be understood in both of its parts. That אִישׁ תָּכָכִים is the contrast of רָש and, is rightly supposed in Temura 16b; but Rashi, who brings out here a man of moderate learning, and Saadia, a man of a moderate condition (thus also the Targ. נברא משנתא, after Buxturf, homo mediocris fortunae), err by connecting the word with וּץ. The LXX δυναστῶν καὶ χρεωφειλῶν οὐλλήλως συνελθόντων, which would be more correct inverted, for אִישׁ תָּכָכִים is a man who makes oppressive taxes, high previous payments of interest; the verbal stem תָכֵב, Arab. tak, is a secondary to R. walk, which has the meanings of pressing together, and pressing firm (whence also the middle is named; cf. Arab. samym ḥalaklab, the solid = the middle point of the heart). צר, with the plur. תככים, scarcely in itself denotes interest, תֹוכָכִים the designation איש תככים includes in it a sensible reproach (Syr. afflictor), and a rentier cannot be so called (Hitzig). Luther: Reiche [rich men], with the marginal note: “who can practise usury as they then generally all do?” Therefore Löwenstein understands the second line after 1 Sam. 2:7: God enlighteneth their eyes by raising the lowly and humbling the proud. But this line, after 22:2b, only means that the poor as well as the rich owe the light of life (Ps. 13:4) to God, the creator and ruler of all things,—a fact which has also its moral side: both are conditioned by Him, stand under His control, and have to give to Him an account; or otherwise rendered: God maketh His sun to rise on the low and the high, the evil and the good (cf. Matt. 5:45)—an all-embracing love full of typical moral motive.

Proverbs 29:15. A proverb with שֵבֶט, v. 15, is placed next to one with שופט, but it begins a group of proverbs regarding discipline in the house and among the people:

15 The rod and reproof give wisdom; But an undisciplined son is a shame to his mother. With שֵבֶט [a rod], which 22:15 also commends as salutary, שופט refers to discipline by means of words, which must accompany bodily discipline, and without them is also necessary; the construction of the first line follows in number and gender the scheme 27:9, Zech. 7:7; Ewald, § 339c. In the second line the mother is named, whose tender love often degenerates into a fond indulgence; such a darling, such a mother's son, becomes a disgrace to his mother. Our "ausgelassen," by which Hitzig translates מְׁשֻּלָח, is used of joyfulness unbridled and without self-restraint, and is in the passage before us too feeble a word; מְשֻׁלָּח is used of animals pasturing at liberty, wandering in freedom (Job 39:5; Isa. 16:2); accordingly a child who is kept in by no restraint and no punishment, one left to himself, and thus undisciplined (Luther, Gesenius, Fleischer, and others).

16 When the godless increase, wickedness increaseth; But the righteous shall see their fall.

A Grace Notes study

In Neh. 8:10: "בְּנַחַת רַוחֵּּם (with inward delight). Write with Codd. (also Jaman.) and older editions כָּוִינֵּּחַ, not כָּוִינֵּּחַ; for, except in verbs לֵּּדְּיִירַּם, the suffix of this Hiphil form is not dageshed, e.g., בָּמַּיִי, 1 Kings 2:26; cf. also 1 Kings 22:16 and Ps. 50:8. The LXX understands, after 2 Sam. 1:24 (םֶעָרָּם, μετὰ κόσμου), also here, of ornament; but the word signifies dainty dishes—here, high spiritual enjoyment. As in vv. 15 and 16 a transition was made from the house to the people, so there now follows the proverb of the discipline of children, a proverb of the education of the people:

18 Without a revelation a people becomes ungovernable; But he that keepeth the law, happy is he.

Proverbs 29:18. Regarding the importance of this proverb for estimating the relation of the Chokma to prophecy, vid., p. 29. חָזְון is, according to the sense, equivalent to נְׁבּוּעָה, the prophetic revelation in itself, and as the contents of that which is proclaimed. Without spiritual preaching, proceeding from spiritual experience, a people is unrestrained (טַוְּרַּה, vid., regarding the punctuation at 28:25, and regarding the fundamental meaning, at 1:25); it becomes פָּרֻּּע, disorderly, Ex. 32:25; wild und wüst, as Luther translates. But in the second line, according to the unity of the antithesis, the words are spoken of the people, not of individuals. It is therefore not to be explained, with Hitzig: but whoever, in such a time, nevertheless holds to the law, it is well with him! Without doubt this proverb was coined at a time when the preaching of the prophets was in vogue; and therefore this, "but whoever, notwithstanding," is untenable; such a thought at that time could not at all arise; and besides this, תָוַרַּה is in the Book of Proverbs a moveable conception, which is covered at least by the law in contradistinction to prophecy. Tôra denotes divine teaching, the word of God; whether that of the Sinaic or that of the prophetic law (2 Chron. 15:3, cf. e.g., Isa. 1:10). While, on the one hand, a people is in a dissolute condition when the voice of the preacher, speaking from divine revelation, and enlightening their actions and sufferings by God’s word, is silent amongst them (Ps. 74:9, cf. Amos 8:12); on the other hand, that same people are to be praised as happy when they show due reverence and fidelity to the word of God, both as written and as preached. That the word of God is preached among a people belongs to their condition of life; and they are only truly happy when they earnestly and willingly subordinate themselves to the word of God which they possess and have the opportunity of hearing.

19 With words a servant will not let himself be bettered; For he understandeth them, but conformeth not thereto.

Proverbs 29:19. The Niph. נָסְרַּה becomes a so-called tolerative, for it connects with the idea of happening that of reaching its object: to become truly bettered (taught in wisdom, corrected), and thus to let himself be bettered. With mere words this is not reached; the unreasonable servant needs, in order to be set right, a more radical means of deliverance. This assertion demands confirmation; therefore is the view of von Hofmann (Schriftbew. ii. 2. 404) improbable, that 19b has in view a better-disposed servant: supposing that he is intelligent, in which case he is admonished without cause, then the words are also lost: he will let them pass over him in silence without any reply. This attempted explanation is occasioned by this, that פָּרּוּע can signify nothing else than a response in words. If this were correct, then without doubt its fundamental meaning would correspond with עֹלַּה; for one explains, with Löwenstein, “for he perceives it, and may not answer,” i.e., this, that a reply cut off frustrates the moral impression. Or also: for he understands it, but is silent,—in praefractum se silentium configit (Schultens); and thus it is with the ancients (Rashi). But why should not itself be the expression of this want of any consequences? (Meiri, after Ex. 10:3, but why as an answer in words and not also a response by act (Stuart: a practical answer)? Thus the LXX ἐὰν γὰρ καὶ νοὴσῃ ἀλλ᾽ οὐχ ὑπακούσεται, according to which Luther: for although he at once understands it, he does not yet take it to himself. That is true, and the speaking or silence is not wise, for the LXX had no answer to the question as to the meaning of μνήμη (outrooted) is not clear; the rendering of Jerome: postea sentiet eum contumacem, is perhaps mediated by the ἔσται γογγυσμὸς of Symmachus, who combines with ἤ τι, Niph. γογγύζειν. The סתורה of the LXX, with the Syr., von Hofmann has sought to justify (Schriftbew. ii. 2. 404), for he derives מונון = מָמון from נון. We must then punctuate מָמון; but perhaps the LXX derived the word from נון = מָסֹרֶת, whether they pronounced it מָסֹר or מָסֹר. To follow them is not wise, for the formation of the word is precarious; one does not see with the speaker of this proverb, to whom the language presented a fulness of synonyms for the idea of complaint, meant by using this peculiar word. Linguistically these meanings are impossible: of Jerome, dominus = מָמון (Ahron b. Josef, Meiri, and others); or: the oppressor = מָמון (Johlson); or: one who is sick = מָמון (Euchel). and Ewald’s “undankbar” [unthankful], derived from the Arabic, is a mere fancy, since (Arab.) manuwan does not mean one who is unthankful, but, on the contrary, one who upbraids good deeds shown. The ancients are in the right track, who explain the word after the verb מָסֹר, Ps. 72:17 = מָסֹר = מָסֹר; the Venet., herein following Kimchi, also adopts the nominal form, for it translates (but without perceptible meaning) γογγυσμός. Luther’s translation is fortunate: “If a servant is tenderly treated from youth up, He will finally reach the place of a child.

Proverbs 29:21. The LXX had no answer to the question as to the meaning of μνήμη. On the other hand, for מָסֹר, the meaning to fondle; delicatius enutrire, is perfectly warranted by the Aram. and Arab. The Talmud, Succa 52b, resorts to the alphabet אס预报 in order to reach a meaning for מָמון. How the Targ. comes to translate the word by מִסָּר (outrooted) is not clear; the rendering of Jerome: postea sentiet eum contumacem, is perhaps mediated by the ἔσται γογγυσμὸς of Symmachus, who combines with ἤ τι, Niph. γογγύζειν. The סתורה of the LXX, with the Syr., von Hofmann has sought to justify (Schriftbew. ii. 2. 404), for he derives מונון = מָמון from נון. We must then punctuate מָמון; but perhaps the LXX derived the word from נון = מָסֹר, whether they pronounced it מָסֹר or מָסֹר. To follow them is not wise, for the formation of the word is precarious; one does not see with the speaker of this proverb, to whom the language presented a fulness of synonyms for the idea of complaint, meant by using this peculiar word. Linguistically these meanings are impossible: of Jerome, dominus = מָמון (Ahron b. Josef, Meiri, and others); or: the oppressor = מָמון (Johlson); or: one who is sick = מָמון (Euchel). and Ewald’s “undankbar” [unthankful], derived from the Arabic, is a mere fancy, since (Arab.) manuwan does not mean one who is unthankful, but, on the contrary, one who upbraids good deeds shown. Luther’s translation is fortunate: “If a servant is tenderly treated from youth up, He will finally reach the place of a child.

The ideas represented in modern Jewish translations: that of a son (e.g., Solomon: he will at last be the son) and that of a master (Zunz), are here united. But how the idea of a son (from the verb נֶן), at the same time that of a master, may arise, is not to be perceived in the same way as with Junker and the Spanish infante and hidalgo; rather with כָּפִיף, as the ironical naming of the son (little son), the idea of a weakling (de Wette) may be connected. The state of the matter appears as follows:—the Verb נֶן has the meanings of luxuriant growth, numerous propagation; the fish has from this the Aram. name of נון, like the Heb. דָּג, which also means luxuriant, exuberant increase (vid., at Ps. 72:17). From this is derived נון, which designates the offspring as a component part of a kindred, as well as נִין, which, according as the ב is interpreted infin. or local, means either this, that it sprouts up luxuriantly, the abundant growth, or also the place of luxuriant sprouting, spawning. The subject in נין might be the fondled one; but it lies nearer, however, to take him who fondles as the subject, as in 21α.

טַחְרִיתוֹ is either adv. accus. for הֲרִיתוֹ, or, as we preferred at 23:32, it is the subj. introducing, after the manner of a substantival clause, the following sentence as its virtual predicate: “one has fondled his servant from his youth up, and his (that of the one who fondles) end is: he will become a place of increase.” The master of the house is though of along with his house; and the servant as one who, having become a man, presents his master with קָנָן בָּה, who are spoilt scapegraces, as he himself has become by the pampering of his master. There was used in the language of the people, נֵין for נֶן, in the sense on which we name a degenerate son a “Schönes Früchtchen” [pretty little fruit]; and נִין is a place (house) where many live; and a man (master of a house) who has many of them is one whose family has increased over his head. One reaches the same meaning if כָּפִיף is rendered more immediately as the place or state of growing, increasing, luxuriating. The sense is in any case: he will not be able, in the end, any more to defend himself against the crowd which grows up to him from this his darling, but will be merely a passive part of it. The following group begins with a proverb which rhymes by means of the foregoing, and extends on to the end of this Hezekiah collection:

Proverbs 29:22. Line first is a variation of 15:18α and 28:25α and נון here means anger, not the nose, viz., the expanded nostrils (Schultens). In the sense the μοίρα is, after 14:29; 28:16; 20:27, the governed genitive; Hitzig construes it in the sense of αἱ ἐμφανείς, Ps. 19:2, with ἐγένετο, yet, but one does not say ἐγενετο, and that which is true of ἐρως, that, after the manner of a numeral, it can precede its substantive (vid., under Ps. 7:26; 89:51), cannot be said of ᾄρ. Much (great) in wickedness denotes one who heaps up many wicked actions, and burdens himself with greater guilt (cf. מְשֻׁע, v. 16). The wrathful man stirreth up (vid., under 15:18) strife, for he breaks through the mutual relations of men, which rest on mutual esteem and love, and by means of his passionate conduct he makes enemies of those against whom he thinks that he has reason for being angry; that on account of which he is angry can be settled without producing such hostility, but passion impels him on, and misrepresents the matter; it embitters hearts, and tears them asunder. The LXX has, instead of מְשֻׁע, ἐξώρυξεν, of dreaming, וְדָד (Prov. 16:27). V. 23 passes from anger to haughtiness: A man’s pride will bring him low; But the lowly attaineth to honour.

Thus we translate התמה אב (Lat. honorem obtinet) in accord with 11:16, and 16:19, where, however, שְׁפֶל is not adj. as here, but inf. The haughty man obscures the honour which he has by this, that he boasts immeasurably of it, and aspires yet more after it; the lowly man, on the other hand, obtains honour without his seeking it, honour before God and before men, which would be of no worth were it not connected with the honour before God. The LXX: τοὺς δὲ ταπεινόφρονας ἐρείδει δόξῃ κύριος. This κύριος is indeed not contrary to the sense, but it is opposed to the style. Why the 24th verse should now follow is, as regards the contents and the expression, hard to say; but one observes that vv. 22–27 follow each other, beginning with the successive letters of the alphabet א (ב), ג, ח, מ, נ, ת (ת).

24 He that taketh part with a thief hateth himself; He heareth the oath and confesseth not.

Proverbs 29:24. Hitzig renders the first member as the pred. of the second: "he who does not bring to light sins as require an atonement (Lev. 5:1ff.), but shares the secret of them with the sinner, is not better than one who is a partner with a thief, who hateth himself." The construction of the verse, he remarks, is not understood by any interpreter. It is not, however, so cross,—for, understood as Hitzig thinks it ought to be, the author should have expressed the subject by שָׁמַע אֵלוהִים ולא יִגְדָּה, but is simple as the order of the words and the verbal form require it. The oath is, after Lev. 5:1, that of the judge who adjures the partner of the thief by God to tell the truth; but he conceals it, and burdens his soul with a crime worthy of death, for from a concealer he becomes in addition a perjured man.

25 Fear of man bringeth a snare with it; But he that trusteth in Jahve is advanced.

Proverbs 29:25. It sounds strange, Hitzig remarks, that here in the Book of an Oriental author one should be warned against the fear of man. It is enough, in reply to this, to point to Isa. 51:12ff. One of the two translations in the LXX (cf. Jerome and Luther) has found this “strange” thought not so strange as not to render it, and that in the gnomic aorist: φοβηθέντες καὶ ἀισχυνθέντες ἀνθρώπους ὑπεσκέφθησαν. And why should not מַרְדָּה אָדָם be able to mean the fear of man (cowardice)? Perhaps not so that מַרְדָּה אָדָם means to frighten men, as in 1 Sam. 14:15.

26 Fear of man, a trembling of God; cf. Ps. 64:2; 13:15; the fear occasioned by the enemy, although this connection, after Deut. 2:25, can also mean fear of the enemy (gen. objecti). To מַרְדָּה, occasioned = brings as a consequence with it, cf. 10:10; 13:15; the synallage generis is as at 12:25a: it is at least strange with fem. infinit. and infinitival nouns, 16:16; 25:14; Ps. 73:28; but מַרְדָּה (trembling) is such a nom. actionis, Ewald, § 238a. Regarding יִשְׁגִּב (for which the LXX σωθήσεται, and LXX εὐφρανθήσεται = יִשָּׁחֲךָ), vid., at 18:10. He who is put into a terror by a danger with which men threaten him, so as to do from the fear of man what is wrong, and to conceal the truth, falls thereby into a snare laid by himself—it does not help him that by this means he has delivered himself from the danger, for he brands himself as a coward, and sins against God, and falls into an agony of conscience (reproach and anguish of heart) which is yet worst to bear than the evil wherewith he was threatened. It is only confidence in God that truly saves. The fear of man plunges him into yet greater suffering than that from which he would escape; confidence in God, on the other hand, lifts a man internally, and at last externally, above all his troubles.

Proverbs 29:26. A similar gen. connection to that between מַרְדָּה אָדָם exists between מִשְׁפַּט אֶמֶם: Many seek the countenance of the ruler; Yet from Jahve cometh the judgment of men.

Line first is a variation of 19:6a, cf. 1 Kings 10:24. It lies near to interpret ישן as gen. obj: the judgment regarding any one, i.e., the estimating of the man, the decision regarding him; and it is also possible, for מִשְׁפַּט, Ps. 17:2, may be understood of the judgment which I have, as well as of the judgment pronounced regarding me (cf. Lam. 3:59). But the usage appears to think of the genit. after משפט as subjective, e.g., 16:33, of the decision which the lot brings, Job 36:6, the right to which the poor have a claim; so that thus in the passage before us משפט איש means the right of a man, as that which is proper or fitting to him, the judgment of a man, as that to which as appropriate he has a claim (LXX τὸ δίκαιον ἄνδρι). Whether the genit. be rendered in the one way or the other, the meaning remains the same: it is not the ruler who finally decides the fate and determines the worth of a man, as they appear to think who with eye-service court his favour and fawn upon him.

Proverbs 29:27. In all the other proverbs which begin with תועֲב ת, e.g., 11:20, יהוה follows as genit., here צ דִיקִי עָוֶל, whose judgment is like that of God. עָוֶל is an abhorrence to them, not as a man, but just as of such a character; עָוֶל is the direct contrast to יֹשֶר. The righteous sees in the villainous man, who boldly does that which is opposed to morality and to honour, an adversary of his God; on the other hand, the godless sees in the man that walketh uprightly (ךְיָש ר־דָרֶ, as at Ps. 37:14) his adversary, and the condemnation of himself.

With this doubled ת the Book of Proverbs, prepared by the men of Hezekiah, comes to an end. It closes, in accordance with its intention announced at the beginning, with a proverb concerning the king, and a proverb of the great moral contrasts which are found in all circles of society up to the very throne itself.

Proverbs 30

First Appendix to the Second Solomonic Collection of Proverbs

Proverbs 30:1. The title of this first appendix, according to the text lying before us, is: “The words of Agur the son of Jakeh, the utterance.”

This title of the following collection of proverbs is limited by Olewejored; and separ�, separated from the author’s name by Rebia, is interpreted as a second inscription, standing on one line with רַבִּי, as particularizing that first. The old synagogue tradition which, on the ground of the general title 1:1, regarded the whole Book of Proverbs as the work of Solomon, interpreted the words, “Agur the son of Jakeh,” as an allegorical designation of Solomon, who appropriated the words of the Tôra to the king, Deut. 17:17, and again rejected them, for he said: God is with me, and I shall not do it (viz., take many wives, without thereby suffering injury), Schemôth rabba, c. 6. The translation of Jerome: Verba congregantis filii Vomentis, is the echo of this Jewish interpretation. One would suppose that if “Agur” were Solomon’s name, “Jakeh” must be that of David; but another interpretation in Midrash Mishle renders בן (“son”) as the designation of the bearer of a quality, and sees in “Agur” one who girded (אגר = חגר) his loins for wisdom; and in “son of Jakeh” one free from sin (נוֹכֵר מִכָּל צֶעֶה ועֹון). In the Middle Ages this mode of interpretation, which is historically and linguistically absurd, first began to prevail; for then the view was expressed by several (Aben Ezra, and Meîri the Spaniard) that Agur ben Jakeh was a wise man of the time of Solomon. That of Solomon’s time, they thence conclude (blind to 25:1) that Solomon collected together these proverbs of the otherwise unknown wise man. In truth, the age of the man must remain undecided; and at all events, the time of Hezekiah is the fixed period from which, where possible, it is to be sought. The name “Agur” means the gathered utterance of the prophetic spirit. But, on the other hand, what follows begins with the confession of human weakness and short-sightedness; and, moreover, we read proverbs not of a divine but altogether of a human and even of a decaying spiritual stamp, besides distinguished from the Solomonic proverbs by this, that the I of the poet, which remains in the background, here comes to the front. This utterance of prophetic utterances does not at all harmonize with the following string of proverbs. It does not so harmonize on this account, because one theme does not run through these proverbs which the sing.
requires. It comes to this, that never occurs by itself in the sense of a divine, a solemn utterance, without having some more clearly defining addition, though it should be only a demonstrative טפם (Isa. 14:28). But what author, whether poet or prophet, would give to his work the title of טפם, which in itself means everything, and thus nothing! And now: the utterance—what can the article at all mean here? This question has remained unanswered by every interpreter. Ewald also sees himself constrained to clothe the naked word; he does it by reading together גבר, and translating the “sublime saying which he spoke.” But apart from the consideration that Jer. 23:31 proves nothing for the use of this use of טפם, the form is supported by 2 Sam. 23:1 (cf. v. 5 with 2 Sam. 22:31); and besides, the omission of the relative pronoun (ניָּמָא), would be an inaccuracy not at all to be expected on the brow of this gnomology (vid., Hitzig). If we leave the altogether unsuspected undisturbed, will be a nearer definition of the name of the author. The Midrash has a right suspicion, for it takes together Hamassa and Agur ben Jakeh, and explains: of Agur the son of Jakeh, who took upon himself the yoke of the most blessed. The Graecus Venetus comes nearer what is correct, for it translates: λόγοι Αγούρου υἱέως Ασκάκως τοῦ Μασάου.

We connect 31:1, where מֶלֶךְ מֶשָא, “Lemuel (the) king,” is a linguistic impossibility, and thus, according to the accentuation lying before us, מֶשָא also are to be connected together; thus it appears that מֶשָא must be the name of a country and a people. It was Hitzig who first made this Columbus-egg to stand. But this is the case only so far as he recognised מֶשָא a Lemuel, the king of Massa, and recognised this Massa also in 30:1 (vid., his dissertation: Das Königreich Massa [the kingdom of Massa], in Zeller's Theolog. Jahrb. 1844, and his Comm.), viz., the Israelitish Massa named in Gen. 25:14 (= 1 Chron. 1:30) along with Dumah and Tema. But he proceeds in a hair-splitting way, and with ingenuous hypothesis, without any valid foundation. That this Dumah is the Dumat el-jendel (cf. under Isa. 21:11) lying in the north of Nejed, near the southern frontiers of Syria, the name and the founding of which is referred by the Arabians to Dûm the son of Ishmael, must be regarded as possible, and consequently Massa is certainly to be sought in Northern Arabia. But if, on the ground of 1 Chron. 4:42f., he finds there a Simeonitic kingdom, and finds its origin in this, that the tribe of Simeon originally belonging to the ten tribes, and thus coming from the north settled in the south of Judah, and from thence in the days of Hezekiah, fleeing before the Assyrians, were driven farther and farther in a south-east direction towards Northern Arabia; on the contrary, it has been shown by Graf (The Tribe of Simeon, a contribution to the history of Israel, 1866) that Simeon never settled in the north of the Holy Land, and according to existing evidences extended their settlement from Negeb partly into the Idumean highlands, but not into the highlands of North Arabia. Hitzig thinks that there are found traces of the Massa of Agur and Lemuel in the Jewish town of מְלָשָא, of Benjamin of Tudela, lying three days' journey from Chebar, and in the proper name (Arab.) Malsá (smooth), which is given to a rock between Tema and Wady el-Kora (vid., Kosegarten’s Chestom, p. 143); but how notched his ingenuity here is need scarcely be shown. By means of more cautious combinations Mühlau has placed the residence of Agur and Lemuel in the Hauran mountain range, near which there is a Dumah, likewise a Têmâ; and in the name of the town Mismîje, lying in the Lejâ, is probably found the Mishma which is named along with Massa, Gen. 25:14; and from this that is related in 1 Chron. 5:9f., 18–22, of warlike expeditions on the part of the tribes lying on the east of the Jordan against the Hagarenes and their allies Jetur, Nepish, and Nodab, it is with certainty concluded that in the Hauran, and in the wilderness which stretches behind the Euphrates towards it, Israelitish tribes have had their abode, whose territory had been early seized by the trans-Jordanic tribes, and was held “until the captivity,” 1 Chron. 5:22, i.e., till the Assyrian deportation. This designation of time is almost as unfavourable to Mühlau’s theory of a Massa in the Hauran, inhabited by Israelitish tribes from the other side, as the expression “to Mount Seir” (1 Chron. 4:42) is to Hitzig’s North Arabian Massa inhabited by Simeonites. We must leave it undecided whether Dumah and Têmâ, which the Toledoth of Ismael name in the neighbourhood of Massa, are the east Hauran districts now existing; or as Blau (Deut. Morgl. Zeit. xxv. 539), with Hitzig, supposes, North Arabian districts (cf. Genesis, p. 377, 4th ed.), “Be it as it may, the contents and the language of this difficult piece almost necessarily point to a region bordering on the Syro-Arabian waste. Ziegler’s view (Neue Uebers. der Denksprüche Salomo’s, 1791, p. 29), that Lemuel was probably an emir of an Arabian tribe in the east of Jordan, and that a wise Hebrew translated those proverbs of the emir into Hebrew, is certainly untenable, but does not depart so far from the end as may appear at the first glance” (Mühlau).

If the text-punctuation lying before us rests on the false supposition that Massa, 30:1; 31:1, is a generic name, and not a proper name, then certainly the question arises whether מֶשָא
should not be used instead of מָשָא, much more מֵשָא, which is suggested as possible in the article "Sprüche," in Herzog's Encycl. xiv. 694. Were מֵשָא, Gen. 10:30, the region מֵסִיִּנָה, on the northern border of the Persian Gulf, in which Apamea lay, then it might be said in favour of this, that as the histories of Muhammed and of Benjamin of Tudela prove the existence of an old Jewish occupation of North Arabia, but without anything being heard of מָשָא, the Talmud bears testimony to a Jewish occupation of Mesene, and particularly of Apamea; and by the mother of Lemuel, the king of Mesha, one may think of Helena, celebrated in Jewish writings, queen of Adiabene, the mother of Monabaz and Izates. But the identity of the Mesha of the catalogue of nations with מֵסִיִּנָה is uncertain, and the Jewish population of that place dates at least from the time of the Sassanides to the period of the Babylonian exile. We therefore hold by the Ishmaelite Massa, whether North Arabian or Hauranian; but we by no means subscribe Mühlau's non possumus non negare, Agurum et Lemuëlem proseytos e paganis, non Israelitas fuisse. The religion of the tribes descended from Abraham, so far as it had not degenerated, was not to be regarded as idolatrous. It was the religion which exists to the present day among the great Ishmaelite tribes of the Syrian desert as the true tradition of their fathers under the name of Dîn Ibrâhîm (Abraham's religion); which, as from Wetzstein, we have noted in the Commentary on Job (p. 387 and elsewhere), continues along with Mosaism among the nomadic tribes of the wilderness; which shortly before the appearance of Christianity in the country beyond the Jordan, produced doctrines coming into contact with the teachings of the gospel; which at that very time, according to historic evidences (e.g., Mējāsini's chronicles of the Ka'be), was dominant even in the towns of Hīgāz; and in the second century after Christ, was for the first time during the repeated migration of the South Arabian again oppressed by Greek idolatry, and was confined to the wilderness; which gave the mightiest impulse to the rise of Islam, and furnished its best component part; and which towards the end of the last century, in the country of Nged, pressed to a reform of Islam, and had as a result the Wahabite doctrine. If we except 30:5f., the proverbs of Agur and Lemuel contain nothing which may not be conceived from a non-Israelitish standpoint on which the author of the Book of Job placed himself. Even 30:5f. is not there (cf. Job 6:10; 23:12) without parallels. When one compares Deut. 4:2; 13:1, and 2 Sam. 22:31 = Ps. 18:31 (from which v. 5 of the proverbs of Agur is derived, with the change of מֵשָא into מֵשָא), Agur certainly appears as one intimately acquainted with the revealed religion of Israel, and with their literature. But must we take the two Massites therefore, with Hitzig, Mühlau, and Zöckler, as born Israelites? Since the Bible history knows no Israelitish king outside of the Holy Land, we regard it as more probable that King Lemuel and his countryman Agur were Ishmaelites who had raised themselves above the religion of Abraham, and recognised the religion of Israel as its completion.

If we now return to the words of 30:1a, Hitzig makes Agur Lemuel's brother, for he vocalizes אָגוּר בִּן־יֳקָהָהּ מָשָא, i.e., Agur the son of her whom Massa obeys. Ripa and Björck of Sweden, and Stuart of America, adopt this view. But supposing that יָק is connected with the accusative of him who is obeyed, ו, as the representative of such an attributive clause, as of its virtual genitive, is elsewhere without example; and besides, it is unadvisable to explain away the proper name יָקֶה, which speaks for itself. There are two other possibilities of comprehending מָשָא, without the change, or with the change of a single letter. Wetzstein, on 31:1, has said regarding Mühlau's translation "King of Massa:” "I would more cautiously translate, 'King of the Massans,' since this interpretation is unobjectionable; while, on the contrary, this is not terra Massa, nor urbs Massa. It is true that the inhabitants of Massa were not pure nomads, after 30 and 31, but... probably, like the other tribes of Israel, they were half nomads, who possessed no great land as exclusive property, and whose chief place did not perhaps bear their name. The latter may then have been as rare in ancient times as it is in the present day. Neither the Sammar, the Harb, the Muntefik, nor other half nomads whom I know in the southern parts of the Syrian desert, have any place which bears their name. So also, it appears, the people of Uz (עוץ), which we were constrained to think of as a dominant, firmly-settled race, since it had so great a husbandman as Job, possessed no court. Only in certain cases, where a tribe resided for many centuries in and around a place, does the name of this tribe appear to have remained attached to it. Thus from גֵּרֵי אֲדֹנִי, ‘the low-country of the Dumahns,’ or כְּרִיתוֹת אֲדֹנִי, ‘the city of Dumahns,’ as also from כְּרִית תֵּימָא, ‘the city of the Temans,’ gradually there arose (probably not till the decline and fall of this tribe) a city of Dumah, a haven of Midian, and the like, so that the primary meaning of the name came to be lost.” It is clear that, from the existence of an Ishmaelite tribe מִמְשַׁא, there does not necessarily follow a similar name given to a region. The conj. מְשַׁא, for מְשַׁא (vid., Herzog’s Encycl. xiv. 702), has this against it, that although it is good Heb., it directly leads to this conclusion (e.g., 2 Sam. 23:20, 29, cf. 1 Kings 17:1). Less objectionable is Bunsen’s and Böttcher’s מְשַׁא. But perhaps also may have the same signification; far rather at least than that which Malbim, after מְשַׁא מְשַׁא (1 Chron. 15:27, introduced with the LXX ἄρχον τοῦ φῶς: “We ought then to compare 2 Sam. 23:24, וְׁאֻּכָל לִי אֵלֶה, a connection in which, after the analogy of such Arabic connections as къису ‘aylana, Kais of the tribe of ‘Ailân (Ibn Coteiba, 13 and 83), or مَا نَا ‘ayayin, Ma’n of the tribe of Tay, i.e., Ma’n belonging to this tribe, as distinguished from other men and families of this name (Schol. Hamasae 144.3), מִבֵית לחם is thought of as genit” (Mühlau). That מִבֵית לחם is (instead of בֵּית הָלָה תִּתְאִים (instead of בֵּית לָהֹמ) is easily changed, with Thenius and Wellhausen, after 1 Chron. 11:26, into בֵּית לוֹם, and in itself it is not altogether homogeneous, because without the article. Yet it may be supposed that instead of מְשַׁא, on account of the appellat. of the proper name (the lifting up, elatio), the word מְשַׁא might be also employed. And since מְשַׁא, along with אָנָדִיר, forms, as it were, one compositum, and does not at all destroy the regulating force of מְשַׁא, the expression is certainly, after the Arabic usus log., to be thus explained: The words of Agur the son of Jakeh, of the tribe (the country) of Massa. The second line of this verse, as it is punctuated, is to be rendered:

The saying of the man to Ithiel, to Ithiel and Uchal, not ḫal; for, since Athias and van der Hooght, the incorrect form ḫal has become current. J. H. Michaelis has the right form of the word לְׁאִיתִיאֵל. Thus, with ד raphatum, it is to be read after the Masora, for it adds to this word the remark לְׁאִיתִיאֵל, and counts it among the forty-eight words sometimes written defectively without ג (vid., this list in the Masora finalis, 27 b, Col. 4); and since it only remarks the absence of the letter lengthening the word where no dagesh follows the vocal, it thus supposes that the ג has no dagesh, as it is also found in Codd. (also Jaman.) written with the Raphe. פָיְאַל is doubly accentuated; the Tarcho represents the Metheg, after the rule Thorath Emeth, p. 11. The ג after לְׁאִיתִיאֵל is, in the sense of the punctuation, the same dat. as in מְשַׁא, Ps. 110:1, and has an apparent right in him who asks דְׁאָלֵל יִתְאִים in the 4th verse. Ithiel and Uchal must be, after an old opinion, sons, or disciples, or contemporaries, of Agur. Thus, e.g., Gesenius, in his Lex. under אֶדֹנִי, {אָדֹנִי}, where as yet his reference to Neh. 11:7 is wanting. אֵיתִיאֵל is rendered by Jefet and other Karaïtes, “there is a God” = אָלֹהֶים א-לוֹ ה, but it is perhaps equivalent to אָלֹהֶים א-לוֹ, “God is with me,” as for אָלֹהֶים א-לוֹ, the form אָלֹהֶים א-לוֹ is also found. Nowhere occurs as a proper name; but in the region of proper names, everything, or almost everything, is possible. Ewald sees in 1b–14 a dialogue: in vv. 2–4 the וְאֻכָל, i.e., as the word appears to him, the rich, haughty mocker, who has worn out his life, speaks; and in 5–14 the “Mitmirgott” [= God with me], or, more fully, “Mitmirgott-sobinichstark” [= God with me, so am I strong], i.e., the pious, humble man answers. “The whole,” he remarks, “is nothing but poetical; and it is poetical also that this discourse of mockery is called an elevated strain.” But (1) אָלֹהֶים א-לוֹ is a harmless word; and in Num. 24:3, 15, 2 Sam. 23:1, it is a solemn, earnest one; (2) a proper name, consisting of two clauses connected by Vav, no matter whether it be an actual or a symbolical name, is not capable of being authenticated; Ewald, § 274b, recognises in אָלֹהֶים א-לוֹ, 1 Chron. 25:4, the naming, not of one son of Heman, but of two; and (3) it would be a very forced, inferior poetry if the poet placed one half of the name in one line, and then, as if constrained to take a new breath, gave the other half of it in a second line. But, on the other hand, that אָלֹהֶים א-לוֹ and אָלֹהֶים א-לוֹ are the names of two different persons, to whom the address of the man is directed, is attested by the, in this case aimless, anadiplosis, the here unpoeical parallelism with reservation. The repetition, as Fleischer remarks, of the name Ithiel, which may rank with Uchal, as the son of disciple of Agur, has probably its reason only as this, that one placed a second more extended phrase simply along with the shorter. The case is different; but Fleischer’s supposition, that the poet himself cannot have thus written, is correct. We must not strike out either of the two אָלֹהֶים א-לוֹ; but the supposed proper names must be changed as to their vocalization into a declaratory clause.

A principal argument lies in v. 2, beginning with אָלֹהֶים א-לוֹ: this word supposes a clause which it established; for, with right, Mühlau maintains that א-לוֹ, in the affirmative sense, which, by means of aposiopesis, proceeds from the confirmative, may open the conclusion and enter as confirmatory into the middle of the discourse (e.g., Isa. 32:13), but cannot stand abruptly at the commencement of a discourse (cf. under Isa. 15:1 and 7:9). But if we now ask how it is to be vocalized, there comes at the same time into the sphere of investigation the striking phrase נְנָאֵמ ה גֶבֶר. This phrase all the Greek interpreters attest by their rendering, τάδε λέγει ὁ ἀνήρ (Venet. Φησίν ἀνήρ); besides, this is to be brought forward from the wilderness of the old attempts at a translation, that the feeling of the translators strives against the recognition in אָלֹהֶים א-לוֹ of a second personal name: the Peshito omits it; the Targ. translates it, after the Midrash, by אָלֹהֶים א-לוֹ אָלֹ-הָא (I may do it); as Theodotion, καὶ δυνήσομαι, which is probably also meant by the καὶ συνήσομαι (from συνείναι, to be acquainted with) of the Venet.; the LXX with καὶ παύομαι and Aquila, καὶ τέλεσον (both from the verb καὶ τέλεσον). As an objection to אָלֹהֶים א-לוֹ is this, that it is so bald without being followed, as at Num. 24:3, 15, 2 Sam. 23:1, with the attributive description of the man. Luther was determined thereby to translate: discourse of the man Leithiel ... And why could not אָלֹהֶים א-לוֹ be a proper-name connection like ]אָלֹהֶים א-לוֹ (תַשְׁלַחַוֹת)? Interpreted in the sense of “I am troubled concerning God,” is might be a symbolical name of the φω κόσμοφος, as of one who strives after the knowledge of divine things with all his strength. But (1) א-לוֹ, with the accus. obj., is not established, and one is rather inclined to think of a name such as אָלֹהֶים א-לוֹ, after Ps. 84:3; (2) moreover, א-לוֹ cannot be at one time a personal name, and at another time a declarative sentence—one must both times transform it into אָלֹהֶים א-לוֹ; but א-לוֹ has to be taken as a vocative, not as accus., as is done by J. D. Michaelis, Hitzig, Bunsen, Zöckler, and others, thus: I have wearied myself, O God! ... The nakedness of הבור is accordingly not covered by the first Leithiel. Mühlau, in his work, seeks to introduce "who is read as והָאָכָל"

The man from Massa,” and prefers to interpret generically: “proverb (confession) of the man (i.e., the man must confess): I have wearied myself, O God! ...” Nothing else in reality remains. The article may also be retrospective: the man just now named, whose “words” are announced, viz., Agur. But why was not the expression נאם עם the then used? Because it is not poetical to say: “the (previously named) man.” On the other hand, what follows applies so that one may understand, under הבור, any man you choose. There are certainly among many who inquire not after God (Ps. 14:2f.). But there are also not wanting those who feel sorrowfully the distance between them and God. Agur introduces such a man as speaking, for he generalizes his own experience. Ps. 36:2 (vid., under this passage) shows that a proper name does not necessarily follow נאם.

With הבור Agur then introduces what the man has to confess—viz. a man earnestly devoted to God; for with הבור the ideas of that which comes from the heart and the solemnly earnest are connected. If Agur so far generalizes his own experience, the passionate anadiplosis does not disturb this. After long contemplation of the man, he must finally confess: I have troubled myself, O God! I have troubled myself, O God! ... That the trouble was directed toward God is perhaps denoted by the alliteration of אֹלָיוּ אֵלִי with אֵל. But what now, further? אָכָל is read as כָּל ל and has also been read as כָּל וָאֲכָל, and the reading אָכָל no one advocates; this that follows says the direct contrary, et potui (pollui). Geiger (Urschrift, p. 61) supports the reading אָכָל, for he renders it interrogatively: “I wearied myself in vain about God; why should I be able to do it?” But since one may twist any affirmative clause in this way, and from a yes make a no, one should only, in cases of extreme necessity, consent to such a question in the absence of an interrogative word. Böttcher’s אָכָל אֲלָיד, I have wearied myself out in vain, is not Hebrew. But at any rate the expression might be אָכָל אֲלָיד, if only the Vav did not stand between the words! If one might transpose the letters, then we might gain אָכָל אֲלָיד, according to which the LXX translates: οὐ δύνησόμαι. At all events, this despairing as to the consequence of further trouble, “I shall be able to do nothing (shall bring it to nothing),” would be better than אָכָל אֲלָיד (and I shall withdraw—become faint), for which, besides, אָכָל אֲלָיד should be used (cf. 22:8 with Job 33:21). One expects, after אָלָיד, the expression of that which is the consequence of earnest and long-continued endeavour. Accordingly Hitzig reads אָלָיד, and I have become dull—suitable to the sense, but unsatisfactory on this account, because כָּל אֲלָיד, in the sense of the Arab. kall, hebescere, is foreign to the Heb. usus loq. Thus אֲלָיד will be a fut. consec. of כָּל. J. D. Michaelis, and finally Böttcher, read it as fut. consec. Piel אֲלָיד או אָכָל, (vid., regarding this form in pause under 25:9), “and I have made an end;” but it is not appropriate to the inquirer here complaining, when dissatisfaction with his results had determined him to abandon his research, and let himself be no more troubled. We therefore prefer to read with Dahler, and, finally, with Mühlau and Zöckler, אֲלָיד, and I have withdrawn. The from understood by Hitzig as a pausal form is, in the unchangeableness of its vocals, as accordant with rule as those of רָכַב, 27:17, which lengthen the of their first syllables in pause. And if Hitzig objects that too much is said, for one of such meditation does not depart, we answer, that if the inquiry of the man who speaks here has completed itself by the longing of his spirit and his soul (Ps. 84:3; 143:7), he might also say of himself, in person, כָּלִיתִי or וָאֵכֶל. An inquiry proceeding not merely from intellectual, but, before all, from practical necessity, is meant—the doubled לאיתי means that he applied thereto the whole strength of his inner and his outer man; and וָאֵכֶל, that he nevertheless did not reach his end, but wearied himself in vain. By this explanation which we give to 1a, no change of its accents is required; but 1b has to be written: נְׁאֻּם הָגֶבֶר לָאִיתִי אֵל וָאֵכֶל׃ Proverbs 30:2, 3. The כי now following confirms the fruitlessness of the long zealous search:

2 For I am without reason for a man, And a man’s understanding I have not.
3 And I have not learned wisdom, That I may possess the knowledge of the All-Holy.

He who cannot come to any fixed state of consecration, inasmuch as he is always driven more and more back from the goal he aims at, thereby brings guilt upon himself as a sinner so great, that every other man stands above him, and he is deep under them all. So here Agur finds the reason why in divine things he has failed to attain unto satisfying intelligence, not in the ignorance and inability common to all men—he appears to himself as not a man at all, but as an irrational beast, and he misses in himself the understanding which a man properly might have and ought to have. The מ in המש is not the partitive, like Isa. 44:11, not the usual comparative: than any one (Böttcher), which ought to be expressed by מַלֶּקֶם, but it is the negative, as Isa. 52:14; Fleischer: rudior ego sum quam ut homo appeller, or: brutus ego, hominis non similis. Regarding כָּל, vid., under 12:1. V. 3 now says that he went into no school of wisdom, and for that reason in his wrestling after knowledge could attain to nothing, because the necessary conditions to this were wanting to him. But then the question arises: Why this complaint? He must first go to school in order to obtain, according to the word “To him who hath is given,” that for which he strove. Thus refers to learning in the midst of wrestling; but מְלַמָּד, spiritually understood, signifies the acquiring of a kennens [knowledge] or könnens [knowledge = ability]: he has not brought it out from the deep point of his condition of knowledge to make wisdom his own, so that he cannot adjudge to himself knowledge of the all-holy God (for this knowledge is the kernel and the star of true wisdom). If we read 3b, אל, this would be synchronistic, nesciebam, with standing on the same line. On the contrary, the positive אדע subordinates itself to ולא-למדתי, as the Arab. fāa’l ama, in the sense of (ita) ut sicrem scientiam Sanctissimi, thus of a conclusio, like Lam. 1:19, a clause expressive of the intention, Ewald, § 347 a. קדושים is, as at 9:10, the name of God in a superlative sense, like the Arab. el-kuddūs.

4 Who hath ascended to the heavens and descended? Who hath grasped the wind in his fists? Who hath bound up the waters in a garment? Who hath set right all the ends of the earth? What is his name, and what his son’s name, if thou knowest?

Proverbs 30:4. The first question here, מיה וה, is limited by Pazer; עלה-שמים has Metheg in the third syllable before the tone. The second question is at least shut off by Pazer; but, contrary to the rule, that Pazer does not repeat itself in a verse; Cod. Erfurt. 2, and several older editions, have for הבפניו more correctly with Rebia. So much for the interpunction. חפְּנֵי is properly not the two fists, for the fist—that is, the hand gathered into a ball, pugnus—is called אגרוף, while, on the contrary, פֵּפָן (in all the three dialects) denotes the palm of the hand, vola (vid., Lev. 16:12); yet here the hands are represented after they have seized the thing as shut, and thus certainly as fists. The dual points to the dualism of the streams of air produced by the disturbance of the equilibrium; he who rules this movement has, as it were, the north or east wind in one first, and the south or west wind in the other, to let it forth according to his pleasure from this prison (Isa. 24:22). The third question is explained by Job 26:8; the בְּשַׁמְלָה (from שָׁמַל, comprehendere) is a figure of the clouds which contain the upper waters, as Job 38:37, the bottles of heaven. “All the ends of the earth” are as at five other places, e.g., Ps. 22:28, the most distant, most remote parts of the earth; the setting up of all these most remote boundaries (margines) of the earth is equivalent to the making fast and forming the limits to which the earth extends (Ps. 74:17), the determining of the compass of the earth and the form of its figures.

כִי תֵדָע is in symphony with Job 38:5, cf. 18. The question is here formed as it is there, when Jahve brings home to the consciousness of Job human weakness and ignorance. But there are here two possible significations of the fourfold question. Either it aims at the answer: No man, but a Being highly exalted above all creatures, so that the question מ ה־שְׁמו [what his name?] refers to the name of this Being. Or the question is primarily meant of men: What man has the ability?—if there is one, then name him! In both cases the subject is not meant, after 24:28, in the modal sense, quis ascenderit, but as the following ו יר ד requires, in the nearest indicative sense, quis ascendit. But the choice between these two possible interpretations is very difficult. The first question is historical: Who has gone to heaven and (as a consequence, then) come down from it again? It lies nearest thus to interpret it according to the consecutio gemporum. By this interpretation, and this representation of the going up before the descending again, the interrogator does not appear to think of God, but in contrast to himself, to whom the divine is transcendent, of some other man of whom the contrary is true. Is there at all, he asks, a man who can comprehend and penetrate by his power and his knowledge the heavens and the earth, the air and the water, i.e., the nature and the inner condition of the visible and invisible world, the quantity and extent of the elements, and the like? Name to me this man, if thou knowest one, by his name, and designate him to me exactly by his family— I would turn to him to learn from him what I have hitherto striven in vain to find. But there is not such an one. Thus: as I fell myself limited in my knowledge, so there is not at all any man who can claim limitless können and kennen [ability and knowledge]. Thus casually Aben Ezra explains, and also Rashi, Arama, and others, but without holding fast to this in its purity; for in the interpretation of the question, “Who hath ascended?” the reference to Moses is mixed up with it, after the Midrash and Sohar (Parasha, ויקהל, to Ex. 35:1), to pass by other obscurities and difficulties introduced. Among the moderns, this explanation, according to which all aims at the answer, “there is no man to whom this appertains,” has no exponent worth naming. And, indeed, as favourable as is the quis ascendit in coelos ac rursus descendit, so unfavourable is the quis constituit omnes terminos terrae, for this question appears not as implying that it asks after the man who has accomplished this; but the thought, according to all appearance, underlies it, that such an one must be a being without an equal, after whose name inquiry is made. One will then have to judge עלה and ירד after Gen. 28:12; the ascending and descending are compared to our German “auf und neider” [up and down], for which we do not use the phrase “nieder und auf,” and is the expression of free, expanded, unrestrained presence in both regions; perhaps, since ירד is historical, as Ps. 18:10, the speaker has the traditional origin of the creation in mind, according to which the earth arose into being earlier than the starry heavens above.

Thus the four questions refer (as e.g., also Isa. 40:12) to Him who has done and who does all that, to Him who is not Himself to be comprehended as His works are, and as He shows Himself in the greatness and wonderfulness of these, must be exalted above them all, and mysterious. If the inhabitant of the earth looks up to the blue heavens streaming in the golden sunlight, or sown with the stars of night; if he considers the interchange of the seasons, and feels the sudden rising of the wind; if he sees the upper waters clothed in fleecy clouds, and yet held fast within them floating over him; if he lets his eye sweep the horizon all around him to the ends of the earth, built up upon nothing in the open world-space (Job 26:7): the conclusion comes to him that he has before him in the whole the work of an everywhere present Being, of an all-wise omnipotent Worker—it is the Being whom he has just named as אֵל, the absolute Power, and as the קְדֹשִים, exalted above all created beings, with their troubles and limitations; but this knowledge gained viâ causalitatis, viâ eminentiae, and viâ negationis, does not satisfy yet his spirit, and does not bring him so near to this Being as is to him a personal necessity, so that if he can in some measure answer the fourfold מי, yet there always presses upon him the question ממה שמו, what is his name, i.e., the name which dissolves the secret of this Being above all beings, and unfolds the mystery of the wonder above all wonders. That this Being must be a person the fourfold מי presupposes; but the question, "What is his name?" expresses the longing to know the name of this supernatural personality, not any kind of name which is given to him by men, but the name which covers him, which is the appropriate personal immediate expression of his being. The further question, "And what is the name of his son?" denotes, according to Hitzig, that the inquirer strives after an adequate knowledge, such as one may have of a human being. But he would not have ventured this question if he did not suppose that God was not a monas [unity] who was without manifoldness in Himself. The LXX translates: ἡ ἡ ωνάνοσ τοῖς τέκνοις σώτοι (בָּנוֹ), perhaps not without the influence of the old synagogue reference testified to in the Midrash and Sohar of לְבָנָו to Israel, God's first-born; but this interpretation is opposed to the spirit of this (intricate speech, enigma). Also in general the interrogator cannot seek to know what man stands in this relation of a son to the Creator of all things, for that would be an ethical question which does not accord with this metaphysical one. Geier has combined this ממה שמו with 8; and that the interrogator, if he meant the חכמה, ought to have used the phrase ממה שמו, says nothing against this, for also in ים, 8:30, whether it means foster-child or artifex, workmaster, the feminine determination disappears. Not Ewald alone finds here the idea of the Logos, as the first-born Son of God, revealing itself, on which at a later time the Palestinian doctrine of ממה שמו imprinted itself in Alexandria; but also J. D. Michaelis felt himself constrained to recognise here the N.T. doctrine of the Son of God announcing itself from afar. And why might not this be possible? The Rig-Veda contains two similar questions, x. 81, 4: "Which was the primeval forest, or what the tree from which one framed the heavens and the earth? Surely, ye wise men, ye ought in your souls to make inquiry whereon he stood when he raised the wind!" And i. 164, 4: "Who has seen the first-born? Where was the life, the blood, the soul of the world? Who came thither to ask this from any one who knew it?" Jewish interpreters also interpret בָּנוֹ of the causa media of the creation of the world. Arama, in his work עָקַדְתָּ הָאָב, sect. xvi., suggests that by בָּנוֹ we are to understand the primordial element, as the Sankhya-philosophy understands by the first-born there in the Rig, the Prakriti, i.e., the primeval material. R. Levi b. Gerson (Ralbag) comes nearer to the truth when he explains ממה שמו as meaning the cause caused by the supreme cause, in other words: the principium principiaitum of the creation of the world. We say: the inquirer meant the demiurgic might which went forth from God, and which waited on the Son of God as a servant in the creation of the world; the same might which in Prov. 8 is called Wisdom, and is described as God’s beloved Son. But with the name after which inquiry is made, the relation is as with the “more excellent name than the angels,” Heb. 1:4. It is manifestly not the name בֵּן, since the inquiry is made after the name of the בֵּן; but the same is the case also with the name חָכם, or, since this does not harmonize, according to its grammatical gender, with the form of the question, the name דָּבָר (דַּבֶּר); but it is the name which belongs to the first and only-begotten Son of God, not merely according to creative analogies, but according to His true being. The inquirer would know God, the creator of the world, and His Son, the mediator in the creation of the world, according to their natures. If thou knowest, says he, turning himself to man, his equal, what the essential names of both are, tell them to me! But who can name them! The nature of the Godhead is hidden, as from the inquirer, so from every one else. On this side of eternity it is beyond the reach of human knowledge.

The solemn confession introduced by נאם is now closed. Ewald sees herein the discourse of a sceptical mocker at religion; and Elster, the discourse of a meditating doubter; in v. 5, and on, the answer ought then to follow, which is given to one thus speaking: his withdrawal from the standpoint of faith in the revelation of God, and the challenge to subordinate his own speculative thinking to the authority of the word of God. But this interpretation of the statement depends on the symbolical rendering of the supposed personal names אֱלוה, and, besides, the dialogue is indicated by nothing; the beginning of the answer ought to have been marked, like the beginning of that to which it is a reply. The confession, 1b–4, is not that of a man who does not find himself in the right condition, but such as one who is thirsting after God must renounce: the thought of a man does not penetrate to the essence of God (Job 11:7–9); even the ways of God remain inscrutable to man (Sir. 18:3; Rom. 11:33); the Godhead remains, for our thought, in immeasurable height and depth; and though a relative knowledge of God is possible, yet the dogmatic thesis, Deum quidem cognoscimus, sed non comprehendimus, i.e., non perfecte cognoscimus quia est infinitus, even over against the positive revelation, remains unchanged. Thus nothing is wanting to make 1–4 a complete whole; and what follows does not belong to that section as an organic part of it.

5 Every word of Eloah is pure; A shield is He for those who hide themselves in Him.

Proverbs 30:5, 6. Although the tetrastich is an independent proverb, yet it is connected to the foregoing נûm [utterance, v. 1]. The more limited a man is in his knowledge of God,—viz. in that which presents itself to him lumine naturae,—so much the more thankful must he be that God has revealed Himself in history, and so much the more firmly has he to hold fast by the pure word of the divine revelation. In the dependent relation of v. 5 to Ps. 18:31 (2 Sam. 22:31), and of v. 6 to Deut. 4:2, there is no doubt the self-testimony of God given to Israel, and recorded in the book of the Tôra, is here meant. כָּל־אִמְר ת is to be judged after πᾶσα γραφή, 2 Tim. 3:16, not: every declaration of God, wherever promulgated, but: every declaration within the revelation lying before us. The primary passage [Ps. 18:31] has not לְכֹל ה חֹסִים here, but, instead of it, לָלָה ה חֹסִים; his change of the name of Jahve is also not favourable to the opinion that v. 5f. is a part of the נûמ, viz., that it is the answer thereto. The proverb in this contains traces of the Book of Job, with which in many respects that נûמ harmonizes; in the Book of Job, אֱלֹהִים (אֱלֹהִים) is the prevailing name of God; whereas in the Book of Proverbs it occurs only in the passage before us. Mühlau, p. 41, notes it as an Arabism. צָרַף (Arab. saraf; to turn, to change) is the usual word for the changing process of smelting; אֱלֹהִי signifies solid, pure, i.e., purified by separating: God’s word is, without exception, like pure, massive gold. Regarding מְלֹא, to hide oneself, vid., under Ps. 2:12;: God is a shield for those who make Him, as revealed in His word, their refuge. The part. גַּם occurs, according to the Masora, three times written defectively,—14:32; 2 Sam. 22:31; Neh. 1:7; in the passage before us it is to be written מִיָּם, the proverbs of Agur and Lemuel have frequently the plena scriptio of the part. act. Kal, as well as of the fut. Kal, common to the Book of Job (vid., Mühlaeu, p. 65).

In 6a, after Aben Ezra’s Moznaajim 2b (11b of Heidenheim’s edition), and Zachoth 53a (cf. Lipmann’s ed.), and other witnesses (vid., Norzi), תֹּשׁוּב (the כ with dagesh) is to be written,—the Cod. Jaman. and others defect. without כ—not תוסף; for, since תוסף (Ex. 10:28) is yet further abbreviated in this way, it necessarily loses the aspiration of the tenuis, as in אִמָּנוּת יִלְדוּתא (לַא. אִמָּנוּת יִלְדוּתא). The words of God are the announcements of His holy will, measured by His wisdom; they are then to be accepted as such, and to be recognised and obeyed. He who adds anything to them, either by an overstraining of them or by repressing them, will not escape the righteous judgment of God: God will convict him of falsifying His word (תوبة, Ps. 50:21; only here with כ of the obj.), and expose him as a liar,—viz. by the dispensations which unmask the falsifier as such, and make manifest the falsehood of his doctrines as dangerous to souls and destructive to society. An example of this is found in the kingdom of Israel, in the destruction of which the curse of the human institution of its state religion, set up by Jeroboam, had no little share.

Also the Jewish traditional law, although in itself necessary for the carrying over of the law into the praxis of private and public life, falls under the Deuteron. prohibition,—which the poet here repeats,—so far as it claimed for itself the same divine authority as that of the written law, and so far as it hindered obedience to the law,—by the straining-at-a-gnat policy—and was hostile to piety. Or, to adduce an example of an addition more dogmatic than legal, what a fearful impulse was given to fleshly security by that overstraining of the promises in Gen. 17, which were connected with circumcision by the tradition, “the circumcised come not into hell,” or by the overstraining of the prerogative attributed by Paul, Rom. 9:4f., to his people according to the Scriptures, in the principle, “All Israelites have a part in the future world!”

Regarding the accentuation of the perf. consec. after קפ, vid., at Ps. 28:1. The penultima accent is always in pausa (cf. vv. 9 and 10).

Proverbs 30:7–9. In what now follows, the key-note struck in v. 1 is continued. There follows a prayer to be kept in the truth, and to be preserved in the middle state, between poverty and riches. It is a Mashal-ode, vid., p. 9. By the first prayer, “vanity and lies keep far from me,” it is connected with the warning of v. 6.

7 Two things I entreat from Thee, Refuse them not to me before I die.

8 Vanity and lies keep far away from me

Poverty and riches give me not: Cause me to eat the bread which is allotted to me, 9 Lest in satiety I deny, And say: Who is Jahve? And lest, in becoming poor, I steal, And profane the name of my God.

We begin with the settlement and explanation of the traditional punctuation. A monosyllable like לֶכַח receives, if Legarmeh, always Mehuppach Legarmeh, while, on the contrary, the poly-syllable possibilitàs has Asla Legarmeh.

אֲלֹהִי, with double Makkeph and with Gaja in the third syllable before the tone (after the Metheg-Setzung, §28), is Ben-Asher’s; whereas Ben-Naphtali prefers the punctuation אָלֹהִי (vid., Baer’s Genesis, p. 79, note 3). Also has (cf. Genesis, 31:5) Makkeph, and on the antepenultima Gaja (vid., Thorath Emeth, p. 32). The perf. consec. אָלֹהִי has on the ult. the disjunctive Zinnor (Sarka), which always stands over the final letter; but that the ult. is also to be accented, is shown by the counter-tone Metheg, which is to be given to the first syllable. Also לַאֹבֶּרֶךְ has in correct Codd., e.g., Cod. 1294, the correct ultima toning of a perf. consec.; Kimchi in the Michlol 6b, as well as Aben Ezra in both of his Grammars, quotes only וְׁגָנִּבְּתִי as toned on the penult. That it cannot be otherwise toned on account of the pausal accent, has been already remarked under 6b; the word, besides, belongs to the Pathach unlengthened by one of the greater disjunctives; the Athnach has certainly in the three so-called metrical books only the disjunctive form of the Zakeph of the prose books. So much as to the form of the text.

As to its artistic form, this prayer presents itself to us as the first of the numerical proverbs, under the “Words” of Agur, who delighted in this form of proverb. The numerical proverb is a brief discourse, having a didactic end complete in itself, which by means of numerals gives prominence to that which it seeks to bring forward. There are two kinds of these. The more simple form places in the first place only one numeral, which is the sum of that which is to be brought forth separately: the numerical proverb of one cipher; to this class belong, keeping out of view the above prayer, which if it did not commence a series of numerical proverbs does not deserve this technical name on account of the low ciphers: vv. 24–28, with the cipher 4; Sir. 25:1 and 2, with the cipher 3. Similar to the above prayer are Job 13:20f., Isa. 51:19; but these are not numerical proverbs, for they are not proverbs. The more artistic kind of numerical proverb has two ciphers: the two-ciphered numerical proverb we call the sharpened (pointed) proverb. Of such two-ciphered numerical proverbs the “words” of Agur contain four, and the whole Book of Proverbs, reckoning 6:16–19, five—this ascending numerical character belongs to the popular saying, 2 Kings 9:32, Job 33:29, Isa. 16:6, and is found bearing the stamp of the artistic distich outside of the Book of Proverbs, Ps. 62:12, Job 33:14; 40:5; Job 5:19, and particularly Amos 1:3–26. According to this scheme, the introduction of Agur's prayer should be:

טָּוֵא = (שָוְֵא, from שָאָה, to be waste, after the form מָוֶה) is either that which is confused, worthless, untrue, which comes to us from without (e.g., Job 31:5), or dissoluteness, hollowness, untruthfulness of disposition (e.g., Ps. 26:4); it is not to be decided whether the suppliant is influenced by the conception thus from within or from without, since דברכזב [a word of falsehood] may be said by himself as well as to him, a falsehood can intrude itself upon him. It is almost more probable that by שוא he thought of the misleading power of God-stranged, idolatrous thought and action; and by דברכזב, of lying words, with which he might be brought into sympathy, and by which he might ruin himself and others. The second petition is that God would give him neither poverty (לַאֹו, vid., 10:4) nor riches, but grant him for his sustenance only the bread of the portion destined for him. The Hiph. יֵתְרִיף (from טָרֵף, to grind, viz., the bread with the teeth) means to give anything, as מָתָא, with which, 31:15, נָתָן חֹק, Gen. 47:22, the portion assigned as nourishment; cf. Job 23:14, the decree determined regarding me.
Accordingly, לֶחֶם חֻּקִי does not mean the bread appropriately measured out for me (like ἄρτος ἐπιούσιος, that which is required for οὐσία, subsistence), but the bread appropriate for me, determined for me according to the divine plan. Fleischer compares (Arab.) ratab and marsaum, which both in a similar way designate a fixed sustentation portion. And why does he wish to be neither poor nor rich? Because in both extremes lie moral dangers: in riches, the temptation to deny God (which כחֵש בַיָה signifies, in the later Heb. כּפְרָם, to deny the fundamental truth; cf. (Arab.) kafar, unbelieving), whom one flowing in superabundance forgets; and of whom one in his self-indulgence desires to know nothing (Job 21:14–16; 22:16f.); in poverty, the temptation is to steal and to blaspheme the name of God, viz., by murmuring and disputing, or even by words of blasphemy; for one who is in despair directs the outbreaks of his anger against God (Isa. 8:21), and curses Him as the cause of His misfortune (Rev. 16:21). The question of godless haughtiness, מִי יהוה, the LXX improperly change into מִי יראה, τίς με ὁρᾶ. Regarding נור ש, to grow poor, or rather, since only the fut. Niph. occurs in this sense, regarding יִוָּרֵש, vid., at 20:13.

Proverbs 30:10. That the author here, by blaspheming (grasping at) the name of God, especially thinks on that which the Tôra calls "cursing (לֵל) God," and particularly "blaspheming the name of the Lord," Lev. 24:15, 16, is to be concluded from the two following proverbs, which begin with the catchword קָלְלָךְ.

10 Calumniate not a servant with his master; lest he curse thee, and thou must atone for it. Incorrectly Ewald: entice not a servant to slander against his master; and Hitzig: “Make not a servant tattle regarding his master.” It is true that the Poel לֵל (to pierce with the tongue, linguâ petere) occurs twice in the sense of to calumniate; but that קָלָל means nothing else, is attested by the post-bibl. Hebrew; the proverb regarding schismatics (בַרְכֵּת הַפְּסִימוֹן) in the Jewish Schemone-Esre (prayer of the eighteen benedictions) began with "and to the calumniators" (delatoribus). Also in the Arab. âlsana signifies pertulit verba alicujus ad alterum, to make a babbler, rapporteur (Fleischer). That the word also here is not to be otherwise interpreted, is to be concluded from יִוָּרֵש with the causative rendering. Rightly Symmachus, μὴ διαβάλῃς Theodotion, μὴ καταλαλήσῃς and according to the sense also, Jerome, ne accuses; the Venet. μὴ καταμνησήσῃς (give not him); on the contrary, Luther, verrate nicht [betray not], renders ὁ λαλῶν with the LXX, Syr. in the sense of the Aram. אֶל and the Arab. âslam (tradere, prodere). One should not secretly accuse (Ps. 101:5) a servant with his master, and in that lies the character of slander (לְשון הָרָע) when one puts suspicion upon him, or exaggerates the actual facts, and generally makes the person suspected—one thereby makes a man, whose lot in itself is not a happy one, at length and perhaps for ever unhappy, and thereby he brings a curse on himself. But it is not matter of indifference to be the object of the curse of a man whom one has unrighteously and unjustly overwhelmed in misery: such a curse is not without its influence, for it does not fruitlessly invoke the righteous retribution of God, and thus one has sorrowfully to atone for the wanton sins of the tongue (veasch mta, for ve-aschamtá as it is would be without pause).

Proverbs 30:11–14. There now follows a Priamel, the first line of which is, by >Priamel, connected with the נֵלֵל of the preceding distich:

11 A generation that curseth their father, and doth not bless their mother;
12 A generation pure in their own eyes, and yet not washed from their filthiness;
13 A generation—how haughty their eyes, and their eyelids lift themselves up;
14 A generation whose teeth are swords and their jaw teeth knives To devour the poor from the earth and the needy from the midst of men. Ewald translates: O generation! but that would have required the word, 13a, הדור (Jer. 2:31), and one would have expected to have found something mentioned which the generation addressed were to take heed to; but it is not so. But if “O generation!” should be equivalent to “O regarding the generation!” then it ought to have introduced the sentence. And if we translate, with Luther: There is a generation, etc., then שֵׁי is supplied, which might drop out, but could not be omitted. The LXX inserts after ἐγκοινον the word κακών, and then renders what follows as pred.—a simple expedient, but worthless. The Venet. does not need this expedient, for it renders γενεὰ τὸν πατέρα αὐτοῦ βλασφημήσει; but then the order of the words in 11a would have been ἕκγονον, κακών; and in 12a, after the manner of a subst. clause, δόρος ἑτῶν, one sees distinctly, from 13 and 14, what follows δόρος is to be understood, not as a pred., but as an attributive clause. As little can we interpret v. 14, with Löwenstein, as pred. of the three subj., “it is a generation whose teeth are swords;” that would at least have required the words αὐτοῦ δόρος, but v. 14 is not at all a judgment valid for all the three subjects. The Targ. and Jerome translate correctly, as we above; but by this rendering there are four subjects in the preamble, and the whole appears, since the common pred. is wanting, as a mutilated Priamel. Perhaps the author meant to say: it is such a generation that encompasses us; or: such is an abomination to Jahve; for δόρος is a Gesamtheit = totality, generation of men who are bound together by contemporary existence, or homogeneity, or by both, but always a totality; so that these verses, 11–14, might describe quattor detestabilia genera hominum (C. B. Michaelis), and yet one generatio, which divide among themselves these four vices, of blackest ingratitude, loathsome self-righteousness, arrogant presumption, and unmerciful covetousness. Similar is the description given in the Mishna Sota ix. 14, of the character of the age in which the Messiah appeared. “The appearance of this age,” thus it concludes, “is like the appearance of a dog; a son is not ashamed before his father; to whom will we then look for help? To our Father in heaven!” The undutifulness of a child is here placed first. To curse one’s parents is, after Ex. 21:17, cf. Prov. 20:10, a crime worthy of death; “not to bless,” is here, per litoten, of the same force as קלל [to curse]. The second characteristic, v. 12, is wicked blindness as to one’s judgment of himself. The LXX coarsely, but not bad: τὴν δὲ ἐξόδον αὐτοῦ οὐκ ἀπένιψεν. Of such darkness one says: sordes suas putat olere cinnama. רוח is not the abbreviated part. (Stuart), as e.g., Ex. 3:2, but the finite, as e.g., Hos. 1:6.

In 13a the attributive clause forms itself, so as to express the astonishing height of arrogance, into an exclamation: a generation, how lofty are their eyes (cf. e.g., 6:17, רוחות רומזת! to which, as usual, it is simply added: and his eyelids (palpebrae) lift themselves up; in Lat., the lifting up of the eyebrow as an expression of haughtiness is described by elatum (superbum) supercilium.

The fourth characteristic is insatiable covetousness, which does not spare even the poor, and preys upon them, the helpless and the defenceless: they devour them as one eats bread, Ps. 14:4. The teeth, as the instruments of eating, are compared to swords and knives, as at Ps. 57:4 to spears and arrows. With שׁוּך is interchanged, as at Job 29:17, Jonah 1:6, וּמֵאָדָם, as Norzi writes, contrary to Metheg-Setzung, § 37, according to which Gaja, with the servant going before, is inadmissible), transposed from מֵאֶרֶץ, Ps. 58:7, from עֵינ יִם רָמות, to strike, pierce, bite. The designation of place, מַעַרְיָה, “from the earth” (which also, in pausa, is not modified into מִעַרְיָה), and מַעַרְיָה, “from the midst of men,” do not belong to the obj.: those who belong to the earth, to mankind (vid., Ps.
10:18), for thus interpreted they would be useless; but to the word of action: from the earth, out from the midst of men away, so that they disappear from thence (Amos 8:4). By means of fine but cobweb combinations, Hitizig finds Amalek in this fourfold proverb. But it is a portrait of the times, like Ps. 14, and certainly without any national stamp.

Proverbs 30:15, 16. With the characteristic of insatiableness it closes, and there follows an apophthegma de quatuor insatiabilibus quae ideo comparantur cum sanguisuga (C. B. Michaelis). We translate the text here as it lies before us:

15 The 'Alūka hath two daughters: Give! Give! Three of these are never satisfied; Four say not: Enough!

16 The under-world and the closing of the womb; The earth is not satisfied with water; And the fire saith not: Enough!

We begin with Masoretic externalities. The first ב in בּ is Beth minusculum; probably it had accidentally this diminutive form in the original MSS, to which the Midrash (cf. Sepher Taghin ed. Bargès, 1866, p. 47) has added absurd conceits. This first ב has Pasek after it, which in this case is servant to the Olewejored going before, according to the rule Thorath Emeth, p. 24, here, as at Ps. 85:9, Mehuppach. The second ב, which of itself alone is the representative of Olewejored, has in Hutter, as in the Cod. Erfurt 2, and Cod. 2 of the Leipzig Public Library, the pausal punctuation בּ (cf. †, 1 Sam. 21:10), but which is not sufficiently attested. Instead of לָעְלָעַ֖ה, אֲמָהּ, and instead of עֲלוּקָּה, אֲמָהִּ֖ים, לָעְלָעַ֖ה and עֲלוּקָּה are to be written; the Zinnorith removes the Makkeph, according to Thorath Emeth, p. 9, Accentuationssystem, iv. § 2. Instead of עֲלוּקָּה, אֲמָהִ֖ים, only Jablonski, as Mühlau remarks, has עֲלוּקָּה, but incorrectly, since Athnach, after Olewejored, has no pausal force (vid., Thorath Emeth, p. 37). All that is without any weight as to the import of the words. But the punctuation affords some little service for the setting aside of a view of Rabbenu Tam (vid., Tosaphoth to Aboda zara 17a, and Erubin 19a), which has been lately advocated by Löwenstein. That view is, that 'Alūka is the name of a wise man, not Solomon’s, because the Pesikta does not reckon this among the names of Solomon, nor yet a name of hell, because it is not, in the Gemara, numbered among the names of Gehinnom. Thus לָעְלָעַ֖ה would be a superscription, like לֶדוֹד, יִמָּֽעְרָה, and יִשָּׁלָֽמָה, Ps. 26:1; 72:1, provided with Asla Legarmeh. But this is not possible, for the Asla Legarmeh, at Ps. 26:1 and 72:1, is the transformation of Olewejored, inadmissible on the first word of the verse (Accentuationssystem, xix. § 1); but no Olewejored can follow such an Asla Legarmeh, which has the force of an Olewejored, as after this עֲלוּקָּה, which the accentuation then does not regard as the author’s name given as a superscription. לָעְלָעַ֖ה is not the name of a person, and generally not a proper name, but a generic name of certain traditional signification. “One must drink no water”—says the Gemara Aboda zara 12b—“out of a river or pond, nor (immediately) with his mouth, nor by means of his hand; he who, nevertheless, does it, his blood comes on his own head, because of the danger. What danger? סְכָנָה, i.e., the danger of swallowing a leech. The Aram. also designates a leech by עְלוּקָּה, אֲמָהִים (cf. e.g., Targ. Ps. 12:9: hence the godless walk about like the leech, which sucks the blood of men), and the Arab. by ’a[1]lākā (n. unit. ’a[1]lakāt), as the word is also rendered here by the Aram. and Arab. translators. Accordingly, all the Greeks render it by ἁμηλὸν; Jerome, by sanguisuga (Rashi, sangsue); also Luther’s Eigel is no the Igel erinaceus [hedgehog], but the Eigel, i.e., as we now designate it, the Blutegel [leech], or (less correctly) Blutigel. עֲלוּקָּ֖ה is the fem. of the adj. עֲלוּקָּה, attached to, which meaning, together with the whole verbal stem, the Arab. has preserved (vid., Mühlau’s Mittheilung des Art. ’aluka aus dem Kamus, p. 42).

But if, now, the ’Alūka is the leech, which are then its two daughters, to which is here given the name הָבָה הָבָה, and which at the same time have this cry of desire in their mouths? Grotius and others understand, by the two daughters of the leech, the two branches of its tongue; more correctly: the double-membered overlip of its sucker. C. B. Michaelis thinks that the greedy cry, "Give! Give!" is personified: voces istae concipiuntur ut hirudinis filiae, quas ex se gignat et velut mater sobolem impense diligat. But since this does not satisfy, symbolical interpretations of 'Alūka have been resorted to. The Talmud, Aboda zara 1a, regards it as a name of hell. In this sense it is sued in the language of the Pijut (synagogue poetry). If 'Alūka is hell, then fancy has the widest room for finding an answer to the question, What are the two daughters? The Talmud supposes that רשות (the worldly domination) and מינות (heresy) are meant. The Church-fathers also, understanding by 'Alūka the power of the devil, expatiated in such interpretations. Of the same character are Calmet's interpretation, that sanguisuga is a figure of the mala cupiditas, and its twin-daughters are avaritia and ambitio. The truth lying in all these is this, that here there must be some kind of symbol. But if the poet meant, by the two daughters of the 'Alūka, two beings or things which he does not name, then he kept the best of his symbol to himself. And could he use 'Alūka, this common name for the leech, without further intimation, in any kind of symbolical sense? The most of modern interpreters do nothing to promote the understanding of the word, for they suppose that 'Alūka, from its nearest signification, denotes a demoniacal spirit of the character of a vampire, like the Dakinī of the Indians, which nourish themselves on human flesh; the ghouls of the Arabs and Persians, which inhabit graveyards, and kill and eat men, particularly wanderers in the desert; in regard to which it is to be remarked, that (Arab.) awlak is indeed a name for a demon, and that al'aluwak, according to the Kamus, is used in the sense of alghwal. Thus Dathe, Döderlein, Ziegler, Umbreit; thus also Hitzig, Ewald, and others. Mühlau, while he concurs in this understanding of the word, and now throwing open the question, Which, then, are the two daughters of the demoness 'Alūka? finds no answer to it in the proverb itself, and therefore accepts of the view of Ewald, since 15b16, taken by themselves, form a fully completed whole, that the line שלוש הנה לא תשבענה is the beginning of a numerical proverb, the end of which is wanting. We acknowledge, because of the obscurity—not possibly aimed at by the author himself—in which the two daughters remain, the fragmentary characters of the proverb of the 'Alūka; Stuart also does this, for he regards it as brought out of a connection in which it was intelligible,—but we believe that the line שלוש הנה לא תשבענה is an original formal part of this proverb. For the proverb forming, according to Mühlau's judgment, a whole rounded off:

שלוש הנה לא תשבענה
ארבעה לא אמר ויון
שאול ועצר רחם
ארץ לא שבעה מים
ואש לא אמירה יון.

contains a mark which makes the original combination of these five lines improbable. Always where the third is exceeded by the fourth, the step from the third to the fourth is taken by the connecting Vav: v. 18, v. 21, v. 29, v. 30. We therefore conclude that ארבעה לא אמר ויון is the original commencement of independent proverb. This proverb is: Four things say not: Enough! The under-world and the closing of the womb [i.e., unfruitful womb]—The earth is not satisfied with water, And the fire says not: Enough!

a tetradstich more acceptable and appropriate than the Arab. proverb (Freytag, Prov. iii. p. 61, No. 347): “three things are not satisfied by three: the womb, and wood by fire, and the earth by rain;” and, on the other hand, it is remarkable to find it thus clothed in the Indian language, as given in the Hitopadesa (p. 67 of

nāgīṇī trīpaṭi kāśṭhānăn nāpāgānăn mahōḍadāhiḥ
nāntakah sarvabhūtānăn na pun sân vāmalocanāḥ.

Fire is not sated with wood, nor the ocean with the streams,
Nor death with all the living, nor the beautiful-eyed with men.

As in the proverb of Agur the 4 falls into 2 + 2, so also in this Indian sloka. In both, fire and the realm of death (āntaka is death as the personified “end-maker”) correspond; and as there the womb and the earth, so here feminarium cupiditas and the ocean. The parallelizing of ארץ and רחם is after passages such as Ps. 139:15, Job 1:21 (cf. also Prov. 5:16; Num. 24:7; Isa. 48:1); that of שאול and אש is to be judged of after passages such as Deut. 32:22, Isa. 56:24. That לא אמרו הון repeats itself in לא אמרה הון: it rounds itself off, for the end returns into the beginning. Regarding והון, vid., 1:13. From והון, to be light, it signifies living lightly; ease, superabundance, in that which renders life light or easy. “Used accusatively, and as an exclamation, it is equivalent to plenty! enough! It is used in the same sense in the North African Arab. brrakat (spreading out, fulness). Wetzstein remarks that in Damascus lahôn i.e., hitherto, is used in the sense of hajah, enough; and that, accordingly, we may attempt to explain את והון of our [Heb.] language in the sense of (Arab.) hawn haddah, i.e., here the end of it!” (Mühlau).

But what do we now make of the two remaining lines of the proverb of the ‘Alākā? The proverb also in this division of two lines is a fragment. Ewald completes it, for to the one line, of which, according to his view, the fragment consists, he adds two:

The bloodsucker has two daughters, “Hither! hither!”
Three saying, “Hither, hither, hither the blood, The blood of the wicked child.”

A proverb of this kind may stand in the O.T. alone: it sounds as if quoted from Grimm’s Mährchen, and is a side-piece to Zappert’s altdeutsch. Schlummerliede. Cannot the mutilation of the proverb be rectified in a less violent way without any self-made addition? If this is the case, that in vv. 15 and 16, which now form one proverb, there are two melted together, only the first of which lies before us in a confused form, then this phenomenon is explained by supposing that the proverb of the ‘Alākā originally stood in this form:

The ‘Alākā has two daughters: Give! give!—
The under-world and the closing of the womb; There are three that are never satisfied.

Thus completed, this tristich presents itself as the original side-piece of the lost tetrastich, beginning with ארבעי. One might suppose that if ‘הון and ‘שאול have to be regarded as the daughters of the ‘Alākā, which Hitzig and also Zöckler have recognised, then there exists no reason for dividing the one proverb into two. Yet the taking of them as separate is necessary, for this reason, because in the fourth, into which it expands, the ‘Alākā is altogether left out of account. But in the above tristich it is taken into account, as was to be expected, as the mother with her children. This, that sheol (שאול is for the most part fem.), and the womb (רומ, which is fem., Jer. 20:17) to which conception is denied, are called, on account of their greediness, the daughters of the ‘Alākā, is to be understood in the same way as when a mountain height is called, Isa. 5:1, a horn of the son of oil. In the Arab., which is inexhaustibly rich in such figurative names, a man is called “a son of the clay (limi);” a thief, “a son of the night;” a nettle, “the daughter of fire.” The under-world and a closed womb have the ‘Alākā nature; they are insatiable, like the leech. It is unnecessary to interpret, as Zöckler at last does, 'Aláká as the name of a female demon, and the plural, "daughters," as her companions. It may be adduced in favour of this view that לִילִית is without the article, after the manner of a proper name. But is it really without the article? Such a doubtful case we had before us at 27:23. As yet only Böttcher, § 394, has entered on this difficulty of punctuation. We compare Gen. 29:27, ישן, 1 Kings 12:32, ישן, 1 Chron. 13:7, ישן; and consequently also Ps. 146:7, לִילִית, thus the assimilating force of the Chateph appears here to have changed the syntactically required ה and ב into ה and ב. But also supposing that לִילִית is treated as a proper name, this is explained from the circumstance that the leech is not meant here in the natural history sense of the word, but as embodied greediness, and is made a person, one individual being. Also the symbol of the two daughters is opposed to the mythological character of the 'Aláká. The imper. בָּ, יי, occurs only here and at Dan. 7:17 (NUM), and in the bibl. Hebr. only with the intentional יֹּלֶּדֶת, and in inflection forms. The insatiableness of sheol (Prov. 27:20a) is described by Isaiah, 5:14; and Rachel, Gen. 30:1, with her "Give me children," is an example of the greediness of the "closed-up womb" (Gen. 20:18). The womb of a childless wife is meant, which, because she would have children, the nuptiae never satisfy; or also of one who, because she does not fear to become pregnant, invites to her many men, and always burns anew with lust. "In Arab. ‘aluwak means not only one fast bound to her husband, but, according to Wetzstein, in the whole of Syria and Palestine, the prostitute, as well as the קיוואוי, are called ulak (plur. alwak), because they obstruct themselves and hold fast to their victim" (Mühlau). In the third line, the three: the leech, hell, and the shut womb, are summarized: tira sunt quae non satiantur. Thus it is to be translated with Fleischer, not with Mühlau and others, tira haec non satiantur.

"These three" is expressed in Heb. by ל עֲצָא ה, Ex. 21:11, or ל עֲשָׁא ה (Ex. 21:12), 2 Sam. 21:22; ל עֲצָא ה (which, besides, does not signify haec, but illa) is here, taken correctly, the pred., and represents in general the verb of being (Isa. 51:19), vid., at 6:16. Zöckler finds the point of the proverb in the greediness of the unfruitful womb, and is of opinion that the poet purposely somewhat concealed this point, and gave to his proverb thereby the enhanced attraction of the ingenious. But the tetrastich shows that hell, which is compared to fire, and the unfruitful womb, to which the parched and thirsty earth is compared, were placed by the poet on one and the same line; it is otherwise with vv. 18–20, but where that point is nothing less than concealed.

Proverbs 30:17. The proverb of the 'Aláká is the first of the proverbs founded on the figure of an animal among the "words" of Agur. It is now followed by another of a similar character: 17 An eye that mocketh at his father, And despiseth obedience to his mother: The ravens of the brook shall pluck it out, And the young eagles shall eat it.

If "an eye," and not "eyes," are spoken of here, this is accounted for by the consideration that the duality of the organ falls back against the unity of the mental activity and mental expression which it serves (cf. Psychol. p. 234). As haughtiness reveals itself (v. 13) in the action of the eyes, so is the eye also the mirror of humble subordination, and also of malicious scorn which refuses reverence and subjection to father and mother. As in German the verbs [verspotten, spotten, höhnen, hohnsprechen] signifying to mock at or scorn may be used with the accus., genit., or dat., so also ל עֲצָא ה [to deride] and ל עֲצָא ה [to despise] may be connected at pleasure with either an accusative object or a dative object. Ben-Chajim, Athias, van der Hooght, and others write ל עֲצָא ה, Jablonski, Michaelis, Löwenstein, ל עֲצָא ה, Mühlau, with ל עֲצָא ה, Mühlau and others, tira haec non satiantur.
Ps. 65:5; the writing of Ben-Asher is בַּקָּהָה, with Gaja, Chateph, and Munach. The punctuation of יִקְּרוּהָ (e.g., Cod. Jaman) may remain out of view, for the Dag. dirimens in ṝ stands here as firmly as at Gen. 49:10, cf. Ps. 45:10. But it is a question whether one has to write יִקְּרוּהָ with Yod quiesc. (regarding this form of writing, preferred by Ben-Naphtali, the Psalmen-Comm. under Ps. 45:10, in both Edd.; Luzzatto’s Gramm. § 193; Baer’s Genesis, p. 84, note 2; and Heidenheim’s Pentateuch, with the text-crit. Comm. of Jekuthiel ha-Nakdans, under Gen. 47:17; 49:10), as it is found in Kimchi, Michliol 45a, and under יִקְּרוּהָ, and as also Norzi requires, or יִקְּרוּהָ (as e.g., Cod. Erfurt 1), which appears to be the form adopted by Ben-Asher, for it is attested as such by Jekuthiel under Gen. 49:10, and also expressly as such by an old Maros-Cod. of the Erfurt Library. Löwenstein translates, “the weakness of the mother.” Thus after Rashi, who refers the word to יִקְּרוּהָ, to draw together, and explains it, Gen. 49:10, “collection;” but in the passage before us, understands it of the wrinkles on the countenance of the aged mother. Nachmani (Ramban) goes still further, giving to the word, at Gen. 49:10, everywhere the meaning of weakness and frailty. Aben Ezra also, and Gersuni (Ralbag), do not go beyond the meaning of a drawing together; and the LXX, with the Aram., who all translate the word by senectus, have also יִקְּרוּהָ in the sense of to become dull, infirm (certainly not the Aethiopic leh ka, to become old, weak through old age). But Kimchi, whom the Venet. and Luther follow, is informed by Abulwalid, skilled in the Arab., of a better: יִקְּרוּהָו (or יִקְּרוּהָו, Ps. 141:3) is the Arab. wakhat, obedience (vid., above יִקְּרוּהָ, under 1a). If now it is said of such a haughty, insolent eye, that the ravens of the brook (cf. 1 Kings 17:4) will pluck it out, and eat it, they, the eagle’s children, the unchildlike human eye: it is only the description of the fate that is before such an one, to die a violent death, and to become a prey to the fowls of heaven (cf. e.g., Jer. 16:3f., and Passow’s Lex. under κόρας); and if this threatening is not always thus literally fulfilled, yet one has not on that account to render the future optatively, with Hitzig; this is a false conclusion, from a too literal interpretation, for the threatening is only to be understood after its spirit, viz., that a fearful and a dishonourable end will come to such an one. Instead of יִקְּרוּהָ, as Mühlau reads from the Leipzig Cod., יִקְּרוּהָ, with Mercha (Athias and Nissel have it with Tarcho), is to be read, for a word between Olewejored and Athnach must always contain a conjunctive accent (Thorath Emeth, p. 51; Accentuationssystem, xviii. § 9). יִקְּרוּהָ is also irregular, and instead of it יִקְּרוּהָ is to be written, for the reason given above under v. 16 (יִקְּרוּהָ).

Proverbs 30:18–20. The following proverb, again a numerical proverb, begins with the eagle, mentioned in the last line of the foregoing:

18 Three things lie beyond me, And four I understand not:
19 The way of the eagle in the heavens, The way of a serpent over a rock, The way of a ship on the high sea, And the way of a man with a maid.
20 Thus is the way of the adulterous woman: She eateth and wipeth her mouth, and saith: I have done no iniquity.
and are therefore unnecessary; cf. under 29:2. And while בָּלֶב יִם, in the heavens, and בְּשָׁמֵי יָם, in the sea, are the expressions used, עלֵי צוּר is used for on the rock, because here "on" is not at the same time "in," “within,” as the eagle cleaves the air and the ship the waves. For this same reason the expression, “the way of a man בְּעֵל מְנָה,” is not to be understood of love unsought, suddenly taking possession of and captivating a man toward this or that maid, so that the principal thought of the proverb may be compared to the saying, “marriages are made in heaven;” but, as in Kidduschin 2b, with reference to this passage, is said coitus via appellatur. The ב refers to copula carnalis. But in what respect did his understanding not reach to this? “Wonderful,” thus Hitzig explains as the best interpreter of this opinion elsewhere (cf. Psychol. p. 115) propounded, “appeared to him the flying, and that how a large and thus heavy bird could raise itself so high in the air (Job 39:27); then how, over the smooth rock, which offers no hold, the serpent pushes itself along finally, how the ship in the trackless waves, which present nothing to the eye as a guide, nevertheless finds its way. These three things have at the same time this in common, that they leave no trace of their pathway behind them. But of the fourth way that cannot be said; for the trace is left on the substrat, which the man מְנָה, and it becomes manifest, possibly as pregnancy, keeping out of view that the wonderful בָּלֶב יִם may yet be בְּשָׁמֵי יָם. That which is wonderful is consequently only the coition itself, its mystical act and its incomprehensible consequences.” But does not this interpretation carry in itself its own refutation? To the three wonderful ways which leave no traces behind them, there cannot be compared a fourth, the consequences of which are not only not trackless, but, on the contrary, become manifest as proceeding from the act in an incomprehensible way. The point of comparison is either the wonderfulness of the event or the tracklessness of its consequences.

But now “the way of a man בָּלֶב יִם” is altogether inappropriate to designate the wonderful event of the origin of a human being. How altogether differently the Chokma expresses itself on this matter is seen from Job 10:8–12; Eccles. 11:5 (cf. Psychol. p. 210). That “way of a man with a maid” denotes only the act of coition, which physiologically differs in nothing from that of the lower animals, and which in itself, in the externality of its accomplishment, the poet cannot possibly call something transcendent. And why did he use the word בָּלֶב יִם, and not rather בָּלֶב הָאָשה [with a female] or בָּלֶב הַנְּבָה [id.]? For this reason, because he meant the act of coition, not as a physiological event, but as a historical occurrence, as it takes place particularly in youth as the goal of love, not always reached in the divinely-appointed way. The point of comparison hence is not the secret of conception, but the tracelessness of the carnal intercourse. Now it is also clear why the way of the serpent עלֵי צוּר was in his eye: among grass, and still more in sand, the trace of the serpent’s path would perhaps be visible, but not on a hard stone, over which it has glided. And it is clear why it is said of the ship בְּלֶב־יָם [in the heart of the sea]: while the ship is still in sight from the land, one knows the track it follows; but who can in the heart of the sea, i.e., on the high sea, say that here or there a ship has ploughed the water, since the water-furrows have long ago disappeared? Looking to the heavens, one cannot say that an eagle has passed there; to the rock, that a serpent has wound its way over it; to the high sea, that a ship has been steered through it; to the maid, that a man has had carnal intercourse with her. That the fact might appear on nearer investigation, although this will not always guide to a certain conclusion, is not kept in view; only the outward appearance is spoken of, the intentional concealment (Rashi) being in this case added thereto. Sins against the sixth [= seventh] commandment remain concealed from human knowledge, and are distinguished from others by this, that they shun human cognition.
(as the proverb says: אניה אמיתותلةֶּרֶת, there is for sins of the flesh no ἐναίσκων)—unchastity can mask itself; the marks of chastity are deceitful, here only the All-seeing Eye (אִישׁ רָאָה, אבות ii. 1) perceives that which is done. Yet it is not maintained that “the way of a man with a maid” refers exclusively to external intercourse; but altogether on this side the proverb gains ethical significance. Regarding עלה, pubes esse et caeundi cupidus, not from עלה, to conceal, and not, as Schultens derives it, from עלה, signare, to seal as distinguished from עלבולה, vid., under Isa. 7:14. The mark of maidenhood belongs to עלבולה not in the same way as to הבולה (cf. Gen. 24:43 with 16), but only the marks of puberty and youth; the wife אשה cannot as such be called עלבולה. Ralbag’s gloss עלמה is incorrect, and in Arama’s explanation (Akeda, Abschn. 9): the time is not to be determined when the sexual love of the husband to his wife flames out, ought to have been והדר אשה אשתו. One has therefore to suppose that v. 20 explains what is meant by “the way of a man with a maid” by a strong example (for “the adulterous woman” can mean only an old adulteress), there not inclusive, for the tracklessness of sins of the flesh in their consequences.

This 20th verse does not appear to have been an original part of the numerical proverb, gut is an appendix thereto (Hitzig). If we assume that then 21 points forwards: thus as follows is it with the ... (Fleischer), then we should hold this verse as an independent cognate proverb; but where is there a proverb (except 11:19) that begins with קן, which may mean eo modo (for one does not say קן וב) as well as eo modo, here points backwards in the former sense. Instead of וּמָחֲתָה פִיהָ (not פִיהָ) for the attraction of that which follows, brought about by the retrogression of the tone of the first word, requires dageshing, Thorath Emeth, p. 30) the LXX has merely ἀπονιψαμένη, i.e., as Immanuel explains: μακρῆς ὠφειλέτης, abstergens semet ipsam, with Grotius, who to tertens os suum adds the remark: σεμνολογία (honesta elocutio). But eating is just a figure, like the “secret bread,” 9:17, and the wiping of the mouth belongs to this figure. This appendix, with its כֵּן, confirms it, that the intention of the four ways refers to the tracklessness of the consequences.

Proverbs 30:21–23. It is now not at all necessary to rack one’s brains over the grounds or the reasons of the arrangement of the following proverb (vid., Hitzig). There are, up to this point, two numerical proverbs which begin with שְׁתֵי, v. 7, and שְׁחֵי, v. 15; after the cipher 2 there then, v. 18, followed the cipher 3, which is now here continued:

21 Under three things doth the earth tremble, And under four can it not stand:

22 Under a servant when he becomes king, And a profligate when he has bread enough;

23 Under an unloved woman when she is married, And a maid-servant when she becomes heirees to her mistress.

We cannot say here that the 4 falls into 3 + 1; but the four consists of four ones standing beside one another: אֶרֶץ אֵשֶת אִישׁ is here without pausal change, although the Athnach here, as at v. 24, where the modification of sound occurs, divides the verse into two; מֵאֶרֶץ, 14b (cf. Ps. 35:2), remains, on the other hand, correctly unchanged. The “earth” stands here, as frequently, instead of the inhabitants of the earth. It trembles when one of the four persons named above comes and gains free space for acting; it feels itself oppressed as by an insufferable burden (an expression similar to Amos 7:10)—the arrangement of society is shattered; an oppressive closeness of the air, as it were, settles over all minds. The first case is already designated, 19:10, as improper: under a slave, when he comes to reign (quum rex fit); for suppose that such an one has reached the place of government, not by the murder of the king and by the robbery of the crown, but, as is possible in an elective monarchy, by means of the dominant party of the people, he will, as a rule, seek to indemnify himself in his present highness for his former lowliness, and in the measure of his rule show himself unable to rise above his servile habits, and to pass out of the limited circle of his earlier state. The second case is this: a נבַל, one whose mind is perverted and whose conduct is profligate,—in short, a low man (vid., 17:17), יִשְׁבּוּ לַלַּחֶם (cf. Metheg-Setzung, § 28), i.e., has enough to eat (cf. to the expression 28:19, Jer. 44:17); for this undeserved living without care and without want makes him only so much the more arrogant, and troublesome, and dangerous. The שְׁנָוָה, in the second case, is not thought of as a spouse, and that, as in supposed polygamy, Gen. 29:31, Deut. 21:15–17, as fallen into disfavour, but who again comes to favour and honour (Dathe, Rosenmüller); for she can be שְׁנָוָה without her own fault, and as such she is yet no גְּרוּשָה; and it is not to be perceived why the re-assumption of such an one should shatter social order. Rightly Hitzig, and, after his example, Zöckler: an unmarried lady, an old spinster, is meant, whom no one desired because she had no thing attractive, and was only repulsive (cf. Grimm, under Sir. 7:26b). If such an one, as כִּי-תִבָעֵל says, at length, however, finds her husband and enters into the married relation, then she carries her head so much the higher; for she gives vent to ill-humour, strengthened by long restraint, against her subordinates; then she richly requites her earlier and happily married companions for their depreciation of her, among whom she had to suffer, as able to find no one who would love her. In the last case it is asked whether רְׁבָעָה is meant of inheriting as an heiress (Aquila, Symmachus, Theodotion, the Targ., Jerome, the Venet., and Luther), or supplanting (Euchel, Gesenius, Hitzig), i.e., an entering into the inheritance of the dead, or an entering into the place of a living mistress. Since כִּי, with the accus. of the person, Gen. 15:3, 4, signifies to be the heir of one, and only with the accus. of peoples and lands signifies, “to take into possession (to seize) by supplanting,” the former is to be preferred; the LXX (Syr.), ἀπὸ τῶν ἐξθέματος, appear to have read ναρτήριος. This would certainly be, after Gen. 21:10, a piece of the world turned upside down; but also the entering, as heiress, into the inheritance, makes the maid-servant the reverse of that which she was before, and brings with it the danger that the heiress, notwithstanding her want of culture and dignity, demean herself also as heiress of the rank. Although the old Israelitish law knew only intestate succession to an inheritance, yet there also the case might arise, that where there were no natural or legal heirs, the bequest of a wife or rank passed over to her servants and nurses.

Proverbs 30:24–28. Another proverb with the cipher 4, its first line terminating in אֹרֵן:

24 Four are the little things of the earth, And yet they are quick of wit—wise:

25 The ants—a people not strong, And yet they prepare in summer their food;

26 Conies—a people not mighty, And yet set their dwelling on the rocks;

27 No king have the locusts, And yet they go forth in rank and file, all of them together;

28 The lizard thou canst catch with the hands, And yet it is in the king’s palaces.

By the disjunctive accent, אֲדֻבֶתָה, in spite of the following word toned on the beginning, retains its ultima-toning, 18a; but here, by the conjunctive accent, the tone retrogrades to the penult., which does not elsewhere occur with this word. The connection כְּפַנְיָא לֹא is not superlat. (for it is impossible that the author could reckon the שפונים, conies, among the smallest of beasts), but, as in the expression הבַי יָאוֹר, the honoured of the earth, Isa. 23:8. In 24b, the LXX, Syr., Jerome, and Luther see in ב the comparative: σοφότερα τῶν σοφῶν (Theodotion, מְחֻכָמִים), but in this connection of words it could only be partitive (wise, reckoning among the wise); the part. Pual מְחֻכָמִים (Theodotion, the Venet. σέσοφισμόνα) was in use after Ps. 88:6, and signified, like בַּשְׁפַּן, Ex. 12:9, boiled well; thus thus the marmot, taught wit, wise, cunning, prudent (cf. Ps. 64:7, a planned plan = a cunningly wrought out plan; Isa. 28:16, and Vitringa thereto: grounded = firm, grounding), Ewald, § 313c. The reckoning moves in the contrasts of littleness to power, and of greatness to prudence. The unfolding of the [four] begins with the [the ants] and [conies], subject conceptions with apposit. joined; 26a, at least in the indetermination of the subject, cannot be a declaration. Regarding the fut. consec. as the expression, not of a causal, but of a contrasted connection, vid., Ewald, § 342, 1a. The ants are called ספנ, and they deserve this name, for they truly form communities with well-ordered economy; but, besides, the ancients took delight in speaking of the various classes of animals as peoples and states. That which is said, 25b, as also 6:8, is not to be understood of stores laid up for the winter. For the ants are torpid for the most part in winter; but certainly the summer is their time for labour, when the labourers gather together food, and feed in a truly motherly way the helpless. ספנ, translated arbitrarily in the Venet. by ἐχίνοι, in the LXX by χοιρογρύλλιος, by the Syr. and Targ. here and at Ps. 104 by שמן, and by Jerome by lepusculus (cf. λαγίδιον), both of which names, here to be understood after a prevailing Jewish opinion, denote the Caninichen (Luther), Latin cuniculus (κόνικλος), is not the kaninchen [rabbit], nor the marmot, χοιρογρύλλιος (C. B. Michaelis, Ziegler, and others); this is called in Arab. ṣawr, which in South Arab. is called thufun, or rather thafan, viz., the klippdachs (ὑραξ συριακός), like the marmot, which lives in societies and dwells in the clefts of the mountains, e.g., at the Kedron, the Dead Sea, and at Sinai (vid., Knobel on Leb. 11:5; cf. Brehm’s Thierleben, ii. p. 721ff., the Illustirte Zeitung, 1868, Nr. 1290). The klippdachs are a weak little people, and yet with their weakness they unite the wisdom that they establish themselves among the rocks. The ants show their wisdom in the organization of labour, here in the arranging of inaccessible dwellings.

Proverbs 30:27. Thirdly, the locusts belong to the class of the wise little folk: these have no king, but notwithstanding that, there is not wanting to them guidance; by the power and foresight of one sovereign will they march out as a body, כְּנֵי נֶשֶׁךְ, dividing, viz., themselves, not the booty (Schultens); thus: dividing themselves into companies, ordine dispositae, from וּמָנָס, to divide, to fall into two (cogn. וּמָנָס, e.g., Gen. 32:7) or more parts; Mühlau, p. 59–64, has thoroughly investigated this whole wide range of roots. What this וּמָנָס denotes is described in Joel 2:7: “Like mighty men they hunt; like men of war they climb the walls; they march forward every one on his appointed way, and change not their paths.” Jerome narrates from his own observation: tantō ordine ex dispositione jubentis (LXX at this passage before us: ἀφ᾽ ἑνὸς κελεύσματος εὐτάκτως νυντ, ut instar tesserularum, quae in pavimentis artificis invenitur manu, suum locum teneant et ne puncto quidem et ut ita dicam ungue transverso declinent ad alterum. Aben Ezra and others find in וּמָנָס the idea of gathering together in a body, and in troops, according to which also the Syr., Targ., Jerome, and Luther translate; Kimchi and Meiři gloss מָנָס וּמִצְרָיִים by מִצְרָיִים, prudent, and understand it of the cutting off, i.e., the eating up, of plants and trees, which the Venet. renders מִצְרָיִים. Proverbs 30:28. In this verse the expression wavers in a way that is with difficulty determinable between שְׁפָנ and שְׁפָנִים. The Edd. of Opitz Jablonski and Van der Hooght have שְׁפָנ, but the most, from the Venetian 1521 to Nissel, have שְׁפָנִים. The most, from the Venetian 1521 to Nissel, have שְׁפָנִים, but Cod. 1294 has שְׁפָנ. Isaak Tschelabi and Moses Algazi, in their writings regarding words with ש and ש (Constant 1723 and 1799), prefer 'םות, and so also do Mordecai Nathan in his Concordance (1563–4), David de Pomis (1587), and Norzi. An important evidence is the writing the explanation is divided between ragnatelo (spider) and (Ital.) lucèrta (lizard). For the latter, he refers to Lev. 11:30, where לטאה (also explained by Rashi by lézard) in the Jerus. Targ. is rendered by המיתה (the writing here also varies between ו and ו or כ). Accordingly, and after the LXX and Jerome, it may be regarded as a confirmed tradition that סְׁמָמִית means not the spider, for which the name שִׁלְׁשָׁפִית is coined, but the lizard, and particularly the stellion (spotted lizard). Thus the later language used it as a word still living (plur. סְׁמָמִיות, Sifre, under Deut. 33:19). The Arab. also confirms this name as applicable to the lizard. “To this day in Syria and in the Desert it is called samawiyyat, probably not from poison, but from samawah = שְׁמָמָה, the wilderness, because the beast is found only in the stony heaps of the Kharab” (Mühlau after Wetzstein). If this derivation is correct, then שִׁמְמָית is to be regarded as an original Heb. expression; but the lizard’s name, samm, which, without doubt, designates the animal as poisonous (cf. סָם, samam, sam), vapour, poisonous breath, poison), favours Schultens’ view: שְׁמִית = (Arab.) samamyyat, afflato interficiens, or generally venenosa. In the expression נַחַפְלֵית, Schultens, Gesenius, Ewald, Hitzig, Geier, and others, understand the word קְסָם of the two fore-feet of the lizard: “the lizard feels (or: seizes) with its two hands;” but granting that קְסָם is used of the fifteen feet of the stellio, or of the climbing feet of any other animal (LXX καλαβώτης = ἀσκαλαβώτης), yet it is opposed by this explanation, that in line first of this fourth distich an expression regarding the smallness of the weakness of the beast is to be expected, as at 25a, 26a, and 27a. And since, besides, תתפש with לכֵנָה always means “to catch” or “seize” (Ezek. 21:16; 29:7; Jer. 38:23), so the sense according to that explanation is: the lizard thou canst catch with the hand, and yet it is in kings’ palaces, i.e., it is a little beast, which one can grasp with his hand, and yet it knows... how to gain an entrance into palaces, by which in its nimbleness and cunning this is to be thought of, that it can scale the walls even to the summit (Aristoph. Nubes 170). To read מֶלֶךְ with Mühlau, after Böttcher, recommends itself pointing back (תֶּחֶסֶת הָרֶם); also why the intensive of חס protector is used, is not rightly comprehended. Besides, the address makes the expression more animated; cf. Isa. 7:25, מְרָא. In the LXX as it lies before us, the two explanations spoken of are mingled together: καὶ καλαβῶτης (= ἀσκαλαβῶτης χερσὶν ἐρειδόμενος καὶ εὐάλωτος ὥν ... This εὐάλωτος ὥν (Symmachus, χερσὶν ἐλλαμβανόμενος) hits the sense of 28a. In בְּהֵמָה is not the genit. of possession, as at Ps. 45:9, but of description (Hitzig), as at Amos 7:13.

30 The lion, the hero among beasts, And that turneth back before nothing;

31 The swift-foamed, also the goat; And a king with whom is the calling out of the host.

Regarding מִלְחָר in its nimbleness and cunning this is to be thought of, as the name for a beast, is not altogether unknown in the post-bibl. Heb. "In the days of Rabbi Chija (the great teacher who came from Babylon to the Academy of Sepphoris), as is narrated in Bereschith rabba, sect. 65, a zarzir flew to the land of Israel, and it was brought to him with the question whether it were eatable. Go, said he, place it on the roof! Then came an Egyptian raven and lighted down beside it. See, said Chija, it is unclean, for it belongs to the genus of the ravens, which is unclean (Lev. 11:15). From this circumstance there arose the proverb: The raven goes to the zarzir because it belongs to his own tribe." Also the Jer. Rosch ha-schane, Halacha 3: "It is the manner of the world that one seeks to assist his zarzir; and another his zarzir, to obtain the victory;" and Midrash Echa v. 1, according to which it is the custom of the world, that one who has a large and a little zarzir in his house, is wont to treat the little one sparingly, so that in the case of the large one being killed, he might not need to buy another. According to this, the zarzir is a pugnacious animal, which also the proverb Bereschith rabba, c. 75, confirms: two zarzir do not sleep on one board; and one makes use of his for contests like cock-fights. According to this, the zarzir is a bird, and that of the species of the raven; after Rashi, the étourneau, the starling, which is confirmed by the Arab. zurzur (vulgar Arab. zarzur), the common name of starlings (cf. Syr. zarzizo, under zrz of Castelli).

But for the passage before us, we cannot regard this as important, for why is the starling fully named זירוֹר מְתָנִים? To this question Kimchi has already remarked that he knows no answer for it. Only, perhaps, the grave magpie (corvus pica), strutting with upraised tail, might be called succinctus lumbos, if متנים can at all be... used here of a bird. At the earliest, this might possibly be used of a cock, which the later Heb. named directly זָרֵז, רְׁצֵיהּ, because of its manly demeanour; most old translators so understand it. The LXX translates, omitting the loins, by ἀλέκτωρ ἐμπεριπατῶν θηλείας εὖψυχος, according to which the Syr. and Targ.: like the cock which struts about proudly among the hens; Aquila and Theodotion: ἀλέκτωρ (ἀλεκτροφόνος) νότου; The Quinta: ἀλέκτωρ σφυός. Jerome: gallus succinctus lumbos. Ṣarṣar (nor sirṣir, as Hitzig vocalizes) is in Arab. a name for a cock, from ʾsɑrsɑrɑ, to crow, an onomatopoeia. But the Heb. רוֹד, ṣirṣir, as the name of a bird, signifies, as the Talmud proves on the ground of that history, not a cock, but a bird of the raven order, whether a starling, a crow, or a magpie. And if this name of a corvinus is formed from the onomatopoeia רוֹד, the weaker form of that (Arab.) ʾsɑrsɑr, then ʾmatsim, which, for reasons, requires the verbal root רוֹד, to girdle, is not wholly appropriate; and how strangely would the three animals be mingled together, if between רוֹד and ʾmatsim, the two four-footed animals, a bird were placed! If, as is to be expected, the “Lendenumgärte” [the one girded about the loins = רוֹד ʾmatsim] be a four-footed animal, then it lies near, with C. B. Michaelis and Ziegler, after Ludolf's example, to think of the zebra, the South African wild ass. But this animal lay beyond the sphere of the author's observation, and perhaps also of his knowledge, and at the same time of that of the Israelitish readers of this Book of Proverbs; and the dark-brown cross stripes on a white ground, by which the zebra is distinguished, extend not merely to its limbs, but over the whole body, and particularly over the front of the body. It would be more tenable to think of the leopard, with its black round spots, or the tiger, with dark stripes; but the name רוֹד ʾmatsim scarcely refers to the colour of the hair, since one has to understand it after the Aram. רוֹד שִנֵס מָתְׁנָיו, 1 Kings 18:46, or ʾmatsim ʾḥalatsi, Job 38:3, and thus of an activity, i.e., strength and swiftness, depending on the condition of the loins. Those who, with Kimchi, think that the יִשָּׁר [leopard] is thus named, ground their view, not on this, that it has rings or stripes round its legs, but on this, that it ʾḥalatsi, with dark stripes. בַּמָּחַת. But this beast has certainly its definite name; but a fundamental supposition entering into every attempt at an explanation is this, that רוֹד, as well as ʾmatsim, is the proper name of a beast, not a descriptive attribute. Therefore the opinion of Rosse, which Bochart has skilfully established in the Hierozoicon, does not recommend itself, for he only suggests, for choice, to understand the name, “the girded about the loins,” in the proper sense of straps and clasps around and on the loins (thus e.g., Gesenius, Fleischer, Hitzig), or of strength, in the sense of the Arab. ḫabuwk, the firmly-bound = compact, or samh alṣlab, the girded loin (thus e.g., Muntinghe). Schultens connects together both references: Utrumque jungas licet. That the by-name fits the horse, particularly the war-horse, is undeniable; one would have to refer it, with Mühlau, to the slender structure, the thin flanks, which are reckoned among the requisites of a beautiful horse. But if succinctus lumbos were a by-name of a horse, why did not the author at once say רוֹד ʾmatsim? We shall give the preference to the opinion, according to which the expression, “girt about the loins” = “with strong loins,” or “with slender limbs,” is not the by-name, but the proper name of the animal. This may be said of the hunting-hound, lévrier, (according to which the Venet, incorrectly translating רוֹד ʾmatsim ליש, incorrectly translating רוֹד ʾmatsim as well as ḫabuwk ליש, which Kimchi ranks in the first place. Luther, by his translation, Ein Wind = Windhund [greyhound], of good limbs, has given the right direction to this opinion. Melanchton, Lavater, Mercier, Geier, and others, follow him; and, among the moderns, so also do Ewald and Böttcher (also Bertheau and Stuart), which latter supposes that before רוֹד ʾmatsim there originally stood, which afterwards disappeared. But why should the greyhound not at once be called הואHamas? We call the smaller variety of this dog the Windspiel [greyhound]; and by this name we think on a hound, without saying Windspielhund. The name (Symmachus excellently: περιεσφυγμένος, not περισσυφυγμένος τήν ὀσφών, i.e., strongly bound in the limbs) is fitted at once to suggest to us this almost restless, slender animal, with its high, thin, nimble limbs. The verbal stem יִמְלֵך (Arab.) zam, signifies to press together, to knit together; the reduplicative form יִמְלֵךְ, to bind firmly together, whence יָרֵם, firmly bound together, referred to the limbs as designating a natural property (Ewald, §158a): of straight and easily-moveable legs. The hunting-hound (salākī or salākī, i.e., coming from Seleucia) is celebrated by the Arab. poets as much as the hunting-horse. The name צב, though not superfluous, the author ought certainly to have avoided, because it does not sound well in the Heb. collocation of words.

There now follows ערום, a goat, and that not the ram (Jerome, Luther), which is called גור, but the he-goat, which bears this name, as Schultens has already recognised, from its pushing, as it is also called תמר, as paratus ad pugnam; the two names appear to be only provincially different; בִּר, on the contrary, is the old he-goat, as shaggy; and בּוֹז also perhaps denotes it, as Schultens supposes, with twisted, i.e., curled hair (tortipilus). In Arab. tays denotes the he-goat as well as the roebuck and the gazelle, and that at full growth. The LXX (the Syr. and Targ., which is to be emended after the Syr.) is certainly right, for it understands the leading goat: καὶ τράγος ἀναστάς (διὸ ἀνέστη) ἐν τῷ λαῷ αὐτοῦ. The text, however, has not מְלָכָא, but מְלָכָא יָרֵם (Aquila, Theodotion, Quinta, and the Venet.). Böttcher is astonished that Hitzig did not take hold of this יָרֵם, and conjectures שישיוים, which should mean a “gazelle-goat” (Mühlau: dorcas mas). But it is too bold to introduce here מְלָכָא, which is only twice named in the O.T., and יָרֵם is not the Heb. style; and besides, the setting aside of יָרֵם has a harsh asyndeton for its consequence, which bears evidence to the appearance that these are two different animals. And is the יָרֵם then so objectionable? More wonderful still must Song 2:9 appear to us. If the author enumerated the four of stately going on his fingers, he would certainly have said יָרֵם. By יָרֵם he communicates to the hearer, setting before him another figure, how there in the Song Sulamith’s fancy passed from one object to another.

To the lion, the king of the animal world, the king אלֶלֹהִים corresponds. This Hitzig regards as mutilated from אלֶלֹהִים (which was both written and pronounced as אלֶלֹהִים by the Jews, so as to conceal the true sound of the name of God),—which is untenable, for this reason, that this religious conclusion [“A king with whom God is”] accords badly with the secular character of this proverb. Geiger (Urschrift, p. 62ff.) translates: “and King Alkimos corresponding to it (the lustful and daring goat)—he makes the harmless proverb into a ludibrium from the time of the Maccabean-Syrian war. The LXX, which the Syr. and Targ. follow, translates καὶ βασιλεὺς δημηγορῶν ἐν ἔθνει; it appears to have changed into ὁ ἀναστὰς κύριον ἐν τῇ ἐθνίκῃ (standing with his people and haranguing them), like the Quinta: καὶ βας. ἀναστάς (διὸ ἀνέστη) ἐν τῷ λαῷ αὐτοῦ. Ziegler and Böttcher also, reading יָרֵם instead of יָרֵם without any transposition, get מְלָכָא אלֶלֹהִים, which the former translates: “a king with the presence of his people;” the latter, “a king with the setting up of his people,”—not accordant with the thought, for the king should be brought forward as מְלָכָא לְךָ. For the same reason, Kimchi’s explanation is not suitable: a king with whom is no resistance, i.e., against whom no one can rank himself (thus e.g., also Immanuel); or more specially, but not better: who has no successor of his race (according to which the Venet. ἀδιάδεκτος ξὺν ἑαυτῷ). Rather this explanation commends itself: a king with whom (i.e., in war with whom) is no resistance. Thus Jerome and Luther: against whom no one dare place himself; thus Rashi, Aben Ezra, Ralbag (شاهد, Ahron b. Josef (כד = ונייסטים), Arama, and others; thus also Schultens, Fleischer (adversus quem nemo consistere audet), Ewald, Bertheau, Elster, Stuart, and others. But this connection of with the infin. is not Heb.; and if the Chokma, xii. 28, has coined the expression for the idea of resistlessness by so bold a quasi compositum. But this boldness is also there mitigated, for is supplied after יי, which is not here practicable with כִּבְס, which is not a subst. like עֲמָה. Pocock in the Spec. historiae Arabum, and Castellus in the Lex. Heptaglotton (not Castellio, as the word is printed by Zöckler), have recognised in the Arab. עלכווים; Schultens gives the LXX the honour of this recognition, for he regards their translation as a paraphrase of ὁ δῆμος μετ' αὐτοῦ. Bertheau thinks that it ought to be in Arab. کاوم, but Hebr. עַלכְּוֹמִים = عَلَكَوُحَوَّمَهَا is perfectly correct, alkawhu is the summons or the Heerbann = arriere-ban; in North Africa they speak in their language in the same sense of the Gums. This explanation of עַלכְּוֹמִים, from the Arab. Dachselt (rex cum satellitio suo), Diedrichs in his Arab.-Syr. Spicilegium (1777), Umbreit, Gesenius, and Vaihinger, have recognised, and Mühlau has anew confirmed it at length. Hitzig, on the contrary, remarks that if Agur wrote on Arab. territory, we could be contented with the Arab. appellative, but not with the article, which in words like אלכוס and אלכוס אל is no longer of force as an art., but is an integ. component part of the word. We think that it is with אלכוס exactly as with other words descriptive of lordship, and the many similar that have passed over into the Spanish language; the word is taken over along with the article, without requiring the Heb. listener to take the art. as such, although he certainly felt it better than we do, when we say "das Alkoran" [the Alcoran], "das Alcohol," and the like. Blau also, in his Gesch. der Arab. Substantiv-Determ., regards it as certain that Agur borrowed this אלכוס from the idiom of the Arabians, among whom he lived, and heard it constantly spoken. By this explanation we first reach a correspondence between what is announced in lines first and second and line sixth. A king as such is certainly not "comely in going;" he can sit upon his throne, and especially as δημηγορῶν will he sit (Acts 12:21) and not stand. But the majesty of his going shows itself when he marches at the head of those who have risen up at his summons to war. Then he is for the army what the תיש[he-goat] is for the flock. The יי, preferred to יי, draws close together the יי and the king (cf. e.g., Isa. 14:9).

Proverbs 30:32, 33. Another proverb, the last of Agur's "Words" which exhorts to thoughtful, discreet demeanour, here follows the proverb of self-conscious, grave deportment:

32 If thou art foolish in that thou exaltest thyself,
Or in devising,—put thy hand to thy mouth!
33 For the pressure on milk bringeth forth butter,
And pressure on the nose bringeth forth blood,
And pressure on sensibility bringeth forth altercation.

Löwenstein translates v. 32:
Art thou despicable, it is by boasting;
Art thou prudent, then hold thy hand on thy mouth.
But if kamu denotes reflection and deliberation, then kamu, as its opposite, denotes unreflecting, foolish conduct. Then [by boasting] is not to be regarded as a consequent (thus it happens by lifting thyself up; or: it is connected with boasting); by this construction also, אִם־נָב לְׁתָ must be accented with Dechi, not with Tarcha. Otherwise Euchel:

Hast thou become offensive through pride, Or seems it so to thee,—lay thy hand to thy mouth.
The thought is appropriate, but נָב לְׁתָ is more than improbable; נֻּב לְׁתָ, thus absolutely taken in an ethical connection, is certainly related to נָבָל, as כָּס לְׁתָ, Jer. 10:8, to כְׁסִיל. The prevailing mode of explanation is adopted by Fleischer: si stulta arrogantia elatus fueris et si quid durius (in alios) mente conceperis, manum ori impone; i.e., if thou arrogantly, and with offensive words, wilt strive with others, then keep thyself back, and say not what thou hast in thy mind. But while מְׁזִמָה and מְׁזִמות denote intrigues, 14:17, as well as plans and considerations, נָב לְׁתָ has never by itself alone the sense of meditari mala; at Ps. 37:12, also with ל of the object at which the evil devices aim. Then for ם... אָס (Arab. an... wân) there is the supposition of a correlative relation, as e.g., 1 Kings 20:18, Eccles. 11:3, by which at the same time נָב לְׁתָ is obviously thought of as a contrast to נֻּב לְׁתָ. This contrast excludes for נָב לְׁתָ not only the sense of mala moliri (thus e.g., also Mühlau), but also the sense of the Arab. zamm, superbire (Schultens). Hitzig has the right determination of the relation of the members of the sentence and the ideas: if thou art irrational in ebullition of temper and in thought—thy hand to thy mouth! But נָב לְׁתָ has neither here nor elsewhere the meaning of התנשא (to be out of oneself with anger); it signifies everywhere to elevate or exalt oneself, i.e., rightly or wrongly to make much of oneself. There are cases where a man, who raises himself above others, appears as a fool, and indeed acts foolishly; but there are also other cases, when the despaired has a reason and an object for vindicating his superiority, his repute, his just claim: when, as we say, he places himself in his right position, and assumes importance; the poet here recommends, to the one as well as to the other, silence. The rule that silence is gold has its exceptions, but here also it is held valid as a rule. Luther and others interpret the perfecta as looking back: “hast thou become a fool and ascended too high and intended evil, then lay thy hand on thy mouth.” But the reason in v. 33 does not accord with this rendering, for when that has been done, the occasion for hatred is already given; but the proverb designs to warn against the stirring up of hatred by the reclaiming of personal pretensions. The perfecta, therefore, are to be interpreted as at Deut. 32:29, Job 9:15, as the expression of the abstract present; or better, as at Job 9:16, as the expression of the fut. exactum: if thou wouldest have acted foolishly, since thou walkest proudly, or if thou hadst (before) thought of it (Aquila, Theodotion: καὶ ἐὰν ἐννοηθ ς — the hand on thy mouth, i.e., let it alone, be silent rather (expression as 11:24; Judg. 18:19; Job 40:4). The Venet. best: εἴπερ ἐμώρανας ἐπαίρεσθαι καὶ εἴπερ ἐλογίσὼ χείρ τῷ στόματι. When we have now interpreted התנשא, not of the rising up of anger, we do not also, with Hitzig, interpret the dual of the two snorting noses—viz. of the double anger, that of him who provokes to anger, and that of him who is made angry,—but אָפִים denotes the two nostrils of one and the same person, and, figuratively, snorting or anger. Pressure against the nose is designated מִיץ אָפִים, ἐκμύζησις (ἐκπίεσις μυκτῆρος (Theodotion), with reference to the proper meaning of אָפִים, pressure to anger, i.e., to the stirring up and strengthening of anger. The nose of him who raises himself up comes into view, in so far as, with such self-estimation, sneering, snuffling scorn (Μουκτήριζων) easily connects itself; but this view of התנשא is not here spoken of.
Proverbs 31

Second Appendix to the Second Solomonic Collection of Proverbs—31:1–9

Superscription:
1 Words of Lemuel the king. The utterance wherewith his mother warned him.

Proverbs 31:1. Such would be the superscription if the interpunction of the text as it lies before us were correct. But it is not possibly right. For, notwithstanding the assurance of Ewald, § 277b,ךְלֶמואל מֶלֶךְ, nevertheless, as it would be here used, remains an impossibility. Certainly under circumstances an indeterminate apposition can follow a proper name. That on coins we read מתתיה כהןגדול or נרון קיסר is nothing strange; in this case we also use the words "Nero, emperor," and that we altogether omit the article shows that the case is singular: the apposition wavers between the force of a generic and of a proper name. A similar case is the naming of the proper name with the general specification of the class to which this or that one bearing the name belongs in lists of persons, as e.g., 1 Kings 4:2–6, or in such expressions as, e.g., "Damascus, a town," or "Tel Hum, a castle," and the like; here we have the indefinite article, because the apposition is a simple declaration of the class. But would the expression, "The poem of Oscar, a king," be proper as the title of a book? Proportionally more so than "Oscar, king;" but also that form of indeterminate apposition is contrary to the usus loc., especially with a king with whom the apposition is not a generic name, but a name of honour.

We assume that "Lemuel" is a symbolic name, like "Jareb" in "King Jareb," Hos. 5:13; 10:6; so we would expect the phrase to be לֶמֶךְ מֶלֶךְ לֹא מִלָּה יָמָא and לֶמֶךְ מֶלֶכֶל rather than לֶמֶלֶךְ מֶלֶךְ לֹא מִלָּה יָמָא. The phrase "Lemuel, king," here in the title of this section of the book, sounds like a double name, after the manner of יָמָא in the book of Jeremiah. In the Greek version also the phrase Λεμουέλου βασιλέως (Venet.) is not used as syntactically correct without having joined to the βασιλέως a dependent genitive such as τῶν Αραβῶν, while none of the old translators, except Jerome, take the words לֶמֶלֶךְ מֶлֶךְ altogether in the sense of Lamuelis regis. Thus לֶמֶלֶךְ מֶלֶךְ are to be taken together, with Hitzig, Bertheau, Zöckler, Mühlau, and Dächsel, against Ewald and Kamphausen; whether it be a name of a tribe or a country, or of both at the same time, is the region ruled over by Lemuel, and since this proper name throws back the determination which it has in itself on מֶלֶךְ, the phrase is to be translated: "Words of Lemuel the king of Massa" (vid., under 30:1). If Aquila renders this proper name by Λεμουον, Symmachus by Ιαμουηλ, Theodotion by Πεσουηλ, the same arbitrariness prevails with reference to the initial and terminal sound of the word, as in the case of the words Αμβακούμ Βεελζεβουλ Βελίαρ. The name לֶמַעְיָל sounds like the name of Simeon's first-born, יְיוֹדָי, Gen. 46:10, written in Num. 26:12 and 1 Chron. 4:24 as יֵאֹל also appears, 1 Chron. 4:35, as a Simeonite name, which Hitzig adduces in favour of his view thatمشא was a North Arab Simeonite colony. The interchange of the names ימואל and נמואל is intelligible if it is supposed that המשא (from המשא = מַשָּא = מַשָּא = מַשָּא) designates the sworn (sworn to) of God, and נמואל (from נָמָא Mishnic = נִמָּא = נוּמָא) the expressed (addressed) of God; here the reference of ימואל and נמואל to verbal stems is at least possible, but a verb לָמָא is found only in the Arab., and with significations inus. But there are two other derivations of the name: (1) The verb (Arab.) waâla signifies to hasten (with the infin. of the onomatop. verbs waniyal, like raḥ al, walking, because motion, especially that which is tumultuous, proceeds with a noise), whence mawnil, the place to which one flees, retreat. Hence לְמֶלֶךְ מֶלֶךְ, which is in this case to be assumed as the ground-form, might be formed from לֶמֶלֶךְ מֶלֶךְ, God is a refuge, with the rejection of the א. This is the opinion of Fleischer, which Mühlau adopts and has established, p. 38–41; for he shows that the initial א is not only often rejected where it is without the support of a full vocal, e.g., נְּחָת = נֶחַת, lalah = ilalah (Deus), but that this aphaeresis not seldom also occurs where the initial has a full vocal, e.g., לָלָה, lahmaru = ålallahmaru (ruber), lahsâ = ål-lahsâ (the name of a town); cf. also Blau in Deutsch. Morgenl. Zeitschr. xxv. 580. But this view is thus acceptable and tenable; a derivation which spares us by a like certainty the supposition of such an abbreviation established only by the late Palestinian לָלָה יִסְׁרֵת, אֲנ חְׁנוּ גְׁמָל תְׁה might well desire the preference. (2) Fleischer himself suggests another derivation: “The signification of the name is Deus consecratus, יְהֹוָה, poetic for יְהוָה, as also in v. 4 it is to be vocalized יְהוָה after the masora.” The form יְהוָה is certainly not less favourable to that first derivation than to this second; the א is in both cases an obscuration of the original. But that “Lemuel” may be explained in this second way is shown by “Lael,” Num. 3:24 (Olshhausen, § 277 d). It is a beautiful sign for King Lemuel, and a verification of his name, that it is he himself by whom we receive the admonition with which his mother in her care counselled him when he attained to independent government. אֲשֶׁר יִהְיֶה connects itself with בְּרֵי, after we have connected מְׁחות with מְׁלֵל, it is accus. of the manner to מְׁקָפָה; cf. אַלְלָה = מְׁקָפָה, 7:21, with יִכְבָּר, 31:12: wherewith (with which words) she earnestly and impressively admonished him. The Syr. translates: words of Muel, as if were that of the author. "Others as inconsistently: words to Lemuel—they are words which is himself ought to carry in his mouth as received from his mother” (Fleischer). The name "Massa," is it here means effatum, would be proportionally more appropriate for these “Words” of Lemuel than for the “Words” of Agur, for the maternal counsels form an inwardly connected compact whole. They begin with a question which maternal love puts to itself with regard to the beloved son whom she would advise:

2 What, my son? and what the son of my womb? And what, 0 son of my vows?!

Proverbs 31:2. The thrice repeated המ is completed by the א which is put for the purpose of exciting attention: Consider well, my son, what thou wilt do as ruler, and listen attentively to my counsel (Fleischer). But the passionate repetition of המ would be only affectation if thus interpreted; the underlying thought must be of a subjective nature: what shall I say, אדרבא (vid., under Isa. 38:15), what advise thee to do? The question, which is at the same time a call, is like a deep sigh from the heart of the mother concerned for the welfare of her son, who would say to him what is beneficial, and say it in words which strike and remain fixed. He is indeed her dear son, the son whom she carries in her heart, the son for whom with vows of thanksgiving she prayed to God; and as he was given her by God, so to His care she commits him. The name "Lemuel" is, as we interpret it, like the anagram of the fulfilment of the vows of his mother. יִכְבָּר bears the Aramaic shade in the Arameo-Arab. colouring of these proverbs from Massa; המ יכבר is common in the Aram., and particularly in the Talmudic, but it can scarcely be adduced in support of המ יכבר belongs to the 24, which or not not following; vid., the Masora to Ex. 32:1, and its correction by Norzi at Deut. 29:23. We do not write המ יכבר, with Makkeph and with Metheg, exclude one another.

Proverbs 31:3. The first admonition is a warning against effeminating sensuality: Give not thy strength to women, Nor thy ways to them that destroy kings.

The punctuation יכבר sees in this form a syncopated inf. Hiph. = יכבר (vid., at 24:17), according to which we are to translate: viasque tuas ad perdendos reges (ne diriget), by which, as Fleischer formulates the twofold possibility, it may either be said: direct not thy effort to this result, to destroy neighbouring kings,—viz. by wars of invasion (properly, to wipe them away from the table of existence, as the Arabs say),—or: do not that by which kings are overthrown; i.e., with special reference to Lemuel, act not so that thou thyself must thereby be brought to ruin. But the warning against vengeful, rapacious, and covetous propensity to war (thus Jerome, so that Venet. after Kimchi: ἀποματτεῖν βασιλέας, C. B. Michaelis, and earlier, Gesenius) does not stand well as parallel with the warning against giving his bodily and mental strength to women, i.e., expending it on them. But another explanation: direct not thy ways to the destruction of kings, i.e., toward that which destroys kings (Elster); or, as Luther translates: go not in the way wherein kings destroy themselves,—puts into the words a sense which the author cannot have had in view; for the individualizing expression would then be generalized in the most ambiguous way. Thus למחות שלמהו המלך will be a name for women, parallel to לנהשׁים למלך מלכי ביתה. So far the translation of the Targum: לעinesis מלכי ביתה, filiabus (אלהים ביתה?) regum, lies under a right supposition. But the designation is not thus general. Schultens explains catapultis regum after Ezek. 26:9; but, inasmuch as he takes this as a figure of those who lay siege to the hearts of men, he translates: expugnatrixibus regum, for he regards מחה as the plur. of מחה, a particip. noun, which he translates by deletor. The connecting form of the fem. plur. of מחה might certainly be מחה מחה (cf. מחה, from מחה, but מחה למחות מלכי מרחץ; for one will not appeal to anomalies, such as לְּגַּב, לְּגַב, Isa. 24:2; לְּגַב, Lam. 1:19; or לְּגַּב, לְּגַּב, 1 Kings 14:24, to save the Pathach of להמחות, למחות, which, as we saw, proceeds from an altogether different understanding of the word. But if מחה is to be changed into מחה, then one must go further, since for מחה not an active but a conditional meaning is to be assumed, and we must write ממחות, in favour of which Fleischer as well as Gesenius decides: et ne committe consilia factaque tua iis quae reges perdunt, regum pestibus. Ewald also favours the change ממחות, for he renders ממקות as a denom. of ממקות, marrow: those who enfeeble kings, in which Kamphausen follows him. Mühlau goes further; he gives the privative signification, to enfeeble, to the Piel ממקות = makhakha (cf. Herzog’s Real-Wörterb. xiv. 712), which is much more probable, and proposes ממחות: iis quae vires enervant regum. But we can appropriately, with Nöldke, adhere to ממחות, deletricibus (perditricibus), for by this change the parallelism is satisfied; and that ממקות may be used, with immediate reference to men, of entire and total destruction, is sufficiently established by such passages as Gen. 6:7, Judg. 21:17, if any proof is at all needed for it. Regarding the LXX and those misled by it, who, by ממקות and ממקות ממלכים, 4a, think on the Aram. ממקות, βουλαί, vid., Mühlau, p. 53. But the Syr. has an idea worthy of the discourse, who translates epulis regum without our needing, with Mühlau, to charge him with dreaming of ממקות ממלכים in ממקות. Perhaps that is true; but perhaps by ממקות he thought of ממקות ממלכים (from ממקות, the particip. adj. of ממקות): do not direct thy ways to rich food (morsels), such as kings love and can have. By this reading, 3b would mediate the transition to v. 4; and that the mother refers to the immorality, the unseemliness, and the dangers of a large harem, only in one brief word (3a), cannot seem strange, much rather it may be regarded as a sign of delicacy. But so much the more badly does ממקות accord with ממקות. Certainly one goes to a banquet, for one finds leisure for it; but of one who himself is a king, it is not said that he should not direct his ways to a king’s dainties. But if ממקות refers to the whole conduct of the king, the warning is, that he should not regulate his conduct in dependence on the love and the government of women. But whoever will place himself amid the revelry of lust, is wont to intoxicate himself with ardent spirits; and he who is thus intoxicated, is in danger of giving reins to the beast within him. Hence there now follows a warning against drunkenness, not unmediated by the reading מְלָכִים שְׁתוּיָיִן:

4 It is not for kings, O Lemuel, Not for kings to drink wine, Not for rulers to ask for intoxicating drink;
5 Lest he drink, and forget what is prescribed, And pervert the right of all the children of want.

Proverbs 31:4, 5. The usual translation of 4a is: non decet reges ... (as e.g., also Mühlau); but in this א לא is not rightly rendered, which indeed is at times only an ou, spoken with close interest, but yet first of all, especially in such paraenetic connection as here, it is a dissuasive μή. But now lo.מַלְכֵּים שְׁתוּיָיִן, א לא מַלְכִיָלִים שְׁתוּיָיִן, is, after Böttcher, occasioned by this, that the meaning of the name: consecrated to God, belonging to God, must be placed in this, that the meaning of the name: consecrated to God, belonging to God, must be placed in the vocative; perhaps rather by this, that the meaning of the name: consecrated to God, belonging to God, must be placed in contrast to the descending to low, sensual lust. Both times we write א לא מַלְכֵּים שְׁתוּיָיִן with the orthophonic Dagesh in the ̀ following ̀, and without the recompensative Dagesh, the want of which is in a certain measure covered by the Metheg (vid., Norzi). Regarding the inf. constr. שְׁתוּיָיִן (cf. 16:16), vid., Gesen. § 75, Anm. 2; and regarding the sequence of accents here necessary, א לא מַלְכֵּים שְׁתוּיָיִן (not Mercha, Dechi, Athnach, for Dechi would be here contrary to rule), vid., Thorath Emeth, p. 22 § 6, p. 43 § 7. In 4b nothing is to be gained from the Chethib א לא. There is not a substantive μή, desire, the constr. of which would here have to be read, not א לא (Umbreit, Gesenius), but א לא, after the form ד (Maurer); and why did the author not write א לא שְׁתוּיָיִן? But the particle א לא does not here also fall in with the connection; for if א לא שְׁתוּיָיִן connect itself with יז (Hitzig, Ewald, and others), then it would drag disagreeably, and we would have here a spiritless classification of things unadvisable for kings. Böttcher therefore sees in this א lehet the remains of the obliterated שֶׁכֶר; a corrector must then have transformed the שֶׁכֶר which remained into שֶׁכֶר. But before one ventures on such conjectures, the Kerî א לא must be tried. Is it the abbreviated א לא (Herzog's Real- Wörterbuch, xiv. 712)? Certainly not, because because קְרִיָל שֶׁכֶר would mean: and the princes, or rulers (vid., regarding וּלָרוּזְשִׁים אֵין שֶׁכֶר at 8:15), have no mead, which is inconsistent. But א לא does not abbreviate itself into א על, but into א לא. Not א על, but א לא, is in Heb., as well as in Ethiop., the word with which negative adjectives such as א על, א על קְרִיָל, is not innocent, Job 22:30, and in later Heb. also, negative sentences, such as א על אמי א לא שֶׁכֶר: it is not possible, are formed. Therefore Mühlau vocalizes א לא, and thinks that the author used this word for א לא שֶׁכֶר, so as not to repeat this word for the third time. But how is that possible? א לא signifies either: not mead, or: there is not mead; and both afford, for the passage before us, no meaning. Is, then, the Kerî א לא truly so unsuitable? Indeed, to explain: how came intoxicating drink to rulers! is inadmissible, since א לא always means only ubi (e.g., Gen. 4:9); not, like the Ethiop. aité, also quomodo. But the question ubi temetum, as a question of desire, fits the connection, whether the sentence means: non decet principibus dicere (Ahron b. Josef supplies תאמרו ubi temetum, or: absit a principibus quaerere ubi temetum (Fleischer), which, from our view of 4a, we prefer. There is in reality nothing to be supplied; but as 4a says that the drinking of wine ought not to characterize kings, so 4b, that “Where is mead?” (i.e., this eager inquiry after mead) ought not to characterize rulers. Why not? v. 5 says. That the prince, being a slave to drink, may not forget the מְׁחֻּקָק, i.e., that which has been made and has become קד, thus that which is lawfully right, and may not alter the righteous cause of the miserable, who cry against their oppressors, i.e., may not handle falsely the facts of the case, and give judgment contrary to them.

In כל (Venet. ὡντιοῦν) it is indicated that, not merely with reference to individual poor men, but in general to the whole class of the poorer people, suffering humanity, sympathy and a regard for truth on the part of a prince given to sensuality are easily thrown aside. Wine is better suited for those who are in a condition to be timeously helped over which, is a refreshment to them.

6 Give strong drink to him that is perishing, And wine to those whose soul is in bitter woe; 7 Let him drink and forget his poverty, And let him think of his misery no more. Proverbs 31:6, 7.

The preparation of a potion for malefactors who were condemned to death was, on the ground of these words of the proverb, cared for by noble women in Jerusalem נשים יקרות שבירושלים, Sanhedrin 43a; Jesus rejected it, because He wished, without becoming insensible to His sorrow, to pass away from the earthly life freely and in full consciousness, Mark 15:23. The transition from the plur. to the sing. of the subject is in v. 7 less violent than in v. 5, since in v. 6 singular and plur. already interchange. We write with the counter-tone Metheg and Mercha. אוביד designates, as at Job 29:13; 31:19, one who goes to meet destruction: it combines the present signification interiens, the fut. signif. interitus, and the perf. perditus (hopelessly lost). בְׁנֵי עִוֵּר (those whose minds are filled with sorrow) is also supported from the Book of Job, 3:20, cf. 21:25, the language and thought and mode of writing of which notably rests on the Proverbs of Agur and Lemuel (vid., Mühlau, pp. 64–66). The Venet. τοῖς πικροῖς (not πνεύμονις) τὴν ψυχήν.

רִיש (poverty) is not, however, found there, but only in the Book of Proverbs, in which this word-stem is more at home than elsewhere. Wine rejoices the heart of man, Ps. 104:15, and at the same time raises it for the time above oppression and want, and out of anxious sorrow, wherefore it is soonest granted to them, and in sympathizing love ought to be presented to them by whom this its beneficent influence is to be wished for. The ruined man forgets his poverty, the deeply perplexed his burden of sorrow; the king, on the contrary, is in danger from this cause of forgetting what the law required at his hands, viz., in relation to those who need help, to whom especially his duty as a ruler refers.

He is called dumb who suffers the infirmity of dumbness, as עִוֵּר and פיסח, Job 29:15, is he who suffers the infirmity of blindness or lameness, not here figuratively; at the same time, he who, on account of his youth, or on account of his ignorance, or from fear, cannot speak before the tribunal for himself (Fleischer). With ἐπὶ the dat. commodi (LXX after Lagarde, μογιλάλῳ Aquila, Symmachus, Theodotion, ὁλ.ὁ; the Venet. after Gebhardt, βοβῷ) ἃν, of the object aimed at, interchanges, as e.g., 1 Kings 19:3, 2 Kings 7:7, for the preservation of their life, or for the sake of their life, for it is seldom that it introduces the object so purely as here. And that an infin. such as פְּשָם should stand as a subst. occurs proportionally seldomer in Heb. (Isa. 4:4; Ps. 22:7; cf. with 7 of the artic., Num. 4:12; Ps. 66:9) than it does in Arab. בְׁנֵי חֲלוף in the same way as בְׁנֵי־עֹנִי, 5b, belongs to the Arab. complexion of this proverb, but without its being necessary to refer to the Arab. in order to fix the meaning of these two words. Hitzig explains after Khalaf, to come after, which further means "to have the disadvantage," in which Zöckler follows him; but this verb in Arab. does not mean יָסְפֵּר אֵלֶּה יָסְפְרָסְתָּם, we must explain "sons of him that remains behind," i.e., such as come not forward, but remain behind (an) others. Mühlau goes further, and explains, with Schultz and Vaihinger: those destitute of defence, after (Arab.) Khalafahu he is ranked next to him, and has become his representative—a use of the word foreign to the Heb. Still less is the rendering of Gesenius justified, "children of inheritance" = children left behind, after Khalafa, to leave behind; and Luther, "for the cause of all who are left behind," by the phrase (Arab.) Khalafany an 'awnih, he has placed me behind his help, denied it to me, for the kal of the verb cannot mean to abandon, to leave. And that בֵּן חֲלוף means the opposers of the truth, or of the poor, or the litigious person, the quarrelsome, is perfectly inadmissible, since the kal of Khalaf cannot be equivalent to (Arab.) khilaf, the inf. of the 3rd conj., and besides, the gen. after עד always denotes those in whose favour, not those against whom it is passed; the latter is also valid against Ralbag's "sons of change," i.e., who say things different from what they think; and Ahron b. Josep's "sons of changing," viz., the truth into lies. We must abide by the meaning of the Heb. חֲלוף, "to follow after, to change places, pass away." Accordingly, Fleischer understands by חֲלוף, the going away, the dying, viz., of parents, and translates: eorum qui parentibus orbati sunt. In another way Rashi reaches the same sense: orphans deprived of their helper. But the connection יִבְּרָה חָלֶף requires that we make those who are intended themselves the subject of חָלֶף. Rightly Ewald, Bertheau, Kamphausen, compare Isa. 2:18 (and Ps. 90:5f., this with questionable right), and understand by the sons of disappearance those whose inherited lot, whose proper fate, is to disappear, to die, to perish (Symmachus: πάντων γίγνον ἀποικομένων; Jerome: omnium filiorum qui pertranseunt). It is not men in general as children of frailty that are meant (Kimchi, Meiri, Immanuel, Euchel, and others), after which the Venet. τῶν γίγνον τοῦ μεταβάλλειν (i.e., those who must exchange this life for another), but such as are on the brink of the abyss. שֶׁפֶן צֶדֶק is not equivalent to בְּצֶדֶק, but is the accus. of the object, as at Zech. 8:16, decide justice, i.e., so that justice is the result of thy judicial act; cf. Knobel on Deut. 1:16. מִי is imper., do right to the miserable and the poor; cf. Ps. 54:3 with Jer. 22:16; 5:28. That is a king of a right sort, who directs his high function as a judge, so as to be an advocate [procurator] for the helpless of his people.

Third Appendix to the Second Collection of Solomonic Proverbs—31:10ff.

Proverbs 31:10ff. The admonitions of a faithful mother are followed by words in praise of a virtuous wife; the poet praises them through all the praedicamenta, i.e., all the twenty-two letters of the Hebrew alphabet. The artificialness of the order, says Hitzig, proves that the section belongs to a proportionally late age. But if, as he himself allows, even a Davidic psalm, viz., Ps. 9–10, is constructed acrostically, then from this, that there the acrostic design is not so purely carried out as it is here in this ode, no substantial proof can be drawn for the more recent origin of the latter. Yet we do not deny that it belongs to an earlier time than the earliest of the era of Hezekiah. If Hitzig carries it back to the times subsequent to Alexander on account of the scriptio plena, without distinctive accents, vv. 17, 25, it is, on the other hand, to be remarked that it has the scriptio plena in common with the “utterance from Massa,” which he places forward in the times of Hezekiah, without being influenced to such clear vision by writings such as עֲצָמָן, 30:22, עֲצָמָן, 31:4. Besides, the plene written עֲצָמָן, v. 25, is incorrect, and יִשְׂרֵאֵל, v. 17, which has its parallel in עֲצָמָן, Ps. 84:6, is in its form altogether dependent on the Munach, which was added some thousand years after.

In the LXX this section forms the concluding section of the Book of Proverbs. But it varies from the Heb. text in that the פ (στόμα) goes before the ע (ἰσχύν). The very same sequence of letters is found in the Heb. text of Ps. 34 and Lam. 2, 3 and 4.

Stier has interpreted allegorically the matron here commended. He understands thereby the Holy Ghost in His regenerating and sanctifying influence, as the Midrash does the Tôra; Ambrosius, Augustine, and others, the Church; Immanuel, the soul in covenant with God, thirsting after the truth. As if it were not an invaluable part of Biblical moral instruction which is here presented to us! Such a woman’s mirror is nowhere else found. The housewife is depicted here as she ought to be; the poet shows how she governs and increases the wealth of the house, and thereby also advances the position of her husband in the common estimation, and he refers all these, her virtues and her prudence, to the fear of God as their root (Von Hofmann’s Schriftbeweis, ii. 2. 404f.).

One of the most beautiful expositions of this section is that of Luis de Leon, La perfecta casada (Salamanca, 1582), which has been revived in a very attractive way by Wilkens.

Proverbs 31:10. A wife, such as she ought to be, is a rare treasure, a good excelling all earthly possession:

10 に入 A virtuous woman, who findeth her! She stands far above pearls in worth.

In the connection אֵשֶת חִיל and the like, the idea of bodily vigour is spiritualized to that of capacity, ability, and is generalized; in virtus the corresponding transition from manliness, and in the originally Romanic “Bravheit,” valour to ability, is completed; we have translated as at 12:4, but also Luther, “a virtuous woman,” is suitable, since Tugend (virtue) has with Tüchtigkeit [ability] the same root-word, and according to our linguistic [German] usage designates the property of moral goodness and propriety, while for those of former times, when they spoke of the tugend (Tugent) of a woman, the word combined with it the idea of fine manners (cf. י, 11:16) and culture (cf. י, 13:15). The question מִי יִמְׁצָא, quis inveniat, which, Eccles. 7:24, proceeds from the supposition of the impossibility of finding, conveys here only the idea of the difficulty of finding. In ancient Jerusalem, when one was married, they were wont to ask: מֵכֶר to ask: מֵכֶר, or at Eccles. 7:26. A virtuous woman [braves Weib] is not found by every one, she is found by comparatively few. In 10b there is given to the thought which underlies the question a synonymous expression. Ewald, Elster, and Zöckler incorrectly render the י by “although” or “and yet.” Fleischer rightly: the second clause, if not in form yet in sense, runs parallel to the first. רָחוק designates the price for which such a woman is sold, and thus is purchasable, not without reference to this, that in the Orient a wife is obtained by means of רָחוק, מֵכֶר, מְׁחִיר, for which a wife of the right kind is gained, is more difficult to be obtained, than pearls (vid., regarding “pearls” at 3:15), i.e., than the price for such precious things. The poet thereby means to say that such a wife is a more precious possession than all earthly things which are precious, and that he who finds such an one has to speak of his rare fortune. The reason for this is now given:
11 The heart of her husband doth trust her, And he shall not fail of grain.

Proverbs 31:11. If we interpret שָלָל, after Eccles. 9:8, as subject, then we miss לה; it will thus be object, and the husband subj. to לא יֶחְׁסָר: nec lucro carebit, as e.g., Fleischer translates it, with the remark that שָלָל denotes properly the spoil which one takes from an enemy, but then also, like the Arab. ḏan mat, can mean profit and gain of all kinds (cf. Rödiger in Gesenius' Thes.). Thus also in our “kriegen” = to come into possession, the reference to war disappears. Hitzig understands by שָלָל, the continual prosperity of the man on account of his fortunate possession of such a wife; but in that case the poet should have said שָלָל 포ֵת for שָלָל is gain, not the feeling that is therewith connected. There is here meant the gain, profit, which the housewife is the means of bringing in (cf. Ps. 78:13). The heart of her husband (ב עְׁלָ) can be at rest, it can rest on her whom it loves—he goes after his calling, perhaps a calling which, though weighty and honourable, brings in little or nothing; but the wife keeps the family possessions scrupulously together, and increases them by her laborious and prudent management, so that there is not wanting to him gain, which he properly did not acquire, but which the confidence he is justified in reposing in his wife alone brings to him. She is to him a perpetual spring of nothing but good.

12 She doeth good to him, and not evil, All the days of her life;
or, as Luther translates: “Sie thut jm liebs und kein leids.”
[She does him good, and no harm.]

Proverbs 31:12. She is far from ever doing him evil, she does him only good all her life long; her love is not dependent on freaks, it rests on deep moral grounds, and hence derives its power and purity, which remain ever the same. נְפָל signifies to accomplish, to perform. To the not assimilated form נְפָל, cf. יְנָה, 1b. The poet now describes how she disposes of things:

13 She careth for wool and flax, And worketh these with her hands' pleasure.

Proverbs 31:13. The verb שָׁכָל proceeds, as the Arab. shows, from the primary meaning terere; but to translate with reference thereto: tractat lanam et linum (LXX, Schultens, Dathe, Rosemüller, Fleischer), is inadmissible. The Heb. does not mean the external working at or manufacturing of a thing; but it means, even when it refers to this, the intention of the mind purposely directed thereto. Thus wool and flax come into view as the material of work which she cares to bring in; and שָׁכָל signifies the work itself, following the creation of the need of work. Hitzig translates the second line: she works at the business of her hands. Certainly שָׁכָל after עָשָה may denote the sphere of activity, Ex. 31:4; 1 Kings 5:30, etc.; but if עָשָה had here the weakened signification business, πρᾶγμα,—which it gains in the same way as we say business, affair, of any object of care,—the scarcely established meaning presents itself, that she shows herself active in that which she has made the business of her hands. How much more beautiful, on the contrary, is the thought: she is active with her hands' pleasure! שָׁכָל is, as Schultens rightly explains, inclinatio flexa et propensa in aliquid, and pulchre manibus diligentissimis attribuitur lubentia cum oblectatione et per oblectationem sese animans. עָשָה, without obj. accus., signifies often: to accomplish, e.g., Ps. 22:32; here it stands, in a sense, complete in itself, and without object. accus., as when it means “handeln” [agere], 13:16, and particularly to act in the service of God = to offer sacrifice, Ex. 10:25; it means here, and at Ruth 2:19, Hab. 2:4, to be active, as at Isa. 19:15, to be effective; שָׁכָל is equivalent to עָשָה מְלָאכָה or עָשָה מְלָכָה (cf. under 10:4). And pleasure and love for the work, שָׁכָל, can be attributed to the hands with the same right as at Ps. 78:72, discretion. The disposition which animates a man, especially his inner relation to the work devolving upon him, communicates itself to his hands, which, according as he has joy or aversion in regard to his work, will be nimble or clumsy. The Syr. translates: “and her hands are active after the pleasure of her heart,” but בֶרֶךְ is not equivalent to בַּחֵפֶץ, in the sense of con amore (Böttcher), is not used. The following proverb praises the extent of her housewifely transactions:

Proverbs 31:14. She is (LXX ἐγένετο) like merchant ships (ἑλμηκ, indeterminate, and thus to be read kőōnîjoth), i.e., she has the art of such ships as sail away and bring wares from a distance, are equipped, sent out, and managed by an enterprising spirit; so the prudent, calculating look of the brave wife, directed towards the care and the advancement of her house, goes out beyond the nearest circle; she descries also distant opportunities of advantageous purchase and profitable exchange, and brings in from a distance what is necessary for the supply of her house, or, mediately, what yields this supply (καρχίαν, Cod. Jaman. cf. under Isa. 10:6), for she finds that source of gain she has espied. With this diligence in her duties she is not a long sleeper, who is not awakened till the sun is up; but 15 נ She riseth up while it is yet night, And giveth food to her house, And the fixed portion to her maidens.

Proverbs 31:15. The fut. consec. express, if not a logical sequence of connection, yet a close inner binding together of the separate features of the character here described. Early, ere the morning dawns, such a housewife rises up, because she places care for her house above her own comfort; or rather, because this care is to her a satisfaction and a joy. Since now the poet means without doubt to say that she is up before the other inmates of the house, especially before the children, though not before the maids: we have not, in קְצִיָּה, to think that the inmates of the house, all in the morning night-watch, stand round about her, and that each receives from her a portion for the approaching day; but that she herself, early, whilst yet the most are asleep, gives out or prepares the necessary portions of food for the day (cf. קְצִיָּה, Isa. 53:9). Regarding קְצִיָּה, food, from קְצִיָּה (to tear in pieces, viz., with the teeth), and regarding קְצִיָּה, a portion decreed, vid., at 30:8. It is true that קְצִיָּה also means the appointed labour (pe nsum), and thus the day’s work (בְּבֶרֶךְ); but the parallelism brings it nearer to explain after 30:8, as is done by Gesenius and Hitzig after Ex. 5:14. This industry,—a pattern for the whole house,—this punctuality in the management of household matters, secures to her success in the extension of her household wealth:

16 נ She seeketh a field and getteth possession of it; Of the fruit of her hands she planteth a vineyard.

Proverbs 31:16. The field which she considereth, towards which her wish and her effort are directed, is perhaps not one beyond those which she already possesses, but one which has hitherto been wanting to her family; for the poet has, after v. 23, an inhabitant of a town in his eye,—a woman whose husband is not a landlord, but has a business in the city. The perf. קְצִיָּה precedes and gives circumstantiality to the chief factum expressed by חֹק. Regarding קְצִים, vid., 21:27. “מִקְּדוֹשׁ is the general expression for purchasing, as מִקָּחַב, 24b, for selling. Thus the Aram. and Arab. דִּכְר, while, (Arab.) akhadh w’ṭa, Turk. alisch werisch (from elmek, to take, and wirmek, to give—viz. sāṭṭān, in the way of selling; Lat. venum), post-bibl. מִקְּדוֹשׁ, מִקְּנָה מִכָּר וּמִקָּחַב, denotes giving and taking = business in general” (Fleischer). In 16b the Chethib is, with Ewald and Bertheau, to be read וּמַת, and, with Hitzig, to be made dependent on
She girdeth her loins with strength, And moveth vigorously her arms. Proverbs 31:17. Strength is as the girdle which she wraps around her body (Ps. 93:1). We write חָגְׁרָה בְׁעוז; both words have Munach, and the ב of בעוז is aspirated. Thus girded with strength, out of this fulness of strength she makes firm or steels her arms (cf. Ps. 89:22). The produce of the field and vineyard extend far beyond the necessity of her house; thus a great portion is brought to sale, and the gain thence arising stimulates the industry and the diligence of the unwearied woman.

She perceiveth that her gain is good; And her light goeth not out at night. Proverbs 31:18. The perf. and fut. are related to each other as antecedent and consequent, so that 18α can also be rendered as an hypothetical antecedent. She comes to find (taste) how profitable her industry is by the experience resulting from the sale of its product: the corn, the grapes, and the wine are found to be good, and thus her gain (cf. 3:14) is better, this opened new source of nourishment productive.

This spurs on her active industry to redoubled effort, and at times, when she is not fully occupied by the oversight of her fields and vineyard, she has another employment over which her light goes not out till far in the night. Proverbs 31:19. She putteth her hand to the rock [Spinnrocken]; And her fingers lay hold on the spindle.

Proverbs 31:19. She applies herself to the work of spinning, and performs it with skill. The phrase נָטְׁעָה (Sh. נָטְׁעָה, Job 28:9) signifies to take up an object of work, and נָטְׁעָה, with obj. accus. (cf. Amos 1:5), the handling of the instrument of work necessary thereto. נָטְׁעָה denotes the hands when the subject is skilful, successful work; we accordingly say, יְׁנָשָׁה נָטְׁעָה, not יְׁנָשָׁה יָד, cf. vv. 13 and 16, Ps. 78:72. What נָטְׁעָה means is shown by the Arab. falakat, which, as distinguished from mighzal, i.e., fuseau (Lat. fusus), is explained by bout arrondi et conique au bas du fuseau, thus: the whorl, i.e., the ring or knob fastened on the spindle below, which gives it its necessary weight and regulates its movement, Lat. verticellus, post-bibl. פִיקָה (which Bartenora glosses by the Ital. fusajuolo) or כִישור שבלע את הצנורה, a spindle which holds the whorl hidden (vid., Aruch under פִיקָה, iii.). But the word then also signifies per synecdochen partis pro toto, the spindle, i.e., the cylindrical wood on which the thread winds itself when spinning (cf. 2 Sam. 3:29, where it means the staff on which the infirm leans); Homer gives to Helen and the goddesses golden spindles (χρυσηλάκατοι). Accordingly it is not probable that כִישור also denotes the whorl, as Kimchi explains the word: "כִישור is that which one calls by the name verteil, viz., that which one fixes on the spindle (말ף) above to regulate the spinning," according to which the Venet. renders כִישור דַּקְר by σφόνδυλος whorl, and מַלָּף by ἀτρακτος spindle. The old interpreters have not recognised that כִישור denotes a thing belonging to the spinning apparatus; the LXX, Aquila, Symmachus, Theodotion, Syr., and Jerome see therein an ethical idea (from כישור, to be capable, able); but Luther, not misled thereby, translates with כישור כישור.
unusual excellence: She stretches her hand to the rock, and her fingers grasp the spindle. He has in this no predecessors, except only the Targumists, whose כונשרא (vid., Levy) appears also to denote the spinning-rock. The Syriac and Talmudic כוש, which is compared by Gesenius-Dietrich, is another word, and denotes, not the rock, but the spindle. Immanuel also, who explains כיפה as the מעזל, i.e., the spindle, understands (as perhaps also Parchon) by כישור the rock. And why should not the rock (wocken = distaff), i.e., the stock to which the tuft of flax, hemp, or wool is fixed for the purpose of being spun, Lat. colus, not be named כישור, from כשר, to be upright as a stick, upright in height, or perhaps more correctly as מכשיר, i.e., as that which prepares or makes fit the flax for spinning? Also in צינוק, Jer. 29:26, there are united the meanings of the close and the confining dungeon, and כישור = שילה signifies the place which yields rest. The spinning-wheel is a German invention of the 16th century, but the rock standing on the ground, or held also in the hands, the spindle and the whorl, are more ancient. With the spindle כישור stands in fit relation, for it is twirled between the fingers, as Catullus says of Fate: Libratum tereti versabat pollice fusum. That which impels the housewife to this labour is not selfishness, not a narrow-hearted limitation of her care to the circle of what is her own, but love, which reaches out far beyond this circle: 20 סלה She holdeth out her hand to the unfortunate, and stretcheth forth her hands to the needy.

Proverbs 31:20. With כפיה, 19b, is connected the idea of artistic skilfulness; with כופה, here that of offering for counsel (vid., at Isa. 2:6); with sympathy and readiness to help, she presents herself to those who are oppressed by the misfortunes of life as if for an alliance, as if saying: place confidence in me, I shall do whatever I can—there thou hast my hand! Hitzig erroneously thinks of the open hand with a gift lying in it: this ought to be named, for כף in itself is nothing else than the half-opened hand. Also in 20b we are not to think of alms. Here Hitzig rightly: she stretches out to him both of her hands, that he might grasp them, both of them, or whichever he may. She does not throw to him merely a gift from a distance, but above all she gives to him to experience her warm sympathy (cf. Ezek. 16:49). Here, as at 19a, כופה is punctuated (with Dagesh) as Piel.

The punctuation supposes that the author both times not unintentionally made use of the intensive form. This one verse (20) is complete in itself as a description of character; and the author has done well in choosing such strong expressions, for, without this sympathy with misery and poverty, she, so good and trustworthy and industrious, might indeed be pleasing to her husband, but not to God. One could almost wish that greater expansion had been given to this one feature in the picture. But the poet goes on to describe her fruitful activity in the nearest sphere of her calling: 21 כ She is not afraid of the snow for her house; For her whole house is clothed in scarlet.

Proverbs 31:21. A fall of snow in the rainy season of winter is not rare in Palestine, the Hauran, and neighbouring countries, and is sometimes accompanied with freezing cold. She sees approaching the cold time of the year without any fear for her house, even though the season bring intense cold; for her whole house, i.e., the whole of the members of her family, are לובשים שנות. The connection is accusatival (Venet. ενδεδυμένος ἐρυθρά), as at 2 Sam. 15:32; Ezek. 9:2, 3. שנות, from ש나, to shine, glance clear, or high red, and is with or without הולך the name of the colour of the Kermes worm, crimson or scarlet, perhaps to be distinguished from אדננים, the red-purple shell colour, and תכלת, the blue. שנות are clothing or material coloured with such is the old name for linen, according to which the Aram. translates it by רָגָמָן, the Greek by βιόσας, vid., Genesis, pp. 470, 557, to which the remark is to be added, that the linen [Byssus], according to a prevailing probability, was not a fine cotton cloth, but linen cloth. Luther translates שׁ, here and elsewhere, by weisse Seide [white silk] (σηρικόν, i.e., from the land of the Σηρείδου, Rev. 18:12); but the silk, is first mentioned by Ezekiel under the name of שׁפ, and the ancients call the country where silk-stuff (bombycina) was woven, uniformly Assyria. סִיבַד (Aram. סֵיבַד, derived by Benfey, with great improbability, from the rare Sanscrit word râgavant, red-coloured; much rather from רָקָם as stuff of variegated colour) is red purple; the most valuable purple garments were brought from Tyre and Sidon.

Now, first, the description turns back to the husband, of the woman who is commended, mentioned in the introduction:

Proverbs 31:23. Such a wife is, according to 12:4, רָגָמָן, נוד ע, פֶּתַיָּה, —she advances the estimation and the respect in which her husband is held. He has, in the gates where the affairs of the city are deliberated upon, a well-known, reputable name; for there he sits, along with the elders of the land, who are chosen into the council of the city as the chief place of the land, and has a weighty voice among them. The phrase wavers between נוד ע (LXX περίβλεπτος γίνεται; Venet. ἐλκνωσταί) and נוד ע (Jerome, Luther) [= נוד ע]; the old Venetian edd. have in this place (like the Cod. Jaman.), and at Ps. 9:17, נוד ע on the contrary, Ps. 76:2, Eccles. 6:10, נוד ע, and that is correct; for the Masora, at this place and at Ps. 76:2 (in the Biblia rabb), is disfigured. The description, following the order of the letters, now directs attention to the profitable labour of the housewife:

Proverbs 31:24. It is a question whether solidóν, cloth from Sindhu, the land of India (vid., at Isa. 3:23); the Arab. sadn (sadl), to cause to hang down, to descend (for the purpose of covering or veiling), offers an appropriate verbal root. In the Talmud, ᵀᵉᵈᵉʳⁱ is the sleeping linen, the curtain, the embroidered cloth, but particularly a light smock-frock, as summer costume, which was worn on the bare body (cf. Mark 14:51f.). Kimchi explains the word by night-shirt; the Edictum Diocletiani, xviii. 16, names σινδόνες κοπταρίαι, as the Papyrus Louvre, ὅθονα ἐγκουμήτρια; and the connection in the Edict shows that linen attire (ἐκ λίνου) is meant, although—as with ὅθονα, so also with ᵀᵉᵈᵉʳἰ—with the ancients and the moderns, sometimes linen and sometimes cotton is spoken of without any distinction. Aethicus speaks of costly girdles, Cosmogr. 84, as fabricated at Jerusalem: baltea regalia ... ex Hierosolyma allata; Jerusalem and Scythopolis were in later times the chief places in Palestine for the art of weaving. In Galilee also, where excellent flax grew, the art of weaving was carried on; and the ὅθονα, which, according to Clemens Alex. Paedag. ii. 10, p. 239, were exported ἐκ τῆς Ἑβραίων σινδόνες, are at least in their material certainly synon. with σινδόνες. Regarding הָדָר, syn. שֵשֶׁב, opp. שֶׁכֶר, syn. קָנָה, vid., at 16a. There is no reason to interpret שֵשֶׁב here, with the obliteration of the ethnographical meaning, in the general sense of שֵׁר, trader, merchant; for purple, 22b, is a Phoenician manufacture, and thus, as an article of exchange, can be transferred to the possession of the industrious wife. The description is now more inward:

Proverbs 31:25. She is clothed with חָג, strength, i.e., power over the changes of temporal circumstances, which easily shatter and bring to ruin a household resting on less solid foundations; clothed with גֹּרֶם, glory, i.e., elevation above that which is low, little, common, a state in which they remain who propose to themselves no high aim after which they strive with all their might; in other words, her raiment is just pride, true dignity, with which she looks confidently into the future, and is armed against all sorrow and care. The connection of ideas, שָׂפָה (defectively written, on the contrary, at Ps. 84:6, Masora, and only there written plene, and with Munachi), instead of the frequent שָׂפָה, כֹּה, כֹּה, occurs only here. The expression שָׂפָה is like Job 39:7, wherefore Hitzig rightly compares Job 24:14 to 25a. שֶׁפֶר distinguished from תִּקְרֵי, and incorrectly interpreted (Rashi) of the day of death, is, as at Isa. 30:8, the future, here that which one at a later period may enter upon.

The שָׂפָה thereof is, as also at Ps. 49:5; 78:2, that of means: when she speaks, then it is wisdom pressing itself from her heart outward, by means of which she breaks the silence of her mouth. With שָׂפָה, in the expression שָׂפָה, elsewhere תִּקְרֵי interchanges: under the tongue, Ps. 10:7, one has that which is ready to be spoken out, and on the tongue, Ps. 15:3, that which is in the act of being spoken out. שָׂפָה is a genitive connection after the manner of תּוֹרָתָה תַּחְתַּתָּן Mal. 2:6. The gen. is not, as at Lev. 6:2, in תּוֹרָתָה תַּחְתַּתָּן, the gen. of the object (thus e.g., Fleischer’s instituto ad humanitatem), but the gen. of property, but not so that שָׂפָה denotes grace (Symmachus, νόμος ἐπίχαρις Theodotion, νόμος χίριτος), because for this meaning there is no example except Isa. 40:6; and since שָׂפָה in the O.T. is the very same as in the N.T., love, which is the fulfilling of the law, Hos 6:6, cf. 1 Kings 20:31, it is supposed that the poet, since he writes שָׂפָה, כֹּה, כֹּה, and not שָׂפָה, כֹּה, כֹּה.
proverbs, means to designate by חֵסֶד this property without which her love for her husband, her industry, her high sentiment, would be no virtues, viz., unselfish, sympathizing, gentle love. Instruction which bears on itself the stamp of such amiability, and is also gracious, i.e., awakening love, because going forth from love (according to which Luther, translating holdselige Lere = pleasing instructions, thus understands it)—such instruction she carries, as house-mother (Prov. 1:8), in her mouth. Accordingly the LXX translate (vid., Lagarde regarding the mistakes of this text before us) θεσμοὶ ἐλεημοσύνης, and Jerome lex clementiae. חֶסֶד is related to אֲבָה as grace to love; it denotes love showing itself in kindness and graceful ness, particularly condescending love, proceeding from a compassionate sympathy with the sufferings and wants of men. Such graceful instruction she communicates now to this and now to that member of her household, for nothing that goes on in her house escapes her observation. 27 ¶ She looketh well to the ways of her house, And eateth not the bread of idleness. Proverbs 31:27. Although there exists an inner relation between 27a and v. 26, yet 27a is scarcely to be thought of (Hitzig) as appos. to the suffix in לשון. Participles with or without determination occur in descriptions frequently as predicates of the subject standing in the discourse of the same force as abstr. present declarations, e.g., Isa. 40:22f., Ps. 104:13f. צִדְקָה is connected with the accus. of the object of the intended warning, like 15:3, and is compared according to the form with הֵולֵכָה, 7:11. צִדְקָה signifies elsewhere things necessary for a journey, Job 6:19, and in the plur. magnificus it denotes show (pompa), Hab. 3:6: but originally the walk, conduct, Nah. 2:6; and here in the plur. walks = comings and goings, but not these separately, but in general, the modi procedendi (LXX διατριβαῖς). The Chethib has תַּלְמָלָה, probably an error in writing, but possibly also the plur. of תַּלְמָלָה, thus found in the post-bibl. Heb. (after the form תַּלְמָלָה, custom, viz., appointed traditional law, but also like the Aram. (emph. הָלִכֱּתָא), usage, manner, common practice. Hitzig estimates this Chethib, understood Talmudically, as removing the section into a late period; but this Talmudical signification is not at all appropriate (Hitzig translates, with an incorrect rendering of צוקיה, "for she sees after the ordering of the house"), and besides the Aram. (הָלִכֱּתָא, e.g., Targ. Prov. 16:9, in the first line, signifies only the walk or the manner and way of going, and this gives with the Kerî essentially the same signification. Luther well: Sie schawet wie es in frem Hause zugeht [= she looks how it goes in her house]. Her eyes are turned everywhere; she is at one time here, at another there, to look after all with her own eyes; she does not suffer the day's work, according to the instructions given, to be left undone, while she folds her own hands on her bosom; but she works, keeping an oversight on all sides, and does not eat the bread of idleness (ע צְלָה = ע צְלָה, 19:15), but bread well deserved, for εἴ τις οὐ θέλει ἐργάζεσθαὶ μηδὲ ἐσθιέτω, 2 Thess. 3:10.

28 ¶ Her sons rise up and bless her, Her husband (riseth up) and praiseth her. Proverbs 31:28. The Piel אִשֵר in such a connection is denom. of אֵשֶׁר (אשֶר). Her children rise up (כָּפֵךָ, like e.g., Jer. 26:17, but here, perhaps, with the associated idea of reverential honour) and bless her, that she has on her part brought the house and them to such prosperity, such a position of respect, and to a state where love (חסד) reigns, and her husband rises up and sings her praise.

29 ¶ Many are the daughters who have done bravely, But thou hast surpassed them all together.”

Proverbs 31:29. We have already often remarked, last time under 29:6, that כב not Grace is deceit; and beauty, vanity—A wife that feareth Jahve, she shall be praised.

Proverbs 31:30. Grace is deceit, because he who estimates the works of a wife merely by the loveliness of her external appearance, is deceived by it; and beauty is vanity, vanitas, because it is nothing that remains, nothing that is real, but is subject to the law of all material things—transitoriness. The true value of a wife is measured only by that which is enduring, according to the moral background of its external appearance; according to the piety which makes itself manifest when the beauty of bodily form has faded away, in a beauty which is attractive. יראת (with Makkeph following), is here the connective form of ירא (fem. of ירה). The Hithpa. ולenstein is here manifestly (Prov. 27:2) not reflexive, but representative of the passive (cf. 12:8, and the frequently occurring מִפְׁרִי, laudatus = laudandus), nowhere occurring except in the passage before us. In itself the fut. may also mean: she will be praised = is worthy of praise, but the jussive rendering (Luther: Let her be praised) is recommended by the verse which follows:

Proverbs 31:31. The fruit of her hands is the good which, by her conduct, she has brought to maturity,—the blessing which she has secured for others, but, according to the promise (Isa. 3:10), has also secured for her own enjoyment. The first line proceeds on the idea that, on account of this blessing, she herself shall rejoice. מִפְרִי (with Gaja, after Metheg-Setzung, § 37) is not equivalent to give to her honour because of ...; for in that case, instead of the ambiguous מִפְרִי, another preposition—such e.g., as—it would have been used; and so, of itself, cannot be equivalent to מַעַן (sing the praise of), as Ziegler would read, after Judg. 11:40. It must stand with הבור, or instead of מִפְרִי, an accus. obj. is to be thought of, as at Ps. 68:35, Deut. 32:3, which the necessity of the case brings with it,—the giving, as a return in the echo of the song of praise. Immanuel is right in explaining טע הנוח = תנו לה חסד by ותריהל, תכלת, cf. Ps. 28:4. The מַעַן, as is not otherwise to be expected, after מַעַן is partitive: give to her something of the fruit of her hands, i.e., recompense it to her, render it thankfully, by which not exclusively a requital in the form of honourable recognition, but yet this specially, is... to be thought of. Her best praise is her works themselves. In the gates, i.e., in the place where the representatives of the people come together, and where the people are assembled, her works praise her; and the poet desires that this may be right worthily done, full of certainty that she merits it, and that they honour themselves who seek to praise the works of such a woman, which carry in themselves their own commendation.

Note - The Proverbs Peculiar to the Alexandrine Translation

Note: In the LXX there are not a few proverbs which are not found in the Heb. text, of, as we may express it, are peculiar to the Egyptian Text Recension, as distinguished from the Palestinian. The number is not so great as they appear to be on a superficial examination; for many of these apparently independent proverbs are duplicate translations. In many places there follows the Greek translation of the Heb. proverbs another translation, e.g., at 1:14, 27; 2:2; 3:15; 4:10; 6:25b, 10:5; 11:16; 14:22; 15:6; 16:26; 23:31; 29:7b, 25, 31:29a. These duplicate translations are found sometimes at different places, e.g., 17:20b is duplicate to 17:16d; 19:15 is duplicate to 18:8; 22:9cd = 19:6b, 1:19b; 29:17 is duplicate to 28:17cd; or, according to the enumeration of the verses as it lies before us, not within the compass of one verse to which they belong: 22:8, 9 is a duplicate translation of v. 8b and 9a of the Heb. text; 24:23; 30:1, a duplicate translation of 30:1; and 31:26, 27b, of 31:26 of the Heb. text. Everywhere, here, along with the translated proverb of our Heb. text, there is not an independent one. Also one has to be on his guard against seeing independent proverbs where the translator only, at his own will, modified one of the Heb. proverbs lying before us, as e.g., at 10:10; 13:23; 19:7, as he here and there lets his Alexandrine exegesis influence him, 2:16f., 5:5; 9:6; and adds explanatory clauses, 2:19; 3:18; 5:3; 9:12; seldom fortunate in this, oftener, as at 1:18, 22, 28; 9:12; 28:10, showing by these interpolations his want of knowledge. There are also, in the translation, here and there passages introduced from some other part of Scripture, e.g.: 1:7ab = Ps. 111:10, LXX; 3:22cd = 3:8; 3:28c = 27:1b, 13:5c, from Ps. 112:5, cf. 37:21; 16:1 (ὅσῳ μέγας κ.τ.λ.) = Sir. 3:18; 26:11cd = Sir. 4:21. A free reminiscence, such as 16:17, may speak a certain independence, but not those borrowed passages.

Keeping out of view all this only apparent independence, we place together the independent proverbs contained in the LXX, and, along with them, we present a translation of them into Heb. Such a translation has already been partly attempted by Ewald, Hitzig, and Lagarde; perhaps we have been here and there more fortunate in our rendering. It is certainly doubtful whether the translator found all these proverbs existing in Heb. Many of them appear to be originally Greek. But the rendering of them into Hebrew is by no means useless. It is of essential importance in forming a judgment regarding the original language.

There are a few grains of wheat, and, on the other hand, much chaff, in these proverbs that are peculiar to the LXX. They are not, in the most remote way, fit to supply the place of the many proverbs of our Heb. text which are wanting in the LXX. One must also here be cautious in examining them. Thus, e.g., 17:19 stands as a proverb of only one line; the second forms a part of v. 16. As true defects, we have noticed the following proverbs and parts of proverbs: 1:16; 7:25b, 8:32b, 33, 9:3b, 4, 10b, 18:8, 23, 24; 19:1, 2, 15; 21:5; 22:6; 23:23; 25:20a. All these proverbs and parts of proverbs of the Heb. text are wanting in the LXX.

It is difficult to solve the mystery of this Alexandrine translation, and to keep separate from each other the Text Recension which the translator had before him, the transformations and corrections which the text of the translation, as it came from the first translator and the later revisers of it, has suffered in the course of time. They appear in Egypt to have been as arbitrary as incompetent in handling the sacred Scriptures. The separating from each other of the proverbs of Agur and Lemuel, 30–31:9, has it side-piece in the separation of Jeremiah’s proaemiums of the prophecies concerning the people, Jer. 25.
